"The later chapters of Mr. Odinga's interesting work are a form of political apologia, an explanation, and justification, of his break with his former colleague, President Kenyatta. They are the least satisfactory part of it, because they emphasize one side of his character, his sense of persecution, at the expense of much else. In the earlier chapters, Mr. Odinga paints a fascinating picture of the development of political activity from the grass roots, and gives the lie, incidentally, to those who think of him as a kind of picturesque demagogue, and forget his very great ability. . . . On the African political scene, he provides some good inside accounts of the old Kenya African Union organization, and about Mau Mau. . . . On the post-independence period, too, Mr. Odinga provides some interesting insights. . . . As revealed in his own account—and in his own consistent political behaviour—Mr. Odinga is in his element as a leader of opposition."

TLS p656 J1 27 '67 950w

ODISHAW, HUGH, ed. The earth in space.
340p $6.95 Basic bks.

520 Astronomy. Geophysics. Astrophysics
67-28505

"A collection of 30 . . . lectures on various topics in astronomy and geophysics, prepared by . . . American scientists for presentation on the Voice of America." (Choice) Glossary. Index.

"[This] is factually up to date and is both broader in scope and less detailed than a comparable collection, [D. R.] Bates' The Earth and Its Atmosphere [BRD 1958]. For the most part the presentations are quite readable and accurate—many are first-rate popularizations comparable to Asimov at his best. Unfortunately, several very poor lectures appear in the opening section. Excellent collateral reading for a college level course in descriptive astronomy. . . . Recommended."

Choice 5:984 O '68 100w

Reviewed by R. E. Swinburne
Library J 92:4012 N 1 '67 100w

"The aim of the book is to give some current views on the nature of the Earth, the solar system, and the universe as a whole; but each essay naturally shows a highly individual approach to the particular subject it describes, and there is by no means a complete coverage of all aspects of geophysics and astronomy. The main interest of the book lies in the first-hand accounts of highly specialized research. . . . The reader is clearly expected to have some scientific knowledge, for although a glossary of technical terms is provided, this is far from being simple or even complete enough to explain all the terms used. . . . A good index gives some indication of the large amount of information contained in this interesting book."

TLS p1314 N 21 '68 300w

ODISHAW, HUGH, jt. ed. Handbook of physics. See Condon, E. U.

O'DOHERTY, BRIAN. Object and idea; an art critic's journal 1961-1967. 250p $5.95 Simon & Schuster

709.04 Modernism (Art). Art criticism

67-20794

The author, an art critic and artist, "has divided these occasional pieces [of art criticism] into chapters through a mixture of themes and chronology. In the first part, 'Themes and Futures,' he . . . attempts to find serviceable modes of criticism. [In] the second part, 'Artists,' . . . such modern masters as Duchamp, Moore, and Miró [are discussed] as part of 'The Modern Tradition.' . . . [In other sections] he writes about Bloom, Wyeth, Yeats, . . . De Kooning, Motherwell, Gottlieb and seven other members of the so-called 'heroic generation,' that of the late 1940's and early 1950's in America . . . [as well as] Marisol, Feldman, and Wiley. In the final part of the book, 'Patrons and Museums,' he [analyzes] . . . such figures as Huntington Hartford and such museums as the Gallery of Modern Art, the Whitney Museum, and the now defunct Tanager." (Library J)

"O'Doherty is an experienced art critic known best for his writing in The New York Times. . . . He is a lucid, perceptive writer and within the limits of the length of the articles manages to express many difficult ideas simply and clearly. The weakness of the book is the weakness of journalistic criticism—the time in which to write it and the space allowed for it are too little for the development of original or profound ideas. This is a good book, a solid journeyman's job, and deserves attention as that, but not as important or interesting as [H.] Rosenberg's The Anxious Object [BRD 1967]."

Choice 5:476 Je '68 110w

"[O'Doherty] appropriates an incredible variety of critical styles, ranging from pure enthusiastic slapdash reportage to sceptical reflective criticism, none of which accomplishes the breakthrough he would like. . . . His book reveals an absence of discriminating interest and decided taste that would be more embarrassing if he were not a critic of intelligence, erudition and general good sense. . . . Not even [the] better essays—on Warhol's Chelsea Girls and 'The Artist as Performer'—make [this] a particularly important book. . . . More questions are raised than threshed out, difficult issues sometimes dissolve in fuzzy thinking; and the best perceptions appear, with annoying frequency, buried in a paragraph, rather than subjected to more extensive elaboration." Richard Kostelanetz

Commonweal 87:413 D 29 '67 480w

"Although these more than 60 essays are warmed over and reserved they are extremely palatable, despite the fact that most of them were written in the usual journalistic time of a few hours prior to publication." G. A. Cevalco

Library J 92:3987 N 1 '67 280w

O'DONNELL, CHARLES P., ed. The church in the world. See Georgetown university colloquium on the church in the modern world, 1966

OË, KENZABURO. A personal matter; tr. from the Japanese by John Nathan. 214p $5 Grove

68-22007

The protagonist of this novel, "known only by his nickname of Bird, is a twenty-seven-year-old [Japanese] teacher . . . whose wife has given birth to what appears to be a deformed baby. A dreamer (he continually imagines himself exploring Africa), an escapee from responsibility, he finds himself indifferent to all social, political, moral or marital claims, wants to get rid of the baby, sleeps with an old girlfriend while his wife's in the hospital, and longs to 'leap away into another universe,' to 'get out of the game.'" (New Repub) Originally published 1964 entitled Kojinteki Na Talken.

OË, KENZABURO—Continued

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams
Atlantic 222:96 Ag '68 40w

Reviewed by J. A. Phillips
Best Sell 28:144 J1 1 '68 700w

Reviewed by Josh Greenfield
Book World p17 Ag 25 '68 600w

"Recoiling from a final step into tragic consciousness, OË slaps together a sentimental, improbable ending which can gratify only those readers who have not really become involved. Fortunately, before this denouement, OË has broadened our concern beyond Bird to all humanity. Despite its philosophical import, the novel rarely talks out its meanings. It is a story of rapid action and interactions among a cluster of memorable characters—Bird's desolate, helpless wife; his domineering, pathetic mother-in-law; his father-in-law, a fatuous, respected professor; his mistress; a wise but lost soul; and many more—each etched with a revealing wit that approaches but never stumbles into caricature. . . . In writing novels there is no substitute for maturity and moral awareness. Kenzaburo OË has both. (So too has John Nathan, who according to one authority on Japanese literature 'must be the ideal translator.')" Alan Levensohn

Christian Science Monitor p11 Ag 8 '68 550w

"[Bird's] spiritual struggle is depicted in a series of vivid and explicit sexual scenes. The novel ends on an affirmative note as the hero realizes that he cannot run away from reality but must accept life as it is in the real world. The book is recommended primarily for larger fiction collections." C. W. Stucki
Library J 93:2692 J1 '68 200w

Reviewed by Sara Mirsky
Nation 207:91 Ag 5 '68 180w

Reviewed by Richard Gilman
New Repub 159:34 Ag 17 '68 550w

Reviewed by D. J. Enright
N Y Rev of Books 11:35 O 10 '68 1000w

"[This novel] owes obvious debts to Kierkegaard: the search for—and confrontation with—the self. Its urban surroundings, the classless misfits that populate it, and its vivid sexual descriptions make it seem socially and thematically similar to its Occidental counterparts. Unfortunately, it is a disappointment. . . . Insistent failure and negation. . . . permeate the first two-hundred pages. The basic situation . . . should have embodied the themes of freedom and responsibility, youth and maturation, loneliness and community, but it does not. It is further hindered by a style infected with bald metaphor, banality and circumlocution. One wonders whether part of the fault might not lie in translation. As it rests, a potentially moving story and a significant message have been seriously weakened." James Toback
N Y Times Bk R p23 J1 7 '68 500w

Reviewed by Robert and Tomi Haas
Sat R 51:31 Je 15 '68 600w

O'GORMAN, F. The Whig party and the French revolution. 270p $9 St Martins 329.942 Whig party (Great Britain). Great Britain—Politics and government—1714-1837 [67-180771]

"The internal history of the Whig party from 1784-98. O'Gorman, an English historian, is primarily concerned with the divisive impact of the French Revolution on the Whig party. He contends that the revolution was a major factor in initiating the schism within the Whig party." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

Choice 5:1208 N '68 140w

"In analyzing these events in terms of personalities, attitudes, and motivations, O'Gorman has written a scholarly presentation in a field of study which, hitherto, had been neglected. . . . Highly recommended for graduate libraries."

"[A] very detailed and well documented account. . . . The treatment of Pitt is generally pretty critical, and unfortunately it is not always clear whether this reflects the attitude of the author himself or of the Whig politicians. The general reader should not be put off, but he would be well advised to give a thorough brush-up to his background knowledge of the period."

Economist 226:40 Ja 27 '68 300w

O'GORMAN, NED. The harvesters' vase; poems. 49p $4.50 Harcourt

811

68-12589

Some of the poems in this volume previously appeared in The Columbia University Forum, Jubilee and The Nation.

Reviewed by Chad Walsh
Book World p4 J1 28 '68 120w

"Most poets acknowledge a major and a minor mode within their own scale; poems of the first or second intensity in their own ambition. Ned O'Gorman doesn't. . . . That fact accounts for the authentic bite of his poetry, and for its occasional misfires. . . . Steps are whittled to toe-holds; toe-hold gives way to trapeze. The result is exhilarating—and exhilaration, together with the sense of hilarity, is probably the quality most frequently remote from current poetry of decent caliber. The Donkey, to take one of the really dazzling successes, arrives whole; no build-up, no exposition; a level of intensity suddenly presents an accurate, significant, luminous object. All of these poems are religious; few of their subjects are. The religious sensibility runs in the poetry like blood or sap or electricity—inside." Josephine Jacobsen

Commonweal 88:417 Je 21 '68 800w

"O'Gorman weaves an intricate web. His poems tend to be philosophic; in many he is concerned with philosophy more than with intimate relationship between men, their actions and environment. . . . These are complex poems, with complex, ironic images, hard to imagine (the reason some of the poems are difficult) but exciting to contemplate. Even without fully understanding what he is saying, the poet conveys in an exciting, sometimes painfully stark manner, a depth and complexity of life. This collection is worth the effort of careful reading. There is excitement, depth, and pleasure here. An important addition for college, university, and comprehensive poetry collections." Allen Cohen

Library J 93:558 F 1 '68 140w

Reviewed by John Thompson
N Y Rev of Books 11:36 Ag 1 '68 370w

"The imagery is compact, violent, showy with an occasionally brilliant stretch that always lapses into the fatuous, the kind of imagery where everything is anything and nothing. At his worst, O'Gorman writes the kind of sloppy Christian bombast found in many of Brother Antoninus's weaker poems. There is one very beautiful poem called 'The Paralytic,' where the religious involvement is lucid rather than fuzzy." Jim Harrison

N Y Times Bk R p6 Ap 28 '68 280w

Va Q R 44:ciii summer '68 80w

O'GRADY, JOSEPH P., ed. The immigrants' influence on Wilson's peace policies. 329p $8.50 Univ. of Ky. press

327.73 U.S.—Foreign relations. U.S.—Foreign population 67-23776

"The election of Woodrow Wilson in 1912 marked the beginning of a new diplomacy for the United States. . . . In this book eleven students of diplomatic history have studied the strategy and effectiveness of various immigrant groups—German, British, Polish, Italian, Central European, and Jewish—in their efforts to bring about policy decisions nearer to their views." (Publisher's note) Portions of this book have been published previously. Index.

"A gap in the literature of American foreign affairs in the period 1918-1920 is adequately filled by this useful volume. . . . Despite inevitable variations of quality and coverage, the essays are consistently useful in supplying information on hitherto relatively obscure aspects of Wilson's policies. Least familiar to students will undoubtedly be the essays on the Italians, the Magyars, the southern Slavs, and the Slovaks and Carpatho-Ruthenians, but there is new material in the other essays as well. May's essay on the abortive Mid-European Union is especially useful. . . . The documentations for the essays provide useful bibliographies for further studies." C. C. Qualey
Am Hist R 73:1670 Je '68 280w

Choice 5:117 Mr '68 80w

"O'Grady ingeniously synthesizes the findings of his authors with respect to the unifying objective of the volume. . . . Some essays are better than others, and certain ones do not speak very directly to the general question of immigrant influence. . . . But these conventional weaknesses of collections are minimized in this case. . . . [The more familiar stories] are retold and extended in convenient form; and the essays on lesser-known groups . . . are original contributions. . . . One of the notable merits of this book is that the contributors had the linguistic skill to investigate the foreign-language press in detail, together with other sources and authorities in native languages. Another merit is the lack of special pleading; despite obvious sympathies, . . . the writers allow the chips to fall where they may." D. F. Trask

J Am Hist 55:416 S '68 500w

O'HARA, JOHN. And other stories. 336p $5.95
Random house

68-28527

Most of the eleven stories and one novella of this collection are set in the town of Gibbsville in the 1920's and 1930's and provide glimpses into the lives of the town's wealthier citizens. Some of the stories were previously published in The Saturday Evening Post and The New Yorker.

Reviewed by Edward Weeks
Atlantic 222:136 D '68 350w

Reviewed by Richard Conliss
Best Sell 28:404 Ja 1 '69 360w

"The first thing that impressed me was the disarming introduction to these eleven stories and one novel, in which their author comes on like the Muhammad Ali of American letters. This is a pleasant switch after the eye-batting modesty you usually get from writers. . . . The biggest surprise in the book is 'A Few Trips and Some Poetry' which some may call a novella. . . . simply because of its 124-page length. But if you accept the definition of a novel as an examination of what time does to character, 'A Few Trips' is a novel, and a superb one." Robert Lasson

Book World p3 N 24 '68 800w

Reviewed by J. H. Kay
Christian Science Monitor p13 D 19 '68 500w

Reviewed by Earl Tannenbaum
Library J 93:3800 O 15 '68 150w

"One of the critical platitudes about John O'Hara is that he is repetitious. He is, on the contrary, one of the most varied of writers. The present collection is a cycle of 12 stories on a single theme: the illusion of repetition is in his world. . . . Most of these stories are about the misery of being rich; two of them are pictures of the utter squalor that money makes possible. . . . History will accept these stories, along with Mr. O'Hara's other work, as the most morally sensitive stories of our time. Their clean, strong, accurate style is a dimension of the understanding of humanity that has distinguished their author from the beginning." Guy Davenport

N Y Times Bk R p5 N 24 '68 750w

"[The eleven stories are] all competent and readable enough although not as ambitious as the novella either in treatment or theme. . . . O'Hara, in his foreword to the book, says of short stories, 'No one writes them any better than I. . . . Taken as a whole, this collection will not support his boast. Taken alone, 'A Few Trips and Some Poetry' will. . . . In this collection [O'Hara] tends to overuse [dialogue]. . . . All the exposition and narrative development come to the reader through conversation. There are 300- and 400-word 'Let me fill you in' speeches, often flat and sometimes tedious. . . . What is more, there is a dated quality to many of O'Hara's stories which this overreliance on dialogue tends to underline. . . . Younger readers will find this quaint, and the more perceptive among them will look for qualities that are timeless rather than timely." P. L. Sandberg

Sat R 51:43 N 30 '68 1050w

O'HARA, JOHN. The instrument; a novel. 297p
$5.95; ltd ed $12.50 Random house

67-12717

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by J. R. Lindroth
America 118:45 Ja 13 '68 400w

Reviewed by Edward Weeks
Atlantic 220:130 D '67 400w
Choice 5:197 Ap '68 50w

Reviewed by John Thompson
Commentary 45:69 Ja '68 600w

Reviewed by Guy Davenport
Nat R 20:92 Ja 30 '68 500w

O HEHIR, BRENDAN. A Gaelic lexicon for Finnegans wake, and glossary for Joyce's other works. 427p $10 Univ. of Calif. press

823.03 Joyce, James—Finnegans wake

67-29735

This key "gives the glossed expression, Irish original, and English translation. The glossary is arranged by page and line number of the Wake." (Choice)

"A valuable reference."
Choice 5:30 Mr '68 50w

"The present book is of greater importance because of the dominant place of Irish words and pronunciations in Finnegans Wake. [The] associate professor of English, University of California, Berkeley, has provided an exhaustive list . . . giving Irish spellings with phonetic transcriptions (understanding of many passages in the book depends on the ability to read them aloud correctly). . . . Similarly, he treats some 300 words in Joyce's other works in a supplementary list, and in 31 long notes deftly elucidates major historical and etymological matters, correcting errors of earlier commentators. Mr. O Hehir's book will be useful in any library serving appreciable numbers of serious readers of Joyce." T. J. Galvin

Library J 93:1992 My 15 '68 100w

Va Q R 44:cxiv summer '68 120w

OKA, HIDEYUKI. How to wrap five eggs: Japanese design in traditional packaging; foreword by George Nelson; photography by Michikazu Sakai [tr. and adapted for Western readers by Atsuko Nii and Ralph Friedrich]. 203p $15 Harper

745.5 Packaging. Decoration and ornament, Japanese

67-29619

This book contains "200-odd, full-page photographs, some in color, of how specific packages, mainly holding good things to eat, are made . . . in Japan, and were made before the rise of blister packs or vinyl squeeze bottles. All the packages were taken from a 1964 national exhibition arranged by the . . . author for the commercial artists of Japan." (Sci Am)

"This is a lovely book from a world we can never know again. Place it gently on your bookshelf." Ann Bramson

Book World p6 Mr 10 '68 440w

"This book is as charming and delightful as its title: handsome, informative, essential, unique. It is highly recommended not only for art and design sections of libraries but to cultural history, travel, home economics, and merchandising sections. . . . There is no evident awkwardness in translation and adaptation into English."

Choice 5:617 Jl '68 110w

"[The packages] fall into classes: those that are merely wrapped in simple and honest beauty by rural sellers—true folk packages—and those from cities . . . where a special shop has, sometimes for centuries, packaged its wares in a triumph of wood, white cooping or pottery. To leaf these pages with any interest in how things are done is to spend a heartwarming hour. . . . The author is no pessimist. He sees, unlike the American designer George Nelson, who writes an enamored but gloomy foreword, that we can have hope, we can still work. 'If the craftsmen and 'designers' of old Japan could create beauty with their materials, are we, today to accept defeat when faced with ours?"

Sci Am 219:142 Jl '68 550w

OKIGBO, P. N. C. Africa and the common market. 183p $5.50 Northwestern univ. press

382 European Economic Community. Africa—Economic conditions. Africa—Commerce. Nigeria—Economic policy

67-18007

"Mr. Okigbo was the economic advisor to Nigeria, and the chief negotiator between Nigeria and the European Economic Community for the treaty which was signed in 1966. Here he writes of the history of the European Economic Community, the Treaty of Rome, the Yaounde Treaty of 1964, and the effects these will have on Africa both on the structure of trade and on the structure of economic livelihood within the countries of Africa. He gives special emphasis to Nigeria. . . . He also examines the possible African Common Market and the future possibilities for growth." (Library J Index.

OKIGBO, P. N. C.—Continued

"This is a useful and stimulating exposé of the problems facing the African countries in their relations with Europe, especially in its detailed analysis of production and export patterns. In its whole approach the book is well reasoned and thoroughly reasonable."

Economist 224:1102 S 23 '67 700w

"This book is a primary document which will prove valuable for those studying Africa and its trade with the world. . . . A highly specialized book, it will appeal to the student rather than to the layman. Recommended for economics collections of college libraries." R. W. Haseltine

Library J 93:183 Ja 15 '68 150w

"Mr. Okigbo is clearly a skilful negotiator. His book is readable and unpretentious. Unlike some recent work on Nigeria, he tells us what actually happened and why, rather than seeking to impress us with inappropriate economic jargon. He is perhaps too descriptive, sometimes lapsing into long lists without obvious relevance; and sometimes his description stops short of the necessary conclusion. . . . All the same, this is a useful work of reference. . . . The account of relations between Africa and E.E.C. [is] the core of the book. . . . [Here] Mr. Okigbo has given us a useful, if rather unsuspicious and descriptive, interim report."

TLS p227 Mr 7 '68 750w

OLAFSON, FREDERICK A. Principles and persons; an ethical interpretation of existentialism. 258p $7.50 Johns Hopkins press

142 Existentialism

67-16038

In Part I of this study, the author, a professor of philosophy at Harvard University "proposes an interpretation of the more difficult ontological theses of the existentialists."

. . . In Part II he examines the main theses of Heidegger and Sartre with respect to the nature of value, choice, freedom, and obligation. He then takes up a number of criticisms of these views, among them the objections." (Publisher's note) Index.

"The ethical content of existentialism is claimed to center on the responsible individual's creation of values through his own choices. This occasions problems as to how such individuals are to live together, but Olafson makes some suggestions. . . . Heidegger and Sartre . . . are endlessly quoted, in footnotes, without benefit of translation for the non-reader of German or French. Olafson's learned but heavy syntax is certain to disqualify the book for younger college audiences. Those who do struggle through it will question his judgment as to what existentialism is, to what it is indebted, and who its exponents are. Written less narrowly and more clearly, it might have filled a vacuum."

Choice 5:1142 N '68 140w

Reviewed by J. M. Edie

J Philos 65:456 Ag 8 '68 2350w

OLBRACHT, IVAN. The bitter and the sweet; tr. by Iris Urwin. 256p $4.50 Crown

67-17704

"This collection of two stories and a novella presents the poor, devout, unenlightened Hasidic Jews of Polana, a fictitious, semiferal village in the Carpathian mountains. . . . The first two stories set the scene, introducing the village through the eyes of Baynash Zisovich in the first tale, and Pinches Yakubovich in the second. Both men are dedicated Jews who trust in divine miracles to solve their problems. For Baynash the problem is hunger, the absence of livelihood; for Pinches, who only wants to serve God, the problem is a wife whose sexual appetite repels him. . . . [The novella tells of Hannah who,] despite her beauty, is unmarriageable in Polana, because her once wealthy father . . . can no longer provide a dowry. . . . [In another town] she meets and falls in love with Ivo Karajich, an older man, born a Jew and now a free thinker and editor." (N Y Times Bk R) First published in Czechoslovakia as Golet v údolí.

"In the tradition of Isaac Bashevis Singer and S. Y. Agnon, Olbracht treats with humor and sympathy the orthodox Jewish community of Polana, Ruthenia, in the most impoverished region of the sub-Carpathian Ukraine. Like Singer, Olbracht examines the stresses on human character at the point of exhaustion or crisis; like Agnon, he is nostalgically devoted to the religious idealism of a vanishing old world civilization. [This collection] better displays Olbracht's considerable talents as a writer than the realistic social-agrarian novels which had firmly established his Czech reputation before his death in 1952. Urwin's translation is vigorously idiomatic."

Choice 4:1387 F '68 130w

Reviewed by Marian Poller

Library J 92:2432 Je 15 '67 180w

Reviewed by Elaine Gottlieb

N Y Times Bk R p18 J1 2 '67 600w

"The appearance of [this book] is doubly significant. First, it marks the belated American debut of a major Czech writer. . . . Secondly, it offers us one more building block for that citadel-in-progress, a literary monument to the Jewish village life expunged in Europe during World War II. . . . Lacking verbal pyrotechnics, Olbracht's quiet style apprehends reality directly. Each story contains an ideational undercurrent, a thematic suggestiveness that transcends the narrative line. Biblical allusions, a character's religious destiny, or an entire people's historical consciousness variously add tonal dimensions to the tales. Olbracht's kindly vision makes Polana as recognizable as Sholom Aleichem's Kasrilevke, and as universal as any village out of Chekhov or Faulkner. . . . [The pieces are] rendered into sprightly English." Curt Leviant

Sat R 50:34 Je 3 '67 1050w

O'LEARY, MICHAEL KENT. The politics of American foreign aid; foreword by Harold Karan Jacobson. 172p $5.95 Atherton

333.91 Economic assistance. U.S.—Politics and government—1945- 67-18274

An analysis "of the attitudes of the general public, the political parties, the pressure groups, and Congress itself to the issue of foreign aid. Basing his work on poll data, press comment, Congressional and Executive documents, Congressional roll-call votes, and interviews with Congressmen, their assistants, foreign aid officials, and lobbyists, [the author attempts to show] . . . how the workings of the American political system affect our foreign aid policy and programs." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"O'Leary capped diligent and imaginative research with a refreshingly light literary touch. . . . Yet, the end result was somehow not altogether satisfying. . . . The first problem which one might cite is an implicit model of the American political process with the Congress as an almost exclusive focal point. . . . A second and related problem has to do with an occasional gap between data and conclusions. . . . [Nevertheless] this book is strongly recommended for use as a text in undergraduate and graduate courses for at least three purposes: (1) first, for the wealth of data and bibliographical references; (2) second, for a demonstration of the limits of presently available analytical techniques; (3) third, as a challenge to new generations of students to improve on these techniques." Vincent Davis

Am Pol Sci R 62:680 Je '68 1050w

Choice 5:872 S '68 180w

"O'Leary, an assistant professor of political science at Syracuse University, . . . has written in understandable English a competent study. . . . It would be a particularly good thing if some of the busy officials dealing with foreign aid in both the executive and legislative branches took the time to read it. Professor O'Leary's book is for the specialist, not the general reader. Recommended for special, university, and large public libraries." David Cooley

Library J 92:2790 Ag '67 210w

OLESHA, IURII KARLOVICH. See Olyesha, Y.

OLIVA, LEO E. Soldiers on the Santa Fe trail. 226p pl maps $4.50 Univ. of Okla. press

917.8 Santa Fe Trail. The West—History, Military. U.S. Army—Military life 67-15579

A "study of the soldiers who worked on and guarded the wagon trains that used the Santa Fe Trail from around 1830 to 1880, covering the periods of the Mexican War and the Civil War." (Library J) Bibliographies. Index.

"His indebtedness to earlier writers, Oliva properly acknowledges. But he has carefully combed the primary sources again, sometimes emerging with new details; he maps relatively uncharted ground in accounts of military escorts on the trail after 1843; he brings together much information on military posts along the trail; and the great value of the book is as a synthesis, pulling together the whole record of one of the principal paths to the conquest of the West."

Choice 5:258 Ap '68 200w

"Oliva has depended primarily upon records in the National Archives and on published diaries, letters, journals, and memoirs for his sources. The result is a sound and scholarly study, though one could wish for more information on the daily lives of these soldiers."

W. H. Leckie

J Am Hist 54:889 Mr '68 300w

"Admittedly, [the author has narrowed his field] but he has done a good job at filling in the background and broadening the scope of the story. On the other hand, he has not designed the book for popular reading. Its subject is a minor one in the sum total of knowledge and, no doubt, will have little interest for the general reader. Southwestern libraries should certainly buy it; elsewhere, if use and interest warrant." F. W. Binns

Library J 92:2771 Ag '67 100w

OLIVER, ANDREW. Portraits of John and Abigail Adams. 284p il $12.50 Harvard univ. press

B or 92 Adams, John—Portraits. Adams, Abigail (Smith)—Portraits 67-11863

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by D. J. Reed

Am Hist R 73:1625 Je '68 460w

Choice 4:1235 Ja '68 90w

Reviewed by J. D. Prown

Yale R 57:623 summer '68 2050w

OLIVER, H. J., ed. Dido, queen of Carthage; and, The massacre at Paris. See Marlowe, C.

OLIVER, RAYMOND. The Wine and food society's guide to classic sauces and their preparation; tr. from the French by Rosemary Joeke; with color phot. by Kenneth Swain; and drawings by Ian Garrard [pub] in assn. with the Society. 197p $7.95 World pub.

641.8 Cookery—Sauces 67-14828

This volume presents "methods of making the basic sauces, white, brown and blond, the veloutés, espagnoles, mayonnaises, bechamels. . . [Included are an] explanation of cookery terms, processes and techniques, the classification of sauces, stocks and glazes." (Best Sell)

Reviewed by Friede Gruenrock

Best Sell 28:54 My 1 '68 190w

"This handsome book . . . is a pleasure to read despite some awkward phraseology attributable to the translator; however, it is more useful for leisure reading than for practical use in the kitchen. American equivalents of British measures are . . . not always given. In no case are precise amounts of ingredients listed. This book would make a fine gift for a dedicated true gourmet, but only libraries with a comprehensive cookery collection will need to purchase." Jack Goodwin

Library J 93:2870 Ag '68 90w

OLIVER, ROLAND, ed. The middle age of African history; maps drawn by Regmarad. 105p $2.20; pa $1.50 Oxford

960 Africa—History [67-111282]

This book contains "a series of broadcasts [given in 1967] on the B.B.C. The contributors are mainly young scholars, in the 'new wave' of African historical research. They cover the subject both by country—for example, the rise of the Benin kingdom, and the rise of the Akan—and by reference to general trends—the impact of the slave trade on West Africa, for instance. [The editor] . . . contributes a short chapter on historical research methods in Africa and on the changing emphasis of the past decade, notably the speed with which the colonial period has 'receded from the consciousness of independent Africa'." (TLS)

"All of the 14 contributors including the editor have previously published books or articles on their subjects so that there is almost no original material. Also, . . . there is really no unifying theme other than the topographical, and the time span ranges from pre-history to the late 19th century. Some of the pieces would seem to have been better as talks than as essays and individually have little to offer the specialist but collectively serve to give the nonspecialist some idea of the scope and methodology of modern African history. Unfortunately, there are no bibliographies or suggested readings. Index. Recommended for all college and university libraries."

Choice 5:849 S '68 130w

TLS p1123 N 30 '67 130w

OLSCHEWSKI, ALFRED. We fly: written and il. by Alfred Olschewski. 31p $3.75 Little

629.13 Flight—Juvenile literature 67-17546

This is an "elementary history of aviation, starting with the men who watched the birds and tried to imitate them, up to the jets and rockets that will go to the moon. . . . Kindergarten to grade two." (Library J)

"End-paper diagrams clearly [indicate] ten working parts of a small plane. . . . This capsule history of aviation will admirably serve youngest interests. The flat-color drawings are gaily animated." V. H.

Horn Bk 44:56 F '68 70w

"The colorful illustrations expand the simplified text, and, although the author's delightful sketches of balloons and early airplanes are not exact replicas, they can give a child a good idea of what the early airships and planes looked like and how they were operated. Suitable for the youngest children." J. L. Sher

Library J 93:860 F 15 '68 100w

Reviewed by Philip Morrison

Sci Am 219:135 D '68 60w

OLSEN, PAUL. Shadow of me; a novel. 212p $5.95 Holt

68-10054

"Adam Gregory, a bachelor . . . is a New York doctor. Among his circle of friends are Walter, a 26-year-old Negro, and Arnold Goldman, a Jewish contemporary. While Adam functions reasonably well in the world of medicine, his inner world is only a shadow because he is unable to find within himself any passion at all." (Library J)

Reviewed by V. J. Colimore

Best Sell 27:454 Mr 1 '68 190w

"Paul Olsen is a sensitive writer with the talent for creating characters that are very real and warmly alive. But he has crowded so many undigested ideas of what life is, or is not, into this novel, that I cannot be certain what it is he is trying to say. Further, I am disappointed that he has settled into a strange mediocrity with this third novel. There is in it not a trace of the graceful style and the clarity of thought that marked The Virgin of San Gil [BRD 1965]. . . . I cannot honestly recommend this novel to anyone." R. F. Cayton

Library J 93:1501 Ap 1 '68 240w

"The most genuinely beautiful character is Arnold Goldman, aging jeweler, Dr. Gregory's only friend. . . . The young Negro artist, Walter Ford, is almost as round and as solid a character as Goldman. . . . With economy, grace and personal style (despite occasional trouble with ambiguous pronouns), the book speeds toward Gregory's reawakening out of neutrality and disaffection. . . . The climactic revelation that at the root of his denial of humanity was a frustrated teen-age romance seems hastily contrived. . . . but this clumsy plot maneuver is partially made up for by the mastery with which Mr. Olsen presents Gregory's pilgrimage to his father's grave. . . . Craftsmanship and equity set this novel distinctively apart from hard-breathing manifestoes of affirmation. Almost everything functions to prove . . . that the 'Shadow of Me' is 'We.' J. R. Frakes

OLSEN, PAUL—Continued

N Y Times Bk R p51 Mr 24 '68 700w

"In an emotionally charged, eloquent new novel Mr. Olsen dramatizes an unlikely, intellectually conceived situation. . . . [He] has expended much professional skill in his development of [Gregory], springing him into life with such vividness that he remains fixed as a warm and memorable figure."

Va Q R 44:cxliv autumn '68 100w

OLSON, CHARLES. Selected writings of Charles Olson; ed. with an introd. by Robert Creeley. 280p $7.95; pa $2.45 New directions

808

66-27613

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Choice 4:1382 F '68 70w

Reviewed by M. L. Rosenthal

N Y Times Bk R p26 O 27 '68 750w

Reviewed by William Stafford

Poetry 111:413 Mr '68 1050w

OLSSON, NILS WILLIAM. Swedish passenger arrivals in New York, 1820-1850. 391p il col il $15 Swedish pioneer hist. soc.

929 Swedes in the U.S.

67-21056

"A compilation of the names, age, sex, occupation of approximately 4,000 transoceanic passengers of Swedish origin arriving at the port of New York from 1820-50. Also included are birth places and dates, names of parents and spouses and, where known, American places of settlement of these immigrants." (Choice)

"Primarily a source book for advanced statistical, demographic, economic, and sociological studies of early Swedish emigration, this highly specialized compendium . . . of no value for undergraduate libraries with the possible exception of those collecting Swedish genealogical materials or desiring raw data for computer assisted demographic studies of Swedish emigration for the years shown."

Choice 5:464 Je '68 200w

"Olsson has filled a great gap in Swedish emigration history. Swedish Passenger Arrivals is the first mass inventory of ships' manifests and deals with only one nationality. However, the National Archives has unbroken series of original passenger lists from many of the immigrant ports; and Olsson's handsome, well-organized volume should stimulate other scholars to undertake similar studies of other nationalities and other ports." Sture Lindmark

J Am Hist 55:133 Je '68 250w

"Of great value to scholars as source material for studying immigration, the work will be welcomed by genealogists and sociologists. Needed in larger public libraries, college and university libraries, and of course, wherever genealogy is studied." P. W. Filby

Library J 93:1468 Ap 1 '68 200w

OLYESHA, YURI. Love, and other stories; tr. and with an introd. by Robert Payne. 230p $4.95 Washington sq. press

67-17360

A collection of nine short stories and a short satiric novel, Envy, a "Chaplinesque farce in which [Babichev] the director of the Food Trust, and minister to men's gluttony, confronts [Kavalerov] a sentimental good-for-nothing romantic and an envious intellectual.

[In] his collections of short stories, Love (1929) and The Cherry Stone (1930) [printed in this volume, Olyesha has written stories of his childhood and youth in Odessa]. (Publisher's note)

Choice 5:633 Jl '68 190w

Reviewed by Irving Howe

Harper 236:73 Ja '68 550w

Reviewed by E. J. Brown

Nation 206:86 Ja 15 '68 700w

"[Olesha's] theme was . . . the contrast between the old world and the new. . . . All of Olesha's work may be read as metaphor. The tone is quietly ironic, the images unique, and, through them, a puzzling world . . . not so much described as presented in its implications. 'Love,' for example, is a laughing argument in disguise about Marxism and 'reality,' . . . comparison of two kinds of distorted perception, that which results from such physical defects as color-blindness and the more insidious variety, induced by such emotional imbalance as infatuation. . . . Olesha sympathizes in an amused and tender way with the rejected dreamer, with Nikolai Kavalerov of Envy; and he appreciates . . . Babichev [who] is a kind of Soviet George F. Babbitt, conceived in . . . divided mind and drawn in outline. . . . [However] Mr. Payne's work is full of inaccuracies. . . . His interpretations of Olesha's works are unreliable, and a spot check of his translations reveals gross blunders." Helen Muchnic

N Y Rev of Books 10:19 Mr 28 '68 900w

Reviewed by J. K. Davison

N Y Times Bk R p80 N 19 '67 400w

"[Olyesha] was a] highly sophisticated craftsman, appreciated by the connoisseurs, disdained by the literary officialdom, and somewhat difficult for the average reader. Though never officially excommunicated, [he] was quietly exiled, and his writings were out of print for decades. . . . [The writings] assembled in this volume [are] not all, incidentally, in 'new and definitive translations,' as claimed by the publishers on the dustjacket; the translation of the novel Envy is thirty years old, while the others are hardly definitive. . . . They are united both by their stylistic peculiarities . . . and by the broad theme of what is described by one of the characters in Envy as 'conspiracy of feelings.' . . . Olyesha's central concern is a fear for the future of human feelings, both the noble and the despicable, in a society where worship of technology is second only to obligatory adulation of a political doctrine." Maurice Friedberg

Sat 50:31 D 23 '67 700w

OMAN, CAROLA. Napoleon's viceroy; Eugène de Beauharnais. 528p il $7.95 Funk

B or 92 Beauharnais, Eugène de, Prince d'Eichstätt 68-18161

A biography of Napoleon's stepson—the son of his first wife, Josephine de Beauharnais—who became Viceroy of Italy and Prince of Venice during the Napoleonic era. Index.

"[The author's] sincere and sensitive portrait of [Eugène] possesses a charm, insight and sensitivity that will captivate all who are interested in the Napoleonic epic." Geoffrey Bruun

Book World p8 Ag 4 '68 800w

Economist 222:233 Ja 21 '67 440w

"Students of the period, and those who are but lightly acquainted with the story of the rise and fall of Napoleon I, have reason to be grateful to the author. Her scholarship is brilliant, and she has Carlyle's eye and ear for a trivial incident illustrating the broader aspects of a gigantic theme; but the merit of her biography lies in the fact that she has the ability to paint a canvas that envelops not one man, or many men, but an era. . . . Miss Oman portrays [the] stirring story in detail and rich detail at that, but in her projection of campaigns, policies and battles she does not overlook the tender side of the man's life, his love affair with his wife, the Princess Augusta Amella of Bavaria. . . . This book is an extremely important contribution to the enormous existing library on the period and all Napoleonic students will be grateful for its appearance. Notwithstanding that, it is a book that can be enjoyed by anyone who enjoys reading history." R. F. Delderfield

N Y Times Bk R p48 O 6 '68 600w

TLS p306 Ap 13 '67 500w

OMAR KHAYAAM. The original Rubaiyyat of Omar Khayaam; a new translation with critical commentaries by Robert Graves and Omar Ali-Shah. 86p $5 Doubleday

891.5

68-18089

This volume includes a new version of the Persian poem, based on a 12th century text, as well as discussions of the Edward Fitzgerald translation. Bibliography.

"No work by Robert Graves can be ignored. Not even when he fails to improve on what someone else—in this instance Edward Fitzgerald—has done before him. And certainly not when, with faulty judgment, he takes the liberty of blaming FitzGerald for silliness and inaccuracy. . . . Claims that the quatrains represent some sort of 'temporal pattern from dawn to the dead of night' . . . its central verses recording the metaphysical noontide torments of a passionate mind' are nonsense. . . . How dubious 'ancient manuscripts' of rub'iyat are can be explained by the adeptness of Iranian forgers and by the ease with which this verse form comes to Persians. . . . One fact that is clear is this, that FitzGerald remains closer to the spirit and therefore, ultimately, to the text of the Persian than Graves does." Peter Avery

Atlantic 221:114 Je '68 1600w

Economist 225:vi D 2 '67 300w

Reviewed by Anthony Burgess
Encounter 30:77 Ja '68 2100w

"[This version is] erudite, often pungent, but strangely drained of the Fitzgerald magic. . . . Omar's quatrains were rhymed a-a-x-a, as are Fitzgerald's, but Graves presents totally unrhymed verses (a serious flaw, to this reviewer): precise, yes, frequently epigrammatic, often provocative, but, it must be said, not infrequently prosy and dull. . . . In the foreword Mr. Graves uses 30 pages to demolish to his satisfaction Fitzgerald's irresponsible and inaccurate 'transmogrifications.' . . . That Omar held Sufi views rather than being a blasphemous satirist of such, Graves demonstrates rather effectively. . . . Nevertheless, like the R.S.V. and the 1611 Bibles, Fitzgerald and Graves-Shah must now fruitfully nudge each other on library shelves." B. W. Fuson
Library J 93:1905 My 1 '68 400w

Reviewed by Julian Symons
New Statesman 74:780 D 1 '67 40w

"It must be reported . . . that, despite its occasional dictional felicities, [this translation fails] to match even the timeworn colors of [Fitzgerald's] superb Victorian re-creation of Khayaam. . . . As for mistakes, the present book has a plethora of them. . . . One is forced to conclude that the present translators have left in a muddle the question of the poorer canon of Khayaam's poetry, have dealt tentatively with the meaning of poetry and have ungraciously defamed a fine translation without which their own would have little significance." J. D. Yohannan
N Y Times Bk R p10 Jl 28 '68 900w

Reviewed by R. A. Sokolov
Newsweek 71:104 My 20 '68 900w

Time 91:71 My 31 '68 700w

"Some examples of the book's level of scholarship is not very encouraging. Omar Ali-Shah criticizes Fitzgerald and others for their inadequate grasp of Persian, while himself providing [an] erroneous reading of the first verse. . . . The 'general biography', quite apart from its doubtful relevance, contains a real howler. . . . More irritating than such errors is the parade of debatable learning. . . . The main purpose of this new translation is to show that Khayaam was a Sufi mystic whose poetry can only properly be understood by Sufi initiates. . . . To prove Khayaam a Sufi, however, involves the dangerous assertion that the poet does not mean what he says. . . . The translation itself is accurate and effective enough, but most people will probably still prefer Fitzgerald's 'neo-romantic affectation'. . . . Robert Graves's introduction is pleasantly eccentric and ends on a note of reactionary medievalism that would have delighted G. K. Chesterton."

TLS p1190 D 7 '67 600w

Va Q R 44:clii autumn '68 110w

Reviewed by A. D. Culler
Yale R 58:107 O '68 2250w

O'NEILL, DAVID P. The priest in crisis; a study in role change. 233p $5.95 Pflaum
253 Catholic Church. Clergy 68-21240

This work deals "with sociological change as it affects priests. It points to developments in society and the adjustments in function and role that these have caused in the priesthood." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"The problems raised by Father O'Neill are not limited to priests. What he is writing about is in large measure the Christian identity crisis, even though the application is to one group. . . . One of the most interesting problems discussed by David O'Neill is that of freedom and initiative. . . . O'Neill introduces some fascinating ideas into the picture when he discusses the Church as a communications system. . . . [He] gives expression to many insights, seminal ideas, which could be expanded in volumes. . . . [This work] pushes beyond description to insight." Mary Daly

Commonweal 89:222 N 8 '68 700w

"This is a chatty, first-person-style book is. . . by a priest who 'has been there' and still is. . . . The book is easily readable and highly informative on the pastoral problems of the diocesan parish clergy. It covers the main points of contemporary discussion in this area: the identity crisis, initiative and authority, status and role, communication and celibacy. . . . With all his talk of change and crisis the author still stands on a relatively stable and conservative definition of the priesthood. . . . The suggestion is made that the priesthood can be 'combined with another vocation' and the central error lies in the notion that . . . priests who are professionally trained educators, editors, mathematicians, social workers, etc., are not performing 'as priests' when they do this work." J. H. Fichter
Critic 27:94 O '68 700w

TLS p1344 N 28 '68 340w

O'NEILL, MARY. Take a number; II. by Al Nagy. 63p il $3.95; lib bdg $4.70 Doubleday
811 Arithmetic—Poetry—Juvenile literature 68-12378

In this introduction to numbers and elementary arithmetic, the author of Words, Words, Words (BRD 1966) "combines . . . poetry with the language of mathematics." (Publisher's note) "Ages seven to ten." (N Y Times Bk R)

"Mary O'Neill's poems in this delightful volume may not bring children much closer to an understanding of mathematics . . . but they should eagerly respond to their sparkling imagery, originality and gaiety. . . . The system we call Base Ten, digits and symbols, sets and subsets, all are handily explained in lively verse. . . . [Concepts of] size and distance, space and time, all evoke pictures that stick in the mind." Polly Goodwin

Book World p24 S 15 '68 160w

Reviewed by J. K. Meyers
Library J 93:3958 O 15 '68 100w

"[This cheerfully decorated volume] is a delightful collection of mind ticklers. . . . The experiences are familiar to an 8 or 9-year-old, the vocabulary is pleasantly challenging, and the nonpatronizing message is that the world is a beautiful but complicated place. Mrs. O'Neill succeeds in making arithmetic attractive (which isn't easy) by indicating how inconvenient it would be to do without it." N. L. Magid

N Y Times Bk R p38 S 11 '68 390w

O'NEILL, ROBERT J. The German army and the Nazi party, 1933-1939; foreword by Sir Basil Liddell Hart. 286p pl $8.50 Heineman

355.3 Germany—Politics and government—1933-1945. Germany. Army. National socialist party (Germany) 67-11678

The author "analyses the process by which Hitler and his . . . Party Chiefs . . . were able gradually to isolate and neutralize the influence of [the German generals], at the same time exploiting their professionalism and patriotism to build up a mighty war-machine which the soldiers were ultimately powerless to check." (Publisher's note) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"The author has engaged in very serious and careful scholarship designed to overcome the picture of the German General Staff as willing and pliable tools for the execution of the Führer's will. . . . O'Neill is especially concerned to cast the person and role of General v. Fritsch in a new and more favorable light by showing that he was among those who manfully tried to stem the tide of Nazification of the military. But the author's labors cannot be said to introduce any new evidence that would justify a reversal of the impression that Fritsch and most of his peers left to the world: of a military leadership that was undoubtedly disdainful of Hitler's methods, and some of whom even despised him personally, but who supported his policies willingly enough as long as they could be expected to lead to a militarily powerful, internationally respected and economically autonomous Germany." H. P. Secher
Am Pol Sci R 62:590 Je '68 2600w

O'NEILL, R. J.—Continued

"Very important. No other work in English or German sheds so much light on spectacular crises like the Blood Purge of 1934 or the Fritsch affair of 1938 nor explains so well the less eventful process by which the army gradually became a tool of the Nazi state. O'Neill reconstructs convincingly how the power and influence of the generals simply evaporated leaving them wondering how they had been 'coordinated' so painlessly. This book thus corrects the view that the army was one institution which maintained a semblance of independence under Hitler's dictatorship. It also helps to correct A. J. P. Taylor's revisionist view about the origins of World War II by proving that as early as 1934 Hitler was already outlining to the military his plans for conquering 'living space' in the east."

Choice 4:1307 Ja '68 140w

"[Hitler's] speeches to the generals, of which Dr O'Neill often provides new and fuller versions, rambled over future prospects, and his audience rarely took them seriously. Even so, Dr O'Neill makes the contrast between Hitler and the generals too sharp. Hitler also had no defined plan, only an instinct that one day something would happen, if he kept on applying the screw." A. J. P. Taylor

New Statesman 72:202 Ag 5 '66 400w

Reviewed by James Joll

N Y Rev of Books 10:14 F 15 '68 600w

TLS p778 S 1 '66 750w

O'NEILL, WILLIAM L. Divorce in the progressive era. 295p $6.50 Yale univ. press

301.42 Divorce. U.S.—Social conditions

67-24507

The author "uses the debate from 1890-1920 over the increasing rate of divorce as an opening to study a critical period in the history of the adjustment of the Victorian family structure and Protestant sexual ethics to the demands of an urban industrialized society. He concludes that by the end of the period the legitimacy of divorce had become generally accepted." (Choice)

"The author challenges the conventional interpretation that divorce was symptomatic of the decline of the family and claims that divorce has become the safety valve making possible the preservation of the conjugal family system. This speculation like various other insights in [the book] is not fully explored. Above all, the author tends to inject his own sympathetic view of divorce in a way that distracts from the historical focus of the book. . . . A welcome addition to the small body of scholarly work in this field, [this volume] still leaves the reader with many questions unanswered." B. M. Solomon

Am Hist R 73:1661 Je '68 650w

Choice 5:626 Je '68 200w

"The reviewer could dispute with O'Neill on a number of specific issues. He would contend that the divorce controversy was much older than O'Neill describes it, that the formative period for the divorce laws was earlier in the nineteenth century, that the real battleground in the Progressive era was not over the system itself but over social attitudes toward the divorced person. But these areas of disagreement do not detract from the interest and value of the book. The author has written with clarity and vigor on a neglected phase of social history." N. M. Blake

J Am Hist 54:916 Mr '68 600w

ONETTI, JUAN CARLOS. The shipyard; tr. from the Spanish by Rachel Caffyn. 190p $4.95 Scribner

68-12490

Larsen, the main character of this novel, "returns to the town of Santa Maria, from which he had been expelled five years earlier. [He] takes over the managership of Santa Maria's once-prosperous shipyard but soon discovers he has entered a world . . . of illusion and delusion." (Publisher's note) This is a translation of El Astillero, published in Buenos Aires in 1961.

Reviewed by Saul Sosnowski

Best Sell 28:103 Je 1 '68 350w

"Because of Onetti's stylistic approach, which includes consciously fragmented dialogues and a steady stream of hints about undisclosed but imminent disaster, there are portions of 'The Shipyard' which prove hard to read. But Onetti is trying to evoke a picture of futility and hopelessness—a task which he performs very ably—and these stylistic efforts are part of the evocation. . . . Onetti's purpose is to keep the reader absorbed, but to remain enigmatic. He succeeds admirably. [He] is a skillful writer whose prose is absorbing and demanding." J. N. Goodsell

Christian Science Monitor pC1 O 8 '68 480w

Reviewed by L. S. Thompson

Library J 93:2898 Ag '68 120w

"A vast majority of people blind themselves into believing that there is some meaning in their absurdly specific roles. . . . Onetti throws them straight back at us, with effectively calculated exaggeration, and on every page of this elegant book, we remember that, one day, its paper will turn yellow . . . and its 'spongy, rotten' binding will decompose. . . . Sly hints at unrevealed catastrophes in the past or future affecting the characters' lives . . . help to sustain a great deal of suspense, because the reader is effectively coaxed into believing that their elucidation will reveal more than the skillfully wry anticlimaxes with which the novel abounds. . . . [The] translation skillfully conveys the obsessive, clinging style of the original, a book which, for all its perhaps unavoidable portentousness, few Latin American novelists have equalled." David Gallagher

N Y Times Bk R p4 Je 16 '68 850w

ONG, WALTER J., ed. Knowledge and the future of man; an international symposium. 276p $7.95 Holt

301.2 Technology and civilization 68-10076

The fifteen "studies here are all original works, done especially for this sesquicentennial volume [in honor of St. Louis University]. . . . Each contributor addresses himself in his own way to the general subject of Knowledge and the Future of Man in terms of his own field of competence and special interests." (Pref) Among the contributors are Karl Rahner, John T. Noonan, John T. Edsall, Eric Ashby and Harlan Cleveland.

"In editing an anthology on as broad a topic as [this] . . . Ong faces two certain obstacles. . . . The first is the problem of continuity: in a series of essays ranging from biology to comparative religion . . . the editor must be careful that all share some vital point of interaction, some basic concern that makes each one relevant and necessary. The second problem is [that] . . . to make a contribution to this already crowded area, the present book would have to offer a valid and valuable perspective on the burgeoning amount of knowledge possessed by man in all the various disciplines of the academic world. On both counts this book succeeds admirably. In addition it provides something that always remains unusual: stimulating intellectual adventure." J. V. McDonnell

America 118:448 Ap 6 '68 600w

Choice 5:614 Jl '68 130w

"St. Louis University celebrated its birthday by convoking a colloquium of think-tank thinkers and probers—men like Rahner, McLuhan, Eliade and Kepes. Their comment on learning and its environment provides an up-to-date view of human knowledge. For our money Ong's introductory essay is itself—to coin a hot new phrase—worth the price of the book. And the price is a bit high."

Christian Century 85:236 F 21 '68 60w

"Father Ong suggests that the 'two cultures' of science and the humanities are not only opposed but also allied. He concludes that we must 'maintain a firm, if precarious, hold on both.' The tenuous unity of the contributions in this volume is sometimes lost in the disparate goals of the essays." William Gerber

Library J 93:756 F 15 '68 90w

ONG, WALTER J. The presence of the word. 360p $6.95 Yale univ. press

401 Language and languages—Philosophy 67-24508

Father Ong, professor of English at St. Louis University, seeks to demonstrate "the need for recognizing that we have moved in our day far beyond oral-aural patterns and the typographic patterns which succeeded them into a new era of electronic communication. [He shows] that we must assess the force of such changes in our past history and attempt to measure the force which present changes in our sensorium will inevitably bring about." (Library J) Bibliography.

"Students stirred by the aphoristic revelation of Marshall McLuhan should be directed to Ong, whose comparable insights are grounded on much more thorough and reliable scholarship. . . . Subject and name index. This important book has wide relevance for modern man and should be available in every college library."

Choice 5:614 JI '68 220w

"This book clearly places Ong among those who are more or less optimistic about the overall impact of technology on man. . . . Though I do not always share Ong's optimism about technology, I stand in awe of his erudition and originality. Though I wonder about his uncompromising personalism in an age when we seem to need a theological understanding of nature and of suprapersonal structures, I admire his capacity to relate his theology to an important cultural problem. For those concerned with the very deep message the media are administering to us this book must be read, even at the expense of the late show."

Harvey Cox

Christian Century 85:456 Ap 10 '68 700w

"Although this book is sometimes distressingly heavy reading, and Father Ong overburdens it with references to secondary sources, and stresses its basic postulates with wearying persistence, it is an important, indeed, an inescapably important study. . . . The book is stimulating in that it calls for a radically different sort of interpretation of ourselves and our history. . . . Every serious student of human affairs should read [it]." J. A. Rycenga

Library J 92:4420 D 1 '67 180w

"Ong, a learned primitivist, looks back to a purely oral society with nostalgia, but sees that such a society must have lacked the relative instantaneity of print. . . . What is, to me, both the most astonishing and revealing passage in the book . . . concerns the Incarnation, and the careful divine timing of it. The question is, why did God 'enter human history' when he did? The answer is that he did so 'at the precise time when psychological structures assured that his entrance would have the greatest opportunity to endure and flower.' . . . This makes God sound like J. Walter Thompson, the Incarnation a well-researched Madison Avenue operation. I have very great respect for Fr. Ong, but no idea how he came to write this passage." Frank Kermode

N Y Rev of Books 10:22 Mr 14 '68 3550w

O'NOLAN, BRIAN. The best of Myles. See O'Brien, F.

OPDAHL, KEITH MICHAEL. The novels of Saul Bellow; an introduction. 200p $7.50 Pa. state univ. press

813 Bellow, Saul 67-16197

The author discusses each of Bellow's novels, arguing that the novelist "continually returns to the opposition between the willful and the loving, the skeptical and the believing. This conflict pervades Bellow's style, the structure of his novels, and the psychology of his protagonists; it is at once the unifying element of his fiction and the source of his difficulties." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"The strength of [this] book, which is a revised and extended dissertation, lies in the steady attention to the novels themselves and such cumulative effect as sequential study provides. To the extent that Mr. Opdahl tries to relate his character analyses to problems of presentation . . . he is working at what many critics take to be the crucial question about Bellow's craft. A real breakthrough here would be illuminating, but Mr. Opdahl's heavy commitment to tracing ideological themes overwhelms the subtler demands of narrative analysis. For this a more supple style and less conventional assumptions about the nature of fiction would be requisite." W. E. Bezanson

Am Lit 40:422 N '68 440w

Choice 5:624 JI '68 130w

"Because of the logical presentation of an acceptable and scholarly argument in a pleasantly succinct style, [this] is a sound contribution to the understanding of [Bellow]. . . . The bibliography will be most useful to students. Recommended for academic libraries." R. F. Cayton

Library J 93:753 F 15 '68 210w

"[The] driving preoccupation [of Bellow's heroes] is the problem of how to cope with and react to their environment, which is both unreliable and unavoidable. . . . In his intelligent introductory survey, . . . Mr. Opdahl sees this clearly. . . . [However] Mr. Opdahl sometimes takes the word for the deed. He is more perceptive when he isolates certain recurring situations and themes in the novels. [He has some] dubious points. . . . Yet all in all this is a sensible survey; not very original, but a useful contribution to the debate about Bellow's work."

TLS p311 Mr 28 '68 750w

OPPENHEIM, A. LEO, ed. & tr. Letters from Mesopotamia; official, business, and private letters on clay tablets from two millennia; tr. and with an introd. by A. Leo Oppenheim. 217p pl $5.95 Univ. of Chicago press

913.35 Mesopotamia.—Civilization 67-20576

"This book contains the translations of one hundred and fifty letters written in Akkadian on clay tablets . . . from the time of King Sargon of Akkad (about 2334-2279 B.C.) . . . [to] the period of Persian domination over Mesopotamia (beginning 539 B.C.) . . . [The author's stated purpose is] to provide a panoramic view of Mesopotamian civilization during this [time and] . . . to convey a more intimate and varied image of this civilization than that offered by the readily available translations of Akkadian epic texts, royal inscriptions, and law codes. . . . A condensed survey of Mesopotamian civilization, its sources, and its development is presented as the first part of this book." (Foreword) Bibliography. Glossary.

"[This volume] is well suited to the student of ancient Near Eastern history and as a supplement to [the author's] previous work, Ancient Mesopotamia [BRD 1965]. Scholars will find different uses for the translations of difficult and disputed passages and the previously untranslated tablets. . . . The list of letters and bibliography of translated Akkadian letters will be of use only to the specialist, but the select bibliography and glossary are most current and useful to the nonspecialist."

Choice 5:540 Je '68 200w

"[These letters] contain the few texts from Babylonia and Assyria which in a sense can be said to put flesh on the dry bones of political history. They will be enjoyed by all students of ancient history and by the general reader anxious to identify himself with men who some three to four thousand years ago laid the foundations of our Western civilization. This book belongs on library shelves regardless of the library's size." Joseph Bram

Library J 93:2004 My 15 '68 200w

ORAISON, MARC. The celibate condition and sex; tr. by Leonard Mayhew. 158p $3.95 Sheed 301.41 Celibacy 67-21911

This book "is a psychological study of the celibate condition in relation to sex. Using the dictionary definition of celibacy—the state of one who is not married—Oraison devotes two-thirds of his book to the application of psychological findings to the study of various manifestations of the celibate, or unmarried life. The smaller portion of the book which discusses institutional celibacy emphasizes the fact that priestly celibacy is a law of the Church, not a law of God." (Critic) Originally published in 1966 as Le Célibat.

Critic 26:93 Ap '68 100w

"Father Oraison, surgeon and theologian, and a pioneer in dealing with problems of psychoanalysis and sex and their relationship to the priesthood, eight years ago established a sanitarium specializing in psychiatry for priests, at Cambo in the Pyrenees. His book is an excellent study of various types of celibates and their problems. . . . His whole discussion, especially his basic distinction between negative and positive celibacy, should considerably enlighten current controversies in this area. His treatment of this important problem is recommended for professional counselors, spiritual directors, and those seriously concerned." W. C. Heiser

Library J 92:3426 O 1 '67 130w

ORAISON, MARC. Morality for our time; tr. by Nels Challe. 140p $3.95 Doubleday 241 Christian ethics. Religion and science 68-11922

Despite the "influence of psychology on man's awareness of himself and his behavior, traditional Christian morality or moralism has refused to keep in tune with these modern insights. In this book Oraison, a priest and psychologist, attempts to indicate how the 'old morality' just does not and cannot jell with the legitimate findings of contemporary psychology; in fact it is unhealthy and unchristian. He proposes a tentative outline to resolve the issue, one that is psychologically relevant and based on a true Christian sense of freedom and responsibility." (Library J)

"I would recommend the book heartily to those not familiar with new moral trends in the Church, especially if they have interest in psychology. Furthermore, Oraison does make certain contributions to Christian ethics at its present frontiers. . . . If [he] fails to present to our satisfaction healthy adult forms of freedom, autonomy, culpability and respect for law, still his psychological analysis of the regressive forms underlying certain moralities adds devastating force to ground-cleaning now going on in Christian ethics. . . . In brief, the book has limitations, but is rich and suggestive. Although the present heterogeneity of Catholic thinking is increasing in the field of morality as much as anywhere else, Oraison will give practically any reader things worth thinking about." J. G. Milhaven
Critic 27:91 O '68 1500w

"[This] is a tempting, provocative, excellent study, one that should be read by anyone interested in evolving a truly contemporaneous Christian morality." A. B. Brzoska
Library J 93:2842 Ag '68 130w

ORBAAN, ALBERT. Dogs against crime; true accounts of canine training and exploits in worldwide police work past and present; il. with phot. and with drawings by the author. 234p $5.95 Day 636.7 Dogs—Training. Criminal investigation 68-11294

The accounts describe the use of dogs in police work in New York City, "Australia, Rome, London, Chicago, Copenhagen, [and] Baltimore, . . . and from such breeding and training centers as operate in Bloomfield, Connecticut, Bonn, West Germany, and Freeport, Long Island." (Sat R) Bibliography.

"In addition to the exploits of the dogs, the author also gives some interesting background and the various methods used in training dogs. . . . Grades seven to ten."

Best Sell 27:467 Mr 1 '68 100w

"A readable and informative book. . . . In an anecdotal style [Orbaan] manages to convey the flavor and excitement of this type of work. The book will strongly appeal not only to those who are engaged in training and working these dogs, but also to dog lovers in general and to young people in particular. Recommended for general purchase." F. W. Binns
Library J 93:203 Ja 15 '68 80w [YA]

Reviewed by Sergeant Cuff
Sat 51:36 Ja 27 '68 60w

OREGLIA, GIACOMO. The Commedia dell'arte; tr. by Lovett F. Edwards; with an introd. by Evert Sprinchorn. 158p il $5.95; pa $1.95 Hill & Wang

792.2 Commedia dell'arte 68-14788

The author presents a history of the Italian improvisational theater "in antiquity through its flowering in the Renaissance and down to the present. Among the book's contents are texts, plots, details of sets and costumes, and lists of players of the several stock roles. There are short biographies of the best known of these players." (Library J) Bibliography. Index. This volume, first published in Italian, is a translation of the revised edition published in Swedish in 1964.

Best Sell 28:193 Ag 1 '68 230w
Choice 5:1323 D '68 120w

"Mr. Oreglia carefully brings out the influence of Commedia dell'Arte on Shakespeare. Some of the excellent illustrations are from Mr. Oreglia's own collection and have not been published before. A chronologically arranged bibliography and a good index add to the value of the study as a reference. It is also good and interesting reading and is highly recommended for libraries, schools with drama departments, and theater collections." W. H. Matthews

Library J 93:3018 S 1 '68 140w

ORLANS, HAROLD, ed. Science policy and the university. 352p $7.50 Brookings

509 Science and state. Research 68-31835

This is a report on a seminar on science, technology and public policy sponsored by the Brookings Institution during 1964-1966. "Numerous scientists, economists, and administrators in government, industry, and academia met to discuss allocation of funds and increasing the productivity of funds granted by the federal government to universities for research." (Library J) Index.

"[The papers] cover many of the problems now facing federal financing of university research. In general the trend of the discussions favor use of federal funds for unrestricted or broadly defined purposes versus specific project grants. The book will attract college professors, deans, and administrators." R. J. Havlik

Library J 93:4291 N 15 '68 120w

"As the seminar so clearly showed, the allocation of resources to science, including the determination of the role of universities in scientific investigation, is one of those important matters that call upon human beings to use their broad judgment (expressed in part through the political process) and not merely to resort to simple and automatic quantitative analysis. The importance of the book is not lessened by the paucity of clear-cut answers and formulas. It is the best available discussion of a subject vital to our society and should be read and pondered by all those concerned with science policy." H. R. Bowen
Science 161:1232 S 20 '68 1300w

ORLOVITZ, GIL. Milkbottle H. 534p $7.50 Dell 67-20522

"The scene is Philadelphia, well off the Main Line, with occasional side-shifts to Los Angeles and New York. The time seems to be around World War II, but time is in wild flux around the characters, who are unencumbered by any dimension. Chief among them is a young Jew named Lee Emanuel who is enmeshed in a web of sexual and familial relationships that are constantly shifting, breaking off, reforming and through all their permutations making impossible any sense of permanent identity. . . . But the dominant symbol in the book is not Levi; it is a gigantic reproduction of a MILKBOTTLE erected on the roof of the dairy it symbolizes and advertizes. . . . the gigantic letter H on two sides of the MILKBOTTLE arrogantly denoting the initial letter of the company whose cows and bottles serve the populace: Harbisons." (Book World)

Reviewed by J. J. Murray
Best Sell 27:442 F 15 '68 800w

"The successor to the anti-novel would seem to be, inevitably, the no-novel . . . a genre that no longer experiments with form but . . . concentrates on the presentation of immediately felt experience or, more accurately, allows that experience to present itself. In this sense Milk-bottle H . . . is a no-novel, and Gil Orlovitz a no-novelist, which is to say a writer, and essentially a poet, whose explosive, sprawling, nonstop prose insists constantly on its own self-sufficiency. To the traditional eye it will appear as formless as lava and as uncontrollable, for there is in fact no container for the verbal energies at work here, no plot, no beginning and no end to the rush and crush of language. There is only, in Yeats' phrase, 'the fury and the mire of human veins.' Despite the obvious debt to Joyce, Orlovitz' real affinities are with James T. Farrell. . . . But Orlovitz, who clearly set out to write nothing less than a masterpiece, is sardonically aware, as Farrell never seemed to be, of the limitations imposed by his materials. That is why he has written a no-novel and, being his own best critic, slyly subtitled it 'The Ruthlessness of Trivia.'" Kevin Sullivan
Book World p4 F 4 '68 1000w

Reviewed by C. A. Raines
Library J 93:2898 Ag '68 130w

"The book (with prolonged cadenzas describing bodily functions—a sneeze, a cough, constipated evacuation, a bath—functions attaining cosmic and comic proportions) relies heavily on [James Joyce's] Ulysses [BRD 1934]. It is thus like wax fruit or a reconstruction; latterday, knowing, comparatively slick and pat, like reproduction Chippendale. But it is more than reproduction. The surreal style, with its absence of inverted commas, its verbal portmanteaux, its frequent spontaneous verbal combustion is handled by Orlovitz in his own way and is well suited to express an oneiric state in which the characters who comprise the hoop melt into each other from time to time like Black Sambo's tigers chasing each other round the palm tree. Orlovitz is not frightened of his imagination, nor is it cramped by neurosis." Miles Burrows

New Statesman 73:724 My 26 '67 290w

"While [this] novel is not Joycean in style—to be Joycean in style, you need to have a vast range of expression—it is written throughout in one of Joyce's modes. Thus it breaks up the conventional stream of narration and dialogue into rapidly shifting patterns of association and disassociation. It 'plays' with ideas, words, images, sequences of events. . . . Because all of the action is given in apparently random order amid showers of verbal fireworks, and because of the deliberate confusion about the names of the characters, this (and much else) is not easy to follow. . . . Is this very long and complex novel worth the care that must be taken to follow it and the frustration encountered in doing so? In spite of sympathy with the author's intentions, admiration for his tenacity, and pleasure (occasionally vivid) in his use of words, my own answer would be no, not really. It seems to belong too much to the avant-garde past. . . . Was it perhaps written around the time the action takes place, a quarter of a century ago?" J. D. Scott

N Y Times Bk R p36 F 4 '68 750w

TLS p515 Je 8 '67 160w

ORR, ROBERT R. Reason and authority; the thought of William Chillingworth. 217p $6.40 Oxford

234 Chillingworth, William. Salvation

[67-998571]

In 1637 Chillingworth published The Religion of Protestants, a Safe Way to Salvation. The author of this study of the "17th-century English writer . . . avows two purposes: an account of Chillingworth's conversion to the Roman faith [in 1628] and back to the Anglican persuasion, and how his argument for a latitudinarian church raised root questions of epistemology and moral philosophy." (Choice)

"Orr demonstrates that in the English age of religious and political crises, a man of intellectual and personal integrity could develop a consistent modern argument on behalf of toleration—a toleration based on the principle of comprehension of various views rather than on the diversity of opinions. Chillingworth thus appears more in harmony with the later John Stuart Mill than with the more contemporaneous Locke. Although the work fills a gap in the intellectual history of the period and man, it is a specialized study, deserving a place only on the shelves of the more academically advanced libraries."

Choice 5:858 S '68 160w

"Dr. Orr has added to the main story from unpublished manuscript sources and, perhaps for the first time, has presented a consistent intellectual portrait of Chillingworth, whose turns and changes would seem to imply something of irresponsibility. His guiding passions were a desire to see a universal church, and a belief that reason could lead a man securely towards truth. . . . It is perhaps the greatest praise which can be given to Dr. Orr that here for the first time Chillingworth's character is very fully displayed. Never again will it be reasonable to think of him as irresponsible."

TLS p353 Ap 4 '68 650w

ORRMONT, ARTHUR. Diplomat in warpaint: Chief Alexander McGillivray of the Creeks: 192p il $4.50 Abelard-Schuman

970.3 McGillivray, Alexander—Juvenile literature. Creek Indians—Juvenile literature

67-18120

"The son of a Scottish trader and a Creek Indian mother, McGillivray grew up with both whites and Indians in southern United States and received a good formal education. . . . [This fictionalized biography] presents a portrait of the man and his achievements. Placed by his heritage into a position of leadership in the Creek nation and courted by agents of both the United States and Spain, McGillivray, from 1780 to his death at age 36 in 1793, used his diplomatic skills for the benefit of his people." (Library J) Bibliography. Index. "Grades seven to ten." (Best Sell)

"This sympathetic portrayal of McGillivray will open up some new pages of American history to young readers. The author covers the early life of this patriot, enabling one to get a good picture of his educational background, his ambitions, and his family life."

Best Sell 27:467 Mr 1 '68 110w

"Although at first glance this book may seem to be of use only for a limited audience, it covers a man and a period about which little information is available, and junior high readers will find it interesting." Frances Fleming

Library J 93:1328 Mr 15 '68 130w

ORWELL, GEORGE. The collected essays, journalism and letters of George Orwell; ed. by Sonia Orwell and Ian Angus. 4v 574:477; 435:555p v 1, 2, 4 ea $8.95; v3 $7.95 Harcourt 828 68-12591

Two-thirds of the material in these volumes, by the author of Animal Farm (BRD 1946) and Nineteen Eighty Four (BRD 1949), "has never appeared in volume form, and a considerable portion has never been published before. [Orwell's] widow and her co-editor have collected . . . [material which] Orwell would have considered an essay, . . . and those letters which contribute to our understanding of his life and writing. . . . The material is arranged chronologically . . . [to portray] Orwell's life as well as his work." (Publisher's note) Some of the material first appeared in various periodicals such as Commentary, Partisan Review and the Observer. Bibliography of books by or containing contributions by Orwell (Same list in each volume). Chronology and index to each volume.

Reviewed by Peter Stansky

Atlantic 222:122 N '68 1550w

"[These volumes] are a magnificent tribute to the probity, consistency and insight of Orwell's topical writings. . . . The sense of [his] struggle is overwhelming in these painfully clear pages. The necessity of struggle—against commercialism, against rant [etc.] . . . explains why [he] always writes here with such burning clarity, such intellectual fervor, such respect for logic as the commonweal of human intelligence. . . . His brilliant critical essays on great 19th-century novelists, Dickens and Tolstoy, display a characteristic tendency to show them up as bad thinkers even when the final point is that they were too immensely gifted to need intellectual logic. . . . [From the] pages I have just admiringly read—and often re-read with the greatest interest—I can remember very little about the characters of other people. . . . What one finds most here is a remarkable gift for analyzing other people's favorite propositions, for spotting dishonesty in public figures and moral faults in intellectuals." Alfred Kazin

Book World p1 O 27 '68 2200w

Reviewed by R. J. Cattani

Christian Science Monitor pB13 N 7 '68 650w

"It is, to begin with, an astonishing tribute to Orwell's gifts as a natural, unaffected writer that, although the historical events he is unfolding are all too bitterly familiar, the reader turns the pages as though he did not know what was going to happen. . . . Here, then, is a social, literary, and political history of the span of years from 1920 to 1950 written from a point of view which, while being intensely personal never forgets its allegiance to objective truth; indeed [the author's] devotion to it, and his abhorrence of history distorted to suit political theory and convenience, form the driving force of his convictions. . . . [Naturally] there are repetitions, tediums, points to quarrel with . . . and a very occasional lack of insight, but there is no questioning the importance of the work. . . . The editing and indexing are as thorough as they are excellent."

Economist 228:63 O 5 '68 950w

Reviewed by R. J. Thompson

Library J 93:4561 D 1 '68 120w

ORWELL, GEORGE—Continued

Reviewed by Lawrence Graner
New Repub 159:34 N 30 '68 2100w

"An enormous amount of first-rate work has been resurrected, a very large proportion of it in the third and fourth volumes, covering the last seven years of his life. Volume 3, As I Please, takes its title from Orwell's weekly column in Tribune. . . . His writings from 1943 to 1946 . . . display him at his most relaxed and mature, and also at his gayest. . . . [In volume 4] we have his long description of his life at preparatory school, Such, Such Were the Joys. This is his most revealing exercise in autobiography, a destructive attack on private education, but also an analysis of the roots of his own consciousness. . . . [He] was, and is, a great teacher; and to read these volumes is an education." Angus Calder

New Statesman 76:429 O 4 '68 2400w

Reviewed by Hilton Kramer
N Y Times Bk R p1 O 27 '68 2100w

"[As these volumes] certify, [Orwell's] true genius lay neither in fable nor prophecy, but in the grace and strength of his prose as he recorded the events of his time. He was the finest journalist of his day and the foremost architect of the English essay since Hazlitt. . . . There is a strong autobiographical flavor to all [his] work. . . . His brilliant essays on the penny-dreadful thriller and penny picture post card, written in the early '40s, remain among the earliest and best inquiries into pop art. . . . Throughout the 2,000 pages embraced in these four books, his prose retains its muscle and clean, vigorous thrust. . . . Most of his correspondence keeps the reader at a distance in a thoroughly English way. But his last letters to his friends give us a glimpse at the frailty and sensitivity of Orwell's private nature." P. D. Zimmerman

Newsweek 72:120 O 28 '68 1500w

Reviewed by J. H. Plumb
Sat R 51:31 D 28 '68 1200w
Time 92:110 N 15 '68 1600w
TLS p1165 O 17 '68 3300w

ORWELL, SONIA, ed. The collected essays, journalism and letters of George Orwell, 4v. See Orwell, G.

ORZEL, NICK, ed. Eight plays from off-off Broadway, ed. by Nick Orzel and Michael Smith; with an introd. by Michael Smith. 281p il $5; pa $2.25 Bobbs

812

66-27887

Articles describing the leaders of this experimental theatre movement are included in an anthology of plays produced by the "Off-Off Broadway theaters that have proliferated since about 1960 in lofts, church basements, and cafes in lower Manhattan." (Choice)

"Should be more welcomed by students of the modern American theater and theater lovers in general than any other anthology in recent years, for although publication of experimental plays has been encouraged by journals like Tulane Drama Review and Evergreen Review or series like the University of Minnesota's Playwrights for Tomorrow, this is the first commercial anthology to evolve out of the crucible of Off-Off Broadway theaters. . . . Whatever the intrinsic merits of the individual plays, it can certainly be said that the best of Off-Off Broadway is honest and searching, most often fascinating and exciting, usually funny, occasionally sad or tragic, and sometimes—as in Foster's Balls, Wilson's The Madness of Lady Bright, or Terry's Calm Down Mother—all of these at once. Bound to no one form, the playwrights make every form their own. Definitely recommended."

Choice 4:698 S '67 200w

"Michael Smith [is] drama critic for The Village Voice and playwright of the Ensemble at the Open Theatre. . . . His intriguing introduction is by far the best account to date of OOB's rebellious theater of the sixties. The plays selected are highly controversial. Not to be overlooked are the concise descriptive notes on the five leading revolutionaries of the OOB crusade: Caffe Cino, Theatre Genesis, Judson Poets' Theatre, La Mama Experimental Theatre Club, and the Open Theatre. By hook or by crook this volume should find its way into theater collections wherever they may be." L. A. Rachow

Library J 91:5642 N 15 '66 210w

OSBORN, FREDERICK. The future of human heredity; an introduction to eugenics in modern society. 133p $5.95 Weybright & Talley

573.2 Eugenics. Heredity 68-12870

The chairman of the executive committee of the Population Council "discusses recent changes in the ways of life of the more advanced societies that tend toward generational variation in the proportion of the genetically favored, the bright, and those with special as well as generalized abilities. Modern medicine, public health measures, social and geographical mobility have benefited modern man immeasurably, but they also contain genetic pitfalls for many now unborn. The . . . author discusses these contemporary tendencies, but he also sees a distinct measure of hope." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"That, with widespread use of birth control, the more intelligent leave more progeny is the only redeeming point to be gleaned from an otherwise dull treatise. The correlated topics of population control and reduction of deaths are presented near the end where a more penetrating discussion would have been beneficial."

Choice 5:988 O '68 110w

"[The author] reports that married couples from the higher end of the intelligence scale are having more children than they have in the past, while those from the lower end of the scale are having fewer children. This is reversing a trend that should see birth differentials favorable to groups from the higher intelligence levels. You may not agree with everything in this book, but Mr Osborn presents many important ideas that should be given greater publicity. His book is well written and easily understood. . . . Recommended for popular science collections." R. E. Swinburne

Library J 93:2251 Je 1 '68 190w

OSBORN, GEORGE C. Woodrow Wilson; the early years. 345p il $10 La. state univ. press
B or 92 Wilson, Woodrow 68-13451

The "professor of history and social science, University of Florida, concentrates on the periods of training and teaching that constituted the first 46 years of Woodrow Wilson's life. . . . [tracing] his development from boyhood and student days, through his unsuccessful law practice, his days of graduate study at Johns Hopkins, to his productive years as teacher, historian, and author. The book ends with Wilson's appointment to the presidency of Princeton University." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"The second study of Wilson's pre-political years published within the past six months naturally invites comparison with [H.] Bragdon's Woodrow Wilson; the Academic Years [BDR 1967]. . . . Whereas Bragdon concludes with Wilson's election as Governor of New Jersey, Osborn ends his study with the briefest account of his subject's accession to the Princeton presidency. His examination of Wilson's development includes an extensive study of the professor's articles and public lectures and reveals certain strains of youthful thought which surface again in the Progressive years. Based upon extensive research, Osborn's work is unfortunately flawed by occasional grammatical and factual errors. It is, nonetheless, a good study of Wilson's early years, and will probably make a place for itself in the shadow of Bragdon's more extensive volume, and help to flesh out the rather sketchy presentations of R. S. Baker and A. S. Link for this period."

Choice 5:866 S '68 160w

"Osborn gives attention to the influence of family, of teachers and of friends upon the young Wilson, and reveals the strength of his personality and his character, together with those traits that made for weakness. . . . This is a well-written, scholarly work which adds depth and perception to our knowledge of Woodrow Wilson." H. M. Burns

Library J 93:2476 Je 15 '68 180w

TLS p933 S 5 '68 750w

Va Q R 44:clvii autumn '68 190w

OSBORN, ROBERT T. Freedom in modern theology. 273p $6.95 Westminster press

230 Freedom (Theology). Theology—History 67-11862

The author "has selected four major theologians (Bultmann, Tillich, Barth, and Berdyaev) and presents their views on the purpose of man's freedom, from what man is free, how he is set free, and in what sense God is free. From the results of his study, Mr. Osborn draws conclusions about the essence of Christian freedom and about its future development." (Library J)

"In general Osborn's sympathies are with Barth and Berdyaev over against Bultmann and Tillich. . . . In direct opposition to Michalson, Osborn prefers to think of Christianity on the model not of history but of personal relationships. . . . [He] opposes reductionism—whether reduction to the ontological, the historical or the empirical. But does he fall into a reductionism of his own—i.e., reduction to the personal? Is the only analogy for the knowledge of the person Jesus the experience of personal knowledge? . . . That way the Bible is reduced to personal language and is at the mercy of mysticism." W. F. Groff

Christian Century 85:51 Ja 10 '68 270w

"Mr. Osborn has made a useful contribution to the understanding of freedom in liberal Christianity. . . . This book is recommended for theological scholars as well as for informed laymen." Shildes Johnson

Library J 92:1495 Ap 1 '67 100w

OSGOOD, ROBERT E. Force, order, and justice, by Robert E. Osgood and Robert W. Tucker. 374p $10 Johns Hopkins press

341 International relations. Security, International 67-16915

The authors "examine the military force [in international relations] which they classify in four evolutionary phases; the agonistic phase during which war was a way of life; the utilitarian phase of the 18th Century when war became a rational instrument of state policy; the expansionist phase which started with Napoleonic Wars; and the present or regulatory phase, initiated with the end of World War II, and exemplified by a world-wide contest between the nuclear powers. [They] examine the role of military force in international and expansionistic policies, discuss the control of military force, and speculate about the effect of multipolarity on international order." (Library J) Index.

"This is a difficult book to discuss. It is divided into two parts, each by a different author, which are meant to arrive at the same goal by different paths. The two parts do not really fit together, however, and they are also of strikingly different quality. Professor Osgood's section, an historical discussion of changes in the means of international violence, the role of violence, and strategic thinking about its use over the last two centuries, is disappointing, often unoriginal, and unsatisfactory; Professor Tucker's essay, addressed strictly to normative concerns, is stimulating, original, and valuable. . . . Osgood's history is marred . . . by the virtual absence of any consideration of political factors in the expansion and control of force. . . . Professor Tucker's contribution . . . is a lucid, often brilliant treatment of normative judgments and their empirical roots and consequences." Philip Green

Am Pol Sci R 62:1012 S '68 1150w

"In an attempt to emphasize the continuity between the present and previous international systems, there is some danger that the extent of the discontinuity will be minimized. . . . The significance of the discontinuity can be judged only by reference to the continuity—by the historical method. The authors of this book undertake [this] with distinction. . . . If there is a defect in their work, it is a disposition to underestimate what is nevertheless unique in a situation which retains so many of the basic elements of the historical states' system. . . . Thus: it would be 'silly to assume any limited use of nuclear weapons must necessarily become a global nuclear war.' . . . The uncertainty which underpins the deterrent is simply that the possibility of war cannot be excluded. . . . because war between nuclear powers will be suicidal." F. H. Hinsley

Ann Am Acad 337:163 My '68 550w

Choice 5:1223 N '68 100w

"Dr. Osgood and Dr. Tucker have presented an excellent analysis and exposition of a subject of interest to the student of political science. Recommended for academic and larger public libraries." Victor Novak

Library J 92:4008 N 1 '67 180w

"A good deal of [the] book consists of ■ analysis of the history of force and war and of the international system which is excellent in many ways. All the more surprising, therefore, are the two most prominent features of the [authors'] argument: its failure—despite an initial recognition that 'military power . . . force,' broadly defined . . . includes more than the obsolescence or utility of war—to distinguish between, to separate, force and war; and its emphasis on the functional relationship of war to the system of autonomous states. The evidence of history provides little support at these two points." F. H. Hinsley

World Pol 20:705 Jl '68 6250w

OSMOND EDWARD. Animals of Central Asia; written and il. by Edward Osmond. 150p $3.75 Abelard-Schuman

591.953 Animals—Asia, Central—Juvenile literature 68-10431

This book discusses the habitats and habits of a variety of Central Asian animals including the yak, the bharal, the takin, and the panda. First published in Great Britain in 1967. Glossary of scientific names. Bibliography. Index. "Grades six to nine." (Library J)

"[An] agreeable little book about . . . strange beasts of the area that includes Turkestan, Afghanistan, Sinkiang, Tibet, Pakistan and the adjoining areas. . . . [The] drawings are attractive."

Best Sell 28:155 Jl 1 '68 80w

"Animals like markhors, kulans . . . and serows are discussed here in a detail not available in standard references. Although a few of the animals, such as yaks and Bactrian camels, are covered in other children's books, Osmond's collection remains unusual and informative." A. C. Haman

Library J 93:[3323] S 15 '68 110w

"This is a charming and well-written book with a strong sense of atmosphere."

TLS p595 Je 6 '68 110w

OSOFSKY, GILBERT. The burden of race; a documentary history of Negro-white relations in America. 654p $7.95 Harper

301.451 Negroes—History. U.S.—Race relations 66-10533

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Choice 5:230 Ap '68 100w

Reviewed by H. N. Meyer

Nation 206:740 Je 3 '68 340w

Reviewed by W. L. Katz

Sat R 51:31 Ja 27 '68 750w

OSTRANDER, SHEILA. Etiquette, etc; ■ concise guide with a fresh look; il. by the author. 256p $3.95 Sterling

395 Etiquette 67-27753

"This book is written for those who are newly important in today's society—young people, students, young tycoons of either sex, young marrieds—and for all those people who are going places, meeting and enjoying the challenges of a fast-paced changing culture." (Introd) Index.

Best Sell 28:19 Ap 1 '68 100w

"This is a modern, sensible approach to etiquette: manners and social conduct. The chapters cover everyday manners, correspondence, party problems, how to be a guest, telephone manners, tipping, and many other pertinent subjects. The style is chatty but informative." Regina Minudri

Library J 93:1825 Ap 15 '68 60w [YA]

Reviewed by D. M. Glixon

Sat R 51:64 My 18 '68 70w

OTTLEY, REGINALD. Rain comes to Yamboorah; il. by Robert Hales. 159p $3.50 Harcourt

68-11503

This is the third book in a trilogy which "chronicles the life of a boy on ■ sprawling cattle station in the rainless Australian Outback. The owner of the dog Rags (Boy Alone) [BRD 1966] and Roany (Roan Colt) [BRD 1967], now indebted to the dogman Kanga for both animals, is older, more reflective, more conscious of the region's isolation and its effect on men—like the weather-torn Kanga whose life he eventually saves but whose stubborn self-reliance checks the boy's natural enthusiastic affection. . . . Grades five to seven." (Library J)

OTTLEY, REGINALD—Continued

"The story unfolds through the sober and reflective narration of day-to-day events, a chain of interrelated vignettes, understated yet tinged with mounting tension. . . . There are dramatic highpoints, when lightning strikes an ancient tree and fire threatens, or when the boy is nearly killed stopping a runaway horse, but it is the quieter scenes, deceptively simple in the telling yet luminous in atmosphere and mood, which make the deepest impression. . . . Admirers of Mr. Ottley's earlier books will find the same subtle awareness of human relationships, the same authenticity of feeling and experience in this satisfying conclusion to a memorable series." H. L. Maples

Book World p18 (children's issue) My 5 '68 230w

Horn Bk 44:422 Ag '68 110w

"Ottley's top-drawer writing stays right up there in this last book of the Yamboorah trilogy. . . . As in the other Yamboorah tales, there are information-filled events—emu egg hunt, lightning fires, and aborigine 'walkabouts'—but reader sympathy will be focused on a kid growing up and itching for a responsibility that is usually given to older men. And to cap it off nicely, Ottley gives his readers the supreme satisfaction of having a boy save the life of an able-bodied, tough-minded adult." Susan Roth

Library J 93:872 F 15 '68 140w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland
Sat R 51:37 S 21 '68 100w

"[The story] has an extraordinarily strong atmosphere. The author describes conditions in the early 1930s, and indeed today, in the dry, burning heart of Australia, and his characters are based on real people, just as his setting is in every detail authentic. One can vividly see the old dog-man Kanga with his team of dogs, the boy with his colt Roany, the aboriginal girls who help in the kitchen, the limitless distances and the violence of the rain when it breaks. The drawings . . . enhance the intense mood of action set in the brooding stillness of the heat."

TLS p459 My 25 '67 160w

OTTLIK, GÉZA. School at the frontier; tr. by Kathleen Szasz. 374p $6.50 Harcourt

66-15018

The Hungarian writer "describes in this novel the life in a military academy as reflected in the recollections of two former cadets many years later. As a result of systematic bullying by the warrant officers and older boys, the resistance of the 11-year-old recruits breaks down, and they live 'paralyzed into numbness, not seeing, not hearing, not noticing anything' until they become totally alienated to civilian life." (Choice)

"The book is long, for a mere narrative of fairly tedious school years; and its brief allusions to the later lives of various characters are comparatively irrelevant; still, it has a fascination all its own. Perhaps it is the very indirection of method that is appealing. There are actually two narrators—Medve, who is dead but has left a manuscript behind him, and Beebee, who corrects, explains, modifies Medve's story; neither one sees events in their right light, but the reader does, thanks to Mr. Ottlik's adroitness. . . . The reader may grow exasperated at the cowardice that would permit such school-boy despotism and may throw the book down, but chances are that he will read to the end and be soberer and wiser for the experience; the portrayal of adolescence has much truth in it and is given powerful immediacy by a clever novelist. The book must have been difficult to translate but Kathleen Szasz has made it read as though it were an English original." W. B. Hill

Best Sell 26:120 Je 15 '66 550w

"[The novel] is so piled with detail that it sometimes seemed interminable—and yet it is curiously incomplete. For the author is trying to tell us something about the ties that really count between people, and I'm not sure he gets it across. . . . I am troubled by a feeling that this book does not succeed, yet I am reluctant to condemn a work with obvious literary virtues. . . . The merits in this book are . . . those of the short story—admirable but not sufficient for the novel, which must be pervaded by a sense of destiny and offer not only 'seeing but also learning.' Maggie Rennert

Book Week p6 Je 12 '66 360w

"The psychological development of the boys is skillfully treated, and Ottlik's familiarity with existentialist literature is evident. To enjoy the work fully, however, it is necessary to read it in Hungarian, as the translation does not do justice to its merits and shows signs of carelessness: a number of words and phrases are incorrectly rendered into English, and there are quite a few omissions. The plot of the originally well written and well constructed novel, therefore, is not always easy to follow in the translation. By its own merit the book should be in the modern fiction collection of every college library; in the present translation it is recommended only with reservations."

Choice 4:1123 D '67 160w

Reviewed by A. C. Ringer

Library J 91:2523 My 15 '66 110w

OTWAY-RUTHVEN, A. J. A history of medieval Ireland; with an introd. by Kathleen Hughes. 454p maps $10 Barnes & Noble

941.5 Ireland—History

68-77860

This volume covers "Irish history from the 11th through the 15th-centuries." (Choice) Bibliography.

"[This is] the best one-volume history of medieval Ireland in any language. The book . . . is thoroughly grounded in the sources, sensible in its judgments, and enhanced by good maps, an excellent index, and a useful bibliography. The study does have shortcomings; it is difficult to read, neglects institutional history, and, despite the great depth of knowledge which the author brings to her topic, lacks a synthesis of her extensive learning in medieval Irish affairs. Nevertheless, the book has solid, sober virtues."

Choice 5:548 Je '68 250w

"[This] book might perhaps be better described as a history of feudal Ireland; for [the author] explicitly disclaims the intention to trace that of the Gaelic people. Her actual theme is the history of the English Pale. On everything to do with medieval institutions and administration . . . Miss Otway-Ruthven is very much on her own ground. She shows the constitutional forms of the Pale developing on parallel lines to those of England, though always a little behind in time; and in that domain she was already beginning to establish a high reputation when she wrote her Thirlwall Prize Essay on the Secretary and the Signet Office thirty years ago. She . . . writes with magisterial authority."

TLS p831 Ag 1 '68 230w

OUELLETTE, FERNAND. Edgard Varèse; tr. from the French by Derek Coltman. 270p pl $8 Orion

B or 92 Varèse, Edgar

68-15461

"This book is intended as a first document which attempts to encompass the elements constituting the life of [this 20th century] composer." (Foreword) "These 'elements' are . . . amplified by lengthy quotations from the composer himself and from many of the critics, performers, writers, and artists who were his contemporaries and his friends." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

Choice 5:1316 D '68 120w

"[This] is an appreciative rather than a critical work. . . . Mr. Ouellette does not attempt to analyze Varèse's music, [but] he does describe it in some detail. Unfortunately, his passionate devotion to the composer, combined with his flamboyant style of writing, weakens these sections. . . . [The book] will undoubtedly provide background for the more comprehensive studies which are certain to come as the impact of Varèse's influence is felt more and more strongly." Barbara Henry
Library J 93:1146 Mr 15 '68 200w

"There are advantages to having a non-musician introduce [Varèse] to a general audience and, allowing for the weaknesses of style and approach, I don't think anyone could be seriously misled by this account of the composer's life. . . . The book is basically a long impressionistic sketch with extensive (and useful) chronological and bibliographical material. It will 'place' Varèse for most people—not in relation to the other artistic and musical trends of his day but simply with respect to his own inner ideas. There are a few errors, most of them due to faulty or careless translation. Less excusable is the author's elliptical style and curious, wandering digressions. . . . Despite its faults, this is an important book." Eric Salzman

N Y Times Bk R p6 Je 16 '68 1150w

OURSSEL, RAYMOND. Living architecture: Romanesque; phot. by Jacques Rouiller; pref. by Herman Baur. 192p $7.95 Grosset

723 Architecture, Romanesque 67-20410

"In trying to explain the social and ecclesiastical needs which called Romanesque architecture into being . . . [the author gives a summary of life] in the 11th and 12th centuries." (Choice)

"This small volume . . . is straining hard to throw bridges between past and present architectural achievements. . . . Oursel's plans and Rouiller's photos more than the text speak of structure and space as the great achievement of the Romanesque period, making form-elevations as irrelevant as they have become in our own time. . . . This is a book for committed architects; it is not a book for art historians or their specialized students." Sybil Moholy-Nagy

Arch Forum 128:80 My '68 900w

"Oursel gives a vivid summary of the complexities of medieval life. . . . But he has not very convincingly related the architecture to that life; and while the photographs are beautiful and the plans accurate, it is difficult to see a parallel between these and the text itself. Being French, Oursel has concentrated on French (especially Burgundian) history and monuments, not neglecting but certainly minimizing developments in other areas. For the reader who wishes to know something of the spirit of the Romanesque world, and something of the first serious interest in the Romanesque style in the 19th century, this book is satisfactory. . . . [The preface] is merely a waste of space: the fold-out chronological table is misleading in its over simplification."

Choice 5:476 Je '68 200w

OVERMAN, RICHARD H. Evolution and the Christian doctrine of creation; a Whiteheadian interpretation. 301p $7.50 Westminster press

233 Evolution, Creation, Whitehead, Alfred North, Religion and science 67-15089

The author "begins by discussing the roots of the evolutionary theory and its origin, the theological position at the time of its promulgation by Darwin and his followers, and also theological reaction and the development of theory from Darwin's time to the present. He then proceeds to [an analysis of Whitehead's explanation of evolution. In the last chapter he] . . . discusses evolution in relationship to the Jewish, early Christian, and contemporary Christian comprehension of creation, and suggests a Whiteheadian synthesis between Christianity and evolution." (Library J) Index.

"While Overman's study is brilliant in design and exhaustive in scope, it is flawed by the superficiality of its historical sketches. The sections on Whitehead presuppose familiarity with Process and Reality [BRD 1929], and, while technical, still fail to make explicit distinctions between experience in the modes of causal efficacy and presentational immediacy—a distinction any Whiteheadian would find essential for a discussion of evolution. Finally, Overman fails to realize that one can adopt the Whiteheadian paradigm without God." M. F. Allshouse

Christian Century 85:1340 O 23 '68 450w

"Even though many Christian and scientific scholars will disagree with Mr. Overman, the informed layman and scholars generally will find his book valuable." Shildes Johnson

Library J 92:3044 S 15 '67 150w

OVERSEAS PRESS CLUB OF AMERICA. How I got that story, by members of the Overseas Press Club of America; ed. by David Brown and W. Richard Bruner. 380p $5.95 Dutton

070 Reporters and reporting. History, Modern—20th century 67-11370

The correspondents tell "what reporters go through to bring the public its news. . . .

[The stories] range from the Versailles Conference to such recent events as the Bay of Pigs invasion and the revolt in the Dominican Republic. They . . . involve confrontations with the great names of contemporary history—Gandhi, de Gaulle, Hitler, Stalin, and George Bernard Shaw." (Choice)

"Newspaper reporters are not paper and ink, but blood and perspiration and problems; and readers finally get a chance to see them that way in [this book]. . . . Ideal for journalism students to provide a snap of vigor and adventure."

Choice 4:1230 Ja '68 180w

"With few exceptions, the narratives by such journalism luminaries as Ben Lucien Burman, Benjamin Fine, William R. Mcandrew, Gertrude Samuels, Tad Szulc, and Richard Tregaskis are too brief to sustain interest or to be really informative. Margaret Bourke-White's poignant description of a meeting with Gandhi is one highlight of the book; Paula Lecler's story of her imprisonment in Loyalist Spain is another. Considered collectively, however, the writing is uneven." Edward Mapp

Library J 92:1932 My 15 '67 140w

Reviewed by Yvette Schmitt

Library J 92:3874 O 15 '67 50w [YA]

"[These] reporters' footnotes to journalism offer exciting insights into the mechanics of the newspaperman's trade. . . . Inevitably, some are more entertaining (and more pointed) than others. Among the best are Henry Cassidy's correspondence with Stalin, Tad Szulc's inside report on the Bay of Pigs and George Weller's sensitive piece on the atom-bombing of Nagasaki."

N Y Times Bk R p32 Je 18 '67 140w

OXENBURY, HELEN. Numbers of things. uncol il $3.95 Watts, F.

511 Arithmetic—Juvenile literature 68-10048

A number book with pictures for each number from one to ten inclusive. Then the numbers jump to twenty and on to fifty in multiples of ten. "Preschool to grade one." (Library J)

Book World p20 O 6 '68 100w

Reviewed by Roderick Nordell

Christian Science Monitor pB4 My 2 '68 130w

"With its brightly colored, meticulously detailed pictures this numbers book is visually ideal for the preschooler. . . . Beginning readers will be enticed by the large print of the words and symbols. To children who just want to sit and look, the illustrations offer an excellent balance of rhythmic similarity with variations and some surprises; even those 50 ladybugs have their individual differences, the six chairs range from a bentwood rocker with a little old lady to a highchair with a baby, and the 10 animals are really five pairs queuing up for the ark." E. S. Cullen

Library J 93:2108 My 15 '68 140w

Reviewed by Philip Morrison

Sci Am 219:126 D '68 50w

TLS p1225 D 14 '67 50w

OXENSTIERNA, ERIC GRAF. The world of the Norsemen; tr. by Janet Sondheimer. 163p il $10 World pub.

914.8 Scandinavia—Antiquities 67-27324

This volume is a history of the early Germanic cultures from the old Stone and Bronze Ages to the coming of the Vikings. The author describes the early village communities; the encounter between German and Roman armies in A.D. 9; the runic alphabet; the peat bogs and their contents; craftsmen and kings and other topics. Bibliography. Index. Originally published in 1957 in Swedish as Järnålder, guldålder and in German as Die Nordgermanen.

"Scientific methods and principles are well explained and easy to follow for the uninitiated. The translation is readable and refreshing, although several mistakes have crept in. . . . Good index; plethora of plates provides in several cases the best photographs of the subjects ever published. Although ostensibly a popular book, [this] can be recommended only for professionals as it was originally published . . . before the impact of 14c dating and has seen very little revision. Oxenstierna does not differentiate between acknowledged archaeological facts and his own ideas and discoveries, and several errors occur among the hard fact material."

OXENSTIERNA, E. G.—Continued

Choice 5:1020 O '68 210w

Reviewed by L. S. Thompson
Library J 93:2868 Ag '68 140w

"A useful guide in part for its succinct résumé of Scandinavian pre-history from the earliest times down to the Viking Age, in part for its impressive gallery of photographs . . . now presented in English . . . with a good though diminished selection of the original illustrations (sixty-four pages of plates as compared with 104). . . . The transposition from the German to the English . . . has been made somewhat mechanically. The bibliography is taken over wholesale . . . and is next to useless to a reader without German and more particularly the Scandinavian languages. . . . There have been significant additions to knowledge in respect of religion, ships, building, early towns, and early kingship, some of which one would expect to see mentioned in a book of this kind. . . . In the index one is as baffled by some insertions as surprised by various omissions."

TLS p138 F 8 '68 410w

"This book might better be titled 'Scandinavia from the Stone Age to the Twelfth Century,' but the present title suits the popular character of the contents. The author has a genial and informal approach, with wit and an eye for the humorous detail, especially of the finding of archaeological remains. He does indulge in some rather romantic speculation as to the use of certain objects and of certain cults. . . . The organization of the volume might best be described as a 'ramble.' But these are the quibbles of the specialist; the book is vastly entertaining."

Va Q 44:cxxiv summer '68 100w

OXFORD regional economic atlas: United States & Canada; prepared by the Cartographic department of the Clarendon press; advisory eds: John D. Chapman and John C. Sherman. 128p $17.50; pa $5.95 Oxford

912 Atlases. U.S.—Maps. Canada—Maps

"This is the fourth in the series of 'Oxford Regional Economic Atlases,' following those on U.S.S.R. and Eastern Europe, . . . The Middle East and North Africa [BRD 1962] . . . and Africa [BRD 1966]. . . . Preliminary pages [list topics, contents and sources]. . . . There follow 128 pages of 6- or 7-color maps and a Gazetteer which contains about 10,000 names. [The] maps are divided into Urban Plans; Topographic Maps; Physical Geography; Demography; Agriculture, Wood Processing and Fishery; Fuels and Energy; Mining and Industry; Transport; and Hawaii." (Booklist & S B B)

"The 17 urban plans [cover] . . . New York, Washington, D.C., Montreal, Philadelphia, Boston, Houston, Denver, New Orleans, Minneapolis and St. Paul, Chicago, Toronto, Pittsburgh, Detroit, San Francisco, Vancouver, Seattle, and Los Angeles and their metropolitan areas. . . . With one exception—the use of gray tint instead of blue which is easily confused with the beige tints of land—the colors . . . are well chosen and are easily differentiated. The use of black for central business districts and boundary delineations and blue for highways, tunnels, railroads, and airports facilitates reference use. The clarity of the symbols for reading purposes diminishes according to the number of maps on each page. . . . A practical feature is an inset on each map which gives the monthly and yearly average temperature, rainfall, and altitude of the area. . . . There is no introductory text and no economic commentary. As these were included in the earlier volumes of this series, this atlas is not so satisfactory or so practically useful as they. [However, it] is an attractive presentation of economic data. Despite the cluttered appearance of the urban maps, use of 1960 and 1961 census statistics, and some limitations imposed by size, the atlas has value in its satisfactory selection and presentation of economic or thematic maps. It is recommended for supplementary use in school and large public library collections and in academic libraries."

Booklist and S B B 64:1200 J1 1 '68 1400w

Choice 5:1290 D '68 160w

P

PACIFICI, SERGIO. The modern Italian novel: from Manzoni to Svevo; with a pref. by Harry T. Moore. 199p $4.95 Southern Ill. univ. press

853 Italian fiction—History and criticism
67-13047

This is "the first of a two-volume study. . . . After sketching the background of the Italian novel, Pacifici discusses the work of Nievo, De Marchi, De Roberto, Serao, and Fogazzaro; he . . . concentrates on Manzoni, Verga, and Svevo." (Choice) Bibliography.

"One wonders why [the author] omits Foscolo and why he places Svevo in the 19th century yet postpones discussion of D'Annunzio until the next volume. Although readable, Pacifici's style is at times awkward, and the bibliographical information is frequently inaccurate. The author consistently misspells some critics' names, and sloppy proofreading has resulted in numerous typographical errors. Despite its shortcomings, the book does fulfill its purpose: to introduce the general reading public to the Italian novel. Its scholarly value is limited, yet it is, on the whole, a solid and intelligent work useful to undergraduates."

Choice 5:492 Je '68 200w

"Pacifici, the young director of a flourishing Italian studies program at Queens College, is thorough and assiduous in this book. . . . The material is presented for Americans with some literary background but no specific information on the subject. The titles are given in English, and there is a certain amount of plot summary—this is not a critical book in any precise sense, but a book of presentation and explanation. In this it fills an obvious need: the last book on the subject was D. Vittorini's much less adequate 'The Modern Italian Novel' [BRD 1930]. Pacifici's is a book every library, and every reader of modern literature, should have." Donald Heiney

Christian Science Monitor p9 Ja 3 '68 700w

PACKARD, VANCE. The sexual wilderness; the contemporary upheaval in male-female relationships. 553p $6.95 McKay

301.41 Sexual ethics. U.S.—Moral conditions.
Marriage 68-29632

The author of The Hidden Persuaders (BRD 1957), on the basis of his own research and consultations with doctors, psychologists, sociologists, teachers, clergy and others, offers an analysis of the values governing sexual relations, and the resulting behavior in the United States and selected foreign countries today. Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by J. J. Conlin

Best Sell 28:225 S 1 '68 700w

"After 395 pages of description [Packard] begins to suggest specific road signs to follow in the midst of the wilderness. Although one may not accept his . . . specific proposals, [they] are intriguing and demand a rethinking of the social and legal context in which decisions regarding sexual matters are being made today. . . . [The book] provides the kind of insights desperately needed by anyone trying to understand what has happened to the old morality and to relate creatively to persons groping about for guidance in the midst of the sexual wilderness." H. E. Smith

Christian Century 86:52 Ja 8 '69 300w

"Although Mr. Packard's surveys and readings show that sexual mores are in a state of change, the basic relationship between the sexes, according to his findings, remains much the same as always. . . . Mr. Packard has a wholesome and positive approach to sexual relationships and seems to favor monogamy although he feels that there may be some value in trial marriages for a two-year period—without offspring. . . . This is a thoroughly professional work and is highly recommended for public and college libraries because it is a well-written and conscientiously researched study and is sure to appear on college reading lists for some time to come." E. T. Smith

Library J 93:3113 S 15 '68 190w

Reviewed by Marcia Keller
Library J 93:4430 N 15 '68 210w [YA]

Reviewed by Alex Comfort
New Statesman 76:634 N 8 '68 1100w

"This book is a guided tour through the complexities of the so-called sexual revolution. . . . The one major point in the whole field that Packard does not mention [is] the decline of sexuality. . . . I wish I could report that [this book] is well written and edited, but, unfortunately, it reads like a Sears, Roebuck catalogue. After page following page of reports and studies and anecdotes with no point of view to orient one, the weary reader asks, 'Where has Vance Packard gone?' But if one sticks with the book, one comes finally to Packard's summary positions, which show admirable breadth. In his final chapter, he distills the principles with which human sexuality should be imbued. . . . Though platitudinous, the list is sensible. Packard's practical suggestions are also refreshing." Rollo May

N Y Times Bk R p10 O 13 '68 1300w

Reviewed by F. Y. Blumenfeld
Newsweek 72:86D Ag 26 '68 650w

"If anyone is lost in The Sexual Wilderness it is author Vance Packard. His book has been conscientiously researched, it does not sensationalize its material, and its earnest purpose—the clarification of relationships between the sexes in the United States today—is commendable. But Packard is like a man without a compass who has wandered for four years in a forest of research on sexual behavior, vainly seeking a path that might lead him to a new and original conclusion. . . . [He] writes that 'infidelity in general seems to be increasing,' but the only shred of documentation he was able to find was a totally unscientific inquiry by one of the women's magazines. . . . Having made the point that there does not exist any reliable evidence indicating an increase in premarital and extramarital sex, Packard then goes on writing as if the opposite had been established, [and] speaking not as a social science researcher but as a marriage counselor without portfolio, he dispenses pat solutions to the unproved problems." George Krupp

Sat R 51:38 S 14 '68 1500w

PADDEN, R. C. The hummingbird and the hawk: conquest and sovereignty in the Valley of Mexico, 1503-1541. 319p il maps $6.75 Ohio state univ. press

972 Mexico—History

67-12912

After an "examination of the nature and exercise of Aztec sovereignty and its relation to culture during the course of its evolution in preconquest society, the author turns to consideration of the Spanish exercise of sovereignty during the conquest and of the climactic struggle between Cortés and Montezuma II for control of sovereignty and its awesome power of enablement." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Brilliant, imaginative, and carefully documented reconstruction of the mythic world of the Aztecs. . . . Padden shows that the conquista was a psychological and religious victory as much as a military one. Essential for an understanding of Spanish colonial rule in Mexico."

Choice 5:860 S '68 120w

"A historian's remarkable retelling of the conquest of Mexico, in which our static anthropological picture is replaced with new chronological perspectives and interpretations, so that, for example, we see Aztec sacrifice develop as a form of statecraft in advance of its symbolic meanings and philosophical justification. . . . Along the way, Professor Padden shows the Aztecs to have been more crafty, and the Spaniards more humane, than is generally believed. A book in the tradition of the great nineteenth-century histories: impressive in its form and style, it moves inexorably to its tragic conclusion. Highly recommended."

New Yorker 44:160 Mr 23 '68 110w

"This is the familiar story, reconstructed in a novel manner, of the building of the Aztec Empire by the followers of the bloody-minded god Huitzilopochtli (in Indian symbolism, the Hummingbird) and of its violent overthrow by the soldiers of Cortés (in the author's symbolism, the Hawk). It is not history, as commonly understood, but 'ethnohistory.' . . . Thus, for all its genuinely scholarly basis, the book is highly subjective, poised midway between fact and fancy. Despite its apparently political subtitle it is essentially a work of religious sociology, since faith and political power are seen as identical for both Aztec aristocrats and Spanish conquistadors; and probably no more understanding or statistically evaluated analysis of the Aztec passion for sacrificial heart extractions has ever been attempted." Va Q R 44:1xxvii spring '68 170w

PAGE, BRUCE. The Philby conspiracy [by] Bruce Page, David Leitch [and] Philip Knightley [Eng title: Philby: the spy who betrayed a generation]. 300p il $5.95 Doubleday

327 Philby, Harold Adrian Russell 68-20487

An account by the Insight team of reporters from The Sunday Times (London) based "on interviews with diplomats, politicians, scientists, intelligence officers and ordinary citizens in the West. . . . [From non-official records, the authors tell how] Philby became a Communist at Cambridge University in the 1930's along with Donald Maclean and Guy Burgess. Philby spent a decade building up a false reputation as a right-wing reporter for the London Times and then in 1940 was hired by the British Secret Intelligence Service (SIS) who . . . [eventually] put him in charge of the SIS's new Soviet department. . . . In spite of narrow escapes from some who suspected him, he hung onto a job with the SIS until 1956 and did not flee to Russia until 1961. The full extent of his sabotage is not known, but the authors name several anti-Soviet operations that went sour under Philby's influence." (Publishers' Weekly)

Reviewed by Edward Weeks

Atlantic 221:116 Je '68 800w

Reviewed by H. T. Anderson

Best Sell 28:117 Je 15 '68 600w

Reviewed by T. W. Braden

Book World p1 My 12 '68 1700w

Reviewed by Edwin Tetlow

Christian Science Monitor p11 Je 4 '68 430w

Reviewed by Norman Horrocks

Library J 93:2249 Je 1 '68 100w

Reviewed by Larissa Rulofson

Library J 93:2742 Jl '68 120w [YA]

Reviewed by Anthony LeJeune

Nat R 20:505 My 21 '68 550w

"The Sunday Times team have produced a superbly readable account. The book is far better than the newspaper series, which had been written under pressure of the Fleet Street circulation war. The authors underline the central fact that Philby was able to rise high within the M.I.6 citadel, and nearly destroy it, because he was born to the Establishment, which could not accept the idea that one of its members would sell his old school tie. In a perceptive introduction, John le Carré draws an apt parallel with that other British scandal, the Profumo case. . . . The weak spots in [this book] arise from a unfortunate attempt to paper over the missing pieces and ambiguities." David Wise

New Repub 158:36 My 25 '68 410w

"The Insight team has certainly done a good job in unearthing and assembling so many of the ascertainable facts. . . . I would doubt whether without access to official files in London and Moscow much more of real significance can be brought to light. But facts are one thing, and what you do with them is another. . . . The team seem to have started their studies with the plan that their work was to be an overwhelming onslaught on the Establishment. . . . The blurb lays it on the line. It says that Philby betrayed his country, his service 'and above all the class which nurtured, shaped and finally protected him'. Yet the authors show by their own account that this is untenable. . . . One thing which the Insight team has not been able to discover, because they obviously could not without the help of the authorities, is the full extent of the harm Philby did. But at least they have told the story of the Albanian tragedy." Bickham Sweet-Escott

New Statesman 75:242 F 23 '68 800w

"[This book] is presented in an efficient, readable, if impersonal style. On the other hand it lacks dimension. . . . The authors have certainly established the details of Philby's career with substantial accuracy. . . . although they persist in some questionable assertions. . . . They have also given full and racy biographical accounts of the two other Russian spies—also, like him, Cambridge men—with whom Philby was involved. . . . All this gives human interest. . . . Unfortunately [the] authors have ignored the duller but more important subject of Philby's solid work against the Germans in 1941-5, which, was the real basis of his rise inside the Secret Service; and they make no attempt to reconstruct the general context within which he operated, either as a British or as a Russian agent. This inevitably makes their book seem superficial. Nor is it helped by the vapid and vulgar Preface of John le Carré—an exercise in pretentious, rhetorical class-hatred which nowhere touches any point of fact and serves only to emphasize and inflate, instead of to correct, the weaker generalization of the authors." H. R. Trevor-Roper

PAGE, BRUCE—Continued

N Y Rev of Books 10:6 My '68 1050w

Reviewed by Christopher Felix

N Y Times Bk R p8 My 26 '68 750w

Reviewed by K. S. Giniger

Sat R 51:29 Ag 3 '68 850w

Time 91:108 Je 7 '68 160w

"A good job of work, sober, factual and based on extensive research [which] has received the endorsement of its subject. . . . 'If the authors are not quite at home with the generation which their subtitle accuses Philby of betraying, they can follow the trail of his activities with determination and accuracy from the time when he first entered the world of Secret Service. . . . In a brilliantly sensitive introduction John le Carré draws attention to the missing figure in the story (should he be the Fourth Man?); the figure of the Russian agent who recruited him, and Maclean and Burgess."

TLS p271 Mr 14 '68 550w

PAGEL, WALTER. William Harvey's biological ideas; selected aspects and historical background. 394p il $25.50 Hafner pub. co.

612 Harvey, William. Biology 67-2133

A survey of Harvey's anatomical speculations. He "is placed in the mainstream of late Renaissance speculative thought . . . from [whose] influences, and particularly the views of Fludd, Pagel urges us to conclude that Harvey's idea [of an overall pattern of heart motion and blood circulation] was logically and, presumably, chronologically prior to his more famous experiments and numerical argument. Harvey's idea is, therefore, more likely the product of reflection on and borrowing from the current metaphysical idiom than a consequence of experimental investigation, quantitative reasoning, or consideration of the role of venous valves, Harvey's own account of his discovery." (Science)

"[Pagel's] extraordinary study of Harvey's biological ideas is both revelation and triumph. He has sought the whole man. . . . and therefore demands, as one must, the 'internal reason' for Harvey's insistence upon circular symbolism, purpose in nature, and the divine aspects of generation. Pagel's endeavor and conclusions may invite robust denunciation by men of strongly positivist leanings; those with a taste for the unexpected and seemingly bizarre in the ways of thought will be generous in their praise. . . . A large section of the book is devoted to Harvey's predecessors; the author's conclusions are independent and clear, although his analysis is occasionally painful in its thoroughness. . . . This book is easily the most important and provocative reevaluation of Harvey's biological ideas to be published in our generation." William Coleman

Science 157:792 Ag 18 '67 1100w

"This survey of William Harvey's anatomical speculations is in fact a study of the operations of genius; especially the workings of the creative imagination. . . . One thing we know: the discovery of the circulation of the blood is undeniably to be attributed to William Harvey alone, however many thinkers may have foreshadowed it centuries earlier. And part of the interest of the book lies in the careful examination of these anticipations of Harvey's final solution to the problem. The publishers are to be congratulated, in this connexion, on the spacing of notes within wide margins to the pages, which makes it far easier for the reader to take in freely the very full references Dr. Pagel has made available."

TLS p451 My 2 '68 600w

PAINE, ROBERTA M. Looking at sculpture. 128p il $4.94; lib bds $4.59 Lothrop

730 Sculpture—Juvenile literature 68-27710

The senior lecturer at the Metropolitan Museum of Art has selected works ranging from ancient Egyptian and Greek sculpture to the metal constructions of today to give ■ sense of the variety of forms in sculpture, indicate some of its themes, and show the relation of the design of a work to the materials used. Glossary. Bibliography. Index to sculpture. "Ages ten to fourteen." (N Y Times Bk R)

Reviewed by Ethna Sheehan

America 119:658 D 21 '68 50w

"This [book] recommends itself to the school library, both elementary and secondary."

Best Sell 28:325 N 1 '68 120w

"Without a trace of condescension, Miss Paine embarks not only on the high road to sculpture (via the masterworks of Egypt, Greece and the Italian Renaissance) but introduces us as well to the charms of carved furniture legs, ceiling mouldings, ships' figure-heads and New England tombstones. From the book's format to its carefully wrought relationship between text and first-rate photographs, one senses the hand of a gifted art educator. . . . Like sculpture, her book can be looked at from any vantage point. . . . It is everything a children's art book should be."

S. G. Lanes

Book World p6 (children's issue) N '68 180w

"The superb black and white photographs, ranging through the whole history of sculpture in stone, wood, bronze, clay (and more recent modern materials), are a subtle blend of world masterpieces and intriguing, lesser known works. Especially useful are the 18th century illustrations from Diderot's 'Encyclopedie.' . . . The text is simple and declarative. . . . It is most valuable for its insights into technique and method. Occasionally problems of aesthetic definition are open to quarrel. But all observations are sound and form an eminently solid base on which a child can begin a relationship with works of art."

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p54 N 3 '68 120w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland

Sat R 51:68 N 9 '68 100w

PAINTER, GEORGE D. André Gide; a critical biography. rev & enl ed 147p pl $5 Atheneum pubs.

B or 92 Gide, André Paul Guillaume

[68-84734]

This study has been revised and enlarged in the light of Gide's posthumous writings and other primary sources that have appeared since his death. Bibliography. General index. Index of works. For reviews of the first edition see BRD 1952.

Reviewed by Maurice Adelman

America 119:571 N 30 '68 70w

Reviewed by Richard Freedman

Book World p16 O 6 '68 650w

Reviewed by E. J. McCarthy

Commonweal 89:360 D 6 '68 50w

Economist 226:41 Mr 2 '68 210w

"In contrast to Mr. Painter's exhaustive two-volume biography, Proust, the Early Years [BRD 1960] and Proust, the Later Years [BRD 1965], his book on Gide is slight and introductory. He does include a concise analysis of each of Gide's books and touches upon the major events in his life with tact and sympathetic understanding. A thorough bibliography of books by Gide and a selective one of books about him are included. The 19 photographs are of great biographical interest. Mr. Painter's study is a suitable first book on Gide for college and public libraries." Dorothy Curley

Library J 93:1144 Mr 15 '68 130w

"[There] are ■ few questions which are not answered by Mr Painter in his life of Gide. . . . The violence of Mr Painter's enthusiasm for his subject makes me morose. . . . Sometimes I wonder if the towering figure described by Mr Painter is the elegant trickster, on admirable terms with the source of his pain, revealed in every sentence (and incidentally in the marvellous photograph on the back of the jacket). Mr Painter's great Proust was recognisably Proustian; no such empathy exists between the author and the subject of this monograph. The summaries of the novels are mind-bending exercises which convey to the reader nothing more than a further experience of alienation." Anita Brookner

New Statesman 75:453 Ap 5 '68 240w

"The book is well and vividly written, and [Painter's] criticism is always illuminating. As biography it is not cluttered up with obscure psychological theories or esoteric notions. Is one being unduly exacting in regretting that the references are not more numerous? . . . What is particularly valuable and moving in this book is the frank and sympathetic discussion of the complicated relationship between Gide and his wife, and the storms and stresses that it caused. The figure of Madeleine Gide is here filled out and becomes comprehensible. Mr. Painter . . . has also been able to discuss more fully Gide's relationship with young Marc Allégret that led to so much unhappiness in 1917 (he could only skate lightly on the episode in his first book)." Enid Starkie
N Y Times Bk R p8 Je 23 '68 1300w

"It is unfortunate for [Mr. Painter] that he should have chosen to reissue his study of Gide's life and work at this point in time. . . . The text remains substantially the same except for a number of additional paragraphs on the subject of Gide's marriage. These detract considerably from a work which, in all other respects, is sensitive and judicious. Towards Gides' treatment of his wife, Mr. Painter displays an indulgence which is as cavalier as it is partisan."

TLS p670 Je 27 '68 440w

Va Q R 44:clxvi autumn '68 130w

PAKENHAM, SIMONA. Sixty miles from England; the English at Dieppe, 1814-1914. 236p pl $7.50 St Martins

301.453 British in France. Dieppe—History [67-95042]

This book describes how "as soon as the Napoleonic Wars ended, the English began to visit France. Some settled just across the Channel at Dieppe and founded what became a large colony, with its own social life, schools, churches, and celebrities—the painter Sickert, for one, and for another, Lady Blanche Hozier, Winston Churchill's mother-in-law." (New Yorker) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by Alan Pryce-Jones

Book World p12 F 11 '68 700w

"Miss Pakenham tells how the presence of these comparatively well-off foreigners improved Dieppe by giving it a decent harbor and a variety of amenities—in short, put it on the map. Nonetheless, the principal activity of the English colony was not urban redevelopment but quarrelling about and with the English clergy and consuls—an occupation that filled a century (and fills this book) with genteel merriment."

New Yorker 43:237 D 11 '67 160w

"[In] Pigtails and Pernod [BRD 1962] Miss Pakenham wrote her vivid, amusing recollections of a childhood spent in Dieppe between the two world wars. Her new account . . . is written with the same eye for absurdity and the same slightly formal elegance as the earlier work, and although the material is inevitably thinner it is once more a very agreeable book to read. . . . The Dieppe of the period 1870-1914, to which nearly two-thirds of Miss Pakenham's book is devoted, was uniquely successful in teaching English and French, to live as mutually stimulating neighbours, and now that this seems to have become so infinitely more difficult everything bearing on it is of interest. Perhaps the most serious criticism of the book, then, is that it lays too little emphasis on the French side of such traffic."

TLS p621 J1 13 '67 800w

PALAMAS, KÖSTES. The king's flute; tr. with an introd. by Frederic Will. 226p $4.95 Univ. of Neb. press

889

66-20064

"The flute, itself an instrument to accompany lyric song . . . achieves the dimensions of a character [in this epic poem by the Greek writer]. . . . The eloquent flute is removed from the mouth of Basil's skeleton by the soldiers of Michael Paleologos during their siege of Constantinople in the fourteenth century. The soldiers are the ostensible audience to the flute's melé-epé, in which epic catalogues are given a lyric turn, in which not only mountains but also rivers and instruments of warfare are given persuasive voice." (Mod Lang J) Glossary. Chronology.

"Few translators could hope to convey the lyricism of Palamas in The King's Flute and Frederic Will, to his credit, does not try. . . . Still, there is no reason for Palamas to sound flat, which he does in Will's version. The impressive effort to make available this previously inaccessible monument of Greek literature must be commended, but the question remains: what led Will to translate a poet with whom he had so little in common? The book contains a good introduction. . . . For most college libraries."

Choice 5:351 My '68 190w

"[Will's] translations of Palamas are astonishing accomplishments for two reasons: first, because he reads the poet's epics as manifestations of literature and not merely as examples of Modern Greek Literature; and, secondly, because he retains the objectivity of a critic while he is intuitively and subjectively immersed in Palamas's poetry. . . . Really, the only fitting review of Frederick Will's translation of The King's Flute is Frederic Will's introduction to this translation. This book and [Will's translation of Palamas's] The Twelve Words of the Gypsy both deserve far more notice and study than they have received to date. Both books are imperative inclusions in twentieth-century literature courses. The University of Nebraska Press merits special commendation for making them available to students of modern literature." R. A. Swanson
Mod Lang J 52:333 O '68 1100w

PALMER, ALAN. Napoleon in Russia. 318p pl $7.50 Simon & Schuster

940.2 Europe—History—1789-1900 67-25388

In this account of the 1812 campaign, the author emphasizes Napoleon's advance to Moscow. He attempts "to establish the thesis that this pencil-like thrust into a land mass was doomed so long as the Russians were prepared to buy time by giving up territory." (Economist) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by B. D. Williams

Best Sell 27:418 F 1 '68 500w

"Palmer has obviously decided to put aside his academic habits and to write popular history. This apparently justifies his almost complete reliance on French source materials. . . . He looks at the campaign, so far as he looks at it at all reliably, from the French point of view. His use of Russian is problematical. Though he implies that he uses it . . . his Russian citations are full of elementary mistakes. Most unhappily of all . . . the author does not come across well in the popular medium. Most of his stories are old, many of doubtful authenticity. His method is exclusively narrative, and his style is gossipy and trivial, in no way measuring up to the high drama of his subject."

Choice 5:672 J1 '68 170w

"Mr Palmer's narrative flows smoothly on. His judgments emerge without strain. [His style] makes for easy reading. . . . As a single volume account of this campaign, this book does its stuff well."

Economist 225:xxiii D 2 '67 220w

"[Mr. Palmer] handles his vast material with authority and grace and uses to good effect the device of switching his point of view from one side to the other of the contending hosts. . . . He extracts nice drama from Napoleon's repeated attempts to 'negotiate' with his one-time ally, Tsar Alexander. . . . Borodino, Smolensk, the tragic business at the Beresina are powerfully done; and the movements of the contending forces throughout the whole campaign are handled well. Mr. Palmer gives a compelling account of the utter breakdown of the Grande Armée's morale and discipline in the latter stages of the withdrawal. . . . Such maps as are included are sketchily adequate." E. V. Sutherland

Library J 93:74 Ja 1 '68 320w

"Mr. Palmer is less concerned with the horrors of the retreat than the over-all picture of a campaign involving a clash between a million men and the deaths of possibly half of them between June and December of that terrible year. And this, in itself, makes this contribution [significant. Mr. Palmer has ransacked official histories and memoirs] with great diligence. . . . The book can be enjoyed by the general reader, but a knowledge of earlier campaigns . . . will be helpful. A comparatively rare aspect of this book is Mr. Palmer's understanding of (and sympathy with) the Russian viewpoint. . . . Consequently the grand design of 'Napoleon in Russia' gains weight and authority." R. F. Delderfield

N Y Times Bk R p10 F 11 '68 650w

PALMER, B. I. From little acorns; the library profession in Britain. (Ranganathan ser. in lib. science; Sarada Ranganathan lectures, 1965) 176p $4.25 Asia pub.

020 Library science. Library Association
67-3503

"This is a collection of six lectures by the education officer of the Library Association, delivered in Bangalore, India, in 1965 under the auspices of the Sara Ranganathan Endowment for Library Science. . . . The first two lectures briefly review the sociological factors that led to the development of professional associations and professional training in the nineteenth century and give a somewhat longer account of the genesis and growth of the Library Association from 1878 to 1965 and a concise . . . story of the evolving examination system. Cataloging and classification provide the subject for the next three lectures. . . . The last lecture summarizes the contributions of the Library Association to the profession, nationally and internationally, and its services today." (Library Q) Bibliography. Index.

"The Indo-British codification urge comes through in the construction of the book, in which the chapters are lettered and each paragraph numbered like a theme outline, to which the index is keyed. The index is built in what seems to be the current British fashion, with a high degree of specificity to the unimportant. . . . As a brief introduction to the growth of British librarianship and the Library Association, this book could be quite enlightening and informative to the average American librarian, describing as it does an association so similar to the ALA and yet in many ways so different." D. J. Pearce

Library J 92:4388 D 1 '67 340w

"Published in the form in which they were delivered, these lectures retain the informal and conversational tone, including personal recollections and observations as well as allusions to Indian librarianship and tributes to the leadership of Professor Ranganathan. . . . One should not seek in this series of lectures anything like a comprehensive and documented treatment of any of the topics mentioned. It will be of most use, perhaps, to library school students as an introduction to British librarianship and its chief professional association. The chapters on descriptive and subject cataloging will provide a brief but thoughtful introduction to their studies. It will also be a good item to include in the bibliography for comparative librarianship and library training." J. J. Kortendick

Library 38:201 Ap '68 380w

PALMER, C. EVERARD. The cloud with the silver lining; il. by Laszlo Acs. 164p $3.95 Pantheon bks.

67-20213

"Based on a Jamaican teacher's boyhood reminiscences, this is the story of two boys [Timmy and Milton] and their grandfather. . . . Timmy, the younger one, tells how 'we had a grandpappy who had lost his leg in an accident.' Realizing how much attendance at church meant to the old man, the boys determine to earn money to buy an old buggy for grandpa's transportation. Village preparations for Christmas in the town square and in the great plantation house take on a special meaning when the annual fair provides a place for the boys to earn money. . . . Grades five to seven." (Library J)

Reviewed by M. L. Birmingham
Commonweal 87:178 N 10 '67 50w

Reviewed by M. H. Edmonds
Library J 92:4617 D 15 '67 120w

"The spontaneity and warmth of the friends and neighbors who participate in the project contribute to the charm of a lively story written with vitality and affection." Zena Sutherland

Sat R 50:47 N 11 '67 80w

"This book is a gem . . . and it deserves a less moralizing title. . . . It only tells of the delights of life, of the sheer pleasure of being a young aware human being. It bubbles out of the writer like a natural mountain spring. . . . From the very first paragraph, with its relaxed assurance and calm promise, it is an enchanting book. It has not an ounce of self-righteousness or sanctimoniousness in it. It is full of a concern for other people that springs spontaneously from the knowledge that life is good and people gay and loving. It is one of the most happy, most lively, and at the same time most responsible children's books published for some time, a book that will help children to grow. . . . This is a voice that seemed to have gone out with E. Nesbit, Mark Twain and Stevenson. Mr. Palmer is surely a find."

TLS p1084 N 24 '66 550w

PALMER, EDGAR Z. The meaning and measurement of the national income, and of other social accounting aggregates. 417p $10.95 Univ. of Neb. press

339 Income. Wealth 66-10217

The author covers "the development of national income and social accounting, the definitional problems involved in the contemporary literature, and the potential uses of income accounting, especially as a basis for business decision making and as a more precise measure of economic welfare. The early part of the work concentrates on the historical and conceptual development of national income and social accounting. [The second part] analyzes and evaluates the current status of specialized income concepts." (Choice) Index.

"The exposition is not always up to date. . . . The author's real interest in social accounting . . . is in one particular aspect—the definition of income. . . . The discussion is occasionally marred by a tendency to mix together points and quotations relating to the definition of income for a variety of purposes . . . often with no hint to the reader that what is relevant for one purpose may not necessarily be so for another. Because of these and other problems in the presentation, the book is probably not completely suitable as the general textbook for specialized courses in social accounting or as a supplementary text on the subject in more general courses. Similarly, it is hard to see it, as the author hopes, as helpful to the average layman. On the other hand, specialists and advanced students in the field, who should not be thrown off by the omissions and lapses and the occasional unusual terminology, should find much to interest and stimulate them." S. J. Sigel

Am Econ R 57:1350 D '67 850w

"A comprehensive treatment. . . . Especially interesting is the attempt to integrate fully productivity concepts into the systems of national accounting. The final section concentrates on the specialized applications of social accounting. In the last chapter an attempt is made to interlock the entire system of social accounts including input-output analysis, balance of payments, flow of funds, and national wealth data."

Choice 4:727 S '67 140w

PALMER, GEOFFREY. Archaeology A-Z; a simplified guide and dictionary, by Geoffrey Palmer and Noel Lloyd; with line drawings in the text by Roger Harris. 225p pl $5.95 Warne

913.03 Archeology—Dictionaries 68-16851

This is an illustrated dictionary "with special articles on field archaeology and recent discoveries [including] annotated lists of British archaeological cities, museums and archaeological societies. . . . Also included are biographical entries for historical personages as well as for non-living archaeologists." (Library J) Bibliography.

"[The book's] bias is strongly British with a disproportionate number of entries relating to English cities, cultures and archaeologists and a consistent local emphasis within the entries devoted to generic terms. It clearly defines for the layman basic terms from the interrelated fields of archaeology, geology, and paleontology. . . . Minor flaws such as a sparsity of cross-references and a first word rather than key word (e.g. Woolly Mammoth) arrangement do not seriously detract from its usefulness. . . . Recommended [for] school, public, and other reference collections where the simple definitions and clear line drawings will be of value." J. W. Stevenson

Library J 93:4541 D 1 '68 160w

"I didn't much like this book. . . . It is irrationally elective—why insert only some names of British Iron Age tribes, for instance? and surely Gordon Childe deserves an entry if such minor figures as Breasted are included. Some of the entries show a lack of up-to-date knowledge. Nor could I find Cadbury Castle, Linear B, or some well-known country museums." Charles Thomas

New Statesman 75:699 My 24 '68 70w

Reviewed by D. M. Glixon
Sat R 51:61 N 16 '68 100w

PALMER, H. P., jr. auth. Quasars. See Kahn, F. D.

PALMER, STUART. Rook takes knight. 182p $4.50 Random house

68-28577

Mystery story set in Hollywood, in which "Howie Rook, an ex-newspaperman and sometimes private investigator [is involved] in a case featuring [Deirdre Charteris] a beautiful ex-starlet whose sadistic husband has been dispatched by a hit-run car. The D.A. nominates the wife as the killer—but Rook sets out to find a more acceptable alternative." (N Y Times Bk R)

"Whodunits have been edged out by thrillers, but whenever a good one comes along I fall on it with glad cries. . . . Has all the best points of the vintage stuff: an amateur criminologist Howie Rook, an overgrown, shaggy newspaperman; [and] a grand cast of likely suspects." A. L. Rosenzweig

Book World p16 O 20 '68 80w

Reviewed by M. K. Grant

Library J 93:3025 S 1 '68 70w

"This is a skillfully paced tale, filled with credible people and motivation, and a fitting climax to the author's career." A. J. Hubin

N Y Times Bk R p35 S 22 '68 140w

Reviewed by Sergeant Cuff

Sat R 51:45 O 26 '68 30w

PALOL, PEDRO DE. Early medieval art in Spain; text by Pedro de Palol and Max Hirmer; phot. by Max Hirmer. 500p maps $30 Abrams

709.46 Art, Medieval. Art, Spanish 66-26609

The "professor of archaeology at the University of Valladolid has written the text of this book which deals with Spanish art, including architecture, painting, sculpture, metalwork, and tapestries, from the late 5th Century, the Visigothic invasion, to the middle of the 13th Century, the end of the Romanesque period. . . . In historical chapters Professor de Palol outlines the coming and going of the numerous Spanish kingdoms, for example Castile, Navarre, Pamplona, Aragon, and of the Islamic principalities." (Library J) Translation of Spanien: Kunst des frühen Mittelalters.

"There is a wealth of excellent illustrations, both in color and in black and white. The text is scholarly, not easily readable, but well documented and supplemented by plans and maps. . . . The photographs are beautiful. . . . [They] illustrate the many connections and relations of Spain with Arabic, French, Germanic, Burgundian, Italian, and Byzantine art. If there is anything negative to be mentioned, it is the separation of text and illustrations, and the heavy bulk of the volume. Recommended for research and general libraries alike." J. L. Dew-ton

Library J 93:538 F '68 230w

"According to the foreword by Max Hirmer, he has based the text on the manuscript of Pedro de Palol, the Spanish medieval scholar, 'with the intention of producing a work suited not merely to a limited academic world, but to a larger general public. . . . It is not, then, a book for the specialist, though he will find better illustrations here—mostly from Max Hirmer's photographs—than in most specialist publications. But it could, with its scholarly notes, have been a useful handbook for the student in a more manageable and less costly form."

TLS 645 Je 20 '68 110w

PALUKA, FRANK. Iowa authors: a bio-bibliography of sixty native writers. 243p $5.50; pa $3.50 Univ. of Iowa lib.

013 American literature—Iowa—Bio-bibliography. U.S.—Bio-bibliography. Authors, American 67-31800

The author has attempted "to collect all book publications (including foreign translations). [There are] brief biographies." (Choice)

"The University of Iowa does better by the authors of its state than most college libraries, and the present volume indicates that more is being done than merely putting their works on shelves in a special collection. It is a model of works of its sort."

Am Lit 40:114 Mr '68 50w

"Salutes to local denizens often have little universal application. Paluka's book will have some value for many libraries. Iowa has bred outstanding authors: Herbert Hoover, Charlton Laird (linguistics), Meredith Wilson (Music Man) [BRD 1958], Paul Engel, Wallace Stegner, Richard Bissell, Henry Wallace, James Norman Hall (Mutiny on the Bounty) [BRD 1932], Clyde Kluckhohn, etc. . . . Although some of the biobibliographic information may be found elsewhere, this reference with the aid of card analytics would prove a value to the small library."

Choice 5:182 Ap '68 100w

PANAGOPOULOS, E. P. New Smyrna; an eighteenth century Greek odyssey. 207p il $7.50 Univ. of Fla. press

975 Smyrna, Florida—History. Immigration and emigration. Turnbull, Andrew 66-29456

An "account of the 10 year history of New Smyrna, an East Florida settlement founded in 1767 by Greek, Italian, Corsican, and Minorcan settlers led by Dr. Andrew Turnbull, a British mercantilist speculator-colonizer." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"To the specialized scholar this book has a few flaws. Contrary to what the dust jacket states and although there are commendable footnotes indicating the use of worthy primary material, the author has discovered little that is new or that changes the story of New Smyrna as we know it. . . . There is no doubt that Panagopoulos has located a few new sources and made an enthusiastic effort in many parts of the world to find everything possible connected with his story. He is at his best when he sketches the forming of the New Smyrna expedition in Europe." C. W. Arnade

Am Hist R 73:592 D '67 470w

"A carefully researched and documented account. . . . Quoting extensively from contemporary accounts, Panagopoulos writes clearly about the rounding up of the settlers, their speedy disillusionment in their mosquito and malaria ridden 'new Athens,' their virtual servitude, deprivations, mass deaths, and eventual abandonment of the colony during the American Revolution. Recommended for collections in colonial and frontier history, Floridiana, and American Revolution."

Choice 4:1440 F '68 80w

Reviewed by R. W. Patrick

J Am Hist 54:633 D '67 130w

PANICHAS, GEORGE A., ed. Mansions of the spirit; essays in literature and religion [Index prepared by Sidney and Alice Mason]. 414p $8.95 Hawthorn bks.

809 Religion in literature. Literature—History and criticism 67-14862

A collection of chapters by scholars of different religious persuasions seeking "to define the place of religion in modern literature. . . . Part I establishes the relation between religious thought and literature, and suggests . . . answers to an old question: Is literature inherently destructive of true religious spirit? . . . Part II examines individual modern writers in detail —A. Camus, A. Huxley, S. Bellow, J. Genet, F. O'Connor, J. D. Salinger, [and] the great Russian masters." (Publisher's note) Chapter bibliographies. Index.

Choice 5:639 Jl '68 150w

"T. L. Hanna's 'A Question: What Does One Mean by "Religious Literature"?' is the sort of query raised in this collection of essays. It is a book to study as a whole; or in parts—to study one author's use of religious symbols, or man's conscience as it relates to God. Professor Panichas, of the University of Maryland, has produced a scholarly and comprehensive work that will be an invaluable reference for college students' research at all levels. Recommended specially for colleges and universities." E. F. Waterman

Library J 92:2779 Ag '67 140w

PANNENBERG, WOLFHART. Jesus—God and man; tr. by Lewis L. Wilkins and Duane A. Priebe. 415p $10 Westminster press

232 Jesus Christ 68-12983

The "professor of systematic theology, University of Munich, restates Christology's task and method and discusses its interrelationship with soteriology. He treats the divinity of Jesus by emphasizing the resurrection of Jesus and its significance. He relates His deity to that of the Father. He then discusses the relationship of Jesus as true man and the significance and meaning of His vicarious death on the cross." (Library J) Scripture index and indexes of names and of subjects. Originally published in German under the title Grundzüge der Christologie.

PANNENBERG, WOLFHART—Continued

Reviewed by David Stanley
America 119:602 D 7 '68 340w

"Clearly, Pannenberg's theological position is rather orthodox; he . . . accepts the full consequences of biblical and historical criticism; he is fully prepared to view the biblical texts through the eyes of biblical critics—although he is a bit careful about which critic he chooses. . . . This use of selected results of historical scholarship in support of a theological position is the most striking feature of the book. . . . Here then is Pannenberg's strength—or, if your prefer, his Achilles' heel. Either he is responsibly integrating historical critical scholarship and systematic theology, or he is building his house upon the shifting sands of today's findings in historical investigation, which too often become tomorrow's abandoned hypotheses." Norman Perrin

Christian Century 85:1575 D 11 '68 750w

"Pannenberg uses the resurrection to understand everything else, the divinity, the earthly life, the present reality, but this leaves him with nothing to understand the resurrection itself. . . . Hence, his account of the resurrection itself seems singularly weak, appealing . . . it does at twenty centuries' distance to historical evidence, testimony and proof. . . . The basic virtue in Pannenberg's approach is that it shows how meaning derives from outcome, past and future. . . . This basic virtue entails also a basic defect. The approach empties the present. It is out of the present. . . . One will understand better when one goes from simply understanding the past and the future in the light of our present mentality to understanding simultaneously that present mentality itself." J. S. Dunne

Commonweal 88:472 Je 12 '68 1500w

"The book is valuable because it introduces the English reader to current, liberal Christian, continental European thought, and because it will stimulate the thinking of liberals and conservatives. Undoubtedly evangelicals will find several points of disagreement with Mr. Pannenberg's Christology. Nevertheless, the book is recommended especially for specialists and scholars." Shlides Johnson

Library J 93:2504 Je 15 '68 150w

PAOLI, PIA. Determined to live; tr. by Diana Athill. 152p $3.95 Harcourt

B or 92 Cancer 68-12592

This "first book is the story of [the author's] illness from thyroid cancer, her difficult marriage to a very self-centered man, and the treatment of her disease. After four operations and the absorption of 945 curie units of radioactive iodine, her illness seemed checked, and her spirit strengthened by her adversities. She divorced her unsympathetic husband, who did not stick by her during her illness, and finally married another man who cared for her and her two children." (Library J) Originally published in French under the title Atomes à l'Heure du Thé.

"The book jacket refers to cancer by its mystery name, 'the dread disease,' but the autobiography itself suggests another rendering: 'the disease that thrives on dread.' . . . From the moment Miss Paoli submits herself to the cure she begins to gain touch with her own wellsprings. For the first time in her life she begins to have a sense of her needs, her identity, her body, her sexuality and her defiance. . . . The simultaneous flowering of love and the 'determination to live' promises to become the persuasive and profound aspect of Miss Paoli's story. But the book suddenly dissolves into a case history of her disease. . . . and she does not return again to examine the attitudes and feelings of denial that might have corresponded with the eruption of her tumor. . . . [The translation] is graceful and well-wrought, but it has nothing to teach us of despair." Janet Coleman

Book World p11 J1 7 '68 1000w

"This inspiring and interesting book, which has been translated into English, Italian, German, and Swedish, is recommended for academic and public libraries." G. F. Dole
Library J 93:543 F 1 '68 90w

PAPANEK, GUSTAV F. Pakistan's development; social goals and private incentives [written under the auspices of the Center for int. affairs, Harvard university]. 354p $3.95 Harvard univ. press

338.9549 Pakistan—Economic policy. Pakistan—Economic conditions 67-22871

An analysis of the basis for Pakistan's success in economic development from 1947 to the present by the director of the Development Advisory Service at Harvard, who also was an advisor to the Pakistan Planning Commission. Bibliography, Index.

"While I am not qualified to assess the details of the economic analysis presented, I can testify that this book is well-done sociology which contains materials relevant not only to an understanding of the developmental process but to a grasp of the fundamental importance of social structure in influencing social process generally. . . . It will be of interest to students of the interaction between social structure and social behavior. . . . There are few wasted words in this book. . . . If more economists wrote as sociologically as Papanek, more sociologists would (hopefully) read more economics. This book deserves a wider readership among sociologists than it is likely to get." A. D. Grimshaw

Am J Soc 74:94 J1 '68 900w

Reviewed by Irving Swerdlow
Ann Am Acad 378:186 J1 '68 550w

"[An] admirably clear and dispassionate account of what actually happened between 1947 and the present day. . . . One of the most interesting assessments of the whole study . . . [is] the description of the strength and weakness of 'generalists' in the civil service or the analysis of the increasing effectiveness of the planners in picking priorities for development. . . . [This book is] more than a guide to Pakistan's experience. It throws valuable light on the whole strategy of effective planning for development. This is perhaps not surprising since Mr Papanek and his colleagues in Harvard's Development Advisory Service not only assisted Pakistan's planners but can also draw on experience in many lands for their comparisons and assessments."

Economist 227:50 My 11 '68 600w

"Papanek claims the civil service and the government were 'neither subservient to nor allied with either landlord or business interests.' Yet elsewhere in the book he provides abundant evidence to the contrary. . . . The government's economic policy led to increased inequality in the distribution of income. . . . This system, in which the costs of growth are borne by the peasants and the benefits of growth are reaped by the industrialists, is defended by Papanek on the grounds that 'great inequality of incomes is conducive to increased savings.' . . . We are told twice that 'the millennium has not arrived,' but we are expected to believe that Pakistan is 'one of the half dozen countries in the world with the greatest promise of steady development.' Mr. Papanek . . . clearly has a story to tell, but whether it will be appreciated depends upon whether the reader enjoys fairy tales." Keith Griffin

Pacific Affairs 41:139 spring '68 1000w

PAPAS. No mules, unpub. col. il $3.50; lib. bdg $3.29 Coward-McCann

Asses and mules—Stories 67-26121

This story centers around "Faan, a little black boy who lives on a South African timber farm. Faan's first visit into town with his father and mother and his white mule Golo leads to the boy getting his mule to do the shopping: [The sign] 'No Blacks' becomes 'No Mules,' but only after Golo has wrecked the general store." (TLS) "Kindergarten to grade three." (Library J)

"Papás is the well-known British cartoonist (he has lived in South Africa), a master draftsman who injects energy into every line he draws. Each double-page illustration, with its touch of delicate color, has a sense of intense movement—the straining muscles of the loggers, the dash of a startled mule, the proud spanking trot of a boy riding to town. Whether they understand the problems or not, 4-8's will find a lot to enjoy [here]. . . . By skillfully involving the children rather than preaching to them, and with its humor that never lacks sensitivity, 'No Mules' could provide a wise introduction to a sad problem. . . . Like most first-rate picture-books, it should also find an adult readership." Pamela Marsh

Christian Science Monitor pB4 My 2 '68
100w

Reviewed by M. L. Birmingham
Commonweal 88:301 My 24 '68 30w

"The implication, which some children may understand, is that Golo represents the whites of South Africa, who by mulish stubbornness are destroying their own enterprise. The story, however, can stand on its own, while its vivid illustrations make it a welcome addition to the limited supply of picture books about contemporary African life." G. B. Herman

Library J 93:2108 My 15 '68 200w

"This could be quite humbly produced, at half the cost, without losing a point: a missed opportunity."

TLS p1148 N 30 '67 100w

PAPPWORTH, M. H. Human guinea pigs; experimentation on man. 228p il $5.95 Beacon press

619 Medicine—Research. Medical ethics
68-12844

The author states in his introduction: "The subject of this book is the relation between what is morally right and what is performed in medical experiments. My purpose in writing it is to enlighten the public about what is going on in such experiments; to stir the consciences of the doctors so engaged and to ask them to reflect on some of the ancillary results of what they are doing and the moral issues involved. I shall also try to indicate the principles on which medical experiments should be carried out so that the ends of research may be effectively served without any of the harm done at present, and to suggest possible legislative changes and changes in accepted procedure in which these principles may be incorporated." (Intro) Index.

"On the evidence scrupulously documented in this book some practitioners of experimental medicine are wolves in white coats and are prepared to do hair-raising things to people submitted to a hospital's care. What Dr. Pappworth does not give is a clear idea of how many practitioners are like this, of how great is the risk of the practices he details being carried out on any one patient at any one time. He is out to give a much-needed shock and will not be popular in medical high places; but he is right to insist that scientific enthusiasm should be tempered by humanity and prudence and that the patient's interests should at all times be paramount. In most hospitals they normally are, a reassurance that may escape the reader of a frankly polemical book whose purpose is to ensure that they are endangered nowhere. . . . In tackling the practices of experimental medicine and in suggesting safeguards, Dr. Pappworth's book makes a valuable contribution."

Economist 223:803 My 20 '67 480w

"An experienced and thoughtful British physician has prepared this rather frightening review of practices followed by some physicians engaged in medical research. [His examples] are presented to illustrate procedures he thinks are harmful, or, at best, useless for a particular patient. He interjects many questions of ethics and the patient's rights. It is somewhat unfortunate that his highly technical language may obscure some of the points or discourage the lay reader. This is a timely aspect of one of the problems of medical research. . . . For medical and large public libraries." C. M. Brosky

Library J 93:1008 Mr 1 '68 100w

"[Dr Pappworth] avoids emotionalism. . . . Nevertheless his book is liable to spread alarm and suspicion among lay readers, and particularly among prospective hospital patients. . . . [However] there remains a hard core of cases in Dr Pappworth's list where his criticisms seem to be fully justified. . . . In the concluding chapters of his book the author proposes Parliamentary legislation to control human experimentation, in accord with certain ethical principles. . . . [His proposals] sound admirable in theory, yet Dr Pappworth himself admits that as the result of a bureaucratic machinery of this sort 'research, insofar as it depends on medical experiment, would be substantially slowed up'. . . . The crucial question is whether the irresponsible minority [who resort to unethical and illegal practices] is really 'expanding' or not. . . . I think that most research workers who are in a position to know what is going on would confirm that the horrors described in Dr Pappworth's book are on the wane. . . . [This] is a book to be pondered by the profession. There is less point in recommending it to the general public—which has other 'cardinal issues' to worry about." Arthur Koestler

New Statesman 73:721 My 26 '67 1300w

"Dr. Pappworth is no fanatic. He recognizes the need for experimental work in humans and proposes a number of sensible reforms in the field. Although his book may be of value to the lawyer, medical journalist or a patient with an approaching appendectomy, its main message is to the medical profession itself. . . . Too often, . . . research physicians lose sight of the particular patient, seeing him only as a set of initials in a case report to be presented in a year or two. No physician who reads this book will ever make that mistake again and we shall all be the better for it." Michael Halberstam

N Y Times Bk R p30 J1 14 '68 1200w

TLS p506 Je 8 '67 1000w

PARADISE, SCOTT I. Detroit industrial mission; a personal narrative. 158p $5.95 Harper 261.8 Detroit Industrial Mission. Church and labor. Business ethics 68-17586

"The book is based on a journal kept by the Reverend Mr. Paradise who recorded his experiences as he, along with a team of like-minded clergy, attempted to enter into the thought forms and technical structures of industry. . . . [He tells the] story of his experiences with both labor and management. . . . The purpose of the Mission was not only to present the Christian point of view but to get people to accept what they are and what the problems are." (Library J)

Christian Century 85:688 My 22 '68 40w

"With most of the people associated with the Detroit Industrial Mission and its involvement in the life of Detroit made to feel that they had no business being where they were, it is no wonder that this story is one of extreme frustration. . . . In the foreword Mr. Paradise says of the adventure, 'My reason for publishing the record is because it reveals something . . . which is both important and far from adequately recognized. Something akin to what current theological discussion refers to as "the death of God" is concretely documented in this narrative.' . . . This book will demonstrate that . . . immorality is not confined to any one class or segment but woven into the whole fiber of society. It is not a book of 'solutions' but of amplification and should be of interest to churchmen and secularists alike." Jane Van Meter

Library J 93:2661 J1 '68 300w

PARANKA, STEPHEN, jt. ed. Price policies and practices. See Mulvihill, D. F.

PARGETER, EDITH. See Peters, E.

PARIS, ROBERT GRAHAM. Gourmet cooking for one, or more. 271p $6.50 Atheneum pubs.
641.5 Cookery 68-16864

The author includes a "section on instant foods; he tells what goes with what, gives definitions and lists on what to do with foods, and discusses the care of utensils. In the second part of the book, he has arranged the chapters by types of food. . . . The recipes are international." (Library J)

"The summer bachelor who cooks for himself will find . . . [this] staunchly masculine [cookbook] explicit, straightforward, and sumptuous. Mr. Paris goes in for robustly flavored meat dishes and his vegetables are hearty." Gloria Levitas

Book World p5 Ag 11 '68 40w

"The recipe selection is rather ordinary—apple pie, pie crust, and pilaf, with as many as five recipes for asparagus. In his recipes [the author] stresses single servings. For the novice this title might be useful. Only for complete cookbook collections." L. A. Garloch

Library J 93:1142 Mr 15 '68 100w

Reviewed by Nika Hazelton

N Y Times Bk R p23 Je 2 '68 120w

PARISH, HELEN RAND. The life and writings of Bartolomé de las Casas. See Wagner, H. R.

PARK, CLARA CLAIBORNE. The siege. 279p $6.75 Harcourt

155.45 Autism

67-20315

The author records the first eight years of the life of her daughter Elly, "a child who from babyhood lived behind the invisible walls of autism, one of the severest forms of childhood psychosis. . . . Faced with a baby who seemed severely retarded and totally withdrawn yet showed strange flashes of intelligence, Elly's parents, long before they found professional help, faced the question of how to reach their child. . . . Elly's mother describes how she, her husband, and her three normal children lay siege to Elly's fortress." (Publisher's note)

Reviewed by Robert Coles

Book World p10 D 17 '67 900w

"[Mrs. Park] relates her personal encounter with her daughter's rare childhood psychosis in a sincere and objective manner. Further, her intelligent presentation is one from which other parents in a similar situation can gain understanding and hope. This is the chief value of the book. Another important contribution is the point Mrs. Park scores against a breakdown of communication between parents and the psychiatric profession. . . . For general library collections, and probably of interest to professionals." E. P. Nichols

Library J 92:4010 N 1 '67 150w

PARKE, H. W. The oracles of Zeus; Dodona, Olympia, Ammon. 294p pl $9.95 Harvard univ. press

292.2 Zeus, Oracles. Greece—Religion, Greece—Antiquities 68-1424

The author focuses on the oracles at three sites. "For each oracle he discusses the literary accounts, the archaeological remains, the method of consultation and the actual answers given through history to particular inquirers." (TLS) Index of proper names.

"[A] tediously detailed study of the literary and archaeological remains of the oracles. . . . Equally disappointing is the author's scant treatment of the real religious and political function of Zeus' prophecies in Greek life. A case is made for the interrelation of the three oracles, but only a tenuous one. Not much new is advanced on Alexander's famous trip to the oracle of Ammon. One must credit the careful analysis of the more physical and logistical aspects of the oracles (such as how Zeus' oaks gave prophecies). The chapter on the archaeology is perhaps the most informative, particularly in respect to chronology."

Choice 5:1022 O '68 110w

"Although the book may seem of interest primarily to archaeologists and historians of religion, P. has adopted a method that should appeal to any classicist, regardless of his specialty: he proceeds from the literary accounts to the archaeological sources and finally to the manner of oracular consultation. Anyone who has ever attempted to explicate Iliad 16.233ff. to undergraduates will find a very lucid presentation in the first chapter. In dealing with the oracle in Roman poetry, P. realizes that such references can be purely ornamental and does not force the poets to yield information which they could not possess." B. F. Dick

Class World 62:23 S '68 280w

"[The book] is admirably full and detailed, a work of very mature scholarship, in which the author deals with a mass of conflicting and difficult material with great skill, caution and credibility. . . . Nearly half the book is given to Dodona. . . . Olympia is much less interesting, but it is useful to have Professor Parke's authoritative sorting out of the very complicated legends about Melampous."

TLS p290 Mr 21 '68 460w

PARKER, FRANCIS H. The story of Western philosophy. 338p $6.75; pa $4.75 Ind. univ. press

190 Philosophy—History

67-13033

This book "is meant as an aid in the interpretation of the history of Western philosophy. . . . This emphasis upon interpretation rather than presentation of the historical facts has resulted in the condensation of all the factual material and even in the complete omission of some philosophers and topics . . . [e.g.] much of medieval philosophy and everything after Hegel, [because] . . . the fundamental theme of this interpretation is that the history of philosophy is the most abstract expression of the growth of human existence—at least of Western man—and that the main stages in this development are three: an original state of the self's undifferentiated objective union with the whole of reality, a withdrawal of the self from this whole to win subjective freedom but at the price of isolation and estrangement, and a return to the whole in a reunion of a no longer isolated and merely subjective self with a no longer merely undifferentiated objective world. Ancient and medieval philosophy are viewed as the philosophical expression of the first stage, modern philosophy of the second, and the third stage is considered to lie in the future." (Pref) Chapter bibliographies. Index.

"This compact and stimulating volume aims to be a guidebook for studies in which primary sources will be consulted. Part One, 'Ancient & Medieval Objectivism' is largely expository until the treatment of the Middle Ages, where one finds helpful comparisons and interpretation. The discussion of Aristotle is a model of succinct clarity. Part Two, 'Modern Subjectivism' (Bacon through Hegel), is more interpretative and critical and too often lacks straightforward exposition. . . . The book has movement, though, and there are some instructive charts and outlines."

Choice 4:1392 F '68 180w

"This book, by the Chairman of the Department of Philosophy at Purdue University, is intended as an interpretive companion to the paperback texts of the philosophical classics. . . . Although Professor Parker's basic thesis is intermittently visible and he offers some original interpretations, much of the book resembles a conventional history of philosophy." William Gerber

Library J 92:1936 My 15 '67 120w

PARKER, G. F. A short account of Greek philosophy from Thales to Epicurus. 194p $5 Barnes & Noble

182 Philosophy, Ancient

67-8567

An attempt "to provide information and some common ground" in classical thought for the benefit of non-specialists." (TLS)

"This is one of those books which invite the criticism of professional scholars. . . . Of course, a short account of Greek philosophy must be selective, but may it ignore Theophrastus and the Peripatetic school? To most chapters Parker appends a brief list of suggested readings. Perhaps their meagerness suits the purpose of providing information for students with limited ambitions, but there is no reason to omit readings for Empedocles and Anaxagoras. Surely the general character of this work does not excuse an inadequate and inconsistent use of references. . . . This history of philosophy may have merits (its use of poetry and general literary style have an appeal) but it is not a useful tool for serious students and scholars." W. W. Fortenbaugh

Class World 61:360 Ap '68 300w

"[Parker's] admirably clear and concise exposition of a judicious selection of topics, backed by a sketch of the historical setting, is a genuinely fresh and stimulating introduction to Greek philosophy. The best sections are those on Plato."

TLS p766 Ag 24 '67 230w

PARKER, HARLEY, jr. auth. Through the vanishing point. See McLuhan, M.

PARKER, S. R. The sociology of industry [by] S. R. Parker [and others]. 182p $5 Praeger

301.5 Sociology. Labor and laboring classes. Industrial relations 67-30059

The first section of the book "relates the subject-matter of industrial sociology—men's relationships at work—to the social structure of the wider society. . . . [The second part looks] at what goes on inside industrial organizations . . . [examining] management, human relations in the small work group, the influence of technology, the role of trade unions and other 'interest groups'. The final section looks at work from the viewpoint of the individual worker. . . . There are chapters on mobility, on attitudes to work, and on the relationship between work and leisure." (TLS) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"The data are derived from both British and American studies so the book provides breadth not found in most textbooks. . . . Appropriate as a text for upper level college courses in industrial sociology or as reading for industrial management and industrial psychology. Compares favorably with any current text in the field except for brevity."

Choice 5:691 J1 '68 110w

"[The authors] have written a clear, sensible and carefully structured introduction to a complex and relatively new subject. In general the structure [of the book] works successfully; the various elements of industrial sociology, the different perspectives on it, are presented in a convincing and relatively tidy form. This will be an indispensable textbook for the student and useful to many non-sociologists as well. It is a good example of the kind of thing that sociology, as it matures, can do. The book's main faults are ones of which the authors are plainly aware. At times they have, in their effort to compress, sacrificed lucidity to comprehensiveness and scholarship; these passages will confuse the non-specialist reader."

TLS p339 Ap 4 '68 700w

PARKER, TONY. People of the streets; with il. by Anthony Colbert. 256p $5 Bobbs 309.1421 London—Social conditions 68-15807

This volume is the product of tape-recorded interviews which Parker had over the period of a year with some people of the London streets. "His seven confessors are an elderly street artist, a Scots free-lance car washer, a young girl selling home-made ties (illegally) from the pavement, a youthful provincial musician who plays his own songs to the guitar and goes on LSD 'trips', a completely failed young Irish drifter, a twice-widowed newspaper seller, and a North Irish nightwatchman who has lost his former physical strength." (New Statesman)

Reviewed by Colin MacInnes

New Statesman 75:805 Je 14 '68 340w

"Tony Parker has deep feelings about whom he sees. Thus he touches truths to which the cool observer is blind. He set out to discover 'the variety and richness of human personality' in his companions. They barely make it from day to day as they hawk, paint, make music and watch on the city streets. Parker admirably captures their soft remembered little joys and yearnings. . . . A bluesy kind of laughter is here as well as an easy air of improvisation. Parker somehow induces his friends to think and create out loud." Studs Terkel

N Y Times Bk R p18 My 19 '68 600w

"What Mr. Parker gives us in this deeply appealing book is an acceptable substitute for art. He is no brash data-monger, wading in with a blunt pencil and a string of routine questions that would be likely to catch anything but the truth. He has angled with his spool of tape for some of the trickiest fish to be found in the London streets, and simply got them to talk. As much skill and patience and respect for humanity—at least as much of that—must have gone into creating the conditions that made the book possible as many a 'creative' writer puts into a story or play or film. His seven subjects are tricky because they are ordinary. . . . It is what his people say that matters and thanks to Mr. Parker's subtle and sympathetic approach they sound eloquent, genuine and unfailingly interesting."

TLS p639 Je 20 '68 650w

PARKINSON, C. NORTHCOTE. Mrs Parkinson's law; and other studies in domestic science; il. with drawings by Robert C. Osborn. 208p $4.95 Houghton

827 Marriage. Family 68-29551

The author of Parkinson's Law (BRD 1957) offers advice to the "woman whose children are of school age; the woman for whom life often becomes too much. . . . Her law is this: 'work under pressure produces a heat which expands to fill the mind available, from which it will pass only into a mind that is relatively cooler.'" (Library J) A portion of this book appeared in the February 1966 issue of McCall's magazine.

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 222:144 N '68 10w

Best Sell 28:346 N 15 '68 250w

"The professor discusses love, marriage, children, and those days when everything seems to go wrong. Often he is in teasing mood; sometimes he writes as a masculine 'Dear Abby,' sometimes as a wise man. Along the way he trots out an occasional lesser law, but he never delights us, as he did in the first book, with the feeling that he is hitting on the head nails we only half suspected were there. . . . Interesting as they are, none of these secondary laws packs the punch of Parkinson's first. By comparison, Mrs. Parkinson's own law, the focus of this book, is disappointingly feeble." Pamela Marsh

Christian Science Monitor p25 D 5 '68 700w

"Mr. Parkinson has an answer for every one—almost every one of life's problems. . . . These essays are good reading for anyone, at any time, and the book is recommended generally." K. T. Willis

Library J 93:3005 S 1 '68 140w

"[What the author] has to say is, for the most part, worthy and sound. . . . His new book may be aimed at women—but the alert male shouldn't miss it. His chapters on 'Teenology,' 'Automotion,' 'Home on the Range,' 'Travel' and 'Hosts and Guests' more than justify the book's subtitle. . . . His title chapter on Mrs. Parkinson's Law is a stroke of genius. . . . How sympathetic Mr. Parkinson is to the lonely housewife! . . . Alone (aided only by the machinery man has invented to maintain her even more alone), she will benefit from his views on raising children, party giving, marriage and escape. It is said that all good humor is based on truth. Parkinson's truth is full of good humor." Beverly Grunwald

N Y Times Bk R p5 N 17 '68 800w

Reviewed by Haskel Frankel

Sat R 51:50 N 30 '68 20w

PARKS, DAVID. GI diary; with phot. by the author. 133p $4.95 Harper

959.7 Vietnamese Conflict, 1961- . U.S. Army—Military life 68-17037

A diary of a young negro draftee's two-year tour in the Army from induction day in September 1965 through eight months of combat in Vietnam in 1967.

"The book deals too profusely with nasty, dirty language and concepts and this factor is the reason the current reviewer classifies it as suitable for adult readers only on account of 'immoral language or incidents.'" Elbridge Colby

Best Sell 28:40 Ap 15 '68 200w

"A rather pedestrian description of the trials and tribulations of soldiers in training and in combat everywhere and at any time. Frankly a poor, if true, depiction of Army life in Vietnam, the book lacks depth and is poorly written. If David Parks shows one thing, it is that remarkably little of the complexity of Vietnam rubs off on the G.I." R. F. Delaney

Library J 93:1150 Mr 15 '68 110w

"David Parks, son of Negro photographer Gordon Parks, has written a frank, often funny account of his military experiences. . . . This is also a record of personal growth, as Parks' outlook visibly matures. The accompanying photographs are outstanding and indicate that the younger Parks is equipped to follow in his famous father's footsteps." Margaret Yesso

Library J 93:2135 My 15 '68 90w [YA]

"Since [this was] written, President Johnson has conceded the defeat of his Vietnam policy and shifted the direction of the war to de-escalation. . . . [This] book thus faces a new test of how well it detected the essential weaknesses on the American side and the essential strength and stamina on the enemy side that brought about the turn in the course of the war. If this is a fair test, David Parks [has] . . . failed it. Instead of trying to appraise or analyze [he] concentrates on . . . personal reactions to death, pain, stupidity, [bigotry] and sometimes bravery. . . . [For Parks] the war against the Vietcong is a backdrop to his personal war with Whitey. . . . [His] self-conscious worm's-eye view helps prepare us for black-power think-power among returning black servicemen, but it does not tell much about the war." Richard Dudman

Sat R 51:36 Je 15 '68 320w

PARLETT, D. S. A short dictionary of languages. (Teach yourself bk) 153p $2.50 McKay 403 Language and languages—Dictionaries
[68-85128]

"This book is a guide to several hundred major languages and language groups from all over the world, selected for their political significance, cultural value, and historic interest to present day civilization [and] arranged in alphabetical order." (Publisher's note) Annotated bibliography.

"There is great need for an English language dictionary of the world's languages, both in an exhaustive form . . . and in a more abridged version. As for [the volume] here reviewed, columns of criticism could be written; but it does not merit that much attention since it can only be regarded as an incomplete set of notes preparatory to such a reference work. The scores of indigenous families and hundreds of separate languages of North, Central, and South America (except for a brief sketch of Eskimo) are covered en masse with a brief article on 'Amerindian.' . . . Negro Africa, too, reverts to the status of an unexplored dark continent. . . . The languages of Europe and Asia are comparatively well listed, though the descriptions fluctuate in depth and accuracy. It is, in sum, disgraceful that this work should have been allowed to reach print in so embryonic a form, and out of keeping with the venerable traditions of British publishing." B. H. Smeaton
Library J 93:1989 My 15 '68 300w

"There are few definitions in D. S. Parlett's [book]. What he does is list alphabetically some 450 languages and dialects, tell who speaks (or spoke) them, indicate to which language family they belong, and give something of their history and evolution. A most useful and fascinating little volume for everyone of linguistic bent." D. M. Glixon
Sat R 51:48 My 18 '68 50w

PARMENTER, ROSS. The awakened eye. 352p pl $8.50 Wesleyan univ. press

152.1 Perception 68-16011

This is "a book about seeing, not in its physiological aspects but as a rewarding art that can be learned. . . . It is in a sense the story of [the author's] own awakening: what befell him when he first noticed the odd particularities of face cards, . . . or contemplated a brazier of burning wood in a Mexican courtyard, or watched the gulls on the Hudson waterfront, or found himself on a commuting train or in any of a dozen commonplace situations that, closely seen, were not commonplace at all." (Publisher's note) Bibliographical index.

"Using meditation as but one of several techniques in the pursuit of goals, this book also turns out to be something of a manual on this rewarding art or practice. While sorting out the vision-sharpeners, the author also catalogs in cautionary tone the vision-deadeners, both personal and cultural. There are so many kinds of eyes too: the reporter's eye, the painter's, the naturalist's and the scientific eye, as well as perception by the religious visionary; this writer does not neglect the mystic's deep understanding, being aware that all contribute a share to more comprehensive vision." William Archer
Best Sell 28:121 Je 15 '68 500w

"Occasionally in this long book the going is slow. And sometimes it seems naive in one who has been a New York Times reporter to be describing intellectual curiosity as if it were a new discovery. Still, with old truths freshly learned, he may quicken many readers." S. C. Gross
Library J 93:2013 My 15 '68 130w

"A charming and literally illuminating book."
New Yorker 44:146 Je 8 '68 180w

PARMET, HERBERT S. Aaron Burr; portrait of an ambitious man, by Herbert S. Parmet & Marie B. Hecht. 399p pl $8.95 Macmillan (N Y)

B or 92 Burr, Aaron 67-21421

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by J. E. Cooke
Am Hist R 73:1623 Je '68 400w

Reviewed by A. F. Young
J Am Hist 55:638 D '68 500w

TLS p674 Je 27 '68 750w

PARMET, HERBERT S. Never again; a president runs for a third term, by Herbert S. Parmet and Marie B. Hecht. 306p pl $6.95 Macmillan (N Y)

973.917 Presidents—U.S.—Election. Roosevelt, Franklin Delano. Willkie, Wendell Lewis 68-23639

The authors describe "the Presidential election of 1940 . . . [in which] the two-term tradition and Franklin Roosevelt's reluctance, feigned or real, to declare himself a candidate for a third term [led to] the development of the Wendell Willkie bandwagon and his nomination as Republican standard bearer. . . . [The authors describe the campaign,] interviewing political figures, following leads, and piecing together the odds and ends of events and characters which affect and determine political campaigns and elections. They include [an] . . . analysis of the election results, contrasting Willkie's strength against Landon's in 1936. They also discuss, in an epilogue, the development and passage of the 22nd Amendment to the Constitution prohibiting the election of a president for more than two terms." (Library J) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"An exciting and readable piece of political history. . . . Recommended for public, college, and university libraries." T. J. Michalak
Library J 93:4151 N 1 '68 190w

"With depth, breadth, scholarship and a lively style, the historians Parmet and Hecht not only set the stage for the campaign of 1940, but neatly clear the stage in an epilogue. The pages between are a fascinating narrative of the contest fought by an adroit, determined President at the height of his powers with a captivating, ambitious political amateur named Wendell Willkie." Mitchel Levitas
N Y Times Bk R p24 N 3 '68 210w

PARMITER, GEOFFREY DE C. The king's great matter; a study of Anglo-papal relations, 1527-1534. 322p $11 Barnes & Noble

942.05 Henry VIII, King of England. Great Britain—History—Tudors, 1485-1603. Catholic Church—Relations (diplomatic) 67-6191

The "great matter" of the title refers to Henry VIII's divorce from Catherine of Aragon.

"Though Mr. Parmiter offers no new information, he has used the published sources so thoroughly that his book should serve as a reference work for students of the divorce. Indeed, the facts are presented so fully that the discerning reader will easily find evidence for arguments and interpretations different than Parmiter's, which are generally but not aggressively Catholic. Parmiter is evasive on some important issues. He sets forth the usual explanations of the origin of the divorce . . . but ventures no conclusion. He makes much of the so-called Spanish brief. . . . And, curiously, he makes very little of the question of whether Catherine's first marriage was consummated. . . . Otherwise, Parmiter stands against Henry. . . . [He] occasionally digresses to discuss the revolutionary changes in church and state in England that were by-products of the divorce. His treatment of these is generally sound but unoriginal. . . . Criticisms and disagreements notwithstanding, [this work] is, if only for its detail and documentation, a useful addition to the literature of the divorce." Mortimer Levine
Am Hist R 73:807 F '68 400w

"The best of several recent books about Henry VIII's divorce from Catherine of Aragon. . . . Using Roman, French, and Spanish sources as well as traditional English accounts, Parmiter presents a well written, though unoriginal, chronicle which illustrates Pope Clement VII's duplicity and ineptness as well as Henry's bullying and boorishness. Although many questions remain unanswered, this volume is indispensable to students of the Henrician reformation and will serve to introduce undergraduates to the Machiavellian politics of the period. Highly recommended."

Choice 5:398 My '68 110w

Reviewed by Joyce Youings
Engl Hist R 83:832 O '68 220w

"Historians have long examined the details, but Mr. Parmiter is a lawyer, and his accurate analysis of the twists and turns of negotiation with Rome has put professional historians in his debt: the disentanglement has not been so well done before. . . . Mr. Parmiter has ably summed up and analysed a memorable exercise in power politics."

TLS p129 F 8 '68 800w

PARRA, NICANOR. Poems and antipoems; ed. by Miller Williams; trs: Fernando Alegria [and others]. 149p $5.50; pa $1.95 New directions

861

67-23489

"Selections from the Chilean poet's four books of poems." (N Y Times Bk R) A number of these translations appeared in such periodicals as Chelsea, Chicago Review and Shenandoah.

Reviewed by Alan Brownjohn

New Statesman 76:638 N 8 '68 190w

"[The] poems are hallucinatory and violent, and at the same time factual. The well-timed disclosure of events—personal or political—gives his poems a cumulative, mounting energy and power that we have come to expect from only the best fiction. . . . The style succeeds always in being plain. . . . An antipoem—Parra's or anybody else's—is a 'modern' poem. . . . It is the difference between Parra's antipoems and anybody else's that is significant. He sounds like nobody else and yet he sounds contemporary. To many readers Parra will be a new poet, but a poet with all the authority of a master." Mark Strand

N Y Times Bk R p50 D 10 '67 550w

"Parra's [poetry is] charming and important. Free, witty, satirical, intelligent, often unexpected (without quite being surrealistic), mordant and comic by turns, always rebellious, always irreverent—it is all these, and an ingratiating poetry too, no doubt influential, certainly necessary in the cultural life of any people; yet it never reaches the level of intensity that would take us out of ourselves. Nor does it try. . . . For the translators this poetry is [difficult]. . . . The result shows in the diversity of styles [they] have adopted. . . . Still, I am inclined not to quarrel with any of the translations. They are skillful and intelligent, technically defensible, and respectful of Parra's genius; and the Spanish texts are on the facing pages for everyone to study. They are worth it." Hayden Carruth

Poetry 112:419 S '68 480w

"[Parra] is the antipoet whose poetry is usually rooted in daily life and ordinary speech, although . . . he can also be doom-laden and prophetic. . . . [His poetry] grows in the forcing ground of alienation and non-communication. . . . Parra's mixture of colloquialism with ironically underlined pomposity [has been translated] . . . by a number of contemporary North American poets including Lawrence Ferlinghetti, Allen Ginsberg, Denise Levertov, William Carlos Williams, Thomas Merton, James Laughlin, W. S. Merwin and Miller Williams, who edits the selection. On the surface at least these are exactly the kind of poets who should translate Parra, for they have had to wage a similar struggle against an inherited but alien literary language. Yet their translations are disappointingly lifeless. . . . [Nevertheless these] selections are welcome additions to a pitifully inadequate number of Spanish American poems in translation."

TLS p1285 N 14 '68 250w

PARRY, ALBERT, ed. Peter Kapitza on life and science. See Kapitza, P.

PARSONS, TALCOTT, ed. American sociology: perspectives, problems, methods. 346p $6.95 Basic bks.

301 Sociology

68-19773

The concern in this collection of twenty-four essays by contemporary sociologists is "with the content of the discipline itself, the problems it deals with, the perspectives from which this is done, the methods employed, and some of the empirical and theoretical generalizations at which it has arrived. . . . The chapters of this book stem from material prepared for the Forum Series of the Voice of America." (Intro) Index.

Choice 5:1054 O '68 130w

"This reviewer found [the volume] to be somewhat disappointing, given the nature of the contributors. Those who know the literature in the fields surveyed will find little that is new, perceptive or provocative. For the professional sociologist, it is probably most useful as a brief review of some of the current thinking in those areas in which he is not a specialist. However, graduate students in sociology and nonsociologists interested in the social sciences should find it helpful as an introduction to the various fields of contemporary sociology." M. A. Forslund

Library J 93:765 F 15 '68 170w

"[This book] is a bit like the Sunday New York Times summary The Week in Review, soberly backward-looking, condensing all the news fit to print, and more or less out of date and out of touch before it is circulated. What makes it seem dated is its failure to reflect the rapid flow of new sentiments that has, for some time now, been churning through . . . the sociological community. . . . Parsons' volume is a self-congratulatory celebration, a hymn of thanksgiving for America the affluent, and a benediction for a modern society. . . . [Most of these essays] are swathed in few layers of gauzy jargon. One can readily see the assumptions on which they rest, the politics they imply, and the ideological stimulants that blow their minds." A. W. Gouldner

Science 162:247 O 11 '68 2600w

PASSOW, A. HARRY, ed. Education of the disadvantaged; a book of readings; ed. by A. Harry Passow, Miriam Goldberg [and] Abraham J. Tannenbaum. 503p $7.95 Holt

371.9 Socially handicapped—Education

67-14350

"These research-based articles focus on the culturally disadvantaged learner and his special educational difficulties. Written by . . . sociologists, educators, psychologists, and teachers, the selections cover such topics as teaching techniques, strategies, and devices that are proving effective in this area of special education." (Publisher's note) "No attempt is made to define the disadvantaged population. Instead the articles deal with the population living in economically depressed areas with special emphasis on racial and ethnic groups barred from the mainstream of American life—Negro, Puerto Rican, American Indian, or migratory farm worker." (Pref) Most of these essays were previously published in educational journals. Index.

"The present volume . . . [is] recommended for graduate students only. It is rich and stimulating in content with far less overlap among chapters than is common in the majority of books of readings. An effort has been made to select articles which contribute toward the solution of practical problems in teaching the disadvantaged. Among the most useful are Eisenberg's statement of the strengths of lower class children, Bernstein's analysis of the restricted language system of the disadvantaged, Reissman's description of styles of learning, and the several discussions of activities which have been found to elicit favorable learning responses."

Choice 5:844 S '68 140w

"The compilation is significant in that it includes the writings of some of the more distinguished authorities in this area. The editors also provide helpful summaries and essays. The cumulative effect of the articles is to acquaint the reader with the general direction of educational research and practice in this new sub-specialization within the profession. . . . In general, this is an impressive anthology." S. W. Itzkoff

Record 69:195 N '67 1800w

PASTERNAK, BORIS. Letters to Georgian friends; tr. from the Russian with an introd. and notes by David Magarshack. 190p pl $4.75 Harcourt

891.7

68-12593

These letters of the Nobel prize winner and author of Doctor Zhivago (BRD 1958) are selected from the period covering "1931 to 1958, years in which official hostility towards his writings forced [Pasternak] to turn out translations for a living. He became a prolific translator of Georgian poetry and befriended a number of Georgian writers, who, with their families, were the recipients of the letters included in this volume." (Library J) Index. Originally published under the title Pis'ma k gruzinskim druž'jam.

Choice 5:988 O '68 180w

"It would be easy to miss this book. Reading in translation is always a problem. . . . Then there is the inevitable confusion over a caste of characters who, in true Russian fashion, insist on a plethora of different, difficult names. But suddenly the shell of estrangement cracks, the 'completely different world' and the small circle of friends become vitally important. Midway through these letters this reviewer turned back, re-read them, studying the introduction and the biographical notes for more details. Pasternak had a talent for friendship. Even these few letters are sufficient to show his rare ability to detect and foster the essential uniqueness of each individual." Pamela Marsh

PASTERNAK, BORIS—Continued

Christian Science Monitor p8 My 1 '68 600w

"Through his letters Pasternak emerges as a warm and sympathetic person, a very good friend. The letters are brief, and deal with personal matters, occasionally with matters of translation. Though the period includes the years of the purges and of World War II, these events are mentioned only peripherally. David Magarshack, a veteran translator of Russian literature, has provided an informative introduction and biographical notes on persons mentioned in the letters. The book . . . is recommended for academic libraries and other libraries collecting in the field of Russian literature." S. A. Haffner
Library J 93:2477 Je 15 '68 150w

"Among the several devices which are used to fill out this exorbitantly priced slim volume, the most excusable is a chapter reprinted from the autobiography, I Remember [BRD 1959], about Georgia and what Georgia meant to the poet. . . . What a laugh if Protestant Northerners like myself are drawn to Pasternak because out of his Russian mouth our own currency—'moral growth', taciturn energy, 'work and gloom'—rings true as it no longer rings true when we say these things for ourselves! If so, the laugh is on us; for not having, if these are our convictions, the courage of them. And this indeed, this and nothing less, is the challenge of Pasternak's poems, as of these letters. . . . It is appropriate, after all, that Pasternak, posthumously as in life, in English as in Russian, should have to reach his reader through [the] barrage of enlightened philistinism [in Magarshack's introduction], with its reductive explanations of a poet's life by reference to the socio-political climate in which, or in defiance of which, the life was lived." Donald Davie
New Statesman 75:342 Mr 15 '68 900w

Reviewed by Helen Muchnic

N Y Rev of Books 11:10 N 7 '68 2550w

Reviewed by Alexander Coleman

N Y Times BK R p12 J1 7 '68 220w

New Yorker 44:109 Je 15 '68 190w

Reviewed by Maurice Friedberg

Sat 51:33 My 11 '68 400w

Va Q R 44:clxiv autumn '68 200w

PASTERNAK, BORIS. The poems of Doctor Zhivago; tr. from the Russian by Eugene M. Kayden; with drawings by Bill Greer. 61p $2.50 Hallmark editions

891.7

67-22486

Within the framework of his novel Doctor Zhivago (BRD 1958), the author included these poems attributed to his title character.

"[This is] a sensitive translation. . . . The drawings by Bill Greer achieve a fine approximation of the Russian atmosphere of the novel. One is tempted to view this publication more as a Christmas gift than as a useful addition to library collections." Joseph Bram
Library J 92:4510 D 15 '67 90w

"The Zhivago poems have attracted numerous translators, all of whom have so far managed to reproduce the literal meaning of the poems and failed to convey the particular homely magic of Pasternak's originals. This is also more or less the case with Eugene M. Kayden's small selection. . . . [The accompanying drawings] are rather sweet, the translations of the poems correct and uninspired and, in general, one could do worse by way of an inexpensive present for some kindly old lady." Simon Karlin-sky
Nation 206:118 Ja 22 '68 650w

PASTERNAK, BORIS. Sister my life; summer, 1917; tr. by Phillip C. Flayderman. (Washington sq. press bk) 170p $4.95 Simon & Schuster

891

67-17361

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Choice 5:492 Je '68 150w

Reviewed by Irving Howe

Harper 236:73 Ja '68 360w

Reviewed by Simon Karlinsky

Nation 206:118 Ja 22 '68 650w

PATAI, RAPHAEL. The Hebrew goddess. 349p il $8.95 Ktav

296.3 Gods. Mythology, Jewish 67-22753

The author seeks to demonstrate "that the Judaic religion, far from being pure monotheism, contained from earliest times strong polytheistic elements, chief of which was the cult of the mother goddess. . . . Patai confines his study of the female deity to Hebrew-Jewish history and examines in chronological sequence the various forms taken by the cult through the biblical Hellenistic, Talmudic, and Kabbalistic periods." (Sat R) Four of the chapters appeared originally in somewhat different form in various periodicals. Bibliography. Index.

"How could family-loving people like the Hebrews have failed to develop family-modeled deities? . . . They did not fail, says Patai, who sees goddesses . . . throughout history. Goddess: alias Lilith, Astarte, Asherah, Anath, Matronit, the Sabbath as Queen and Bride; she is all over the place. You won't even see the cherubim as innocents again. That the female figure is on the scene Patai amply demonstrates; what her presence does to jostle existing concepts of a nation that was tempted constantly by 'idols' is less clear." Christian Century 85:359 Mr 20 '68 110w

Reviewed by Martin Cohen

Library J 93:2504 Je 15 '68 130w

"A comprehensive introduction to a new and revolutionary field of investigation. For those who equate Judaism with strict monotheism, and define it as Mosaic Law and Prophetic Ethics, a book on the Hebrew pantheon will come as a shock; but it should be said that the continued existence of the goddess principle in all its phases in no way detracted from the overriding impact of monotheism on the Jewish faith. . . . A significant contribution to the field of religious history. [This book] is thoroughly documented from primary sources. It succeeds in achieving the difficult combination of authoritative scholarship and readability. The volume contains thirty-two pages of photographs." F. G. Bratton
Sat R 51:44 Ap 27 '68 950w

PATCHEN, KENNETH. The collected poems of Kenneth Patchen. 504p $12.50 New directions

811

67-23487

This volume "includes selections from [Patchen's previously published] books of poems published between 1936 and [1957]." (Library J)

Reviewed by Chad Walsh

Book World p20 N 3 '68 120w

Choice 5:958 O '68 70w

"[Patchen] possesses the mythmaking gift from first to last. Present at first in hints and clues in the early poems, present as a love of the bizarre image, the grotesque juxtaposition of incongruities, his talent for the fantastic and the surreal emerges more and more clearly as the poet unfolds, until by 1957, where his [book] ends, Patchen comes to rival such other inventors of private worlds as Tolkien, De La Mare, and Kafka. . . . [But] he is [also] an original of the imagination, a genuine teller of tall tales in the best homegrown tradition . . . [and he] can condense a lifetime of pathos . . . until it explodes in an epiphany of insight." Victor Howes
Christian Science Monitor p11 O 10 '68 750w

"This is an important book of poems . . . [that] presents some of the best poems of [Patchen's] literary career. The poems of the 1930's are powerful and painful comments on the state of the world—they must be read. In this selection the poems of the 1940's are generally less connected to social issues, though the theme is never totally absent. . . . Generally I found the earlier poems to have a directness and power often lacking in the later ones; but the whole volume is an interesting and important collection of modern poetry." Duane Schneider
Library J 93:1906 My 1 '68 160w

"A remarkable volume, although it is difficult to describe. One could say that it contains the animal honesty of Whitman, and the desperate exaltation of Hart Crane, and the simple delight in sense perception of D. H. Lawrence. One could also say that it contains the wrath of the Old Testament prophets, as well as the Christ-like simplicity and sweetness of St. Francis. But one would be missing the really important point—that the book is many voices, all of them Patchen's, all of them sounding together in a curious orchestration." William Packard

N Y Times Bk R p20 O 20 '68 750w

PATON, ALAN. Instrument of Thy peace. 124p $3.50 Seabury

242 Meditations 68-11587

The author of Cry the Beloved Country (BRD 1948) and Too Late the Phalarope (BRD 1953) offers this book of meditations "based on the prayer of St. Francis of Assisi: 'Lord, make me an instrument of thy peace.' Subjects range from the conquest of fear, belief in one's own worth as a person, and concern for human society to the gospel of love." (Library J)

Christian Century 85:86 Ja 17 '68 20w

"Each [meditation] ends with a beautifully worded prayer. . . . Highly recommended for its inspiration and timeliness." R. P. Tubby
Library J 92:4507 D 15 '67 140w

"[This book represents] an inner voice from the outer world of affairs. Like Hammar-skjold's 'Markings' [BRD 1964, 1965] (from which it quotes), it gives us a glimpse of the personal roots out of which great public performances spring. Cast in the form of a series of reflections, . . . it comes forth as the testament of a man who, in spite of doubts and deficiencies, has never ceased to do. . . . Paton bypasses no difficulties. The endlessly problematical relationship of the personal and social is honestly faced, and the puzzling parts of the faith are simply admitted as puzzling. But he does succeed in making the supremacy of love supremely evident. His book is, in part, a tissue of quotations, most of them wonderfully apt." R. F. Capon
N Y Times Bk R p12 Mr 24 '68 400w

PATON, ALAN. The long view; ed. by Edward Callan. 295p $6.95 Praeger

968 Africa, South—Politics and government, Africa, South—Race relations 67-24675

This is a selection of essays which were first published in "Contact," a South African journal, during the period 1958 to 1966. They are concerned mainly with politics (particularly the politics of liberalism) and race relations in South Africa today. Bibliography. Index.

"The most remarkable quality in Mr. Paton's writing is the consistent tone of reason. Even when the reason is indignant or impassioned, it moves like a steady ship in a rough sea. In spite of all the evidence one refuses to believe it will not get safely to shore. . . . [Paton] does not allow a single new law of repression to go unchallenged. . . . In the end he has not surrendered his conviction that South Africa will some day waken. . . . These essays are very moving. They are written out of specific moments of crisis or dismay. Some are hastily written, some are less affecting than others, but they are all concerned with the deepest human values, and this gives them an indelible freshness." Henrietta Buckmaster

Christian Science Monitor p11 My 29 '68 600w

"Here is the authentic voice of South African liberalism. It is an articulate voice that deserves to be heard wherever South Africa and its official race policies are condemned or discussed, for it shows that, in the most repressive political atmosphere the flame of true liberalism is unquenchable. . . . A deal of what Paton has to say may strike western ears as obvious, even trite. But in South Africa, where these little essays were written and the few speeches made, there is a desperate need for emphasizing even what is obvious elsewhere. . . . This collection of views constitutes a public record of unflinching fortitude in the face of great odds—the eloquent voice of a man who refuses to be cowed."

Economist 228:50 S 21 '68 600w

Reviewed by M. D. Herrick
Library J 93:1004 Mr 1 '68 300w

Reviewed by Nadine Gordimer
Nation 206:22 Jl ■ '68 2100w

Reviewed by Wilfred Cartey
New Repub 158:25 Je 29 '68 750w

Reviewed by C. C. O'Brien
N Y Rev of Books 11:18 N 7 '68 220w

Reviewed by Joseph Lelyveld
N Y Times Bk R p3 My 12 '68 460w
New Yorker 44:175 My 11 '68 100w

"Best known for his novel 'Cry, the Beloved Country' [BRD 1948], Alan Paton, 65, hardly has any tears left to shed. As his hopes of an interracial society in South Africa have disintegrated, his distress has turned into agony. . . . [This book] is a collection of direct and emotional articles resulting from Paton's role as president of South Africa's now largely defunct Liberal Party. Paton's prose occasionally reads like a morality play in which the heroes are placed under house arrest without provocation or imprisoned, exiled and even executed. . . . Although reading about South Africa has become a painful, even a sickening experience, reading Paton is not. Somehow, he manages to turn vicious racists like Prime Ministers Balthazar J. Vorster and Hendrik Verwoerd into human beings. . . . [and] to retain his humanity, his belief in the dignity of the individual." F. Y. Blumenfeld Newsweek 71:102D My 13 '68 700w

Reviewed by Charles Miller
Sat R 51:24 Jl 27 '68 600w

PATRIDES, C. A. Milton and the Christian tradition. 302p $6.75 Oxford

828 Milton, John. Religion in literature [66-78857]

A survey of Milton's "principal doctrines: his view of creation as not ex nihilo but ex Deo; his conceptions of the hierarchical chain of being and universal order, of right reason and the law of nature; his interpretation of the Fall and the Atonement. . . . of salvation by faith ('not void of works'), the operations of grace, and the divine gift of free will." (J Religion) Indexes.

"Since this work deals in so little space with so much (all of Milton, several hundred Renaissance writers, and many earlier and modern writers), it is modestly, and accurately, described by Patrides as a 'mere prolegomena to an utterly fascinating age.' When Miltonists are increasingly recognizing Milton's broad, vital relevance to modern man, it is disturbing to read that his epic is really quite narrow: 'Paradise Lost is . . . the epic of Protestantism'. . . . [The author's] pervasive tone of amused contempt for 17th-century Protestant theology implies, inadvertently surely, that Paradise Lost is, indeed, as Raleigh said, 'a monument to dead ideas.' Thorough indices of names and things and full notes make the book valuable as a reference work or handbook, but it is unfortunate, even dangerous, in its critical point of view."

Choice 4:834 O '67 180w

"[This study] combines the wide-ranging and precise theological erudition and discrimination [the author] had already displayed in numerous articles. Milton's several 'heresies' become less conspicuous in this survey. . . . Throughout this book, Patrides' very full documentation, in both text and notes, if at moments it threatens to obscure Milton, serves everywhere to place him in the central or the sometimes divergent currents of patristic and Reformation theology. In opposition to those who would make Milton too broadly Christian, he emphasizes the Protestantism of both the treatise [De Doctrina Christiana] and the poem [Paradise Lost]; but he does not take the one as a sufficient gloss on the other. This authoritative book is manifestly of great value for both students of Milton and students of Reformation theology and the traditions it inherited and modified." Douglas Bush
J Religion 48:109 Ja '68 450w

"An impressive summing-up, wide-ranging, intelligently rather than garrulously erudite. [The footnotes] are virtually miniature bibliographies. [This] is a book to which Miltonists will return often and profitably. . . . Milton is not always a man of the Protestant left. It is good to see John Donne cited by Mr. Patrides on seventy-two occasions, usually to demonstrate affinities between the defiant dissenter and the Dean of St. Paul's. Augustine is cited sixty-one times to keep us aware of the main line of influence. Even so, Mr. Patrides perhaps does not quite suggest how widely Milton quarried in building his true church."

PATRIDES, C. A.—Continued

In particular, he might have said slightly more on Milton's view of the relationship between man's will and God's grace. . . . Mr. Patrides throughout his book remains reassuringly aware that Paradise Lost is a poem, governed in the last resort by a poem's logic."

TLS p353 Ap 27 '67 800w

PATTEN, BRIAN. Little Johnny's confession. 62p $3.95; pa $1.50 Hill & Wang

821

68-14786

A collection of poetry by a young Liverpool poet "whose work appeared in the recent anthology, The Liverpool Scene." (Library J)

"[Patten] celebrates youth, peace, alienation, self-awareness and love with a natural if somewhat undisciplined lyricism. There is no question that he speaks the language of the swinging generation. He does not avoid the hangups of his peers. . . . His 'Maud, 1965' is a remarkable portrait of the bewilderment of an urbanized generation. Mr. Patten isn't a pop Tennyson, but he might be an English male Edith Piaf. His book is recommended for college, university, and public libraries which have adequate poetry collections." Jerome Cushman

Library J 93:1638 Ap 15 '68 100w

"There is hardly anything that you would call technique [in this collection], but [the poet] does succeed quite often in making the right sort of equations out of feelings, observations and words. The reader gets a sense of something very genuine struggling with the alien and immediate demands of his literary milieu."

TLS p614 Jl 13 '67 140w

PATTEN, THOMAS H. The foreman: forgotten man of management [by] Thomas H. Patten, Jr. 191p $9 Am. management assn.

658 Foremen

68-18495

This study "discusses the contemporary status of the foreman, . . . the demands and responsibilities of the foreman in large manufacturing companies . . . [and] the selection, training, and promotion of foremen." (Choice)

Choice 5:1010 O '68 190w

"The emphasis of the study is on the status of the foreman in various groups, and on the place of the present-day foreman in three areas. These involve his relationships with various plant service departments . . . with the cost control and quality control functions; finally with the labor relations specialists. A lengthy discussion and analysis of the techniques, attitudes and skills which the line supervisor (foreman) must develop is included as an important chapter. Mr. Patten's final chapter deals with ways in which the foreman's position can be revitalized. This is a very comprehensive, well-documented study, directed to the serious advanced student of this subject and the person already working in a management position." M. E. Nehlig

Library J 93:3130 S 15 '68 200w

PATTERSON, JAMES T. Congressional conservatism and the New Deal: the growth of the conservative coalition in Congress, 1933-1939 [pub] for the Organization of Am. historians. 369p il $8.50 Univ. of Ky. press

353.03 U.S.—Politics and government—1933-1945. Progressivism (U.S. politics). Conservatism 67-17845

Concerned with congressional resistance to President Franklin Roosevelt's administration, the author identifies the President's critics in Congress, follows them "through the legislative process, session to session and law to law, and . . . adds to their number until finally he reaches the 'zenith of coalition' in 1939. . . . [He focuses on] Carter Glass, Harry F. Byrd, Josiah W. Bailey, Walter F. George, Millard E. Tydings, Burton K. Wheeler, and other critics of the New Deal." (J Am Hist)

Reviewed by David Shannon

Am Hist R 73:938 F '68 400w

"[This] book is a bonanza of footnoted information, organized with intelligence, and written with [deft precision]. . . . In Patterson's book . . . all [critics of Roosevelt] come out 'conservatives.' Yet by definition—either Edmund Burke's or Webster's Third—some were, some were not. Their one common denominator was opposition to various New Deal measures.

Whatever their name, they were a numerical minority in Congress and, as portrayed in this book, a pretty shrill, petulant, and defensive lot. . . . [However,] instead of displaying the growth of a conservative coalition, this study reveals that particular men (of varied hue and pedigree), at specific times (but not at others), on specific issues (depending on circumstances) voted and argued against the New Deal. That men in Congress acted in this way and that their numbers increased through the 1930s is conventional knowledge. Patterson has supplied an exhaustive footnote for that convention." Burl Noggle

J Am Hist 54:707 D '67 500w

"Patterson has laid open the attitudes of individual conservatives and has shown what happens when a strong executive meets a strong, experienced Congress. The text is easy to read, scholarly, and thorough. Larger public libraries and all college libraries will find the book useful." Marco Thorne

Library J 92:1500 Ap 1 '67 130w

PATTERSON, L. G. God and history in early Christian thought. 181p $5.50 Seabury

230 History (Theology). Theology 67-10847

This "is a companion volume to God and World in Early Christian Thought by R. A. Norris, Jr. [BRD 1966], and is part of [the Studies in Patristic Thought] series devoted to examining the views of Patristic writers on themes of contemporary theological interest. 'It does not claim to say anything new but seeks rather to review much recent work from one particular perspective.'" (Library J)

"Patterson writes as an erudite patristic scholar speaking to equally knowledgeable professionals in the field. The book requires, therefore, a very extensive knowledge of both the history and the theological development of the first six centuries of the Christian era. [Its] limited objective of tracing the relationship of historia to the centuries has been carried out in a scholarly fashion. However, there are many books of a more general nature that will be of more value to the undergraduate student."

Choice 5:360 My '68 100w

"What of the only real historians of the church—Eusebius, Socrates (the fifth century one), Sozomen and the rest? Patterson's neglect of them reveals the chief flaw in his argument. He defines historia as his Romans would: the morally instructive—we now say 'existential'—story of the responses of Rome and its empire to the challenges of the times. This definition is inadequate, for it ignores the literary form of historia, far better preserved by Eusebius and his successors than by any Westerner. It also disregards important differences in subject matter. . . . Nonetheless, in spite of its ambiguities and occasional superficialities, Patterson's argument is serious. It will surely enlighten those who are puzzled because Christians nowadays speak much of history (that is, Geschichte) without knowing very much of what has happened (that is, mere Historie)." D. B. Evans

Christian Century 84:1630 D 20 '67 400w

"A useful work of sound workmanship, this book is recommended for medium and larger public libraries and for academic libraries." S. W. Wojtowicz

Library J 92:585 F 1 '67 120w

TLS p708 Jl 4 '68 480w

PAUCK, WILHELM. Harnack and Troeltsch: two historical theologians. 131p $4.50 Oxford

230.092 Troeltsch, Ernst. Harnack, Adolf von 68-17617

The author "studied under both Harnack and Troeltsch at the University of Berlin in the 1920's. . . . In this book he clarifies their ideas and their personal relationship to one another, and analyzes their particular contributions to the historiography and sociology of religion. Biographical sketches of the two men, set against the background of their time, descriptions of their careers and of their views on life, are [included.]" (Publisher's note) Index.

"The first chapter, on Harnack, is a reprint (with a few added footnotes) of Pauck's essay in A Handbook of Christian Theologians ledited by D. Peerman, BRD 1965]. The second chapter, on Troeltsch, is new but only slightly longer. . . . Except for a pair of brief but intriguing appendices presenting Harnack and Troeltsch's estimates of one another (a Troeltsch contribution to the Harnack Festschrift of 1921, and Harnack's oration at the funeral of Troeltsch just two years later), the two chapters constitute the book. One hopes that it will soon be brought out in paperback at a more reasonable price. Within these severe limits on space, the essays can be only suggestive, not definitive. As such, however, they are masterful."

Christian Century 85:873 J1 ■ '68 700w

"It is almost impossible to understand contemporary theology without a knowledge of the historical role of von Harnack and Troeltsch. Professor Pauck has here provided two short, but illuminating, essays on the meaning and impact of their work. His book is a good primer for those who want an introduction to these thinkers, but well worth reading by those already familiar with them."

Commonweal 88:415 Je 21 '68 100w

PAUL VI, Pope. The pope speaks; dialogues of Paul VI with Jean Guitton; English tr. by Anne and Christopher Fremantle. 306p $5.95 Meredith

B or 92

68-15204

Guitton, a French Catholic layman and friend of Pope Paul VI for many years, attempts "to set forth, by the device of a dialogue with the Pope, eternal Christian principles in their application to this . . . anguished and vital moment in human history. . . . Much of the dialogue is the outcome of a slow osmosis, sixteen years long, between the speaking and the writing. I have made use of some almost unknown texts. . . . These sayings are not all historical. But, insofar as I am concerned, I have made every possible effort to be able to say: These sayings are all authentic." (Pref) Index. Originally published in 1967 entitled Dialogues avec Paul VI.

"Unless Pope Paul VI keeps a diary which would be available to historians years hence, these dialogues will probably be the closest approach to an autobiography ever written by a reigning pontiff. And yet this book is far from being an autobiography. . . . Unique by virtue of its style, the conversations . . . are magnificently eloquent. Guitton, a member of the French Academy, would find it difficult to write any other way. Because of this eloquence and because of the profound discussions, the dialogues may have limited appeal. Nevertheless, Pope Paul and Jean Guitton have given us spiritual nourishment and a stimulant for the intellect." Bernard Hrico

Best Sell 28:37 Ap 15 '68 280w

Choice 5:638 J1 '68 120w

"Pope Paul comes through as a pastoral but not a profound figure in these reconstructed dialogues. The pontiff's statements will probably confirm previous opinions concerning his stature more than they will convert people to new points of view."

Christian Century 85:359 Mr 20 '68 40w

"In reverence for the Pope's position as well as his person, Mr. Guitton explores the quality of Paul's mind and spirit, his 'inwardness,' in discussions about writers—Shakespeare, Pascal, Bernanos; about theologians—Augustine, Newman; about his predecessors—Pius XII, John XXIII; about the Church, the Council, the 'burning questions' of love and war. He reveals Pope Paul as an anguished man of our time with a profound understanding of the complexity of life. He approaches his subject with an exalted, almost mystical, admiration and writes with deep emotion and sincerity. Because he knows Paul well, and because Paul has approved this biography [it] is an important book." G. M. Casey

Library J 93:984 Mr 1 '68 130w

PAULSON, RONALD. Satire and the novel in eighteenth-century England. 318p $8.50 Yale univ. press

823 English fiction—History and criticism
67-24509

"A study of the relationship between the phenomenon of satire and the development of the novel in England from Defoe to Jane Austen . . . [by a] professor of English at Johns Hopkins University. . . . While he concentrates mainly on the work of Henry Fielding and Tobias Smollett, [the author includes] material on the Continental tradition of satire, and on minor novelists of the Augustan age." (Library J)

Choice 5:344 My '68 240w

"This is a comprehensive, balanced, and authoritative study. . . . [The author is] an exemplary critic, scrupulously fair and judicious in detecting satiric influence, and he never attempts to ascribe to such influence a larger allowance than the facts will warrant. . . . Paulson's book will surely be required reading for all students of the novel." J. A. Rycenga

Library J 92:3424 O 1 '67 130w

Va Q R 44:1x spring '68 120w

"The author strikes much fresh ground, and makes it shine with illuminating analyses of the major novels of the period. . . . While [he] evinces a passionate engagement with his subject at all times and offers a remarkable fullness in his readings of the eighteenth-century novel, the best sections of the book occur in the last three chapters. [The] dissection of the progressive movement of Smollett's novels in relation to the theme of the sick satirist caught in the sentimental focus of the novelist is an exciting exploration of a complicated subject. . . . The conclusions of the middle chapters of the book on the results of the commingling of satiric and novelistic tendencies in Fielding's works seem much more arbitrary and arguable . . . and the general emphasis in these chapters on the negative aspects of Augustan satire is not altogether satisfactory. Still, this book is a stimulating and far-ranging investigation."

Yale R 57:VIII D '67 850w

PAULSON, ROSS E. Radicalism & reform; the Vrooman family and American social thought, 1837-1937; pub. for the Organization of American historians. 299p $8.50 Univ. of Ky. press

920 Vrooman family. U.S.—Social conditions
68-12970

"This study examines the careers of the . . . Vrooman family, whose activities cover a hundred-year period of American life beginning in the 1830's, during which Hiram Perkins Vrooman and his five sons . . . were involved—some as radicals and some as reformers—in a wide spectrum of social movements: Populism, Socialism, Christian Socialism, Bellamy Nationalism, Bryan Democracy, Ruskin Hall ventures in England and in the United States, cooperative colonies in New England, and academic freedom controversies in Kansas." (Publisher's note) Works by the Vrooman family. Annotated bibliography. Index.

"Paulson strives overmuch to fit the Vroomans with fashionable academic concepts such as 'the entrepreneurial dream' and 'status' reform, but overall his story is well researched and a contribution to reform annals. For the graduate student in the field."

Choice 5:1216 N '68 360w

"If Paulson had permitted these interesting people to emerge fully from the evidence and had spent less time trying to force them onto a Procrustean bed of classification, he would have provided a greater service. His efforts to clarify ambiguous terms are not entirely successful. . . . [But he] deserves thanks for calling attention to this remarkable family. Their importance . . . is not so much that 'they were representative of the reformer and the radical as intellectual types' but that they were fascinating people." J. P. Felt

J Am Hist 55:645 D '68 550w

"Though the Vrooman family was never in the top ranks of reform and radicalism in this country they are important as individuals and as a family because 'the whole history of the reform movement from the Civil War to the New Deal was enacted in miniature within the family experience. . . . [This is a valuable study] for scholars in the fields of intellectual, political, social, and economic history. . . . a sound purchase for academic and for larger public libraries, and a necessary purchase for holdings in Kansas history.'" Jack Van Der-hoof

Library J 93:1897 My 1 '68 240w

PAULU, BURTON. Radio and television broadcasting on the European continent. 290p $7.50 Univ. of Minn. press

384.54 Radio broadcasting 67-27097

A survey based on "firsthand study of the development and current status of radio and television broadcasting in continental Europe. [The author] discusses the technical, organizational, financial, and programming aspects of European broadcasting. . . . The material is organized, not on a country-by-country basis, but as it relates to broad basic issues, and it is presented in a framework of such interrelated factors as geography, history, politics, international relations, religious traditions, language, national economic standards, and cultural and social life. The broadcasting systems studied include those of the Soviet Union and other Communist countries, France, West Germany, Belgium, the Netherlands, Italy, Sweden, and Switzerland." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

PAULU, BURTON—Continued

Reviewed by G. A. Coddington
Ann Am Acad 378:165 J1 '68 650w

"The author compares and contrasts the different European systems with each other as well as with the British system. The current and increasing use of live and recorded international broadcasting makes this very readable book an important work for all interested in international affairs and culture, as well as for those needing a single source of information in European radio and TV. An excellent complement to Paulu's earlier works British Broadcasting [BRD 1957], and British Broadcasting in Transition." Choice 5:214 Ap '68 200w

"Here is a well-written, highly recommended survey which comprehensively fulfills precisely what its title promises. Paulu, director of radio and television at the University of Minnesota, . . . summarizes here broadcasting on both sides of the Iron Curtain. Unaccustomed as we may be to thinking that radio and television were ever intended to sound and look other than they do in the United States, Europe offers, according to Mr. Paulu, 'the concepts that broadcasting is a public service rather than an industry, and that program policies should be determined by social values rather than investment returns.' Recommended for specialists and informed readers." R. A. Hamm
Library J 92:4416 D 1 '67 100w

PAVENSTEDT, ELEANOR, ed. The drifters: children of disorganized lower-class families, by Charles A. Malone [and others] foreword by Bernard Bandler. 345p $10.50 Little

362.7 Problem children. Boston—Poor. Socially handicapped 67-27513

This book describes "research with thirteen severely disorganized families from a skid-row neighborhood in Boston [which] was . . . designed to include those who were the most disadvantaged of all and to provide intensive . . . therapeutic involvement with the families and their nursery school age children." (Am J Soc) Bibliographies.

"Because of the extreme pathology of the parents, the impact of the intervention program was slight and the long-run prospects for the children seemed rather poor. . . . In spite of the pessimistic forecast attached to the particular subjects of this research, the authors' many insights into the psychological and social handicaps of the disadvantaged serve to increase our understanding of moderately disturbed families as well as those characterized by massive disorganization." N. O. Funk
Am J Soc 74:110 J1 '68 400w

"It is unlikely that this very important book will get nearly the attention it deserves. . . . [This project] took place in Boston and began in 1955. . . . The 'drifters' described are the parents and children (mostly white, it must be emphasized) who live in a place called 'North Point' in the book—in actuality it is Boston's mildly notorious South End. . . . 'Bad off' they are; and The Drifters tells us in its first section exactly how bad off—socially and psychologically—'bad off' can be. The 'setting' is described, the neighborhood and the institutions that serve it and all too often fail it miserably. The 'social science literature,' in all its relative poverty, is also reviewed—by a group of workers and authors whose modesty comes across again and again. . . . What is so haunting, and finally outrageous, about this book is the radical seriousness of the activity its pages describe, and the remarkable discoveries its authors insist upon confronting us with." Robert Coles
Nation 206:348 Mr 11 '68 1700w

PAVESE, CESARE. The selected works of Cesare Pavese; tr. from the Italian and with an introd. by R. W. Flint. 390p $6.95 Farrar, Straus

68-14914

Three of the Italian author's neo-realistic novels and one novella are gathered here: The House on the Hill (La casa in collina); Among Women Only (Tra donne sole), The Devil in the Hills (Il diavolo sulle colline), and The Beach (La spiaggia). Bib-bibliography.

Reviewed by W. B. Hill
America 118:622 My 4 '68 50w

Reviewed by F. M. Rotondare
Best Sell 28:103 Je 1 '68 550w

Reviewed by Donald Heiney
Christian Science Monitor p9 Mr 28 '68 800w

Reviewed by John Simon
Commonweal 89:360 D '68 110w

"The selections contained here . . . are not abridged but new (and excellent) translations. . . . Since only one of these [novels] is still available in hard-cover edition, this volume is a welcome bargain. Mr. Flint's translations . . . and his critical introduction, which will stand as one of the important Pavese sources in English, will recommend this book even to those who already own earlier editions of all four novels. No library, however, should feel that by acquiring The Selected Works it has 'taken care of' Pavese. His powerful diaries, translated as The Burning Brand [BRD 1962], and The Moon and the Bonfires [BRD 1953], . . . belong in every literature collection together with this present volume, which is recommended for public, school, and college libraries." Arthur Curley
Library J 93:1021 Mr 1 '68 180w

Reviewed by Richard Ellmann
N Y Rev of Books 11:25 N 21 '68 1400w

"Of Mr. Flint's choice, three . . . are first-rate works within their somewhat limited scope. The story, The Beach, dating from some years earlier, may deserve the disfavor with which Pavese came to view it. Yet Pavese's main themes and motifs are present even in this lighthearted, immature work, thus making it a useful gauge of the author's growth as an artist. . . . The central theme in all these works is the . . . revisiting of an early environment in and against which the future adult took shape. Characters become aware of choices made in childhood and not then understood, and through this the author illuminates human existence. The principal conflict through which this is dramatized is the juxtaposition and rivalry of countryside and cityscape, of Hill, Seaside and Town. . . . These dichotomies take on sociopolitical significance." John Simon
N Y Times Bk R p5 Mr 24 '68 2050w

Reviewed by S. E. Hyman
New Yorker 44:114 Ag 24 '68 2600w

Reviewed by R. J. Clements
Sat R 51:41 Mr 23 '68 850w

"Autobiography is everywhere apparent. The Beach is an incident involving the tug of war between the sexes in a pointless marriage. Two seemingly compatible people are brought down by a typical Pavese monster: ennui. Not much here, but short and clean; no wasted words. . . . The timid schoolteacher in The House on the Hill is again Pavese. The teacher loves the peasant partisans of the story but lacks their guts. . . . Among Women Only is a wonderful tour de force about the self-made woman. The heroine is a Turin gamine with enough brains and beauty to make good in the silky Roman world of couture. . . . She is the novel's narrator, but the disguise is transparent: it is still Pavese speaking. His observations about women are cutting." Time 91:104 Mr 29 '68 650w

PAYNE, DONALD GORDON. See Cameron, I.

PAYNE, DONALD GORDON. See Gordon, D.

PAYNE, PIERRE STEPHEN ROBERT.
See Payne, R.

PAYNE, ROBERT. Marx. 582p pl $10 Simon & Schuster

B or 92 Marx, Karl 68-11014
This book portrays the youth who broke "away from his German bourgeois family with its rabbinical tradition to become a radical intellectual; his marriage to the . . . aristocratic Jenny von Westphalen; his repeated and frustrated attempts to become a practical revolutionary; his exile in Paris and London; his . . . fight to impose his own ideas on his fellow Socialists and later on the infant Communist Party." (Publisher's note) Genealogical trees. Bibliography. Chronological table. Index.

Reviewed by Maurice Adelman
America 119:571 N 30 '68 90w

Reviewed by Ambrose Agius
Best Sell 28:107 Je 1 '68 700w

Economist 228:47 Ag 31 '68 490w

"[This] is an interesting biography in that Mr. Payne, writing from a non-Marxist (but not necessarily an anti-Marx) frame of reference, pictures the man as he lived. . . . It is a picture in which Marx's family, friends, environment, and the intellectual climate of the period in which he lived all played a part in the shaping of a man whose ideas influence so many people. We see him in all his failures and in his successes. . . . The book will appeal to those who would like a biography which is not ideologically structured, nor stuffily written, but easy and interesting to read, and to interested laymen of any age group—with the exception of the ultra scholarly and the committed." W. L. Morin

Library J 93:1621 Ap 15 '68 200w

Reviewed by E. Merritt
Nat R 20:619 Je 18 '68 100w

Reviewed by Sidney Hook
N Y Times Bk R p3 J1 21 '68 1250w

"If Payne had not been quite so intent on demolishing Marx, he might have produced a useful 'popular' biography at a time when a calm, reasonable reassessment of Marx and his system of thought is badly needed. . . . But Payne is too demon-ridden for that. So instead of analysis, or sober—even devastating—criticism, we get parody. At a time when Marx's early ideas on 'alienation' exert a deep pressure on contemporary thought, Payne disposes of them crudely with a brief acknowledgment in passing of their importance to Marx's later thought. . . . Even 'Das Kapital' itself is not dealt with in sufficient depth. . . . Great men are not always—or often—good men. Whether Marx was a good man is certainly open to debate. That he was a great one is not. The ideas are what matter. After Payne, the need remains to see Marx whole and clear." S. M.
Newsweek 71:104 My 13 '68 700w

"Marx [is pictured] as an isolated scholar and would-be revolutionary concerned with alienation and injustice, [who] attempts to convert those around him and change the course of world history. It is a Marx who is one among many jealous and competing revolutionaries, a man whose theories and judgments often seem incongruous to his personal and public life. . . . Payne's work provides us with material that has previously been considered irrelevant to understanding Marx—such as his early yearning to write poetry and plays, his drinking, his financial irresponsibility, the adultery that resulted in his illegitimate child. . . . Mr. Payne has gathered much information, for which we should be grateful. He has, however, done himself an injustice by not making clear to the reader his criteria for selecting his material and the scheme according to which he has tried to organize it." Steven Warnecke
Sat R 51:33 Ap 27 '68 900w

"[Mr. Payne] has drawn widely and sometimes indiscriminately on the available sources. . . . [The result is a book] badly disfigured by the author's unrelenting hostility to his subject. Mr. Payne makes no effort whatever to conceal his dislike of Karl Marx. He employs a vigorous muck-rake to gather together in one repulsive heap all the evidence. . . . Indeed, Mr. Payne so far overreaches himself in denigration that one begins to wonder what on earth inspired the devotion to this paranoiac horror has received. . . . It is therefore unfortunate that this lengthy diatribe should be so readable. . . . Many people will read [it] in preference to the more serious and hence more heavy-going works on Marx and Marxism that are available. . . . But of the reasons for Marx's greatness and for the continuing influence of his ideas, such readers will learn nothing at all."

TLS p868 Ag 15 '68 650w

PEABODY, MARIAN LAWRENCE. To be young was very heaven. 366p pl $6 Houghton
B or 92 Boston—Social life and customs 67-11756

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by Edward Weeks
Atlantic 220:134 D '67 270w
Choice 5:679 J1 '68 170w
Christian Science Monitor p7 J1 13 '67 270w

PEAKE, MERVYN. The Gormenghast trilogy.
3v 543:568;284p il v 1, 2 ea $7.50; v3 $5 Weybright & Talley

67-26053

The American edition of a trilogy consisting of volumes separately published in England from 1946 to 1959. The first volume, Titus Groan "concerns the birth, infancy, education, and early adventures of Titus Groan, crown prince in the House of Groan. Gormenghast is the great castle from which the Lords of Groan rule their domain. Principal evil force is the usurper Steerpike who tries to subvert the royal family. Everything in Gormenghast is regulated by age-old ritual which even dictates to Titus, the seventy-seventh Earl of Groan. . . . [Volume two, entitled Gormenghast, concludes with] Titus at manhood setting out to explore the world outside Gormenghast. At the end [of volume three, entitled Titus Alone,] he finds that his home is within him. For this he needs no ritual, no Gormenghast." (Best Sell)

"The three books are a book-lover's delight. Printed on glossy paper, illustrated by the author, beautifully bound, and with jackets adorned by paintings done by the author, the volumes, though expensive, are a delight to the eye. However, there is less here than meets the eye. . . . The Gothic features of this work are by Charles Addams out of Salvador Dalí. The entire pseudo-medieval setting has all the surrealism of a nightmare; the characters are as wild a collection of grotesques as one could find. The strange anachronisms which dot the tale contribute to a strange timelessness which makes it quite impossible to pin down just when these weird events occur. . . . Is the work, then, an exercise in timelessness and placelessness? So it would seem. But to what purpose? That, at least to this reviewer, is most unclear. None of the book is anchored in reality; neither the characters, the actions, the landscape, nor the time. . . . Peake, unfortunately, is no Tolkien, nor a T. H. White, nor even a Malory." S. J. Laut
Best Sell 27:305 N 1 '67 750w

"No two works could be more dissimilar than the bright green and gold Lord of the Rings [by J. R. R. Tolkien, BRD 1954] and these grim, Gothic fables of Titus Groan. With Tolkien, imagination fused with scholarship to create a neat, orderly, eminently manageable fantasy. With Peake, imagination fed on something darker; the result was artistic chaos, deliberate disorder for effect. . . . Borrow Titus Groan from a friend or a library before deciding whether to invest time and money in Volumes II and III. . . . [Purchasers] will find very few (and these postage-stamp size) of the original Peake drawings. . . . The English editions, scheduled for February, will contain many more drawings in full-page format. These, far more than Peake's verbal displays, capture the inhabitants of Gormenghast in all their grisly glory." Dick Adler
Book World p4 Ja 7 '68 950w

Reviewed by A. G. Simms
Library J 92:4434 D 1 '67 110w

Reviewed by Paul Green
New Statesman 75:114 Ja 26 '68 350w
(Review of v 1)

"[The theme of the trilogy is] the contemporary and indissoluble tensions between 'tradition and the individual talent,' between apparent illusion and inner reality. . . . [Its] motifs are deliberately enveloped in a thickly medieval atmosphere. . . . [Various] plots are interwoven in a pattern as complex as a baroque fugue, and, like counterpoint, they reflect upon and illuminate one another. . . . The result is a novelistic structure initially confusing but ultimately revealing, an ironic inversion of the romantic quest that becomes apparent only in the final volume. . . . Peake's affinities are not Lewis Carroll, E. R. Eddison, or J. R. R. Tolkien, but rather Joyce, William Golding, Max Frisch, and Samuel Beckett. [This trilogy] is a nouveau roman using fantasy as one of many devices, an experimental confluence of several novelistic conventions. . . . I recommend it to both the scholar and the general reader." B. A. Beatie

PEAKE, MERVYN—Continued

Sat R 50:31 D 16 '67 750w

PEARCE, PHILIPPA, jt. auth. The children of the house. See Fairfax-Lucy, B.

PEARCY, G. ETZEL. A handbook of new nations [by] G. Etzel Percy & Mervyn A. Stoneman; cartography by Frank J. Ford & Clare Ford. 327p $8.95 Crowell

910 States, New 68-11070

"From November 1943 to November 1966, 61 new nations have joined the world roster beginning with Lebanon and ending with Barbados. This work contains a brief . . . chapter on each of the countries arranged in chronological order by date of independence . . . [and giving the] history of each country, its physical features, population characteristics, languages spoken, religions, educational institutions, degree of literacy, basis of the economy, outstanding personalities, form of government, and health conditions." (Library J) Index.

"The approach is more descriptive and individualized than uniform in character; therefore it is possible that some basic information on a country may be missing. Compared with the well-known Statesman's Year-book, or Asia; a Handbook, by Guy Wint, [BRD 1966, 1967] this volume is more 'chatty' than solid. The claim of providing background for 'the serious scholar wishing to be well informed about international events of the day' is somewhat exaggerated. Still, the book may be useful for undergraduates."

Choice 5:756 S '68 110w

"Written in a straightforward and uncluttered style, ideal for the purpose. . . . The material is accurate and up to date as of mid-1967. When precise information is unobtainable the authors say so. The appendix gives quick reference tables on area, population, and an index of proper names with pronunciations. Highly recommended for reference collections." Harold Lancour

Library J 93:1125 Mr 15 '68 170w

Reviewed by Lon Rand

Library J 93:2742 J1 '68 120w [YA]

Reviewed by E. B. Meyer

Nat R 20:563 Je 4 '68 200w

The PEARL-POET: his complete works; tr. by Margaret Williams. 348p $10 Random house

821 67-12739

Contents include introductory sections on the book containing the works of the poet and its maker, and on the background of the poems. Then follows the translated texts of the poems Patience, Cleanness, Sir Gawain and the Green Knight, Pearl, and Saint Erkenwald. Appendices include discussions of the manuscript, its language and prosody. Bibliography.

"[A] professor of English at Manhattanville College, has translated all of these works . . . with skill and style, as well as accuracy and an ear for medieval rhythms. Professor Borroff of Yale has [recently] translated only Sir Gawain [BRD 1967]. Both translations are excellent, but neither is the equal of John Gardner's Complete Works of the Gawain-Poet [BRD 1966]. Professor Williams's volume contains more extensive introductory material and apparatus, but Professor Borroff's clarity and brevity, especially concerning metrics, make up for the author's otherwise concise treatment. Both books are necessary for college libraries, and general public libraries should include Professor Borroff's book." Donald Fry

Library J 92:3428 O 1 '67 100w

"Accuracy and a keen sense of rhythm characterize [Margaret Williams'] work, coupled with a readability which should prove attractive to the general reader unequipped with medieval languages. The scholarly apparatus provides an adequate introduction to the poet and his civilization."

Va Q R 44:xx winter '68 140w

PEARLMAN, MAURICE. See Pearlman, Moshe

PEARLMAN, MOSHE, jt. auth. Jerusalem. See Kollek, T.

PEARLMAN, MOSHE. The zealots of Masada; story of a dig. 216p il lib bdg $5.09 Scribner
913.33 Masada, Israel—Juvenile literature. Jews—History—Juvenile literature. Excavations (Archeology)—Israel—Juvenile literature 67-23691

This book describes the "archaeological discoveries at the fortress of Masada in Israel, which had been inhabited by Herod and later by a Zealot community in its last stand against the Roman legions in 30 A.D. [Index.] Grades eight to ten." (Library J)

Best Sell 27:394 Ja 1 '68 120w [YA]

"The many finds, as well as the historical results of the excavation, are described at considerable length in an exciting and illuminating fashion. The feelings of the Zealots in the face of the overwhelming Roman attack are brought vividly to life; the reader can live once more through the siege." H. J. Kantor

Book World p11 Je 23 '68 800w

"This book is thorough and readable. Historical background and quotations from original source material give meaning to the findings of the 1963-65 expedition which was led by Professor Yigael Yadin. The text is interspersed with many informative full-page photographs of the site which add a great deal to this full, well-documented account which will appeal to young people seriously interested in archaeology or in the history of Israel." Jean Walling

Library J 92:4264 N 15 '67 100w

PEARS, D. F. Bertrand Russell and the British tradition in philosophy. 283p $5.95 Random house

192 Russell, Bertrand Arthur William Russell, 3d Earl 67-22631

"This volume traces the development of Bertrand Russell's metaphysics and theory of knowledge . . . from 1905 to 1919." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"[The author's] general intent in this work is to place Russell in the evolving tradition of British empiricism while at the same time explicating many of Russell's seminal concepts. He treats cogently and urbanely Russell's debt to Hume, perhaps his most important philosophical predecessor; his reaction against 19th-Century idealists; and his important interaction with Wittgenstein. While this is surely one of the most important books to appear on Russell's ideas, Professor Pears has not directed it toward those readers desiring easy access to this great philosopher. Recommended for all active collections of philosophy." W. S. Debenham

Library J 93:1000 Mr 1 '68 150w

"Pears's detailed and comprehensive study . . . covers [Russell's] most intense and creative period as a philosopher and deals authoritatively with most of the work by which he is likely to be remembered. . . . Mr. Pears demonstrates convincingly how Russell re-established the tradition of British Empiricism by a systematic process of demolition and reconstruction." Paul Johnson

N Y Times Bk R p3 Ja 21 '68 330w

Reviewed by Morris Weitz

Social Studies 59:291 N '68 310w

PEARSON, C. C. Liquor and anti-liquor in Virginia, 1619-1919 [by] C. C. Pearson and J. Edwin Hendricks. 342p $8.75 Duke univ. press
353.975 Liquor problem, Virginia—Social life and customs 67-18530

This survey of the temperance movement "traces the regulatory system as it evolved in the 17th and 18th centuries, the turn to local option subsequent to 1836, the activities of Bishop James Cannon and the Virginia Anti-Saloon League culminating in state-wide Prohibition in 1914." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"[This book] treats only superficially the sellers and drinkers of liquor and emphasizes those who sought to regulate or prohibit it. . . . A large portion of [the book] is provincial in approach and needlessly arid in its prose. But the chapters on the Anti-Saloon League redeem the rest. They are based upon such valuable sources as early interviews with participants and manuscripts sometimes no longer extant. . . . Especially illuminating are the discussions of relationships between the 'Dry' and Democratic machines, between the disfranchisement of Negroes and the prohibitionist victory, and between the closing of the liquor sources of the upper classes and the revival of the 'Wets.' . . . The book as a whole lends further support to the contention that prohibitionists were mainly nonurban, middle-class, evangelical Protestants." F. L. Byrne

Am Hist R 73:1613 Je '68 390w

"This solid study is notable for its long chronological span, its extensive documentation, its careful attention, to the internal politics and external interrelation of temperance and religious organizations with Virginia state politics, and the authority conferred by Pearson's personal acquaintance with a number of key latter-day figures in the temperance movement. . . . A definitive state study. . . . For collections on Virginia politics and comprehensive collections on the temperance and prohibition movements." Choice 4:1045 N '67 170w

PEARSON, DREW. The case against Congress; a compelling indictment of corruption on Capitol Hill, by Drew Pearson and Jack Anderson. 473p $5.95 Simon & Schuster
328.73 U.S. Congress 68-19945

The authors "call this a 'telescopic look at some of the major abuses of power prevalent on Capitol Hill, and at some of the most flagrant offenders.' . . . [They] call for reforms which would require all Congressmen to reveal their assets and sources of income, and would prohibit their practicing before any Federal court or agency; they suggest the creation of a commission for enforcing these reforms. They also recommend raising Congressional salaries and increasing tax deductions for living expenses." (Library J) Index.

Reviewed by T. H. Scully
Best Sell 28:202 Ag 15 '68 650w

"If you read Pearson's newspaper column, you've seen most of this before, but put in book form it achieves more coherence. The old muckraker retells the story of Senator Dodd's private use of political money, of Adam Clayton Powell's high jinks and the conflicts of interests of dozens of lesser known Congressmen. It's an outrageous picture and essentially accurate, as far as I know, though admittedly a distorted view of Congress concerned only with what is wrong and the few who get into trouble. And like his column it suffers from errors of detail. . . . But over the years Pearson has nailed more Congressional wrongdoing than anyone else. He has good sources, enormous gall and he drives Congress wild." R. L. Lyons
Book World p5 Ag 11 '68 1000w

"[Pearson and Anderson] rightly point out that they spare neither Republican nor Democrat as they discuss in their familiar hard-swinging—and quite readable—manner those members of Congress who are adept at payroll-padding, world-junketing at public expense, obtaining free medical care and cheap life insurance, lobbying for foreign and domestic interests that pay off in many ways. . . . There are famous names throughout the book and there is a great deal of documentation those names will find difficult to talk away. And there are 'good guys' here, too, including Senators Mike Mansfield, George Aiken, and a few others. . . . The details here are hardly original and yet in the aggregate they make a terrible indictment." Allan Angoff
Library J 93:2467 Je 15 '68 260w

Reviewed by F. J. Donner
Nation 207:278 S 23 '68 2900w

Reviewed by Louis Heren
New Repub 159:21 O 5 '68 1450w

Reviewed by Robert Sherrill
N Y Times Bk R p2 Jl 28 '68 750w
New Yorker 44:182 S 28 '68 140w

"The book is obviously written from the standpoint of a staunch liberal, and Pearson makes no effort to disguise that fact. His targets are usually—though not exclusively—conservatives. But he not only smites his foes; he also helps his friends. Liberals who furnish the column with tips are celebrated as outstanding statesmen. Senators Wayne Morse and Ernest Gruening, for example, fall into this category. President Johnson is an on-and-off friend." Time 92:64 Ag 23 '68 550w

PEARSON, E. S. The selected papers of E. S. Pearson; issued by the Biometrika trustees to celebrate his 30 years as editor. 327p il $6.75 Univ. of Calif. press
519 Statistics 66-25894

This consists of twenty-one papers by the 'Professor Emeritus of Mathematical Statistics (University College, London) . . . [concerning] the ideas governing statistical inference.' (Choice) Appendix: Bibliography of Scientific Papers, etc., published by E. S. Pearson.

"Students and statisticians will be glad to find this source book. . . . Some of the articles assume considerable knowledge of mathematical analysis. Pearson's style is very readable. His philosophy and technique are expounded in 'Some Thoughts on Statistical Inference' and 'A Statistician's Place in Assessing the likely Operational Performance of Army Weapons and Equipment.' He comments that one should not allow statistical elegance and sophistication to obscure the solution of the real problem at issue. No comparable collection." Choice 5:86 Mr '68 200w

"These papers range widely over topics important in applied statistics. They contain early examples of the use of experimental sampling to determine the effects of failures of assumptions on common tests of significance. . . . Pearson strongly emphasizes the role of theory in planning data collection and in treating the planning and the subsequent data analysis as a unit. A recurring metaphor in his writing is that of the statistician as a craftsman whose theoretical conceptions are tools which facilitate statistical design and analysis. Pearson is sensitive and undogmatic, but a persistent advocate of the Neyman-Pearson position." A. P. Dempster
Science 160:661 My 10 '68 750w

PEARSON, KENNETH. The Dorak affair [by] Kenneth Pearson & Patricia Connor. 191p pl $4.95 Atheneum pubs.

913.35 Mellaart, James. Smuggling. Turkey —Antiquities [67-112906]

"In November, 1959, Dr. Mellaart published in . . . [an] archaeological supplement to the Illustrated London News the drawings of a great treasure supposed [to] have been found at Dorak in Anatolia. . . . There has been a certain amount of speculation among scholars about the history and authenticity of these objects [and] . . . continual rumours that parts of the Dorak treasure may be forged. . . . Some years later, when Dr. Mellaart was already famous for his . . . successes at Hacilar and at Catal Huyuk, a Turkish newspaper . . . attacked him over the Dorak treasure, . . . and not only Dr. Mellaart's work . . . but also that of the British Archaeological Institute at Ankara was impeded. . . . Two English journalists, who had been hoping to report his work at Catal Huyuk . . . then decided to concentrate their story on the mystery of the Dorak treasure. . . . [and] wrote two articles in the [London] Sunday Times colour supplement [which have been expanded into this book]." (TLS)

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams
Atlantic 221:134 Mr '68 290w

Reviewed by Reynold Higgins
Book World p3 Mr 3 '68 900w

Reviewed by Pamela Marsh
Christian Science Monitor p9 Mr 15 '68 410w

Economist 225:1231 D 23 '67 350w

"This book could best be described as an archaeological detective story. Namely, did the British archaeologist James Mellaart knowingly and willingly participate in a hoax as well as in the fraudulent smuggling of prehistoric Anatolian antiquities out of Turkey, or was he the innocent victim of circumstances, unjustly crucified by an irresponsible jingoistic Turkish press? . . . In the course of this account [the authors] present a lucid picture of the sordid world of the smuggler of antiquities, and by the end of the book, they tend to clear Mellaart of all the charges. While by no means a work of great scholarly value, the book is fascinating and the authors have nicely illuminated the usually unknown half-world of archaeological crime. It is certainly recommended for general readers and interested, informed laymen." A. R. Schulman

PEARSON, KENNETH—Continued

Library J 93:993 Mr 1 '68 160w

Reviewed by Guy Davenport

Nat R 20:506 My 21 '68 750w

"The authors recount their experience in the manner of Eric Ambler, with much emphasis on suspense. We are led through their Byzantine labyrinth on the double, with hardly time to catch our breath. It is great fun while it lasts. But the end is anticlimactic. Mr Pearson and Miss Connor, alas, never did crack the adamantine nut of Turkish intrigue. They are forced, for lack of firm revelation, to conclude that Mellaart was victimized by people anxious to have a collection of ancient objects, real or fake, written up by a prominent archeological figure. They also suggest that when valuable antiquities are smuggled out of Turkey, it is done with official connivance. At any rate, if the text of a good book is to have us come to the end wishing for more, [the authors] have done the trick." E. B. Garside

N Y Times Bk R p48 Mr 24 '68 800w

New Yorker 44:193 Ap 20 '68 120w

"In order to make a thrilling story, the authors have described their expedition as if they were private detectives, and in doing so they have given way at every stage a tactlessness and arrogance that make the book an object lesson in unfruitful behaviour. . . . Nothing is discovered that was not already known; the antiquity smuggling trade offers a touch of sinister local colour, but that is all."

TLS p1242 D 21 '67 800w

PEATTIE, LISA REDFIELD. The view from the barrio. 147p il $6.95 Univ. of Mich. press 309.187 Ciudad Guayana, Venezuela—Social conditions 68-16441

A "study of economic and sociocultural change in a small neighborhood of a developing city [Ciudad Guayana] in the interior off Venezuela. [The author] . . . lived as a part of the barrio La Laja for two and one half years. She initiates the presentation by putting the barrio La Laja, the city, the region, and the nation in historical perspective. She then describes the economic and social life of La Laja. After outlining the socioeconomic background, Peattie relates it to problems of social action and the process of becoming a Lajanian." (Choice) Index.

"The final chapter on social process and economic development is an excellent coverage of the sometimes neglected relationship of social structure to economic change and development. The book presents an inside view of the 'revolution and rising expectations' and the problems related to it. Recommended for all libraries and for those interested in sociocultural change, economic development, and international relations."

Choice 5:1054 O '68 150w

"In describing the lives of the people [the author] demonstrates the ability to look at people with both the analytical eye of the anthropologist and the sympathetic eye of an involved person; thus she provides more than a scientific study of this vital area. What is happening in La Laja is happening in Venezuela, and Mrs. Peattie brings this out particularly in the excellent chapter on the intellectual life of the barrio. This is a worthwhile purchase for any Latin American collection." J. L. Buelna

Library J 93:1912 My 1 '68 130w

PECK, GRAHAM, Jr. auth. China; the remembered life. See Frillmann, P.

PECK, RICHARD E., ed. Poems. See Hawthorne, N.

PECKHAM, HOWARD H. The making of the University of Michigan, 1817-1967. 276p $6.50 Univ. of Mich. press

378.774 Michigan. University 66-17028

Organized chronologically, this book by a professor of history at the University of Michigan presents information "about the powers, actions, and succession of regents: university finances; the policies, achievements, and frustrations of presidents; the growth of the administrative structure and of the faculty, student body, and academic program; the physical expansion (and ultimate division) of the campus; the shaping of student society around fraternities, the Michigan Union, athletics, publications, political associations, and the like; the proliferation of research; and the public service of university members in peace and war." (Pol Sci Q) Bibliography. Index.

"Peckham's volume is marked by an extraordinary qualitative contrast between its early and later chapters. The discussion of the university's history between 1817 and 1929 is distinguished by its author's comprehensive grasp and presentation of educational and social issues of the time, which result in his having written the most readable, scholarly, and enlightening history of the university in this period so far published. Readers will turn to it for its concise and judicious evaluation of two of Michigan's great educators: presidents Henry Tappan and James Angell. The later chapters, however, degenerate into a listing of events and names . . . [and] the discussion is marred by Peckham's patronizing scorn for students and faculty who joined the then current expression of protest and dissent."

Choice 4:728 S '67 80w

"The comings and goings of professors and regents, the beginnings and endings of wars, the rise and fall of presidents—this is not history. On one page Peckham considers enrollment, the elective curriculum, a lecture by Teddy Roosevelt, the beginnings of sociology, and a Western Conference football championship team—these are chronicles. The study of higher education in the United States has moved beyond the conceptual purposes of [this book]. The public relations and institutional purposes of such [a work] are legitimate, however, and these purposes are well served."

Frederick Rudolph

J Am Hist 55:653 D '68 350w

"[This book] lacks the thoroughgoing analytical penetration that some institutional historians attempt today, but [it] ought to be useful beyond the circle of Michigan residents, alumni, students, and parents of students, for whom it was written. . . . [It presents] an incredible amount of information. . . . Indeed, the book resembles an historical atlas; chapters on presidential administrations correspond to the maps of a nation with an increasing population and ever expanding frontiers. . . . If the outsider who reads this book is convinced that there is need to multiply the number of universities that are excellent as well as huge, he must hope that Professor Peckham will presently say more in explanation of the forces that have worked like geological pressures to produce the visible surface of the University of Michigan." R. J. Storr

Pol Sci Q 83:166 Mr '68 200w

TLS p1213 O 31 '68 1250w

PEDLEY, AVRIL, comp. They looked like this (Europe); an assembly of authentic word-portraits of men and women in European history, art, and literature over 1900 years; comp. by Avril Pedley and Grant Uden. 265p $6 Barnes & Noble

920 Europe—Biography

68-463

"Most of the entries in this alphabetical listing . . . with a paragraph or two of description for each, are kings, queens, musicians, writers, and artists; there are also many obscure names and general categories such as 'The Franks.' . . . Sources, usually biographies and journals, are given for all quotations." (Library J)

"Some of the descriptions are very graphic, but many are equivalent [to] . . . this entry for Louis Pasteur. He minutely inspected the bread that was served to him and placed on the tablecloth everything he found in it. . . . As in these examples, the descriptions often give details of personal habit and dress rather than physical appearance. Another defect is that there is usually no indication of the age of the person when he was being described. There are no illustrations and no index. Certainly of very limited value; not recommended for general purchase." H. S. Weeks

Library J 93:1612 Ap 15 '68 200w

"Descriptions are quoted from contemporary accounts such as Dumas's memoir of de Vigny, Rolland's of Mahler, or a Times reporter's of Garibaldi. Additional volumes would be welcomed." D. M. Glixon

Sat R 51:45 My 18 '68 50w

PEET, BILL. Jennifer and Josephine; written and ill. by Bill Peet. 46p $3.25; lib bdg $3.07 Houghton

Cats—Stories

67-20373

"Josephine, a scrawny stray cat, discovered Jennifer, an old touring car, in a junkyard and raised a litter of kittens on her back seat. When the car was sold Josephine went along. . . . Kindergarten to grade two." (Library J)

"Mr. Peet is one of our most workmanlike producers of decent children's books. He invariably provides an engaging, if rarely inspired, narrative, along with vivid, no-nonsense drawings. Jennifer . . . a dilapidated 1920s touring car [is] rescued from the junkyard by a thoroughly unwholesome-looking traveling salesman type, who proceeds to give the lovable rattletrap a piston-busting ride over hill and dale—why he is in such a rip-snorting hurry is never made clear—until he skids off the road in a rainstorm and abandons it. At which point scrawny Josephine, the cat . . . goes into her St. Bernard act, and the car gets to pass its declining years among dispensers of tender loving care. Pleasant enough, but also pretty pointless." Richard Kluger

Book World pt 2, p6 (children's issue)
N 5 '67 200w

Christian Science Monitor p12 Ap 25 '68 50w

"Little boys, and their fathers, will find the characteristic panoramic drawings full of masculine appeal—junk yard scenes and vintage cars and trucks—along with plenty of action and humor." E. L. H.

Horn Bk 43:744 D '67 200w

Reviewed by C. A. Hough

Library J 93:284 Ja 15 '68 100w

PEI, MARIO. The America we lost; the concerns of a conservative. 177p $4.95 World pub.

309.1 U.S.—Politics and government

68-28112

This "book is a cry for a return to an America of the past—an America of strongly individualistic values . . . [in which] the government knew little of the private happenings of the individual citizen . . . In the realm of foreign policy Professor Pei argues for people-to-people, rather than government-to-government aid. . . . [He] also includes one complete section on Communism." (Best Sell)

"[This] is a picture of a good America of the past . . . but I think it is a picture of an America that never really did exist. . . . [Pei] notes that our aid program should be based on a realistic foreign policy, rather than the political ideologies of the past. These notions seem at first thought to be eminently reasonable; but . . . I wonder if they are based on an adequate knowledge of what our foreign policy really has been. . . . Many liberals will be angered by Professor Pei's book. I personally found little I could agree with; but it is worth the reading as a clear and forceful presentation of the conservative mind." Fred Rotondaro

Best Sell 28:245 S 15 '68 650w

"This brief volume . . . should make [Pei] especially appreciated by the John Birch Society and other individuals and groups with similar points of view. . . . [He] does not make his arguments impressive to those who are willing to face reality. He would like to turn back the clock to 19th-Century economic life. . . . There is a market for this and public libraries should select accordingly." E. T. Smith

Library J 93:2843 Ag '68 230w

"[This] is a delightful potpourri of Professor Pei's social and political thought. . . . [He] has much to say about such subjects as Communism, bureaucracy, the Supreme Court, and modern education. Everything he says, he says with a straightforward, old-fashioned honesty that is at once disarming and noble. Like most foreign-born citizens, Professor Pei possesses an amazing capacity for reminding us of what America is supposed to be about. This alone is worth the price of admission." P. P. Witonski

Nat R 20:1023 O 8 '68 250w

Reviewed by K. W. Thompson

Sat R 51:38 O 12 '68 450w

PEI, MARIO, ed. Language today; a survey of current linguistic thought. 150p il $4.95 Funk

410 Language and languages. English language 67-26447

"It is the purpose of this book to present in simplified form and in layman's language a few of the more important language problems facing today's speakers of English. . . . [These include] the problem of usage; the question of sounds and spelling; . . . paralinguistics; . . . the problem of meaning itself; the views of grammar . . . throughout history." (Foreword) Bibliography.

"Each of the . . . problems is treated by an expert, with Pei covering spelling and semantics and also engaging in an interesting exchange on usage and abuse with William F. Marquardt. Their views . . . oscillate between the traditional-conservative and the liberal-permissive. An essay by Katharine Le Mée discusses the latest findings of communication researches into the domain of paralinguistics. A final essay by Don Nilsen attempts a historical survey of grammars in America. . . . The layman will find these essays informative and provocative. The casual student, however, should derive much more from J. Friend's Introduction to English Linguistics [BRD 1968]; the serious student would have a far greater interest in M. Leroy's Main Trends in Modern Linguistics."

Choice 5:479 Je '68 200w

"For the reader who wishes an interesting and reasonably authoritative treatment of a limited number of current language problems, this book is excellent. However, it suffers somewhat from a lack of definition; Professor Pei . . . offers us no rationale for his choice of subjects; he gives us no special or particular orientation in any school of linguistic thought. . . . As a collection, it is not as thorough or as well documented as a number of similar books in the field." J. A. Rycenga

Library J 92:2777 Ag '67 100w

PEI, MARIO. What's in a word? language—yesterday, today, and tomorrow. 238p $5.95 Hawthorn bks.

400 Language and languages

68-19107

The essays in this collection have been selected because they bring into prominence certain areas of language which link language with other aspects of life. "Of the 30 papers in this book, 28 have been previously published in a wide range of journals over many years. They are presented here in four groups: 'Language Origins,' 'Language Curios and Problems,' 'Language, Books and Education,' and 'The International Language.'" (Library J)

"Libraries from high school level upwards will profitably invest in this book."

Best Sell 28:123 Je 15 '68 190w

"Individual chapters, such as 'Parallel Proverbs,' 'The New Yorker's Languages,' 'Languages for Scientists,' or 'The Case for Esperanto,' will find eager readers. Mr. Pei's writing is warm and appealing, full of good humor and the mature wisdom gained in his ripe experience in this field. . . . The subject demands of the reader a considerable knowledge but is presented in a readable style. This book will not make best seller lists but it will attract many serious readers, and will serve patrons well in large or medium-sized public and academic libraries. Jerrold Orne

Library J 93:1632 Ap 15 '68 200w

Reviewed by T. H. Bernstein

Sat R 51:38 Ag 24 '68 1050w

PEILLARD, LÉONCE. Sink the Tirpitz! tr. from the French by Oliver Coburn. 360p il $6.95 Putnam

940.54 Tirpitz (Battleship). World War, 1939-1945—Naval operations 68-12106

This is a history of Allied attempts in World War II to destroy the "Tirpitz, the most powerful enemy ship afloat in the Western Hemisphere, [which] was based deep in the Norwegian fjords where it presented a major threat to Allied naval action. Declared unsinkable, the battleship defied normal warfare and became the target of a series of . . . dramatic assaults." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"The narrative is smooth, the events are in perfect sequence, and Mr. Peillard has ferreted out every available detail. The book represents a considerable feat for a writer who was not of the participating forces. The translation is first rate, and the diagrams, appendixes and bibliography are meticulously done. . . . [This] should be in most public libraries, with a place in young adult collections also." P. W. Filby

Library J 93:3557 O 1 '68 100w [YA]

PEILLARD, LÉONCE—Continued

"The attempts and final success in sinking the great battleship Tirpitz were prolonged and arduous affairs. They involved Norwegian resistance members and secret agents as well as British aircrew and submariners. M. Peillard has welded their experiences into a restrained blow by blow account of the whole series of operations. The German side is well brought out by survivors' stories and written material. The book brings out clearly the Tirpitz's strategic importance in tying down British battleships badly needed in other theatres of war and also the fatal lack of co-operation between German naval and air forces."

TLS p1012 S 12 '68 240w

PEIRCE, NEAL R. The people's President; the electoral college in American history and the direct-vote alternative; with a foreword by Tom Wicker. 400p il $8.95 Simon & Schuster

324.73 Presidents—U.S.—Election 68-11015

"In this book Mr. Peirce attacks the electoral college system of electing presidents as a 'quaint 18th-century voting device' that is 'archaic, undemocratic, complex, ambiguous, indirect and dangerous.' . . . He would replace it by direct nationwide popular vote. He attacks all other alternatives because they make possible a minority president." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by Ambrose Agius

Best Sell 28:77 My 15 '68 700w

"The author has done a commendable job in tracing the growth of universal suffrage in the United States, starting with the initial property requirements for voting. He cites acts of Congress, State Legislatures, Supreme Court decisions, which have now made suffrage almost universal. . . . As thorough and complete as the book is, however, it leaves a number of questions unanswered. . . . Whether or not [the Federal] System could be maintained with a direct popular vote is problematical. . . . The problem is indeed a difficult one. Mr. Peirce, with his admirable knowledge and skill, shows why it has been with us so long and continues to plague us." Hale Boggs

Book World p18 Je 9 '68 900w

Choice 5:1368 D '68 180w

Reviewed by Neil Compton

Commentary 46:43 D '68 800w

"Peirce is on the staff of Congressional Quarterly and his work reflects the fine quality of governmental research in that periodical. He uses history, modern computer methods, and studies of scholars for his argument. Highly recommended for public and academic libraries." Perry Armin

Library J 93:1149 Mr 15 '68 100w

Reviewed by C. V. Woodward

New Repub 158:33 Je 1 '68 600w

"[The author] comes down hard in favor of election by direct popular vote and state lines be damned—a position that makes more and more sense as TV erodes sectionalism in politics and everything else. Mr. Peirce has researched his argument expertly and put together a highly useful, if unexciting, case against an archaic practice." R. G. Whalen

N Y Times Bk ■ p38 My 26 '68 160w

"In 1958 L. Wilmerding, Jr., published The Electoral College [BRD 1959], a scholarly critique that included a definitive early history. Peirce . . . now offers an equally engrossing and more informal analysis which strengthens the case against the electoral system by weighing the events of the last decade. . . . When the clamor for change does occur, politicians had better be armed with the documentation and analysis that Peirce has amassed. Certainly no book will be published in this Presidential year that merits more thoughtful study." Donald Young

Sat R 51:26 Je 29 '68 900w

PEISSEL, MICHEL. Mustang, the forbidden kingdom; exploring a lost Himalayan land. 318p pl col pl maps $8.95 Dutton

915.49 Mustang, Nepal—Description and travel 67-11365

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Choice 4:1431 F '68 160w

Reviewed by T. V. Wylie

Pacific Affairs 40:426 fall-winter '67- '68 300w

TLS p1158 O 10 '68 800w

PELIKAN, JAROSLAV. Spirit versus structure; Luther and the institutions of the church. 149p $4.95 Harper

270.6 Luther; Martin. Reformation 68-29557

A "study of the dynamics of Luther's character and thought as revealed in his own writings. In the excerpts Pelikan . . . [attempts] to document the rather noticeable inconsistencies in Luther's arguments over the period from 1520 to the late 1530's. Furthermore, he . . . [portrays] a reflective and rational Luther and not simply an iconoclast. . . . [He includes] quotations from Luther which treat the priesthood and ministry, monasticism, infant baptism, canon law and the sacraments." (Library J)

"Pelikan's work is focused upon the several controversies in which Luther's theology of structure became explicit. . . . One approaches [the book] with great expectations . . . [but] Pelikan is as cautious as Luther himself. Those wanting a moratorium on criticism of the church will find little comfort in Luther's commitment to ecclesia semper reformanda. And those wanting to wipe clean the churchly slate and start all over will be equally frustrated by the respect with which he considered the extant institutions of Christianity. But it is precisely because of the caution and scholarship which guard them that Pelikan's conclusions are significant. . . . There were and are 'Christian' structures which allow one to feel that he is in control of things himself; they are demonic. There were and are structures which lead one from themselves to grace; they are God's gifts. It may be time for us . . . [to] make this distinction. Pelikan's book can only help in this regard." Thomas Tredway

Christian Century 85:1407 N 6 '68 500w

"One might be led by the title of this book to infer that it is a simplistic recital of Luther's popularly known ideas about the church. On the contrary, the work is a penetrating study. . . . In the excerpts Pelikan, noted scholar, presents the reformer understandably as an often angry man. . . . The book offers to the interested layman a useful survey of the motivations of the Protestant reform." R. C. Turner

Library J 93:3012 S 1 '68 180w

PELLE, ALEX, jt. auth. Animal kitabu. See Hallet, J. P.

PELLEGRINI, ALDO. New tendencies in art; tr. by Robin Carson; bk. design by Paola Mazzetti. 320p il col il $12.50 Crown

709.04 Modernism (Art) 66-26190

The Argentine art critic "examines the products of artists and the movements in art from World War II to the present. Showing how Futurism, Cubism, Fauvism, and Expressionism paved the way for a break with the past, he explains how Dadaism and Surrealism provided a bridge to the present. He investigates the work of contemporary artists in all countries and provides a basic understanding of Pop Art, New Abstraction, Hard-Edge, Op Art, New Tendency, Programed Art, and Happenings." (Publisher's note)

"Especially welcome are discussions of the various new 'groups,' including Cobra, Gutai, Phases, Group O, and the Groupe de Recherche d'Art Visuel. Of particular interest is the closing chapter, on the sociological aspects of post-war art. It includes comments on art dealers and galleries, art fashions, publicity, the art market, and international competitions and salons. The jargon—such terms as concrete art, informalism, strict visuality, and so on—tends to confuse the layman, but the semantics of contemporary art requires an international and changing language. The illustrations are well selected, and the color plates are outstanding. For all art libraries." W. J. Dane

Library J 92:1147 Mr 15 '67 160w

"Pellegrini provides a pleasant corrective to views of recent artistic development which centre exclusively upon Europe and North America. 'Informalism in Japan' falls within his perspective just as aptly as 'The new Spanish painting'. Of course, his expertise on the subject of 'Concrete art in Argentina' is unrivalled. The real interest of this study lies in the connecting themes which are pursued throughout the succession of individual dosiers. . . . It is a great pity that the illustrations, which are mostly excellent and comprise many fine plates in colour, should be so inadequately related to the text that the reader feels as if he were engaged in a complicated fugue."

TLS p483 My 9 '68 400w

PELLING, HENRY. Social geography of British elections, 1885-1910. 455p maps $14 St Martins

324.42 Elections—Great Britain 67-25980

The author "attempts to examine British general election results, constituency by constituency, over a 25-year period, and to relate them to patterns of religious allegiance, social status, occupations, and local and regional loyalties. . . . [He tells] about the character and conduct of elections in the period, and about the motivation of voters. From a . . . survey of contemporary evidence and works of topography as well as from . . . statistics, he throws light on the early development of . . . the Conservative working man, the political impact of immigration, and the 'bandwagon' effect of polls. The chapters are arranged by regions." (Publisher's note) Index.

"[Pelling demonstrates that] on the whole the members of upper economic levels of society were less easily swayed by anything but their 'class' interests; the workers were subject to more contradictory pressures. Yet [he] shows, in this interesting study, how oversimplified is the view which relates voting exclusively to any one criterion. Recommended for students of British history."

Choice 5:548 Je '68 160w

"[Pelling] has done a great service in this pioneering, and painstaking, work. He has put his boots on and traversed the country as it was from 1885 to the first world war. His method is interesting. . . . He applies three rough tests: of social class; . . . of nonconformist influence, based on censuses of religious attendance; and of landowning interest. But perhaps his best work, which should be followed up, is his use of newspaper files for an age which saw the provincial press at the height of its influence and, some might say, its expertise. The result is fascinating."

Economist 225:293 O 21 '67 1300w

"After a surfeit of sociological examinations of elections, students of politics will find this geographical or ecological survey of constituencies an agreeable change, especially as the book is packed with a great variety of curious and unexpected conclusions. . . . Although it may be unpalatable to much contemporary historical taste, the researches on which this book is based do not imply that British politics at that time were the servants of class."

TLS p619 Je 13 '68 1050w

PELZ, DONALD C. Scientists in organizations; productive climates for research and development [by] Donald C. Pelz [and] Frank M. Andrews. 318p $10 Wiley

502 Scientists. Research 66-26756

What constitutes a stimulating atmosphere for research and development? Based on data from a number of "scientists and engineers in industrial, government, and university laboratories, this book describes the kinds of working environments in which technical people were stimulated to high levels of creativity and performance. . . . The authors have portrayed their findings with . . . charts and tables, and have provided a . . . description of the research on which the findings are based. Also included are . . . suggestions about the implications of the findings for the professional activities of technical people and for the organization of R & D labs. Among the many areas explored are: freedom, communication, dedication, motivations, satisfactions, creativity, age, groups, and coordination." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by Simon Marcson

Am Soc R 33:316 Ap '68 500w

"While the data are based on a large number of individuals and a variety of organizations, the study is not presented as a sample of research organizations or of individual scientists. The authors simply went wherever they could gain entrée and, therefore, some types of research organizations are missing: e.g. basic research laboratories in industry and independent nonprofit institutes. The nature of the study design minimizes findings about the organizational impact on performance. However, this book contributes to the growing interest in scientists and organizations in its attempt to open up the subject, and draw attention to significant methodological and theoretical problems. It also makes many impressive technical contributions, if attention is focused only on the data analysis."

Choice 4:1416 F '68 170w

"Pelz began his examination of 'the relationship between a scientist's performance and the organization of his laboratory' in 1951. . . . He sought 'valid evidence' through 'rigorous methods of research' to indicate 'the best way to operate a laboratory.' . . . The assumption that there exists one best way to operate is bold, indeed, . . . but [the authors] ignore the role and influence of facilities. . . . Not only have Pelz and Andrews abstracted their study from material constraints upon behavior and attitudes, but they have also given it a misleading timelessness. . . . The most serious limitation of the study, however, is the inability of the authors, or at least their unwillingness, to test the hypotheses their correlations suggest." J. W. Kuhn

Science 156:1586 Je 23 '67 600w

PEN, JAN. A primer on international trade. 146p $4.95; pa $1.95 Random house

382 Commerce. International economic relations 67-12749

The author "is professor of economics at the University of Groningen and has been Director of Economic Policy in the Ministry of Economic Affairs of the Netherlands. His thesis is . . . that free trade between free countries tends to promote the welfare of both. Part I defines international trade, discusses its principles, and indicates why it is necessary. Part II is concerned largely with international trade and price levels, balance of payments, foreign currency, and currency depreciation. Part III discusses trade between nations in trade blocs and around the world." (Library J) Annotated bibliography.

"The book does not raise theoretically controversial issues. . . . [It] deserves to be widely read. Undergraduates may benefit greatly from it, primarily because of its clarity but also because of its 'programmed' setup ('if you don't understand this point completely, go back to chapter so-and-so'). It may also be recommended to the nonacademic reader, however; one would hope that in particular politicians who have to decide on matters of foreign trade policy would find the time to spend a few hours with this book." Hanns Linnemann

Am Econ R 58:621 Je '68 750w

"Definitely a primer. Very sketchy discussion of some theoretical points opens the door to misinterpretation and misunderstanding. Brisk dismissal of the case for freely fluctuating exchange rates, based primarily on a presumed wild instability in free rates, is also disturbing. The descriptive, institutional material is useful. An easily read book that is clearly several cuts above most material on this subject that might be read by interested but untrained laymen."

Choice 5:385 My '68 100w

"This book is not an essential purchase but can be used as supplementary reading in academic libraries." D. E. Thompson

Library J 92:1924 My 15 '67 100w

PENDLETON, EDMUND. The letters and papers of Edmund Pendleton, 1734-1803; coll. and ed. by David John Mays; pub. for the Va. hist. society. 2v 377;382-753p $20 Univ. press of Va.

B or 92 67-17630

The editor presents "many of the materials on which he based his biography [Edmund Pendleton, BRD 1952]. With the exception of a few routine official documents signed [by the jurist] . . . and his already published judicial opinions, the edition includes 'all known documents in Pendleton's handwriting, or signed by him, and newspaper notices which were published over his name." (Va Q R) Chronology in volume one and volume two. Bibliography and Index, both in volume two.

PENDLETON, EDMUND—Continued

Reviewed by A. L. Hall
Am Hist R 73:1620 Je '68 500w

"Edmund Pendleton, outstanding political leader of Virginia, played an important role in the pre-Revolutionary activities of the colony. . . . [The editor's] transcription is accurate and his annotations scholarly and adequate but not excessive. These volumes provide a splendid new source for information on late 18th-Century and early 19th-Century American history as Pendleton corresponded with many of the leading men of his day." W. S. Powell
Library J 93:186 Ja 15 '68 130w

"The work will be useful to students of many different aspects of colonial and Revolutionary Virginia and America, but perhaps it will be primarily valuable because it provides an unusually rich and convenient source for the study of the most remarkable feature of the society in which Pendleton lived: its extraordinary political culture, which by almost any criteria has been rarely equaled and never surpassed in American history. . . . This edition [also] helps to make possible the reconstruction of the central elements in that culture and contributes to a clearer understanding of how individuals of varying psychological types internalized it and how it and the men who operated within it were affected by the challenges presented by the Revolution and the establishment of the federal union." J. P. Greene
Va Q R 44:302 spring '68 2900w

PENFIELD, WILDER. The difficult art of giving; the epic of Alan Gregg. 414p pl $7.95 Little

B or 92 Gregg, Alan. Rockefeller Foundation 67-11213

The author blends the words and deeds of the late vice president of the Rockefeller Foundation to provide this biography. The appendices include aphorisms of Alan Gregg, selections from his writings and a list of his publications. Index.

"[In this] wonderfully perceptive study, Dr. Penfield, a distinguished Canadian surgeon, has produced a work that is much more than merely a well-written biography. Not only is his book an intriguing window into the workings and the exciting past of a great philanthropic foundation, but it is also an exceedingly effective mirror of the fine philosophy pervading the lives of Alan Gregg, his teachers, his colleagues, and his contemporaries. . . . Belongs in school, university, and public libraries." Paul Sarnoff
Library J 92:1846 My 1 '67 130w

"Few lives deserve the epic characterization; yet Alan Gregg's probably does. But why? It is not easy to say, and herein lies the fascination of [this] perceptive biography. The answer is almost here, but not quite. The final essence to be distilled from the variegated public and private life of Alan Gregg still eludes us. . . . The story of the years of giving is well told by Penfield and deserves thoughtful reading by anyone who is on either the giving or the receiving end of philanthropy. . . . Out of his great attachment to Alan Gregg and his intimate knowledge of scientific medicine, Wilder Penfield has drawn a compelling picture of an unusual man." T. B. Turner
Science 158:1169 D 1 '67 1150w

PENICK, JAMES. Progressive politics and conservation; the Ballinger-Pinchot affair [by] James Penick, Jr. 207p $7.50 Univ. of Chicago press

333.7 Ballinger, Richard Achilles. Pinchot, Gifford. Natural resources 68-15798

The author examines the conservation movement in the United States in terms of the Ballinger-Pinchot controversy during President Taft's administration. Penick "sees the controversy as in part the result of bureaucratic infighting between rival agencies within the Government, and in part a struggle between those—like Pinchot—who accepted . . . big business and . . . favored its regulation in the public interest and those—like Ballinger—whose sympathies lay with the older tradition of entrepreneurship and the small man." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"Not all Penick's points are a novel as he suggests. He goes beyond the evidence in ascribing to Pinchot and his followers more clearly defined long-range goals than they in fact had. But his book belongs on library shelves alongside . . . earlier studies of the conservation movement."

Choice 5:866 S '68 170w

Christian Century 85:302 Mr 6 '68 40w

"Penick has written a careful study . . . and he has attempted to restore . . . the unity lost in accounts . . . marked by partisanship or concern with larger issues. Making use of private papers, governmental sources, and . . . scholarly literature relevant to the subject, the author provides a detailed account of the affair. . . . [His] assessment of Ballinger's conservation views and their implications is not as sharply drawn as his treatment of the views of Pinchot and his circle. . . . Even so, the account provides clarification of . . . both the event and the personalities involved by skillfully placing them in the broad context of the politics and conflicting goals of progressive reform. These contributions provide justification for a new account of what is in its main outlines, at least, an already familiar story." J. M. Clubb

J Am Hist 55:414 S '68 550w

PENNSYLVANIA. UNIVERSITY. School of Education. Educational imperatives in a changing culture. See Brickman, W. W., ed.

PENROSE, SIR ROLAND. The sculpture of Picasso; chronology by Alicia Legg; issued in conjunction with the exhibition at the Mus. of Modern art, Oct 11, 1967 to Jan. 1, 1968; bibl. on the sculpture and ceramics of Picasso; comp. by Inga Forslund. 231p il $15 Doubleday

730.924 Picasso, Pablo

67-29395

"This book serves as both an exhibition catalog and a . . . monograph on an important phase of the artist's creativity. . . . [The author's essay] documents . . . Picasso's sculpture, collage, and assemblage. . . . The chronologically arranged plates contain all the characteristic styles of Picasso's work from 1961 to 1963." (Library J)

"[Picasso] is now regarded as an artist of unassailable genius, beyond ordinary standards of judgment. . . . [While this book contains] a scholarly account of the relationship between Picasso's sculpture and his paintings and graphics. . . . Penrose uses such loaded language as 'cunning of an alchemist,' 'juggler of appearances' and 'metaphysical enjoyments.' . . . Moreover, he reduces complex reality relationships to questions of 'identities.' Thus the Bull's Head sculpture . . . 'has the disconcerting quality of a joke that contains serious implications.' In addition, the junk sculptures 'apart from their aesthetic values . . . induce a metaphysical enjoyment that is not far distant from the doubts and disquiet provoked by Hieronymus Bosch.' Unfortunately we get no explanation of the content of these implications and doubts." Burton Silverman

Book World p6 Je 9 '68 290w

"Over 200 of the 284 works seen in the exhibition were culled from Picasso's own collection. . . . This beautifully illustrated book is a vital link for a full understanding of Picasso's creative process and the analogous relationship of his sculpture, painting, and graphic work. Illustrations of related etchings and drawing further clarify Sir Roland's lucid essay. . . . This is an essential purchase for specialized libraries." Jacqueline Sisson

Library J 93:179 Ja 15 '68 180w

"Substantially the exhibition [at the Museum of Modern Art] was the same as that held at the Tate Gallery in London, a few months earlier. . . . [This] volume is in large part a reprint of the original catalogue and introduction . . . [to which] the author has added . . . two or three pages of speculation on the origins of the art of sculpture with which not every reader will necessarily agree. The book provides however an admirable pictorial summary of Picasso's achievement in a medium which he has used, if not continuously, at least at many crucial periods in his career. The Introduction gives a clear and concise account of this achievement." Anthony Blunt

N Y Rev of Books 10:12 Mr 28 '68 650w

PENTECOST, HUGH. Dead woman of the year; a John Jericho mystery novel. 183p $3.95 Dodd 67-29899

"Lydia Trask has been named Woman of the Year and a reporter scheduled to do a feature article on her arrives at her apartment [at the same time] as a beautiful model, a stand-in for Lydia's TV appearances. Someone throws acid . . . in her face and she dies in agony. Was the acid meant for Lydia? The police seek valiantly for the perpetrator of the most vicious of crimes. Then John Jericho, a painter and former lover of Lydia's is asked to help." (Best Sell)

"A short, taut suspense story. Very well done."

Best Sell 27:390 Ja 1 '68 90w

Reviewed by M. K. Grant

Library J 92:4031 N 1 '67 30w

"Nice integration of puzzle, love story and exceedingly tight 12-hour action combine to create a model of the straightforward whodunit." Anthony Boucher

N Y Times Bk R p16 D 31 '67 60w

Reviewed by Sergeant Cuff

Sat R 51:36 Ja 27 '68 20w

PENUCLI, S. Y., comp. Anthology of modern Hebrew poetry; comp. by S. Y. Penueli and A. Ukhmani; pub. for the Inst. for the tr. of Hebrew literature. 2v $11 Davey

892.4 Hebrew poetry—Collections 67-3216

"The late Professor Penueli, of Tel Aviv University, has gathered together the work of five translators: Robert Friend, Richard Flantz, A. C. Jacobs, Dom Moraes, and Abraham Birman." (Library J)

"[These volumes] provide no Hebrew text; the work of many translators is presented, so no single style or approach predominates; the introduction is rather general and emotional."

While [the collection is] worthwhile, smaller libraries, able to include only a limited representation of modern Hebrew literature, should start with The Modern Hebrew Poem Itself [ed. by S. Burnshaw, BRD 1965] which presents not only the Hebrew but also a translation, together with a literal account of the Hebrew, careful introductions, and critical notes and commentary."

Choice 4:1252 Ja '68 110w

"These volumes belong in school and public libraries." H. M. Orlinsky

Library J 92:2418 Je 15 '67 90w

PEPPÉ, RODNEY. The alphabet book. unp col il $3.95; lib bdg $3.72 Four winds

411 Alphabet books 68-27275

"For each letter a familiar noun is used in a simple sentence, with the key word . . . illustrated in full color. . . Letters on facing pages are linked by related sentences and pictures." (Publisher's note) "Preschool to grade one." (Library J)

Reviewed by Ethna Sheehan

America 119:655 D 21 '68 30w

Reviewed by P. M. Canham

Christian Science Monitor pB2 N 7 '68 70w

"Poster-like illustrations and simple text here combine graphic art with imagination. The lap-sized square pages are just large enough (9¼" x 10") to support the stylized collages in vivid, but softly-textured colors. . . Most of the objects [described by the nouns] will be recognizable to preschool children, with just enough of the unfamiliar to engage curiosity. Despite the number of good alphabet books, this one is a worthy addition for any library."

Della Thomas

Library J 93:4396 N 15 '68 80w

Reviewed by John Coleman

New Statesman 76:596 N 1 '68 70w

"Handsome, with nice pictures, but not particularly pointful as an alphabet. Lower case only, the key letter in each little sentence being blown up to four times the size of the others."

TLS p1117 O 3 '68 30w

PEPPER, CHORAL, jt. auth. The mysterious West. See Williams, B.

PEPPER, STEPHEN C. Concept and quality; a world hypothesis. (The Paul Carus lectures, 1961) 652p $8 Open ct.

110 Metaphysics

66-19679

In this sequel to his World Hypotheses (BRD 1942), the author "seeks to fabricate a new world hypothesis built on a substantially empirical foundation and on logical extrapolations from the natural and social sciences." (Library J) Index.

"This book provides a detailed illustration of two theses argued in [Pepper's] earlier work: (1) speculative systems are built upon Root Metaphors; . . . (2) speculative philosophy has proceeded, and should continue to proceed, via the empirical method. . . . There are some similarities between Pepper's Contextualism and Whitehead's 'concrete actuality.' Not for beginners."

Choice 5:509 Je '68 170w

"[The appearance of this volume] is a healthy . . . sign that speculative and metaphysical philosophy is fruitfully alive in America. . . . While much of [the author's] analysis is Whiteheadian in inspiration and tone, it does not suffer from his use of obtuse and obscure terminology. . . . The book is recommended highly for collections in philosophy." W. S. Debenham

Library J 93:2245 Je 1 '68 190w

PEREC, GEORGES. Les choses; a story of the sixties; tr. by Helen R. Lane. 125p $3.95 Grove

67-30110

The theme of this novel is "the drift and emptiness in the lives of a young bourgeois couple caught up in a cult of acquisitiveness. Although war is raging in Algeria and spreading to the streets of Paris, these fashion worshipers can find nothing in today's world about which to exercise moral judgement; of course they do think that clear-cut values must have been possible in other times, just as they think that life would gain significance if only they had a Chesterfield divan, or a mother-of-pearl snuffbox, or. . . They wait for a fortune from the national lottery, but never get around to the purchase of a ticket." (Library J)

Reviewed by I. N. Pompea

Best Sell 28:48 My 1 '68 280w

Choice 5:966 O '68 180w

Reviewed by Florence Casey

Christian Science Monitor p9 Ap 27 '68 600w

"The book has considerable social value, but it is as a man of literature, rather than of science, that Georges Perec has dissected the contemporary malaise. Much of the novel reads like a department-store catalog concocted by Robbe-Grillet. Mr. Perec spares no detail in his extensive inventory of things, . . . neo-barbarian knickknacks, para-scientific bric-a-brac . . . which obsess his possession seekers and which, as brilliantly paired (and brilliantly translated) words, will fascinate his readers. Highly recommended." Arthur Curley

Library J 93:1502 Ap 1 '68 200w

"[This novel] won the fashionable Prix Renaudot, which guaranteed it an extensive readership largely among those who only read the annual 'literary prizes.' . . . Jerome and Sylvie are the victims, but—Perec makes it clear—not really the dupes of the consumer society. Like most addicts, they know they are wasting their lives. It is a genuine theme of the sixties. But Perec's insight into the problem is not rewarding enough. Deprived of dialogue which could give direct signals of the state of mind of his characters, the author makes the fatal mistake of repeatedly telling you what you are supposed to think about them. More than once, you have the feeling he does not understand them sufficiently. In this world, of what the French would describe as 'Americanized Parisians,' there is a complex fabric of confusion and anguish which this novel barely touches." Peter Lennon

N Y Times Bk R p32 Je 16 '68 400w

"The couple sketched in this wistful, brilliant, and accurate short novel . . . happen to be French, but they are true for any country in the affluent West. . . . M. Perec leaves it to the reader to decide whether the couple's destruction is due to that peculiar idealism 'taste,' or to greed, or to social snobbery, or to a wicked society. The work succeeds as much because of the author's restraint as because of his original, profound, and humane concept."

PEREC, GEORGES—Continued

The translation is unfortunate; the language is certainly not French, but the style is not quite English."

New Yorker 44:158 My 25 '68 200w

Reviewed by Elizabeth Easton
Sat R 51:46 Ap 13 '68 500w

PEREZ, NORAH A. Strange summer in Stratford; il. by Robert Ihrig. 176p $4.75 Little

68-21175

"The setting is Stratford, Ontario, home for the last 12 summers to a renowned festival featuring noted actors in Shakespeare. Thirteen-year-old Jenny rebelliously accompanies her parents to Stratford for a summer which her father plans to spend writing a book about the modern Shakespearian theater. Jennie soon, however, becomes fascinated by the theater and its workings, by the actors she meets, including a boy her own age, and by the town's creative, vital atmosphere. Suspense is created by the mysterious persecution of the leading actor's family and threats against the theater itself. . . . Age ten and up." (Book World)

Best Sell 28:173 Jl 15 '68 80w

"The glamor of the theater plus the excitement of a mystery form an intriguing blend in this entertaining story, fourth winner of the publisher's Canadian Children's Book Award. . . . How the mystery is solved, with Jenny playing an important role, climaxes a tale notable for its lively and authentic picture of Stratford and for its colorful characters." P. G.

Book World p20 O 6 '68 160w

Reviewed by L. P. Scanlon
Commonweal 89:287 N 22 '68 40w

"A good bet to please a variety of reading interests. Fans will enjoy the mild mystery, with the circumstantial evidence properly larded in at the obvious places. Theater buffs and future tragediennes will like the backstage local color and intimate glimpses of stage and stars. Those familiar with Shakespeare will enjoy a whole story about the famous Canadian theatre devoted to his works. And girls will like the doubting Jenny who moves the story along with the humor, imagination, and charm that 13-year-olds are expected to be blessed with. . . . The story sustains interest throughout." R. S. Bender
Library J 93:[3324] S 15 '68 150w

PERKINS, BRADFORD. The great rapprochement; England and the United States, 1895-1914. 341p $7.95 Atheneum pubs.

327.73 U.S.—Foreign relations—Great Britain. Great Britain—Foreign relations—U.S. 68-16870

"This book describes Anglo-American relations in the two decades before World War I.

[The author seeks] to give a rounded treatment of . . . the shift in American sentiment which was to be so important after Europe went to war—and to explain whence it came.

The main themes of this book were presented as the Commonwealth Fund Lectures in American History for 1965." (Pref) Chapter bibliographies. Index.

"Perkins has an excellent eye for literary, social, and cultural detail as he recounts the myriad ways in which closer ties were formed between England and the United States. Overall, his newest book is not only the most comprehensive treatment available of the great Anglo-American rapprochement but also perhaps the best single analysis of those background factors which would help to make possible the eventual American-Entente association in World War I." N. G. Levin
J Am Hist 55:669 D '68 200w

"While much of this story . . . has been told before, Perkins rightly regards 'the years of settlement prior to 1903 and the years of consolidation thereafter . . . [as] parts of the same whole.' We are inclined to take Anglo-American cooperation for granted, forgetting the points at issue and tension—in Alaska and Panama, the Caribbean, the Far East, and elsewhere—which existed little more than half a century ago. Mr. Perkins writes of these problems and their resolutions. . . . This is a valuable study; Mr. Perkins succeeds in presenting a wealth of detail without making the mistake of substituting data for understanding. It is recommended for public and academic libraries." B. S. Vault

Library J 93:2494 Je 15 '68 200w

"A profound, witty history of the development of Anglo-American friendship. . . . Mr. Perkins recalls a host of half-forgotten matters (the Hay-Pauncefote Treaty, Venezuela), and makes them as memorable as Sherlock Holmes' dog that did not bark in the night: they were all quarrels that did not occur."

New Yorker 44:183 S 28 '68 140w

PERLE, GEORGE. Serial composition and atonality; an introduction to the music of Schoenberg, Berg, and Webern. 2d ed rev & enl 166p $7 Univ. of Calif. press

781.4 Twelve-tone system. Composition (music) 61-7526

This is a study of twelve-tone and atonal music, revised from the previous edition (BRD 1963). Some sections "have been completely rewritten, others revised somewhat; most of the new material deals with the music of Berg. A new appendix illustrates and classifies all possible pitch collections discussed in the chapter on 'Simultaneity.'" (Library J) Indexes to basic definitions and compositions.

"The first edition proved to be a major work. Perle, a significant composer, has . . . [reevaluated] earlier concepts and [added] 39 more musical examples. The value of the book is substantially increased by pertinent aesthetic commentary. All aspects of 'classical' serial composition are considered in detail. . . . [The book] is most immediately important to theory and composition students, but the partial analysis of 65 major works will prove useful to pupils of music literature also. . . . It belongs in all music collections." Choice 5:970 O '68 100w

Reviewed by Barbara Henry
Library J 93:3143 S 15 '68 120w

PERLMAN, MARK, jt. auth. Health manpower in a developing economy: Taiwan, a case study in planning. See Baker, T. D.

PERLOFF, HARVEY S., ed. Issues in urban economics; based on papers presented at a conference; sponsored by the Com. on urban economics of Resources for the future, inc.; ed. by Harvey S. Perloff and Lowdon Wingo, Jr. 668p $15 Resources for the future; Johns Hopkins press

330.9173 Cities and towns—U.S. Municipal government—U.S. U.S.—Economic conditions 68-15454

"The purpose of the volume, as stated in the preface, is 'to provide a broad overview of the state of the arts, in its introduction; a more intensive description of the key areas of urban economics, in the papers and comments; and clear paths into the literature that has accumulated in the areas, in the form of selected readings appended to each paper.' The book has four major divisions: the urban community within the national economy; intrametropolitan development; the urban public economy; and policy issues. The first three divisions contain three to five papers each with a discussion at the end of each division; there is one paper in the last division." (Library J) Chapter bibliographies. Subject index. Name index.

"Few reasonably inclusive discussions of the various aspects of urban economics are available, and, as such, this collection of papers serves as a useful and updated complement to [W. R.] Thompson's Preface to Urban Economics [BRD 1966]. A selected readings list after each paper, together with the documentation contained therein, can yield a good initial bibliography for the field." Choice 5:1178 N '68 70w

"Each of the papers is written by an expert in the particular area. To my knowledge, this is one of the most complete and thorough studies available in the field of urban problems. This book is not for the casual reader but should be made available for anyone seriously interested in the subject. Highly recommended for medium-sized and large academic and public libraries and any other library that collects material on urban economics." D. E. Thompson

Library J 93:2233 Je 1 '68 190w

PERMAN, DAGMAR HORNA, ed. Bibliography and the historian. See Joint committee on bibliographical services to history

PERNOUD, REGINE. Eleanor of Aquitaine; tr. by Peter Wiles. 286p pl $6.50 Coward-McCann

B or 92 Eleanor of Aquitaine, consort of Henry II, King of England 68-14734

Keeper at the Archives Nationales in Paris, the author has written a biography of the woman who was wife of two kings, queen of France and of England, and mother of two kings, Richard I and John. Annotated bibliography. Index. First published in 1965 under the title Aliénor d'Aquitaine.

Reviewed by Maurice Adelman

America 118:585 Ap 27 '68 270w

"[In this biography] Regine Pernoud shows [Eleanor] sympathetically as wife, lover, mother. . . . [This] is interesting reading even in the chapters where armies tangle, families are disrupted and the threads of the narrative tend to snarl. The bibliography is informally written and is confined to sources available to Mlle. Pernoud, but gives no help to the young adult who might want to pursue reading on this or related subjects. The index is adequate. End papers are helpful. . . . On the whole, [the translation] reads well." Sister Mary William

Best Sell 28:15 Ap 1 '68 600w [YA]

"Regine Pernoud makes it clear that in writing about the misty days of the 12th century, informed guesswork must fill in large undocumented crevasses. Occasionally her twin desires to be accurate and to be readable lead her (or her translator) into some clumsy expediences. . . . But such irritations are too minor to break the fascination of the story, or to spoil our delight in a woman who played a dominant role in politics and literature. . . . who defied an emperor, threatened a pope and ruled her twofold kingdom with the utmost lucidity, and control." P. O. Marsh

Christian Science Monitor p9 Mr 14 '68 700w

Reviewed by M. L. Birmingham

Commonweal 88:302 My 24 '68 90w

Reviewed by Helen Jacob

Library J 93:2136 My 15 '68 70w [YA]

"This book which won the Prix Historia is good popular history. Miss Pernoud has created a generally factual but consistently romantic portrait of one of the world's most fascinating women. . . . Though I would question some of Miss Pernoud's judgments, one must recognize that popular history forces an author to generalize to an extent uncomfortable for the scholar and it may be that the work has suffered in translation. . . . There are excellent photographs but a bibliography which is valueless. Although this book can be recommended for general libraries Eleanor still awaits a scholarly biography." L. M. Berger

Library J 93:2232 Je 1 '68 200w

"Throughout the book [Miss Pernoud] frequently turns aside from Eleanor's own career to provide remarkably clear vignettes of the people around the queen. Eleanor is very much her heroine; she traces her life story in considerable detail. . . . [However] in her eagerness to rescue Eleanor from the reproach of promiscuity, Miss Pernoud's judgment occasionally falters. . . . [She] is technically at fault in trying to deduce more from the formal phraseology of documents than it was intended to contain, and she also has an irritatingly cinematic trick of breaking off her narrative at the end of a chapter and beginning the next with a descriptive set-piece which leaves the reader rather at sea. But these are minor blemishes in a book which is not intended as a scholarly treatise."

TLS p248 Mr 14 '68 280w

PERRAULT, PIERRE. On the origin of springs; tr. by Aurele LaRocque. 209p $15 Hafner pub. co.

551.4 Springs

67-15311

A "translation (the first ever into English) of the earliest important work in hydrology." (Choice)

"Perrault was one of the founders of a French tradition in matters hydraulic which still continues; his treatise is a splendid example of 17th-century environmental science. LaRocque's introduction is too brief. His notes are excellent in clarifying the scientific issues, but too many of them deal with the finer points of translation and could have been omitted."

Choice 5:372 My '68 100w

"The study was the first quantitative demonstration—albeit crude—that precipitation is adequate to account for the flow of springs and rivers. . . . The translator has leaned toward the literal rather than the interpretative translation in order, he says, to avoid reading into his statements more than Perrault knew or intended. Soil scientists will be fascinated by a section (pp. 78-81 of the translation) that describes Perrault's expansion of Magnanus' studies in capillary rise, flow in unsaturated media, and demonstration that passage of salty water through soil does not—as many ancients maintained—remove the salt. The translator suggests that Perrault deserves a place as a precursor of soil scientists. This is an important book. . . . Its appearance in English is a tribute to the diligence and scholarship of the translator." J. H. Feth

Science 159:72 Ja 5 '68 800w

PERROTT, ROY. The aristocrats; a portrait of Britain's nobility and their way of life today. 285p $6.95 Macmillan (N Y)

301.44 Nobility. Great Britain—Social life and customs 68-23641

A staff writer on The Observer examines the role of the aristocrat in England as landowner, politician, leading businessman, and social figure. He traces pedigrees, coats of arms, the feudal protocol that still persists, and the way titles are acquired. The London season and the mysteries of Clubland are also dealt with. Index.

"[The book] is full of tidbits that even those who think they despise a pyramided society find so appetizing—anecdotes of eccentricity, archaic survivals from a medieval past, the care and feeding of a London clubman, the U-tongue, the power and powerlessness of the Queen. But all the time Mr. Perrott is examining with skill the results of considerable research, entertaining us into an understanding of a complex influence on British life. . . . For the most part [he] presents his findings, suggests a conclusion or two, but abstains from verdicts." Pamela Marsh

Christian Science Monitor p11 Ag 29 '68 440w

"Mr. Perrott spots, as a good reporter, that . . . upper-class distinctions exist. But he is unable to explain it. . . . He is (although no intellectual) a member of the intelligentsia—even in England a rather classless class. If you are classless you by definition are ill-equipped to understand about class. . . . Mr. Perrott met a great deal of mock-modesty on his visiting rounds while writing this book. . . . The really awful thing about his good, unpretentious but over-expensive book is how fascinating it is. But then a book about the last days of the dodos would be fascinating too, if anyone had bothered to go and interview them. Come to think of it, dodos might have told the reporter just about as much about themselves as Mr. Perrott's living relics did to him."

Economist 227:v Ap 27 '68 600w

Reviewed by K. T. Willis

Library J 93:4555 D 1 '68 180w

Reviewed by V. S. Pritchett

New Statesman 75:615 My 10 '68 2100w

Reviewed by Christopher Booker

N Y Times Bk R p22 N 10 '68 650w

Reviewed by J. K. Hutchens

Sat R 51:32 N 2 '68 470w

"Mr. Perrott, with sharpened pencil and amateur sociologist's net at the ready, has hunted [the British peers] like some elusive herd, possibly of unicorns, he suggests. That seems a touch too romantic. . . . Moreover, the herd Mr. Perrott has been chasing hardly seems as rare (they number over a thousand head) or as shy as all that. . . . The constitutional and political significance of the peerage is something Mr. Perrott will probably be accused of treating in too cavalier a fashion. But short of sufficiently emphasizing the need for some kind of revisionary chamber, which recent events in Parliament have frighteningly underlined, he has probably got it about right. . . . The book's conclusion is that the British will go on demanding an aristocracy because it serves as a keystone to the class system they love. Mr. Perrott thinks the peers still have a future, and for all their new willingness to meet the common man it has probably never occurred to them seriously to doubt it."

TLS p308 Mr 28 '68 800w

PERROTTET, PHILIPPE. Practical stage make-up. 96p il col il $8.50 Reinhold 792 Make-up, Theatrical 67-16976
This book describes "the purpose of make-up, the basic equipment and materials needed, and . . . how to set about achieving a successful result." (Publisher's note) Index.

"This handbook [contains] both an interesting review of makeup practice in the British theater and a number of useful suggestions on application and design not usually found in such brief material. Makeup described . . . is based on supplies manufactured by Max Factor, Ltd., and Lechner, making the book less useful for American actors. As a text in make-up, this handbook cannot compare with [R.] Corson's Stage Makeup which must remain the standard in the field. . . . [This] however, has 46 plates (6 in color) which make it a useful addition to a theater collection."
Choice 5:642 J1 '68 100w

"A good first book on the subject, simple and up to date, and with a useful index." A. G. Owen

Library J 92:4172 N 15 '67 140w

PERRY, JAMES M. The new politics; the expanding technology of political manipulation. 230p $4.95 Potter, C.N.

329 Politics, Practical 68-17536

A senior editor of the National Observer examines some "campaigns in which politicians have used new techniques to influence, and sometimes manipulate, the American voter. Among the . . . techniques [described] are the uses of huge amounts of money, careful advance planning based on a series of sophisticated polls, the use of computers to isolate potential ticket splitters, and a completely professional approach to the use of television. Mr. Perry describes the rise of the political-management firm, . . . and he speculates that in a few years every major political campaign in America will be managed by this kind of professional." (Publisher's note) Index.

"[This] is an account, considerably enriched by hindsight, of six recent hard-slugging campaigns involving, among others, Reagan, Romney, Lindsay and the gubernatorial brothers Rockefeller. . . . [The author describes what] happens when the nuts and bolts are all firmly screwed together and aimed squarely at the electorate. . . . He saw, and explains, how a total unknown named Milton Shapp, . . . routed the entrenched Democratic machine in Pennsylvania for the gubernatorial nomination, how Nelson Rockefeller won his 'impossible' victory in 1966, how his brother Winthrop in the same year became the Republican governor of Arkansas with nothing more on his side than an IBM 1401 computer. . . . Perry foresees campaigns that, long before 1984, will be scheduled by computer and laid out by the critical path method." Mark Strage
Book World p3 Ap 21 '68 600w

"Perry writes that he is disturbed by the growth of the 'New Politics.' He fears that it is a threat to the traditional party organization and that it will supplant party politics with the politics of personality. But this is not the greatest evil. The 'New Politics', with its methodology of mind molding, borders on being unethical. In his conclusion [Perry] makes some suggestions which can save the American political system. Although written in a journalistic style, the book is a valuable addition to the growing literature on the American political system and is recommended without reservation for public and academic libraries." J. J. Fox

Library J 93:1907 My 1 '68 220w

Reviewed by Raymond Fletcher
New Statesman 76:320 S 13 '68 350w

Reviewed by Grant McConnell
N Y Times Bk R p3 Ag 4 '68 700w

"Mr. Perry's reach so far exceeds his grasp that his book, not totally without interest and utility, leaves the field for a study in depth of 'computerized politics' entirely open for a pioneer study. . . . His samples are arbitrarily chosen and not always critically studied. British readers who know nothing of the old California 'open primary' system or of the role of 'propositions' (i.e. legislative proposals bypassing the legislature and submitted to a referendum) will be baffled by what they are told here (to be just, most Americans outside California are equally baffled). Other examples can only be described as naive."
TLS p1099 O 3 '68 320w

PERRY, RICHARD. The world of the walrus. 162p pl $5.95 Taplinger 599 Walruses 68-11021

This study of the life cycle of walruses discusses "their geographical range, their anatomy, food, mating and family life. . . . The book includes a map giving the distribution of walrus herds [and] black-and-white photographs." (Library J) List of scientific names. Bibliography. Index.

"A sober yet exciting book. Perry has combed natural histories, reports, diaries, and journals as well as the literature on polar expeditions. He traces the earliest records of the walrus to the present. . . . This work certainly is greatly needed. It is scholarly without being technical. It is written in a clear, easy style. It is rich in examples and ecological in its thinking. Suitable for a general audience or students of zoology and conservation. . . . No comparable book has been written."
Choice 5:988 O '68 150w

Reviewed by M. L. Blackwell
Library J 93:2679 J1 '68 160w

"[The author] has ably synthesized information on the animal's life from its birth as a 100-150 pound calf, which dislikes the water . . . to its death among the ice floes at the age of 20 to 30 years. . . . Perry analyzes his source material carefully. Despite a few lapses, the book is a fine source of information on an unusual, fascinating, and endangered species. It is well illustrated." V. H. Cahalane
Natur Hist 77:89 N '68 400w

PERSISTENCE and change: Bennington college and its students after twenty-five years [by] Theodore M. Newcomb [and others]. 292p $9.95 Wiley

378.743 Bennington College. Attitude (Psychology) 67-12567

The senior author "studied the effect of the college experience on personality and attitudes of Bennington College students in the 1930's. Information was obtained from over 90 percent of these same students 25 years later. The follow-up findings are reported together with a psychological and sociological analysis of the Bennington College community in the early 1960's." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by David Riesman
Am J Soc 73:628 Mr '68 1600w

"The section dealing with adaptation to norms is probably the weakest in the monograph. . . . An attempt is made to demonstrate that students who came to Bennington with 'incongruent' attitudes changed more than those who were congruent on arrival. Students who fell in the top third of a measure of unconventionality were called 'congruent' and those in the lower third, 'incongruent.' . . . As is well known, the use of 'extreme groups' is methodologically unsound. . . . As a whole, the research is well done. Some will object to the lack of methodological sophistication. . . . Others will object that the findings are not tied to other related research on college values and personality changes. . . . Then, too, this reviewer had trouble keeping straight in the second half of the monograph which particular sample . . . was being referred to at various times. More importantly, the sample completion information for these various groups was not provided. Finally, and the authors are aware of this limitation, Bennington College is hardly typical. . . . In spite of these and other limitations, the Bennington studies will be as invaluable as they are unique to students of attitude change."
Am Soc R 33:319 Ap '68 1400w

"Newcomb, [is] one of America's best known psychologists. . . . Major findings are: (1) a remarkable persistence of the earlier personality and social attitude changes over the 25 years; (2) considerable evidence that many graduates created for themselves post-college environments (family friends, and work or community situations) that reinforced the values they had when they graduated; (3) that Bennington College in 1960, although still politically liberal, placed more emphasis on esthetic and the individualistic intellectual values than it did in the late 1930's; (4) that major subgroups existed at Bennington in 1960 and these groups had a very substantial impact on the psychological and social functioning of their members. Most of the 90 tables are easy to grasp and many a psychology and sociology major can profit from the study of this book."
Choice 4:1286 Ja '68 170w

Reviewed by S. H. King

Harvard Ed R 38:384 spring '68 1150w

"Personality and Social Change [BRD 1943, was] Newcomb's pioneering study of the Bennington of the 1930's. [His current work] is a pilgrimage to this historic site; the dust jacket rightly proclaims the earlier Newcomb a classic. Time must determine whether the classic revisited will attain comparable venerability, but as a significant contribution toward understanding the interaction between student and ethos its credentials cannot be questioned. . . . [The book] has something important to say about dropping out, and about the complicated business of matching students and environments. The implications for higher education are there; more often than not the authors leave the reader to draw his own moral. . . . [This] may not be the easiest reading for one unfamiliar with the subtleties of the analysis of data, with the formulation of one after another intricate hypothesis, and with the testing of these by means of contingency tables. . . . But the evidence is here, recorded fully and clearly, analyzed meticulously. And its import is clear." J. G. Needham

J Higher Ed 39:351 Je '68 1150w

PERUTZ, KATHRIN. Mother is a country; a popular fantasy. 154p $3.95 Harcourt

68-12594

"Dr. Marya Poup is as beautiful as she is clever, thinks in footnotes and teaches at a university; she has a love of power, . . . [an extravagant] sexual imagination, . . . and an anemic friend, John Scudley, who works in a supermarket and wants to curl up in her arms and die. Until he can achieve this translation, he is, among the detergents and the steaks, humble and life-denying; the little man as little woman. Their mutual acquaintance, a cinematic priest, they seek out periodically to give point to their longings." (N Y Times Bk R)

Reviewed by John Thompson

Commentary 45:73 Ap '68 440w

"It is one of the reviewer's more depressing jobs to record that a writer of Kathrin Perutz's stature should have squandered her gifts on a novel as unpleasant as [this]. Her subject, which I take to be an attack on a sick society, is promising enough if not original. . . . [But] throughout the book Miss Perutz uses symbols like clubs, to crack you on the head. Perhaps in her emetic images, her irritating footnotes, her approach to characters as dreary vessels of fantasy, she is satirising not only her subject but her style, in the current American tradition of writers such as John Barth. If so, she has failed. An unpleasant treatment of a depressing subject is perfectly allowable in fiction, but only when it is informed . . . by passion as well as talent." Janice Elliott

New Statesman 75:769 Je 7 '68 350w

"With style and aplomb [the author] handles men the way male writers handle women—like planked steak. . . . Despite its caustic and orgiastic humor, the book breaks on [a] surprising reticence. The greed which is the essence of the society Kathrin Perutz mocks does not go far enough, and instead of apostasy there is violence of a rather ordinary kind. Father Niemans is left as temptingly intact as an unguarded Brinks truck, and John and Marya are snuffed out without, after all, having driven Hugh Heffner into the arms of the editors of Harper's Bazaar. Marya Poup, with her footnotes and rude fantasies, is a gorgeously energetic character, and it is chastening to see that even now, Bing Crosby survives her." Marian Engel

N Y Times Bk R p30 Mr 10 '68 500w

Reviewed by R. A. Sokolov

Newsweek 72:82 Jl 22 '68 170w

"It's been tried before, the shock exaggeration, the Mailer-like purple patches, the Lichtenstein blow-up of the admissable myth, the take-off of donnish style—Miss Perutz nags at every turn with academic footnotes, Eng. Lit. quotes and jokey Johnsonian sentences. The pity is not that Miss Perutz, who is enormously talented and bright, should think this the best way to protest about American society: the pity is that in spite of its lurid and often entertaining content, her novel should leave the reader so cold and uninvolved. The passion has become an etiolated, fresh-frozen commodity, overcooked by cleverness into a meal which tastes as little like the real thing as the sizzling image in a commercial."

TLS p612 Je 13 '68 370w

PETEREC, RICHARD J. Dakar and West African economic development. 206p il maps $8.75 Columbia univ. press

386 Dakar, Senegal. Africa, West—Economic conditions 67-19651

"To give an understanding of the role of the port within the political and economic framework of present-day West Africa, the author examines the physical base, the historical development, and the political evolution of West Africa. . . . Consideration is given to such factors as the port's transportation links with the hinterland and to the vitally important peanut industry. From the material gathered here . . . [he attempts to describe] the forces which are in the process of shaping the newly emerged political pattern of that area of Africa." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"A highly specialized study of the interplay of economic and geographic forces in economic development which emphasizes the geographic aspects. While the title suggests a broader focus, the text concentrates, for the most part, on the relationship of the port of Dakar to the development of Senegal and former fellow-members of French West Africa, notably landlocked Mali. The style is clear if somewhat repetitious. The bibliography concentrates on official publications."

Choice 5:1184 N '68 60w

"In this useful monograph—that might have appeared more properly in a scholarly journal but which is nonetheless welcome—Professor Peterec, of Bucknell University . . . [describes] the effects that the development of newer ports—Port Etienne and Nouakchott, Mauritania; Bathurst, Gambia; and Abidjan, Ivory Coast—may be expected to have on Dakar's future. He concludes that although its relative role is decreasing, Dakar will continue to be a great bunkering center and an important port. For special collections." Louis Barron

Library J 92:2763 Ag '67 160w

PETERS, ELLIS. The grass-widow's tale. 205p $4.50 Morrow

68-19033

"Bunty Felse feels like a grass widow when her police inspector husband goes off to London on a case and her college-age son seems too preoccupied to come home for her birthday. Feeling lonely, she visits a pub by herself for the first time and accepts a drink and a drive home from a distraught young man who says he has just been jilted. Bunty's compassion turns to horror when she discovers a girl's corpse in the trunk of the young man's car." (Library J)

Best Sell 28:104 Je 1 '68 100w

Reviewed by M. K. Grant

Library J 93:1506 Ap 1 '68 80w

"A fast-moving chiller which girls, especially, will find hard to put down." Sumika Yamashita

Library J 93:2739 Jl '68 150w [YA]

"A compassionate and suspenseful story, written with great insight." A. J. Hubin

N Y Times Bk R p51 My 26 '68 80w

TLS p760 Jl 18 '68 80w

PETERS, F. E. Greek philosophical terms; a historical lexicon. 234p $7.95 N.Y. univ. press

103 Philosophy, Ancient—Dictionaries

67-25043

"The book defines and translates key terms used by pre-Christian philosophers up to the time of Proclus, with special references to the writings of the philosophers as they developed nuances and new meanings for the terms. Entries are arranged in dictionary style." (Publisher's note) English-Greek index.

"Peters has tried, with diacritical terms and over citing and cross-referencing, to construct a facile handbook. The degree of difficulty depends on the user's sophistication. Students from the sophomore level up will find explanation and review. Recommended for philosophy collections."

Choice 5:464 Je '68 60w

Christian Century 84:1496 N 22 '67 20w

"[This book] is a series of historical essays of varying length, each dealing with a single term. Their value lies in the store of precise references to primary sources which they contain, and scholars and students will find them helpful when memory fails. Peters . . . has given historical comment, however, which often leaves much to be desired. Subjects of massive controversy, for example, the nature of the Deniurge, tend to receive the barest and most dogmatic treatment, with little or no indication given to the reader that alternative, and sometimes more widely accepted, interpretations exist. As for standard terminology, many of the elucidations are accurate and helpful, but others are less so." T. M. Robinson

PETERS, F. E.—Continued

Library J 92:4420 D 1 '67 160w

PETERS, KEN. Your book of tape recording; with drawings by Victor Kelly. 57p $3.25 Transatlantic

621.389 Tape and wire recorders—Juvenile literature [68-83442]

"A brief history of the evolution of the magnetic tape recorder and a . . . description of the recording process and typical machines serve as background for the main topic . . . which is things to do with a tape recorder: games, hobbies, and recording music as professionals do. . . . Grades seven to eight." (Library J)

"References to models and accessories by European manufacturers and to prices in pounds and shillings are not very helpful, but persistent readers can find American equivalents at local stores. With little theory or technical performance information in the book, this is an adequate book for beginners interested in applications." O. V. Fortier
Library J 93:[3324] S 15 '68 110w

"It is a terrifying prospect that Mr. Peters envisages for 1986. . . . Thirty-two channel tapes will sound in every home; and mindwave recorders will preserve dreams and innermost thoughts. But this is terrifying only to the middle-aged; Mr. Peters is writing for the young in years, let alone in heart. They will lap it up. The guidance on choosing and operating a tape recorder today is also exactly what they want."

TLS p452 My 19 '66 80w

PETERS, R. S. Ethics and education. 235p $4.25; pa $2.25 Scott

370.1 Education—Philosophy. Ethics 67-13943

This "is an abridged version of a book published under the same title in England last year. It attempts to apply certain principles of moral and social philosophy to certain problems of education." (Harvard Ed R)

"[Peters] intended his book as 'an introductory textbook in the philosophy of education in the field of ethics and social philosophy,' i.e., both for teachers and for students of philosophy. Peters expects criticisms from both types of reader; that his book is too abstract to solve any 'concrete substantive problems of the classroom' and that it is too loosely argued to clinch any philosophical points of disagreement. . . . The undeniable clarity of his presentation, his extensive knowledge of the literature, and the sound common sense of his views cannot conceal the fact that the arguments are far from conclusive. If this knowledgeable and lucid writer appears to fail in satisfying the requirements of either hard-headed teachers or students of philosophy, the suspicion arises that his objective was excessively ambitious. Perhaps it is impossible to satisfy the demands of both hard-headed teachers and students of philosophy within a single short book covering the whole field of ethics and social philosophy." Kurt Baier

Harvard Ed R 37:700 fall '67 1300w

"'Philosophy of education' was for long one of the more dismal subjects on the curricula of teachers' training colleges. . . . In recent years the subject has been given a brighter look; philosophy conceived of no longer as ideology, but rather as an activity of analysis and explanation, is now being applied to the theoretical problems of education. The leading exponent of this new approach is Professor . . . Peters of the London Institute of Education. [His new book] is at the same time sophisticated, sceptical . . . and morally concerned (as befits an educationist). It is bound to be influential: indeed one can hardly believe that people will be able to go on talking about 'the nature and ends of education' in future without taking account of what Professor Peters has to say."

TLS p862 S 15 '66 750w

PETERS, ROBERT L. Songs for a son. 76p $4.50; pa $1.95 Norton 811

66-23985

"This sequence of poems 'celebrates Richard, the poet's son, who died at the age of four.' (Choice)

"If one wishes labels, this book belongs to the 'confessional' school of poetry (Sexton, Plath, Snodgrass, Robert Lowell). It also happens to treat of one of the most difficult subjects for a whole book—bereavement. . . . There is a restrained intensity of grief that gives the separate poems dignity. They do not shout in the exhibitionistic way that mars much confessional verse; they seem always to be saying more than the poet quite permits the words to express. . . . An important achievement, but as a personal document and as poetry." Choice 4:1244 Ja '68 130w

"This is a sensitive, moving book of enduring memory; recommended to any public or college library." Kay Smith

Library J 92:587 F 1 '67 140w

PETERS, ROBERTA. A debut at the Met, by Roberta Peters with Louis Biancolli. 86p $3.50 Meredith

782.1

67-26179

"This is a partial autobiography of the [singer] . . . who made her debut with the Metropolitan Opera Company [in 1950] at the age of 20 when she substituted on a few hours notice for an indisposed star as Zerlina in Don Giovanni. . . . The span of coverage is limited to the seven years of Miss Peters' life from the time she dropped out of junior high school to the moment she stepped on stage for the very first time. . . . All her activities had one focus, the opera." (Library J) "Grade seven and up." (Best Sell)

"An inspiring story of hard work and long years of sacrifice and struggle. Fine for young girls who ambition a singing career."

Best Sell 27:394 Ja 1 '68 100w

"Conversational in style, somewhat egotistical in tone . . . this book may serve as a career incentive for a few, a Cinderella story for others, and the fulfillment of a school assignment for the majority of readers. To music lovers it will seem superficial, as there is little probing below the surface or into the motivations of the people mentioned." H. B. Quimby
Library J 92:4617 D 15 '67 160w

PETERSON, HAROLD L. The book of the Continental soldier; being a complete account of the uniforms, weapons, and equipment with which he lived and fought; with three tech. contributions by Detmar H. Finke and Marko Zlatich; and special il. by H. Charles McBarron, Jr., Clyde A. Risley, and Peter Copeland. 287p $12.95 Stackpole co.

355.8 U.S. Army—Military life. U.S. Army—Ordnance and ordnance stores. U.S.—History—Revolution
67-27697

"Each chapter deals with a separate group of items which were not only a part of the Revolutionary soldier's daily life and experience, but which dictated in large measure the manner in which the war was conducted. . . . Illustrations include a number of . . . [drawings of] the details of construction and appearance of the articles discussed." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"One of those relatively rare books that should please the military historian, the history 'buff' and collector, and the more casual reader all alike. . . . The sketches of three able military artists . . . of uniforms and military paraphernalia well supplement photographs and contemporary illustrations. The chapter on the regimental organization of the Continental Army, by Detmar H. Finke and William Watson, does not quite measure up to the rest of the book; in it there are small deficiencies, such as an absence of clear discussion of the Continental regiments of 1776, . . . and a larger lack of the perspective that might have set organizational problems into their military and social context. But no other book so richly brings together so much material on the life of the Revolutionary soldier."

Choice 5:932 O '68 170w

"This is a scholarly but pleasantly readable, well-illustrated volume. . . . The direct expository writing, the numerous photographic and other illustrations combine to provide information about the dress, equipment, utensils, organization, music, colors, and so forth, giving an overview of the American Revolution in detailed relief. Although most of the photographs have appeared in other books written by Mr. Peterson, they are well selected. . . . Value of the book as a reference is enhanced by the footnotes at the end of each chapter. . . . The book is attractively compiled and printed." L. R. McCauley

Library J 93:2845 Ag '68 230w

PETERSON, RICHARD A., Jr. ed. System, change, and conflict. See Demerath, N. J.

PETERSON, ROGER TORY. A field guide to wildflowers of Northeastern and North-Central North America; a visual approach; arr. by color, form, and detail, by Roger Tory Peterson and Margaret McKenny; il. by Roger Tory Peterson. 420p $4.95 Houghton

582 Wild flowers 67-13042

This book offers shortcuts to identification that make it easier to recognize flowers by sight. The book is divided into six main color sections, keyed by corner tabs. The family to which each species belongs is indicated by a symbol placed alongside the family name in the text. The book covers the area east of the 97th meridian. Glossary. Index.

Reviewed by Edward Weeks

Atlantic 221:119 Je '68 650w

"Almost 1300 of the most obvious or prevalent wildflowers of the area are included. The illustrations, both colored and black and white, are of high quality for their purpose, the text is simple and explicit and, praise be, the whole work is of a size that easily slips into the pocket or pocket book. Highly recommended." E. C. Hall

Library J 93:2472 Je 15 '68 200w

"Peterson has provided a welcome addition to his 'Field Guide' series with this new volume. . . . [It] offers beginners an easy picture-matching method for recognizing flowers. Unlike the usual botany book this guide is not arranged in the traditional order of plant relationships. . . . Field marks can be easily recognized in the numerous color and black-and-white plates. A brief analysis of each family is also included."

Natur Hist 77:74 My '68 100w

Reviewed by D. M. Glixon

Sat R 51:48 My 18 '68 70w

"Peterson's clear visual sense of how the unfamiliar is to be recognized is as useful here as it has been for decades in the recognition of birds. The book's apparatus and organization are a model of how to do it; the drawings are good, but there is an air of skimpiness in the use of color that is a disappointment."

Sci Am 219:268 S '68 60w

PETERSON, WALTER SCOTT. An approach to Paterson. 217p $6 Yale univ. press

811 Williams, William Carlos—Paterson 67-24510

"In his introduction Mr. Peterson contrasts the attitudes of William Carlos Williams with those of Ezra Pound, T. S. Eliot, and Puritanism in general. Williams's own view, Mr. Peterson believes, is that man's 'loving and imaginative "marriage" to the particulars of his local world can ultimately save him from the death-in-life of "Puritan divorce".' In this light Mr. Peterson sees [Paterson] as a poem of epic proportions that demonstrates the tragedy of the 'Puritan divorce' and the necessity and beauty of human 'marriage' to life at concrete and sensual levels." (Library J)

"A full-length study of Williams's Paterson has long been overdue, but now that it has appeared in the form of an undergraduate essay published in the Yale College series, one wonders whether it was really necessary. I do not mean to deny the merits of this study: it is systematic, astute in bringing to bear Williams's aesthetic and philosophy, and except for occasional lapses, mature in tone and style. The difficulty is that it does not fill a critical vacuum. . . . Furthermore, Mr. Peterson's general argument is not strong. . . . [This] is really more of an introductory study than a critical milestone." L. S. Dembo

Am Lit 40:418 N '68 250w

"Peterson is a Yale graduate of the class of 1966. His approach . . . is that of straightforward explication—more or less section by section—in which difficult passages are explained, allusions identified, thematic continuities traced. . . . This approach lacks . . . the critical discrimination that might insist more strongly on the difference between a passage that succeeds and one that fails; since Peterson sets out to justify every bit of the poem, no such critical discrimination is practiced. . . . There is too much taking of Williams' will for the deed, though Peterson makes many accurate and sensible comments about the organization and meanings of Paterson. Recommended for collections on modern poetry."

Choice 5:344 My '68 200w

"The book is well written. The author's scholarship is meticulous, and his insight is keen. . . . [His] detailed examination of the work reveals the underlying consistency of the poet's expression of his themes." Walter Waring

Library J 92:4158 N 15 '67 200w

PETITE, IRVING. Life on tiger mountain. 183p $4.95 Doubleday

B or 92 Farm life—Washington (State) 67-19072

The author of The Elderberry Tree (BRD 1964) here describes "life on a farm in the Cascade Mountain foothills of Washington. . . . In twenty vignettes [he] traces his life from a misplaced urban habitation during his youth, to his present contented existence with nature." (Best Sell)

"The book preaches a philosophy of procrastination, letting live and making do, reminiscent of Henry David Thoreau. . . . The story is rewarding, not only if the reader is a frustrated Thoreau or 'Green Acres' type, but also it is worthwhile just to experience a humorous and pleasant mixture of a 1960's equivalent of 'Poor Richard,' Mark Twain, James Thurber and the 'Cracker Barrel Philosopher.'" D. F. Sharpe

Best Sell 28:361 D 1 '68 330w

"Certainly not anti-social, [the author] has refused all steady work and prides himself on being 'independently poor'; everything on the farm is secondhand, and he even eschews new clothes; yet he complains that almost nobody calls him 'Mr.', even at the university. Technically, Mr. Petite shows little discipline in his writing. . . . Recommended to the perceptive." Karl Brown

Library J 93:3778 O 15 '68 170w

PETRIE, ASENATH. Individuality in pain and suffering. 153p il $5 Univ. of Chicago press

155.2 Pain, Suffering. Personality 67-20578

The author, a British psychologist, "has studied individual differences in response to pain. In this book she reports that tolerance of pain can be predicted from performance in non-pain-producing situations. She postulates a central regulation of perceptual experience, including pain, that operates by augmenting or reducing sensory intake. The predictor task involves kinesthetic aftereffects." (Science) Bibliography. Index.

"[Dr. Petrie has found that] people who are able to endure pain relatively easily are also 'reducers,' they tend to perceive incoming sensation of all kinds in all modalities in a reduced way. . . . Those less able to endure pain, 'augmenters,' perceive the world in a magnified way. Dr. Petrie reviews this unusual behavioral generality by discussion of her own and other's experiments and observations with delinquents, psychotics, alcoholics, and neurological patients. She then develops some fascinating hypotheses of direct relevance to personality psychology and social science as well as to psychiatry. Recommended for psychology and medical collections." George Adelman

Library J 92:2590 J1 '67 250w

Reviewed by Charles Rycroft

N Y Rev of Books 11:16 J1 11 '68 1000w

"This book fails to redeem its promise. . . . Inasmuch as only a small section of the book concerns pain, the title misleads those who would look to it for a systematic investigation of individual responses to pain. [Even with] exasperating faults, this book cannot simply be dismissed. The clinical insights are intriguing, sometimes even brilliant; they generally make good sense. The promise of those insights obliges the author to have refined her techniques, replicated her results, expanded her sample groups, and pinned down the generality of the kinesthetic aftereffect. She has not met those obligations. The appearance of the book may stimulate others to perform with the required rigor the definitive search for individuality in the regulation of sensory input." P. S. Holzman

PETRIE, ASENATH—Continued

Science 158:1558 D 22 '67 900w

PETRIE, JEAN. The earth; il. by David A. Hardy. 96p $4.95; lib bdg $3.71 Watts, F.

550 Earth—Juvenile literature 67-26379

This book "deals with physical geography, describing . . . the formation and structure of the earth, its physical features and climatic regions." (TLS) Index. "Grades four to six." (Library J)

"[This book is] oversize, copiously illustrated, and appears to be directed principally to the anxious-parent market. . . . [Its] British origin title is very much in evidence, especially in its allusions to place names. Further, the illustrations . . . are generally poor, and the organization of the contents is arbitrary, although a three-page index provides access to the text. . . . The Look-It-Up Book [by S. Simon is] better organized and better illustrated than The Earth, but substantially less interesting when children's encyclopedias provide more information . . . frugal librarians may reasonably decide to forego [this book]." Janet French

Library J 93:4407 N 15 '68 90w

TLS p1164 N 30 '67 70w

PEYREFITTE, ROGER. The Jews; a fictional venture into the follies of antisemitism; tr. from the French by Bruce Lowery. 512p $7.50 Bobbs

67-23034

This story revolves around Saul de Goldschild, a wealthy Jewish baron, and his fiancée, Osmonde de N., a Catholic. "Although the two are passionately in love, Osmonde's snobbish mother objects and with the aid of . . . other bigots digs up vicious anti-Semitism. At the same time Osmonde is being instructed in Orthodox Jewish customs by Saul's mother; and another friend is discovering in the course of his researches that all the great families of the West have Jewish origins. All of this takes place against a background of Parisian high society." (Publishers' Weekly)

Reviewed by Oscar Handlin

Atlantic 221:140 F '68 450w

Reviewed by Elie Wiesel

Book World p7 D 31 '67 1650w

"Jews are not the only ones to receive short shrift at the hands of the author of that biting satire on the Vatican [The Keys of St Peter, BRD 1957]. For instance, Catholic writers like Mauriac and Rops are accused of shedding crocodile tears or turning Jewish martyrdom to Christian advantage (there is just enough truth in this to stimulate the reader's basest instincts, as well as a sting in the tail, for the accusation is made by a Jewish speaker). . . . Peyrefitte, who has been called an industrialist of scandal, has merely seized yet another opportunity to exercise his talent as backbiter and mischief-maker royal. . . . For him, the Jewish condition will always remain a special case distinct from the human condition. . . . [His] book can only be fully understood . . . when placed against a specifically French background that spans the centuries." Renee Winegarten

Commentary 45:27 Ja '68 2000w

"It is very understandable that this novel created a stir in France when it appeared in 1965. Peyrefitte . . . has written a very clever book which satirizes the folly of hating Jews and the foibles of Parisian society. . . . The novel's narrator, George Sarre . . . contends that the collapse of anti-Semitism will come about through onomastics—the study of names [and] some of the most illustrious family names are paraded before the amused (or outraged?) reader—among them those of President de Gaulle and Premier Reynaud, President Kennedy, Fidel Castro, and Hitler. The book is not all light reading. It is laden with a formidable amount of Talmudic lore and Jewish practices, which are only interesting up to a point. The pace is often irritatingly slow. The humor is barbed and outrageously funny. Recommended." S. L. Simon

Library J 92:4525 D 15 '67 220w

Reviewed by Thomas Rogers

New Repub 158:34 F '68 1300w

"Mr. Peyrefitte's intention is not to dramatize the folly of anti-Semitism, but, as the late Alfred Rosenberg might have done, to re-invoke it by ferreting out all those secret Jews among the top families of Europe. Beyond its 'satirical' intention Peyrefitte's novel has no other distinguishing marks that I can detect: his style is unremarkable; his humor is not robust; his wit is jejune and awkward; and his introduction of fictional subplots concerning a research project about hidden Jews and the daily rituals of an orthodox Jewish family, has all the subtlety of hardcore pornography. . . . Indeed, it is only as scandal that his book works at all, but I believe all the name-dropping only helps to make just the opposite point from the one he believes himself to be making." R. M. Elman

N Y Times Bk R p38 F 25 '68 800w

Newsweek 71:64 Ja 8 '68 650w

PEYTON, K. M. Flambards; il. by Victor G. Ambrus. 206p il $3.95; lib bdg $3.86 World pub.

[68-123692]

In this novel set in the early twentieth century in rural England, "Christina, an orphan, goes to live with her uncle in Flambards, a decaying mansion in the hunting belt. Uncle Russell . . . has been crippled in a hunting accident and now lives vicariously in the exploits of his elder son Mark. The younger son, Will, breaks a leg in the first chapter and retires thankfully from the field. He is a boy of the new age, dedicated secretly with all his being to the world of flight. Between the two worlds is Christina, who loves hunting but hates the mindless world of the hunters." (TLS) "Age twelve and up." (Christian Science Monitor)

Best Sell 28:326 N 1 '68 80w

Reviewed by Madeleine L'Engle

Book World p13 D 29 '68 180w

"A rousing good tale, unashamedly for entertainment only, with not a whisper of advice, or wisdom in all its romantic pages. . . . [It is] a tale in the Daphne du Maurier tradition. Noble mansions crumble into decay, cruel foster-fathers fling their crutches and their weight about, there is a hint of horse-whippings, motherless heiresses and arranged marriages. Miss Peyton handles all this purple drama with great flair and conviction." P. M.

Christian Science Monitor pB11 N 7 '68 80w

Horn Bk 44:701 D '68 170w [YA]

Reviewed by Naomi Lewis

New Statesman 74:600 N 3 '67 310w

"It is perhaps the principal limitation of K. M. Peyton's work that she lacks [the] saving grace of humour. In [this] very fine novel she rends the reader's nerves with the sufferings of her heroine, and always legitimately, for Christina grows up into a difficult world. Just possibly the picture would not have been less authentic if the author had stood back and smiled, albeit wryly, at her creation. Mrs. Peyton is an accomplished story teller. She is also a social historian. Flambards, which has a country scene in Edwardian days, is a story of two worlds, one dying, one struggling in its birth-pangs. . . . The choice of title suggests that Mrs. Peyton sees the house as the key to her story, and so in a way it is. . . . The symbolism is not labored. . . . [This is] an exciting tale, a convincing view of a vanished society, and shows too the timeless spirit of courage and resolution in the young heroine growing up to love and purposeful life in the face of daunting difficulties." TLS p1155 N 30 '67 340w

PFÄNDER, ALEXANDER. Phenomenology of willing and motivation and other phenomenologica; tr. with an introd. and supplementary essays by Herbert Spiegelberg. 98p $5 Northwestern Univ. press

142 Philosophy, Modern

67-16717

"This book contains seven related essays: four by Pfänder . . . translated by Spiegelberg, and three by Spiegelberg himself. The pieces by Pfänder are 1) the 'Introduction' to his Phenomenology of Willing; 2) his essay, 'Motives and Motivation'; 3) the 'Introduction' to his Logic; and 4) a brief, posthumous text dealing with the relation between phenomenology and the theory of knowledge. Spiegelberg's three essays include an introductory analysis of Pfänder's philosophy and significance and two appendices on Phenomenology." (Am Soc R) Bibliography.

"The impression left by the entire volume is that it does not succeed in giving a meaningful context into which the translated essays might fall and that it will be of use only to those already interested in phenomenology, for filling out in part the historical scope of the phenomenological movement. However, it finds no tertium quid which might render the presented insights cogent to those for whom the technical language is indeed a foreign language." Herbert Lamm

Am J Soc 73:778 My '68 550w

"The essays are more philosophical than sociological in tone, since both Pfänder and Spiegelberg are philosophers not sociologists. The book will not interest most sociologists, but it could be read profitably by those interested in the phenomenological approach, the sociology of knowledge, or meta-sociology. Its value is two fold: First, the analyses of 'willing,' 'motivation,' 'striving,' 'cause,' 'ideas,' 'logic,' 'knowledge,' and a number of other concepts are all penetrating, and to at least this reader, exciting. Second, and perhaps more important, the essays reveal what is entailed by the phenomenological method when rigorously applied. . . . Perhaps the single most intriguing idea in this volume is discussed by Pfänder but developed by Spiegelberg, namely the possibility of Phenomenological Anthropology. Certainly this short piece is the most audacious in substance." C. W. Smith

Am Soc R 33:171 F '68 440w

Choice 5:1142 N '68 220w

"Spiegelberg's translation makes it possible for the English-speaking world of psychology and psychiatry to study the thought of one of the foremost exponents of the phenomenological approach to man. . . . This little work warrants a spot in all special collections in psychology, psychiatry, and the related fields." Louis De Rosier

Library J 92:4513 D 15 '67 160w

PHELAN, JOHN LEDDY. The kingdom of Quito in the seventeenth century; bureaucratic politics in the Spanish empire. 432p maps $10 Univ. of Wis. press 918.66 Ecuador—Politics and government.

Spain—Colonies 67-25940

"In this study of the kingdom of Quito and its audiencia—the supreme organ of government in the overseas kingdoms, both a judicial tribunal and a political and administrative board—Mr. Phelan focuses on the period when Dr. Antonio de Morga was president of the tribunal, from 1615 to 1636. . . . [Part I] recounts geographical, economic, and social problems faced by the audiencia. . . . Part II studies local judicial and administrative problems. . . . [Part III studies] the origins, development, and . . . the effect on Quito of the visita general system by which the central authorities periodically evaluated the conduct and performance of magistrates overseas." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"The book is a thoroughly mixed bag that careful research and considerable clarity in writing cannot genuinely unite. It should perhaps be read as a series of disparate essays; as such it represents both contributions of great value and a thoroughly interesting experiment in applying some of the speculation on decision making by sociological philosophers. . . . Inevitably in a book as anarchic, experimental, and rich in ideas and material, each reader will follow the threads of his own interests. . . . [Phelan] may, I think, misunderstand the nature of the very warp and woof of Latin American society, with its companionable accommodations on the surface. We shall be debating the ideas in this book for a long time." Woodrow Borah

Am Hist R 73:1686 Je '68 450w

Reviewed by R. G. Wesson
Am Pol Sci R 62:1006 S '68 650w

"[This is] the only modern history of . . . the colonial ancestor of present-day Ecuador. . . . The real value of this well documented, carefully researched, and original monograph is its insightful approach to the 17th-century bureaucracy which governed the worldwide Spanish Empire. As such [it] both supplements and corrects the earlier findings of C. H. Harling's The Spanish Empire in America [BRD 1947]. Any college library interested in colonial Latin America and early modern governmental structures will want this book."

Choice 5:400 My '68 90w

"The author certainly succeeds in his avowed aims of relating the imperial bureaucracy to all major segments of Spanish American society. . . . Phelan also makes systematic and valid comparisons between what happened in Quito with developments in other regions. . . . He compares and contrasts some characteristics of the colonial Spanish American bureaucracy with those of the civil service in nineteenth and twentieth-century British India—a comparison interesting enough. . . . although . . . one with the Portuguese bureaucracy in colonial Brazil [would be] more valid. . . . The book abounds in picturesque incidents. . . . Well illustrated, printed and produced, [it] is warmly commended to all those concerned with the colonial history of Spanish-America, to which it makes an important, illuminating and original contribution."

TLS p1044 S 19 '68 750w

PHELPS, ROBERT, ed. The literary life; a scrapbook almanac of the Anglo-American literary scene from 1900 to 1950; comprising pictures, gossip, homage, warnings and clues. —together with laurels, letters, lists and whispered asides,—the whole reverently garnered and arranged by Robert Phelps and Peter Deane. 244p il $15 Farrar, Straus

808.88 English literature. American literature 68-27533

Arranged chronologically, this volume "devotes four pages to each of the fifty-one years under consideration. On each double spread there are three or four pictures, usually of authors but occasionally of book illustrations or jackets. The major literary products of Great Britain are listed under these headings: fiction, verse and drama, and nonfiction. The year's books in the United States are arranged in the same way. . . . A section called 'Related Events,' includes deaths, important books in other languages, important events in other arts, literary gossip, and assorted quotations." (Sat R)

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams
Atlantic 222:158 D '68 70w

"Who could object to so pleasant a book? One asks only because the compilers seem to be apologizing for it at some length in their preface, confessing their amateurism, enthusiasm, love of books and writers, their awareness that it lacks high seriousness and so on. So what? Even the most high-minded of critics will enjoy relaxing with it now and then, musing over the pictures. . . . and nodding appreciatively at the confrontations produced by the accident of simultaneity. Amateurish it may be, but a great deal of work has gone into it. . . . Along with the hardcore literary news comes an abundance of photographs and quotations and these are very well chosen." Robert Brown

Book World p3 N 10 '68 550w

"This is definitely not a reference book. [It is] amusing, appreciative, informative within a limited range, and pleasant to skim. . . . The data supplied are disparate and inconclusive, precluding its use as a reference work. It is profusely illustrated, but being on soft paper, the pictures are not bright. This is a pleasant aid for occasional reminiscing, but in no sense a working bibliographic tool. At its price, it cannot be recommended for libraries having to conserve funds. As a fairly expensive gift book, it would please any reader of American and English literature." Jerrold Orne

Library J 93:4144 N 1 '68 110w

N Y Times Bk R p6 N 17 '68 60w

New Yorker 44:248 N 16 '68 190w

"The volume is both entertaining and useful. For me, the pictures, which the compilers have obviously sought out with diligence and ingenuity, are the most entertaining part of the book. With a few exceptions, they are not the pictures we are accustomed to see, and that is where the fun, comes in. . . . From the point of view of usefulness, the volume's chief defect is the lack of an index. . . . Nothing can be easier than to find fault with the editors for including this and excluding that, and I can't see much point in engaging in that sport." Granville Hicks

PHELPS, ROBERT—Continued

Sat R 51:29 N 2 '68 1050w

Time 92:105 N 29 '68 80w

PHENOMENOLOGY and existentialism; ed. by Edward N. Lee and Maurice Mandelbaum. 268p $8 Johns Hopkins press

142 Phenomenology. Existentialism 67-15598

"The essays in this volume [with one exception] originated in a lecture series at The Johns Hopkins University, the aim of which was to provide a moderately advanced introduction to [these two] movements in modern philosophy. The approach is basically historical, and each essay focuses on a key figure and the tenets of his thought. Essays are included on Brentano, Husserl, Heidegger, Sartre, and Merleau-Ponty, and the relation is shown between the movements they represent and the dialectics of Hegel and Marx, Wittgenstein's method of linguistic analysis, psychology and psychoanalysis, and the 'alienation of man.'" (Publisher's note) Index of names.

"The essays are clearly written, they avoid technical jargon and obscurities, and they will be intelligible to serious undergraduate students of philosophy. The emphasis is on epistemological and metaphysical rather than psychological and social issues. . . . Since the essays attempt to introduce the movement in a genuinely philosophical rather than a merely cultural perspective, they constitute an excellent introduction to the subject and provide a much needed alternative to the many popularized and superficial introductions utilized at present by undergraduates."

Choice 5:635 J1 '68 150w

"The murkiness of some of the lectures . . . will hardly recommend their subjects to English-readers—even though the original thinkers are more lucid than are their commentators. However, the volume deserves to be available in every good academic library and in the larger public collections because of its salutary intention, Ricoeur's Gallic overview of his German subjects, Kline's (perhaps not entirely serious) scholarly virtuosity, and Chisholm's sure penetration." J. M. Perreault

Library J 92:2580 J1 '67 200w

PHILBY, KIM. My silent war; the Soviet master spy's own story. 159p $5.95 Grove

327

68-24822

Memoirs of "the former British Secret Intelligence Service officer who fled to the Soviet Union from Beirut in 1963, and was subsequently revealed to have been, over many years (including two in Washington in liaison with the C.I.A. and F.B.I.) serving the Russians." (N Y Times Bk R)

Reviewed by Edward Weeks

Atlantic 221:118 Je '68 400w

"'At last it can be told' announce the book-sellers' blurbs referring to the recent publication of the 'master spy.' . . . I see no reason why it had to be told at all. We have all seen and heard many accounts of the various far-flung connivings of H. A. R. Philby from many journalistic sources, some of which were far better than this one. Philby spends much time analyzing the complex and confusing structure of British Intelligence with great emphasis on the personalities involved. His 'picky' characterizations of his colleagues often put him in a light that I'm sure he never intended. . . . The best part of the book, however, is at the end where he describes his involvement with the escape of Burgess and Maclean before they could be arrested." F. J. MacEntee

Best Sell 28:107 Je 1 '68 200w

Reviewed by Edwin Tetlow

Christian Science Monitor p11 Je 6 '68 430w

Reviewed by Alan Pryce-Jones

Commonweal 88:634 S 20 '68 1150w

"There is a diabolical plausibility about much of Philby's book. [It is] essentially a Kremlin-inspired propaganda exercise. Much will depend on what kind of people read it. The cognoscenti will spot the occasional error of fact (Miss Rebecca West and Mr Chapman Pincher have already done so); and the averagely well-informed reader, with some sense of moral values, will perceive Philby's purpose, and be nauseated by it. But it is a fair bet that in present-day, nihilistic Britain, a fair sprinkling of readers will relish the polished cynicism of Philby's narrative and think it all rather clever. . . . In partially achieving his purpose, Philby has been abetted in no small degree by Mr Graham Greene, who has graced the book with an extremely laudatory preface that reaches the ultimate in moral topsy-turvydom."

Economist 229:64 O 12 '68 280w

Reviewed by Norman Horrocks

Library J 93:2249 Je 1 '68 400w

Reviewed by Alexander Werth

Nation 206:669 My 20 '68 1650w

Reviewed by Anthony LeJeune

Nat R 20:505 My 21 '68 550w

Reviewed by David Wise

New Repub 158:36 My 25 '68 410w

Reviewed by Colin MacInnes

New Statesman 76:398 S 27 '68 340w

"The time-span of the book is Philby's eleven years in [the British secret] service; the rest is frills. . . . [He] is only prepared to reveal to the Western public what is already known to the Western secret services. His work is intended to embarrass them, not to enlighten anyone. . . . But if Philby's memoirs are primarily propaganda, that does not mean that they are necessarily untrue. . . . His judgment of situations is generally sound. His pen-portraits (some of which are devastating) are—with certain notable exceptions—exact and just. The historical narrative is accurate too. What we have to ask ourselves as we read this story is not, 'is this true?'—it is—but rather, 'is this all?' . . . If bigotry has formed and egotism has protected Philby's remarkable way of life, let no one suppose that either the one or the other has destroyed either his intelligence or his charm. . . . He is the sharpest of observers as he was the neatest of operators. He writes with sophistication, elegance, and irony." H. R. Trevor-Roper

N Y Rev of Books 10:6 My 9 '68 1050w

"I knew and worked with [Kim Philby] in Washington in the years 1949 and 1950—the years when his professional achievements for the Russians were at their height. . . . This book is an exceptionally faithful reflection of the man as [I and my colleagues] knew him. It is literate. It is wryly, sometimes delightfully, humorous. It is charming. . . . It is the work of a man who speaks with great authority of his profession. And it is an equally faithful continuation of what Philby claims has been his life's work. . . . The collaboration of Philby's Russian superiors . . . is discernible, notably in certain orthographic slips. In his version of the Albanian operation, I observe that he is . . . hiding certain facts. On occasion, he is uncharacteristically heavy-handed. . . . In sum, Philby's book, a deft work of professional deception, needs a vast amount of detailed background, if the game he is playing in it is to be understood. Such background is not furnished us." Christopher Felix

N Y Times Bk R p8 My 26 '68 750w

Reviewed by K. S. Giniger

Sat R 51:29 Ag 3 '68 250w

Time 91:108 Je 7 '68 160w

TLS p1087 S 26 '68 1500w

PHILIPPAKE, VARVAIA. See Philippaki, B.

PHILIPPAKI, BARBARA. The Attic stamnos. 171p il pl $26.90 Oxford

738.3 Vases. Greece—Antiquities. Painting. Greek [67-77632]

This study contains a "classification of the two-handled jars which are conventionally called 'stamnoi'." The author discusses their uses; they include the so-called Lenaeon vases much discussed by historians of Greek religion and here Dr. Philippaki . . . suggests that the representations refer to private celebrations in the autumn and not to either the Lenaea or the Anthesteria. In the main part of the book, stamnoi from 560 to about 420 B.C. are grouped in more than fifty classes. . . . [that is, they] show affinities in potting as distinct from painting. A final chapter . . . [tells of the] workshops which employed a number of different painters and also of painters who wandered from workshop to workshop." (TLS) Indexes.

"A thorough catalog of Attic stamnoi from the mid-sixth to the later fifth century that is a major contribution to the study of Greek painting, clearly establishing the preeminence of the author in her field. In addition to bringing together previous references to the vase, generally peripheral, brief and widely scattered, the book offers detailed analyses of the shape, its evolution and uses, the problem of the name, and the various hands involved in its manufacture and decoration. In the latter regard, Philippaki's comments on style and the relationships between painters, among whom are some of the most famous Athenian artists, are extremely enlightening and of exceptional value. . . . Three useful indices. Chapter divisions make the author's classifications and comments easily available. No library pretending to decent coverage of Greek archaeology can be without it."

Choice 5:107 Mr '68 200w

"One might fear that shape-studies would make good reading only for specialists, but that is not so here. Reasons are the writer's special combination of common sense and charm and the subject's combination of sturdiness and elegance. . . . Many first-rate painters liked stamnoi, and the general level is high. The greatest pleasure in following the descriptions lies in appreciating the joint contribution of shape, figure scene and ornament. The plates help by giving side views as well as front and back and by making the pictures big enough to see." E. B. Harrison

Class World 61:401 J1 22 '68 290w

"The present study is an extremely careful and detailed classification. . . . [and] a mine of detailed information. It is a pity it was not made easier to use. There is no index of pottery features; for instance, the architecture of the stamnos is completed by the lid and some lids have survived, but the only way of finding them is to read the whole book. There is no list of the text figures, which have very useful drawings of profiles. . . . [And] the photographic plates have no captions so that one has to go back to the list of plates and then from there to the text to find to which class any particular vase belongs. No doubt the industrious reader will make his own index and will find that the essential information is all there."

TLS p58 Ja 18 '68 400w

PHILIPS, JUDSON PENTECOST. See Pentecost, H.

PHILLIPS, HERBERT L. Big wayward girl; an informal political history of California. 296p il $5.95 Doubleday

979.4 California—Politics and government 68-17785

Aware of the state's reputation for unpredictability in politics "Phillips a Sacramento political newswriter, here covers . . . [that field] especially in the 1900's, from Hiram Johnson up to Ronald Reagan. . . . He describes gubernatorial achievements as exemplified by Hiram Johnson, Earl Warren, and Pat Brown . . . [and] explains attempts at political influence by extremists of left and right from Upton Sinclair to Governor Reagan." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"[The author] gives more attention to governors and national office candidates than to leading state legislators except for present assembly speaker Jesse Unruh. . . . However, he does not fully explain the meaning of 'wayward' as used in the book's title. After all, a large state with continual infusions of people from the rest of the nation is liable to have many varieties of political beliefs and actions. The text is in good, readable English without bias. The coverage is broad but touches most important political events. It is a good introduction to California politics for general readers and high school students." Marco Thorne

Library J 93:3147 S 15 '68 120w

"An informed and anecdote-sprinkled account, in persuasive language. . . . Phillips notes that ideological battles are traditional to California—that for 40 or 50 years progressives and conservatives have been trading positions of supremacy. The book is broad-gauged dealing with a variety of topics from '30 every Thursday' and other Depression-era political nostrums to California's influential lobbyists and crime investigations, but some of the most interesting writing is devoted to Governors and would-be Governors and Presidents of the last six decades. . . . Even in those sections of the book dealing with extremists and extremism, however, the author abstains from an extremist approach, and his interesting characterizations are more often than not written with a sympathetic touch." L. E. Davies

N Y Times Bk R p33 S 29 '68 500w

PHILLIPS, R. A. J. Canada's North. 306p il col il maps col maps $10 St Martins

917.12 Northwest, Canadian—Description and travel 67-21265

The author writes "about the region and its prospects for the future. He catalogs for the layman the immense agricultural, mineral, and human resources of the north, and indicates the ways in which technology is overcoming the problems of transportation, communication, and economic development. He compares the Canadian achievement in the north with that of the Danes in Greenland and with that of the Soviets in Siberia. Finally, he presents a . . . defense of the decision of the Canadian government to integrate the Eskimo into Canadian society." (Library J) Index.

"Canada's North sparkles with wit and humor as well as history and the current problems of Canada's Northernmost reaches. It should appeal to the advocate of adventure, of pioneering, and frontiering. Providing a panoramic view of Canada's North as a first attempt at an informative narrative on the subject . . . the text is rambling. The explorations appear in choppy sequence. . . . The photographic segment is excellent. . . . [This] endeavor is too broad to encompass all facets in depth, [but] whets the appetite to investigate further."

Choice 4:1314 Ja '68 100w

"[Canada's future] lies in the exploitation of the potentialities of the Canadian north. This is the burden of [this] informed and informative study. . . . Highly recommended for general collections." L. S. Fallis

Library J 92:4413 D 1 '67 170w

PHILLIPS, WILLIAM. A sense of the present. 241p $5.75 Chilmark press

818 67-26207

The "co-founder of Partisan Review, and now Chairman of its Editorial Board [offers a selection of his own] . . . stories, essays, and reviews." (Publisher's note) The pieces included have appeared previously in such publications as Book Week, The Nation, and Twentieth Century.

Choice 5:624 J1 '68 220w

"Mr. Phillips is a tolerant man since he is far more editor than polemicist. His literary and political interests have ranged far and wide in the search for excellence. In the long run, however, his testament will not be this handful of essays and stories but the magazine which, despite its tiny circulation, has both reflected and directed the movement for modernity while also safeguarding the best of the traditional. . . . I found two of the essays quite stimulating—'What Happened in the 30's' and 'Dostoyevsky's Underground Man'—and relevant. As for the others, they remind me of what Christopher Lasch has described as 'the awkward problem, common to all essayists, of justifying the publication in a book of pieces written at different times and for widely different occasions.'" Arnold Beichman

Christian Science Monitor p11 F 21 '68 280w

Reviewed by Stephen Spender

Commentary 45:77 Je '68 1700w

"A more accurate title for this book might have been A Sense of the Present Popular Literary Tastes because Mr. Phillips . . . deals largely with the popular contemporary literature of Genet, Mailer, William Burroughs, Henry Miller, Silone, Sartre, Capote, and Pasternak. He also discusses Dostoyevski, Mann, and Kafka. His scope is broad and he takes in not only issues raised by these writers, but also observations on literary criticism and modern culture. . . . [The three short stories] make passably good reading. . . . Instead of giving a complete sense of the present, even the literary present, Mr. Phillips's book serves better as an index to modern sensibilities and interests. . . . For those interested in the present as it is viewed by Genet, Burroughs, and others, the book will be a necessity and public libraries will want to procure it." Duane Schneider

PHILLIPS, WILLIAM—Continued

Library J 92:4418 D 1 '67 180w

Reviewed by Theodore Solotaroff
New Repub 158:29 Ap 6 '68 1800w

"Cultural generalizing is a dangerous game because it stales so quickly. Several of these essays seem like replays of fifties panel discussions at the YMHA. Another problem is magazine symbiosis: lacking a life of their own, too many of these essays feed on other essays. They feed also on vaguely defined catch phrases. . . . Paradoxically, Phillips's concern with the 'new' distorts his sense of the 'now.' He recognizes only its more blatant manifestations, which he does not seem to like very much but to which he feels he must do justice because younger people like them. Literature sometimes gets lost in the process; books are dealt with primarily as part of a climate. Nevertheless, Phillips occasionally shows that quality which Frank Kermode calls 'clerkly skepticism.'"

N Y Times Bk R p30 Mr 24 '68 250w

PHILLIPS-BIRT, D., ed. Yachting world handbook. See Yachting world handbook

PHILPOTT, A. R. Let's look at puppets; il. by Norma Burgin. 63p $2.75; lib bdg $2.06 Whitman, A.

791.5 Puppets and puppet plays—Juvenile literature 67-26517

The author "describes the kinds of puppet shows put on in the major countries of the world. The coloured shadow plays of China, the large Japanese puppets each operated by three men, the water puppets of Vietnam, the . . . achievements of the Americans are all here." (TLS) Annotated bibliography. Index. "Grades four to five." (Library J)

"Although [this book] presents information not readily available elsewhere to this age group, the treatment is too perfunctory to be useful to serious hobbyists and insufficiently imaginative to attract novices. The illustrations in black, white, and red are attractive, but sometimes irrelevant to the text. Bill Baird's The Art of the Puppet [BRD 1965], though an expensive adult book, really makes the presentation which this volume attempts." M. A. Wentroth

Library J 93:1314 Mr 15 '68 80w

"This could have been a dull book, but it is not; through the local variations we see the unifying elements; the popularity of the Punch figure, half clown half rogue, the importance of the operator's hands, which are the life of the puppet, the dedication of the puppet-makers, and the heartening interest of colleges and schools in puppetry."

TLS p465 My 26 '67 90w

PICASSO, PABLO. Picasso: recent etchings, lithographs, and linoleum cuts [introd. by Kurt Leonhard; biography and documentation by Hans Bolliger; tr. by Norbert Guterman] [Eng title: Picasso: graphic works, 1955-1965]. 144p $15 Abrams

769

67-12685

The selections of work and text cover primarily 'a ten-year span of [Picasso's] experiments with the manifold possibilities of the graphic media and his variations on themes from his own earlier works and those of old masters.' (Library J) This 'is the second in a series of which the first, with a text by the late Bernhard Geiser, [was Picasso: Fifty-five Years of His Graphic Work, BRD 1956].' (TLS) Translated from the French edition, L'oeuvre gravé de Picasso. Bibliography

"No single volume can hope to give more than a brief sampling of Picasso's graphic oeuvre . . . but the present book with its display of versatility and invention in etching, aquatint, lithography, and linoleum cut is a stimulating adventure. The brief text by Leonhard provides minimal technical information about the prints selected and familiar discussion of Picasso's many styles and iconography. [The reproductions] are well printed. There is a list of plates with technical notations, a bibliography of Picasso's graphic work, a checklist of the books illustrated by him. Useful but not an essential acquisition."

Choice 4:660 S '67 140w

"Picasso has addressed himself chiefly to the layman, but specialists will be interested in Mr. Leonhard's stand in the growing controversy between critics concerning the lasting value of his current work. A note of warning to librarians: a few people may be offended by the subject matter of some of the plates. The informative text, thorough bibliography, excellent plates and handsome binding all combine to make this book a worthwhile acquisition by libraries." Jacqueline Sisson

Library J 92:3031 S 15 '67 140w

PICASSO, PABLO. Picasso drawings; text by Jean Leymarie; tr. from the French by Stuart Gilbert. 107p il col pl $7.50 Skira

741.9

67-25116

This volume "contains representative drawings of Picasso's major styles. . . . Fifty-one plates illustrate 60 years of the artist's output—from 1904 to 1963 [and are supplemented with a brief text]." (Library J) Bibliography.

"The reproductions are poor largely because the format is so small, creating extreme contrast and blotchiness. The color plates are wretched by current standards. Definitely not recommended for college libraries."

Choice 5:336 My '68 110w

"Although not intended to be more than attractive monographs written for the layman, the other volumes in this [Taste of Our Time] series, some of which were written by Mr. Leymarie, have informative texts. Not so in this volume. The much too brief 12-page text is only slightly augmented by short stylistic analyses facing each of the excellent quality plates. This book is recommended for libraries not owning or not able to afford a more complete edition of Picasso's drawings." Jacqueline Sisson

Library J 92:4496 D 15 '67 130w

"There are two serious faults with this book. . . . The photography has failed in some peculiar way to give any indication of the quality of drawing to the illustrations, . . . and the very beautiful drawings to be found in the Picasso Museum in Barcelona have been ignored. The idea for the book was splendid, since Picasso is a master draughtsman. . . . The drawings reproduced are largely allowed to speak for themselves, for the textual notes are brief and to the point. Indeed, the book is not bad, but it is not quite the triumph one would have expected from so promising a subject."

Va Q R 44:Lxxx spring '68 130w

PICKARD, TOM. High on the walls; pref. by Basil Bunting. 48p $3.50 Horizon press

821

68-75593

A collection of poems by an English poet.

"Though unsophisticated and sometimes gauche, [these] brief poems occasionally achieve a haiku-like elegance and economy. Mr. Pickard has something to say and says it with powerful immediacy." J. V. Brain

Library J 93:2880 Ag '68 30w

"[Here is] a poet unaffected by Pop. Pickard's poems can be rather unnerving . . . and most of them are pretty rough, but they are hewn and genuine, too. The dialect poems tend to misfire: one about a rape supplied little else but dialect, and the evident phonological relish confuses the point of the poem."

TLS p614 J1 13 '67 140w

PICKERING, JAMES S. Famous astronomers. 128p pl $3.50 Dodd

920 Astronomers—Juvenile literature

68-12812

This book presents the story of astronomy through the lives of the ancient astronomers: "Aristotle, Eratosthenes, Hipparchus, and Ptolemy . . . followed by the moderns: Copernicus, Brahe, Kepler, Galileo, Newton and Herschel. [Index.] Grades eight to ten." (Library J)

Reviewed by F. R. Carmody

Best Sell 28:19 Ap 1 '68 100w

"In each short biography (about 10 pages) the man's view of astronomical truth is stated and quickly followed by 'We know now. . . .'

No scientific background is required of readers.
A good brief but well-written book of general interest as well as bait for beginning star-gazers." Phillip Alley
Library J 93:1328 Mr 15 '68 100w

PICON, GAËTAN. Ingres; biographical and critical study: tr. from the French by Stuart Gilbert. (The taste of our time) 128p col il
$7.50 Skira

759.4 Ingres, Jean Auguste Dominique 67-25117

The dominant themes of this work are "the lack of change in Ingres' style, his sensual or erotic subject matter, his misplaced self-doubt about his greatest paintings and conversely his satisfaction with the least successful canvases. . . . Mr. Picon, a well-known French literary critic, analyzes these phases of Ingres's art through a study of the artist's portraits and nudes." (Library J) Chronology. Bibliography.
List of chief exhibitions. Index.

"There are 52 color plates tipped in so that the picture is available within the text which is discussing it. . . . The major point made, in this heavily punctuated translation, is that Ingres survives because he painted timeless subjects. . . . This is, however, a valuable addition to any art collection for libraries or for the interested student and amateur."

Best Sell 27:387 Ja 1 '68 190w

"An adequate translation with only a few awkward phrases. The interpretation and analysis of Ingres' work tends to be one-sided, traditional, more comparable with writings of 50 years past than contemporary studies. . . .
From the standpoint of research, depth, and historical fact, this publication does not attain the completeness sought for today. . . . A book to consider for a college library but not a necessity due to its narrowness and limited development."

Choice 5:336 My '68 230w

"Mr. Picon's theory on the existence of sur-realist qualities in Ingres's work is especially interesting. Little space is given to straight biography. For informed layman and specialized libraries." Jacqueline Sisson

Library J 93:981 Mr 1 '68 140w

Reviewed by Francis Haskell

N Y Rev of Books 11:17 Jl 11 '68 500w

PIENKOWSKI, JAN. Annie, Bridget and Charlie; an A.B.C. for children of rhymes recollected by Jessie G. Townsend; drawn by Jan Pienkowski. unsp $3.95 Pantheon bks.

821 Alphabet books 67-20212

"The activities of Apt Little Annie, Bad Little Bridget, Curious Charlie, and other allitera-tive boys and girls are narrated in limericks and reproduced in. . . colored drawings. . . .
Grades one to four." (Library J)

"A thoroughly professional job by one of England's leading graphic artists. Purportedly
'Victorian' in style, the art work is big, bright, handsome and thoroughly chic-contemporary—almost psychedelic—in spirit. This said, the Learian limericks 'recollected by Jessie G. Townsend' from Victorian sources are, in several instances betwixt A and Z, thoroughly droll."

S. G. Lanes
Book World pt 2, p42 (children's issue) N 5 '67 50w

"The meter stays crisp, the sentiment uncorny. Bright, refreshingly clean-looking pictures make the most humor." P. M. D.

Christian Science Monitor pB3 N 2 '67
60w

"Though not a kindergartner's ABC, the result is a lively and original, well-designed picture book in which the alphabet advice is used to good effect to amuse slightly older children."

Della Thomas

Library J 92:4607 D 15 '67 100w

TLS p1149 N 30 '67 60w

PIERSON, FRANK C. Unions in postwar America; an economic assessment. 143p $4.95;
pa $2.95 Random house
331.1 Labor unions. Collective bargaining
67-10514

This volume "assesses the economic impact of unions by studying the gains in employee compensation . . . resulting from collective bargaining negotiations in . . . [some] unions and industries in the United States. . . . Pay increases [are evaluated] with respect to four basic criteria: . . . (1) the average gains in earnings in all manufacturing, (2) the prevailing market forces, (3) changes in output per man-hour, and (4) changes in product prices. . . .

On the macro level, the study considers whether the gains achieved by some ten to twelve major unions have been consistent with the national goals of price stability and employment expansion. . . . At the microeconomic level, the work evaluates the extent to which union negotiations have produced results contrary to the outcome expected from a competitive market system." (Am Econ R) Bibliography.

Reviewed by R. R. France

Am Econ R 58:302 Mr '68 1300w

"One of the country's leading labor economists reviews in this slim volume the impact of trade unions on wages and prices in America since World War II. Pierson (Swarthmore) shies away from general conclusions about the effect of trade union power. Starting from a sound theoretical basis, he seeks to determine under what market conditions and under what industrial structures unions did achieve wage gains that were larger than those consistent with prevailing market forces. This approach proves to be highly useful. The book is very readable and is of interest to both graduate and undergraduate students, as well as to the educated public."

Choice 4:1023 N '67 130w

PIKE, DOUGLAS, ed. Australian dictionary of biography, v2. See Australian dictionary of biography

PIKE, E. ROYSTON. "Golden times"; human documents of the Victorian age [Eng title:
Human documents of the Victorian golden age]. 378p il $3.50 Praeger

914.2 Great Britain—History—19th century—
Sources. Great Britain—Social conditions

67-28725

"Applying the same technique that was used in his previous book, 'Hard Times': Human Documents of the Industrial Revolution [BRD 1966, the author has tried to gather] together from both official and nonofficial sources extracts from documents that humanize the dry statistics of the economic historian. . . . [Topics include] juvenile delinquency, degraded domestic service, the condition of women in industry and in agriculture, infant mortality, sanitation and public health, the trades union movement, and sex mores and conduct in the period from 1850 to about 1875 in Great Britain."
(Library J) Index.

"Whenever the reader dips into this anthology of real life stories he is fairly certain to find some fascinating incident or observation. After reading it one feels that one has seen society in the raw and knows what it was like to work in a Victorian factory or workshop, or live in a Victorian town; and the impression is enhanced by some excellent illustrations. But is the feeling really justified? . . . About 65 per cent of the extracts come from a single source—the Parliamentary Papers—and the reports of the various commissions were almost by definition concerned primarily with the pathology of society. Not enough has been drawn from contemporary reviews. . . . Moreover Mr Pike's concern with human interest is apt to lead him to the hard case and the highly coloured episode. The extracts may well be authentic. . . .
but we have no means of telling how representative they are. . . . [The] volume will kindle the imagination of students and enrich their diet, but [it] ought to be balanced by a large dose of historical statistics."

Economist 225:528 N 4 '67 470w

"[Pike] gives the color of reality to this vigorous period that is not found in the ordinary history text. Recommended for high school and college libraries." William Gibelman

Library J 93:186 Ja 15 '68 160w [YA]

TLS p783 Ag 31 '67 480w

PILAT, OLIVER. Lindsay's campaign; a behind-the-scenes diary. 348p il $5.95 Beacon press

329.6 Lindsay, John Vliet. New York (City)—
Politics and government 68-12845

On May 13, 1965, when John Lindsay announced he would seek office as mayor of New

PILAT, OLIVER—Continued

York City, the author, a veteran political reporter, offered his services for the duration of the campaign. This book is a day-by-day account of the political events and campaign tactics until Lindsay's election. Index.

Reviewed by W. L. Lucey
America 118:613 My 4 '68 60w

"The diary form helps recreate the campaign flavor but does not enhance readability and perspective. Despite his position, Pilat was sometimes only on a periphery. . . . Numerous pictures add a valuable dimension." Numerous
Choice 5:683 J1 '68 190w

Christian Century 85:359 Mr 20 '68 50w

"[Mr. Pilat records] the campaign with all of its seriousness, humor, foibles, and the constant, everlasting drudgery and bone-weariness of repetitive rounds of appearances, speeches, personal appeals, and behind-the-scenes activities of the candidates. [His] idea is novel, his style fast-paced and crisp, and the information he reveals is detailed and in many instances new. Recommended as a social document of a bitterly contested election campaign and as a psychological critique of Lindsay the politician." W. C. Kiesel

Library J 93:560 F 1 '68 130w

"[The] campaign has been captured by Oliver Pilat with the candor of a mirror on the morning after. . . . [His] work in the campaign was recorded in a diary; it is relaxed, and direct as a third rail. . . . [He] catches, in passing, the polite murder of the ego in politics. . . . Pilat may have left out a substantive discussion of issues and dallied over personal trivia, but he gives the reader the sight and smell of the political arena." Morris Renek

New Repub 158:33 Mr 2 '68 1050w

New Yorker 44:177 Ap 6 '68 170w

PILCHER, GEORGE WILLIAM, ed. The Reverend Samuel Davies abroad. See Davies, S.

PILKINGTON, F. M. Shamrock and spear; tales and legends from Ireland; il. by Leo and Diane Dillon. 177p $4.50; lib bdg $3.97 Holt 398.2 Legends—Ireland—Juvenile literature.

Folklore—Ireland—Juvenile literature

68-11841

"The reteller of The Three Sorrowful Tales of Erin [BRD 1966] has turned from the hero cycles of that country to the simpler folk tales. Her sources include some of the older collectors of Celtic folklore. . . . Grades three to five." (Library J)

Reviewed by L. P. Scanlon
Commonweal 89:294 N 22 '68 40w

"The retellings, without dialect, have, nevertheless, genuine Irish flavor and rhythm and would be excellent for storytelling and reading aloud. However, 'The Little Bull Calf' lacks the fun and liveliness of Seumas Macmanus's version, 'Billy Beg and His Bull,' and 'The Mop Servant' is so much less humorous and tellable than 'Mollie Whuppie,' Joseph Jacob's English variant, or than the best telling of all—by Walter de la Mare, that they seemed hardly worth including. But these are only two exceptions in a large, varied, and good collection." R. H. V. Horn Bk 44:687 D '68 120w

"Several of the 23 tales are familiar. However, much of the dialect used by the older writers has been eliminated, and the resulting language is easier for today's children and storytellers. The black-and-white illustrations effectively convey the spirit of the tales. This attractive collection is a good extra source of Irish folklore." Clara Hulton

Library J 93:2542 Je 15 '68 100w

Reviewed by Holger Lundbergh
N Y Times BK R p30 S 15 '68 90w

"[This collection] contains some of the more famous, epic tales but concentrates a good deal on simple folk tales of traditional fairy stories such as the quest for the water of life from the well of D'Yerree-in-Dowan, or the Cinderella-like tale of three sisters with the unlikely names of Fair, Brown and Trembling. These stories are all well written, varied and highly entertaining and should appeal to a wide age-group."

TLS D1089 N 24 '66 80w

PILKINGTON, JAMES PENN. The Methodist publishing house; a history [2v] v 1, Beginnings to 1870. 585p il $7.50 Abingdon

655.4 Methodist Church. Methodist Publishing House 68-21894

This volume, "the first of a two-volume work, covers the first century of Methodist publishing in America from 1769 to 1870 . . . [and] deals with Methodist publishing ventures in New York, Cincinnati, Chicago, Baltimore, Pittsburgh, Nashville, and San Francisco." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"Low-priced for its size . . . somewhat drably chronological in its plot, overconcerned with detail, and apparently a 'mere' institutional history, the book is full of surprises. For Methodist publishing brought literacy to large parts of the nation, helped upgrade religious reflection . . . and touched on so many aspects of life that a book about it becomes a worthwhile contribution to Americana."

Christian Century 85:654 My 15 '68 70w

"The author, a member of the staff of the Methodist Publishing House for over twenty years, has had complete access to its records, . . . [which he has supplemented] with material gleaned from other sources, including newspapers, periodicals, and private papers. Effectively selected illustrations add still more flavor to the author's close re-creation of the period. This study promises to be . . . the most comprehensive history of any American publishing house. It is already one of the most scholarly. . . . This work will be of interest to students of American cultural history and the history of Christianity in America as well as of the history of American publishing and of Methodism. . . . The book is handsomely designed, well made, and copiously illustrated." R. D. Harlan

Col & Res Lib 29:519 N '68 550w

Reviewed by W. S. Sparks
Library J 93:3012 S 1 '68 120w

PILNYAK, BORIS. The tale of the unextinguished moon, and other stories; tr. by Beatrice Scott; with an introd. by Robert Payne. 266p $4.95 Washington sq. press

67-17363

A collection of short stories dealing with the impact of the Russian Revolution, written between 1915 and 1927 by the author of The Volga Falls to the Caspian Sea (BRD 1931). The title story concerns the death of a beloved civil war commander who dies as the result of an unnecessary surgical operation ordered by the party leadership. Other stories include Cheshire Cheese, Wormwood, and Above the Ravine.

Choice 5:350 My '68 100w

"Among the Russian writers of the twenties few can have been more talented than Boris Pilnyak . . . [whose stories have been] translated . . . in a hauntingly romantic style. Though a literary modernist . . . Pilnyak also had something in him of the ancient tribal bard. He was a marvelous storyteller, a spell-binder, an enchanted rhetorician. . . . As a writer Pilnyak is obsessed with the contrasts between the rhythm of a generation trapped in a historical cataclysm and the larger rhythms of the life of an entire people. . . . Some of his stories are simply magnificent. There is 'The Bielkowsky Estate,' which describes the leave-taking of an old landowner . . . one feels as if one were thrust into the eye of a maelstrom. . . . [The title story] is one of the most terrifying pieces of prose ever written in the Soviet Union. . . . [For] his boldness in publishing this story . . . [Pilnyak] was shot." Irving Howe

Harper 236:72 Ja '68 600w

Reviewed by J. S. Robotham
Library J 92:4174 N 15 '67 110w

Reviewed by Helen Muchnic
N Y Rev of Books 10:19 Mr 28 '68 900w

"Pilnyak is a masterly stylist [who] describes society at the moment when it has no system and is uncertain of its values. . . . For the most part his stories are somber, not melancholic; but they have the effect of creating in us an almost unbearable melancholy at the thought of what upheaval meant 50 years ago in Russia and what it would mean again, in another time, in another place. Not all the stories concern the Russian Revolution. Several of the most interesting are set against the revolution in China: the devastating 'Story About How Stories Come to Be Written' is set in a very peaceful Japan. Yet they all turn inevitably on the same themes. People are displaced as though by magic, alienated, plundered, exiled. . . . Having delved into Plinyak's stories, it becomes impossible to resist them: every page insists that we read the next." J. K. Davidson

N Y Times Bk R p80 N 19 '67 400w

PINCHERLE, ALBERTO. See Moravia, A.

PINCKNEY, PAULINE A. Painting in Texas; the nineteenth century; introd. by Jerry Bywaters; pub. for the Amon Carter mus. of western art, Fort Worth. 232p il col pl $15; pa $6 Univ. of Tex. press

759.164 Texas—History—Pictures, illustrations, etc. Painters, American. Paintings, American 67-28794

A study of artists who painted events and people in Texas from approximately 1820 to 1880. The author presents "facts about the artists and what they accomplished and the circumstances under which they worked. Because of the great diversity of their paintings, a general chronological order is followed rather than any semblance of style." (Pref) Bibliography. Index.

"Many hitherto scattered or unknown facts have been gathered together in this pioneering study. . . . The wealth of material is astounding; one would not have thought so many practicing artists would have found the frontier life of Texas congenial. There is a short biographical sketch of each artist about whom the author found some information; these sketches have been arranged into chapters which parallel and complement the history of Texas in this period. Approximately 75 artists are discussed; some travelled in Texas for a short time and are already well known; others spent most of their artistic career there and have only received attention locally. . . . Primarily a reference work, the whole nevertheless reads well. A seminal study; no single study of an artist is definitive but by gathering these scattered facts Pinckney has provided groundwork for future studies." Choice 5:767 S '68 160w

"Pauline Pinckney has taught at several universities in the United States and has been consultant on folk arts to the Dallas Museum of Fine Arts. . . . Her book may interest students of American folk art or students of 19th-Century Texas. Genre, landscape, portraits, all are here; the most interesting paintings are those done by primitives rather than by trained artists. The color reproductions in the book are not very clear. For research libraries." Ruth Bertrand

Library J 93:1618 Ap 15 '68 90w

PINE, TILLIE S. The Africans knew, by Tillie S. Pine and Joseph Levine; pictures by Ann Grifalconi. 28p $3.50 McGraw

916 Africa—Juvenile literature. Science—Experiments—Juvenile literature 67-14895

"The authors describe things the Africans knew how to do long ago, tell how the same ideas are used today, and suggest ways the reader can experiment with these ideas. . . . Grades two to four." (Library J)

"The suggestions for the reader are uneven as regards ease of obtaining materials and as aids to understanding the ideas. . . . The illustrations supplement the text well. [This book] is useful for the elementary presentation of scientific ideas, for the suggested activities, and as an aid to elementary understanding of another culture." Isadora Kunitz

Library J 92:3189 S 15 '67 130w

Reviewed by Philip and Phyllis Morrison
Sci Am 217:148 D '67 100w

PINEAS, RAINER. Thomas More and Tudor polemics. 262p $9.50 Ind. univ. press

239 Apologetics. More, Sir Thomas, Saint. Reformation 68-14610

"This study is organized around [More's] Protestant opponents and confined to works that provoked replies from More. A . . . preliminary chapter surveys More's writings on behalf of Henry VIII against Luther and Bugenhagen. His remaining opponents were all English—Tyndale, Barnes, Fish, Frith, and Saint-German. . . . [The author] summarizes their arguments and supplies theological or historical background, but his main emphasis is on the antagonists' polemic treatment of Scripture, history, and logic, with the rhetorical devices used." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"[A] fine historical work."

Christian Century 85:622 My 8 '68 50w

"Littérateurs may be frustrated by the fact that Mr. Pineas has organized the book around individuals in such a way that he fails to group the techniques discussed. Historians and theologians, however, will be grateful for the resulting point-by-point illustrations of Reformation issues as the Reformers and their great opponent saw them. For libraries that can bring themselves to pay the asking price." Genevieve Kelly

Library J 93:2663 Jl '68 180w

PINES, MAYA. Revolution in learning; the years from birth to six. 244p $5.95 Harper 372.21 Child study 66-10657

A journalist looks "at the learning explosion's problems, developments and experts. Maya Pines relates these elements to . . . the raising of a nation's intelligence. Topics include 'Operation Headstart,' the force feeding theories of Carl Bereiter and Siegfried Engelmann, Omar Moore's talking typewriter, the Montessori method, day care, infant research, language and reading." (Publishers' Weekly) Bibliography.

"A passionate, intriguing report on a few of the discoveries made by some . . . educational innovators. . . . Maya Pines is a perceptive observer who combines fluency with a sense of outrage at the irreparable damage done to millions of children by . . . failure to recognize the need for early intellectual stimulation. . . . The techniques described by Miss Pines . . . not only take advantage of the child's changing abilities during the nursery years, but help speed up some of these developmental processes. . . . The innovators do not discourage early reading as 'pushiness' but emphasize the importance of formal instruction in letters and numbers as early as three. . . . Miss Pines' book makes one thing very clear: the techniques she describes so well have been tested and evaluated and they work where standard procedure has failed." Gloria Levitas

Book World p17 O 29 '67 800w

Reviewed by Robert Coles

N Y Times Bk R p14 D 17 '67 900w

"[The author] sketches with force and freshness current approaches to early childhood upbringing. To be sure [her] contending parties—the bad-guy establishment concerned with social-emotional growth, and the good-guy cognitive group seeking intellectual development—keep her rather too busy to consider eclecticism. Just the same, critical comments on Head Start, metaphorical reference to mind-builders and pressure-cooker educators, and crisp reports on latest attempts to fully develop infant ability quite make up for the study's questionable polarity. Above all, capsule biographies of such personalities as that 'voluble redhead' named Nancy McCormick Rambusch remind one that happy is the school of thought that can count on enthusiastic, educated teachers to realize its tenets." John Calam

Sat R 50:74 D 16 '67 150w

PINGS, VERN M. A plan for indexing the periodical literature of nursing; report of a study of the need for bibliographic control of the scholarly record of nursing; with an introd. background chapter by Ellwynne M. Vreeland. 202p il $6.50 Am. nurses' foundation, inc.

610.73 Nurses and nursing. Indexing 66-29223

"This book consists primarily of Dr. Pings's 'working papers' in a three-month study conducted in 1964 to develop a plan for indexing the periodical literature of nursing through the use of the Medical Analysis and Retrieval System (MEDLARS) at the National Library of Medicine. . . . E. M. Vreeland has contributed the first chapter, which discusses trends toward increased quality in nursing and future needs for control of the literature as nursing continues to establish its professional identity." (Am J Pub Health) Chapter bibliographies.

"Dr. Pings's detailed analysis points out the strengths and weakness of MEDLARS. [However] he reaches the conclusion that only ■ system as large as MEDLARS with its wide coverage and in-depth indexing can adequately cope with the literature. . . . As a result of this study the 'International Nursing Index' has been available for over a year and is proving to be the valuable resource that was dreamed of and worked for by a few for so many years. Dr. Pings is to be complimented on his thorough and painstaking study. . . . Although many people will benefit from the results of [it], the book itself will appeal to very few. It is of possible interest to medical librarians, some nursing researchers and archivists, and the few professional and national organizations that may some day consider a similar venture." B. M. Casier

PINGS, V. M.—Continued

Am J Pub Health 57:1883 O '67 500w

Choice 4:1214 Ja '68 260w

"Despite the specificity of the subject investigated, Dr. Pings' volume is of general interest to reference librarians; library educators can use it as a teaching model, and it will serve other librarians contemplating similar studies as a planning guide. Each paper ■ formally organized, beginning with statements of hypotheses, description of study methods, findings, conclusions, and summary; extensive tables and appendices reinforce or demonstrate the points made. . . . When [International Nursing Index] is studied by the historians of the future, Dr. Pings' Plan will be often blessed for the information it contains on the personal and administrative interactions between the several nursing associations and the National Library of Medicine. To criticize Dr. Pings' prose as structurally involved and barren of lightness is valid, but hardly fair; the papers were written to be used as working tools by a committee, not for publication in monographic form." Joan Titley

Col ■ Res Lib 28:286 Jl '67 500w

PINNEY, ROY. Vanishing tribes. 272p il $5.95
Crowell

572 Ethnology

68-13592

"The author of Vanishing Wildlife [BRD 1964] . . . here assembles photographs and brief anthropological data on many of the world's non-industrial cultures, most of them dying or dead. Included are Ainu, Bedouin, Dobu, Hottentot, Jivaro, Lapp, Pygmy, Tlingit, and Watusi, among others. Also included are the Navajo, who, although impoverished, are not really vanishing. . . . There are also sections on the ancient Aztec, Maya, and Inca, and on the Mission Indians of California." (Library J)

"The title is somewhat misleading because the book includes several vanished ways of life (e.g. aboriginal Iroquois) as well as a number in the process of 'vanishing' (or at least drastically changing). . . . Abundantly illustrated, each account gives a four-to-nine-page simple epitome of each group's technology, social organization, and religion. . . . All the accounts are too brief and discursive to be really useful. It is hard to imagine the book adopted for an undergraduate course."

Choice 5:1379 D '68 120w

Christian Century 85:874 Jl 3 '68 20w

"The information is presented in a rather dry, academic style, and the brief index leads more readily to names than to concepts, but the book can be interesting recreational reading for some YA's and should also be useful in school reports." Collin Clark

Library J 93:13339 J S 15 '68 120w [YA]

Reviewed by H. S. Camenson

Library J 93:4662 D 15 '68 220w

"While few groups of men have, as yet actually become physically extinct, Mr. Pinney feels that the loss of culture is the main problem of many tribes of the world. In this book he details the present state of thirty-three threatened tribes in what may well turn out to be their obituary." C. B.

Natur Hist 77:80 O '68 150w

Va Q R 44:clxxx autumn '68 90w

PINO-SAAVEDRA, YOLANDO, ed. Folktales of Chile; tr. by Rockwell Gray; foreword by Richard M. Dorson. 317p $7.50 Univ. of Chicago press

398.2 Folklore—Chile

67-25585

The editor "has selected these tales from his three-volume work, Cuentos Folkloricos de Chile [originally published] 1960-63. . . . The fifty tales included here are divided into six categories: animal tales, wonder tales, religious tales, romantic tales, tales of tricksters and dupes, and cumulative tales. Dr. Pino-Saavedra has . . . annotated the texts, identifying them according to the Aarne-Thompson system and the Spanish-American Index of Terrence Hansen. He describes his informants and shows how the tale-tellers serve as minstrels in the life of Chilean villagers." (Publisher's note) Glossary. Bibliography. Indexes of motifs, of tale types and general index.

Choice 5:783 S '68 130w

"The eminent Chilean scholar . . . has written the initial Latin-American volume in the 'Folk Tales of the World Series' whose general editor is Professor Richard M. Dorson of the University of Indiana. Professor Dorson has written the foreword to this particular book which is in itself an overview study of world folklore. . . . This book is recommended for those interested in folklore; Spanish-reading scholars would probably prefer having the three-volume study, but the present book is a good introduction and the generalist would certainly be interested. Public libraries, community colleges, and university libraries will want to acquire it." W. L. Morin

Library J 93:767 F 15 '68 190w

"[Pino-Saavedra] has here selected the most spectacular and well-told versions. Naturally, the tales reflect, above all, the old Spanish peninsular tradition, recording stories that have long since disappeared from Spain but persist in the imaginations of the descendants of the colonizers. The stories have a full panoply of ogres, tricksters, helpful animals and magic visions—all to delight the child in us. There is . . . an exhaustive set of notes to each tale, tracing its intricate lineage through various cultures."

N Y Times Ek R p39 Ap 28 '68 130w

PINTNER, WALTER MCKENZIE. Russian economic policy under Nicholas I. 291p $8.75 Cornell univ. press

354.47 Russia—Economic policy 67-23067

"Drawing upon unpublished documents in the Soviet archives, Professor Pintner [attempts to reveal] . . . reasons for the failure of Russian economic policy. His analysis indicates that a [combination of] . . . realism and timidity prevented Nicholas I and his major advisers from carrying out reforms of a substantive nature." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"The only flaw in this otherwise important study is its style, which is like that of a dissertation, correct but for the most part undistinguished. However, in spite of its literary shortcomings, this carefully and well researched book is important, for it fills a gap in Russian historiography. . . . A necessary addition to any library with more than a minimum program in Russian studies."

Choice 5:114 Mr '68 90w

"[The author has] sought to provide a balanced appraisal. He has been able to consult documents in the Soviet archives, and this material lends his study depth and authority. . . . Mr. Pintner makes it clear that Kankrin [the Tsar's finance minister for twenty years] did not have any long-term economic programme but lived from one budgetary crisis to the next. . . . Then why did he not endorse the laissez faire philosophy belatedly adopted by his successors after the Crimean War? In his laudable anxiety to be fair Mr. Pintner sometimes strains the evidence and overlooks obvious defects of the ancien régime which Kankrin so typically embodied."

Economist 226:35 Ja 6 '68 430w

PIOTROVSKII, B. B. Urartu; the kingdom of Van and its art; tr. from the Russian and ed. by Peter S. Gelling. 111p il pl col pl $12.50 Praeger

709.39 Art, Ancient

67-28724

This is a study of the art of the ancient kingdom of Urartu, which flourished from the ninth to the seventh century B.C. and occupied much of what is now eastern Turkey and the Armenian S.S.R. The author has provided "an outline of Urartu's history and defined the chief characteristics of its art. By studying all the known objects he has been able to assign them to three distinct stylistic groups. In addition he has included two appendixes;

the longer of these deals with developments in Urartian studies, the other discusses the relationship between Scythian and Urartian art." (TLS) Index. Originally published in 1962 as Iskusstvo Urartu.

Choice 5:476 Je '68 90w

"Professor Piotrovskii, director of Lenin-grad's Hermitage Museum, . . . presents what is primarily a popular survey of Urartean art, and as such, it is well illustrated with good clear line drawings and excellent photographic plates. . . . Most of the scholarly investigations and excavations of Urartean sites and culture have been carried out by either Russian or Turkish scholars and most of the material is inaccessible to the average Westerner, particularly the nonspecialist. Consequently a good, lucid, informative, and well-illustrated survey of Urartu and its art, such as Professor Piotrovskii's book, can only be welcomed by interested readers." A. R. Schulman

Library J 93:177 Ja 15 '68 250w

"Nothing of importance has been overlooked in the text or the accompanying illustrations. These consist of four colour and thirty black-and-white plates supplemented by sixty-five line drawings. F. S. Gelling's translation is accurate, scholarly and very readable. The map takes the form of end papers. Notes to the main text and the appendixes supplement statements in the body of the book and list relevant publications, replacing a bibliography. This short book by the leading Urartian scholar of our day presents the reader with as full an account of these laconic works of art as is possible in the light of available information."

TLS p138 F 8 '68 1300w

PIPES, RICHARD, ed. Revolutionary Russia. 365p $7.95 Harvard univ. press

947.084 Russia—History—Revolution, 1917-1921 68-15641

"In April 1967 more than 24 outstanding American and European scholars met at Harvard University to exchange papers and comments on aspects of the 1917 Revolution. This volume is the semi-transcript of these proceedings. Three categories of papers are included: narrative, such as . . . description of the origin of the Red Army; speculative, dealing with reasons for the Revolution and its success; and those which analyze a special problem, such as the desires of the peasants and urban workers during the first weeks of the Revolution." (Library J) Index.

"Although there is little or nothing that is factually new in the contributions and the subsequent comments, one is impressed by the editor's skill in distilling a series of crisp to-the-point arguments from what must have been an unwieldy body of transcripts of talks and discussions at the conference. At least three pieces are a 'must' to students of Russian history and Soviet politics. 'The Political Ideology of the Leaders of the Petrograd Soviet in the Spring of 1917' by E. H. Carr (and also comments by Henry Roberts and others), and 'The Uses of Revolution' by Adam Ulam. Highly recommended to all college libraries."

Choice 5:672 J1 '68 210w

"[This] volume is an extraordinarily significant one for the specialist. . . . The summarized reactions of the participants allow the reader to listen to interchanges between some of the best informed Western Sovietologists on events which still puzzle many of us. For academic libraries." R. W. Schwarz

Library J 93:1894 My 1 '68 150w

"Maximilien Rubel, the most erudite living student of Marx, argues that it was the historical function of Bolshevism to industrialize Russia, not to introduce socialism. Adam Ulam suggests that in view of its enormous size and resources and the rate of Russian economic growth, Russia would have become a superpower anyway. . . . It is the chief merit of this collection of essays that its contributors, members of the Old and New Left are more concerned with Russia's future than its past. . . . [Not] all of the authors in this book [can be described] as 'Marxists'; some have gone considerably beyond Marxism—or retreated from it, according to one's point of view. . . . The New Left sounds utterly dejected. For Mr. Staughton Lynd. . . the Soviet Union is 'the most discouraging fact in the political world.' . . . [Some of the essays] provide a fascinating study in unreality, the political equivalent of the theater of the absurd." Walter Laqueur

N Y Times Bk ■ p3 Ap 21 '68 750w

PIRONE, FRANK J., jt. auth. The nature of life and cancer. See Favata, B. V.

PISCATOR, MARIA LEY-. See Ley-Piscator, M.

PITA ANDRADE, J. M. Treasures of Spain from Altamira to the Catholic kings; introd. by F. J. Sanchez Cantón [tr. by Isabel Quigly]. 248p pl col pl $29.50 Skira

709.46 Art, Spanish—History. Architecture, Spanish 67-25118

"An art historian at the University of Granada introduces briefly the prehistoric art of Altamira and Castillo, shows the Oriental influences (Phoenician, Carthaginian, Greek), and depicts the Roman heritage, the art under Visigothic and Mohammedan rule, and Romanesque and Gothic developments up to the early Renaissance and to the peculiarity of Spanish art, combining and reworking these various influences and traditions. Architecture, secular and religious, sculpture, jewelry, painting, illumination, textiles, and pottery, are [illustrated]." (Library J) Index of names and places. This is a companion volume to Treasures of Spain from Charles V to Goya by A. Cirici-Pellicer (BRD 1966).

"[This] richly produced volume has 120 illustrations, of which 85 are in color several in fact in fold-out pages, and 4 line drawings. It is a collectors' item and mandatory for libraries of college level and above."

Best Sell 27:378 D 15 '67 250w

"This book does nothing so well as demonstrate the astonishing variety of styles of and influences on the arts of Spain. . . . [The author's] contention that a Spanish national style can be found as early as the 4th century B.C. is, however, questionable, as his discussion of the variety of later styles shows. The title is thus very accurate."

Choice 5:767 S '68 160w

"[This] will [appeal more] to the layman than to the scholar, but the splendor of its color illustrations will make the book desirable for both research and the larger general library."

J. L. Dewton

Library J 93:538 F 1 '68 200w

TLS p645 Je 20 '68 110w

Va Q R 44:cxvii summer '68 230w

PITKIN, HANNA FENICHEL. The concept of representation. 323p $7.50 Univ. of Calif. press

328 Representative government and representation 67-25052

An "examination of the conflicts connected with the term representation—operational vs. institutional, mandate vs. independence, Burke vs. Liberals. . . . [Professor Pitkin] suggests that we 'show a government to be representative not by demonstrating its control over its subjects but . . . by demonstrating that its subjects have control over what it does.'" (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"The relation of 'representing' has been variously interpreted. As to who or what is to be represented, it may be persons, interests, or abstract entities. As to the proper means of representing, the initiative may be seen to lie with the constituency or with the representative himself. As to the test of whether representation actually exists, this has been seen to depend on the existence of certain political institutions, on the possession of authority (the view of Weber and of Hobbes), or on the satisfaction of the actual or potential wishes of the citizenry. These diversities of interpretation have important consequences. . . . This book expounds and analyzes these distinctions with penetrating insight. Its references are not primarily sociological; but, for a sociologist who wishes to reflect on the assumptions underlying the study of representative government it can be very stimulating." Duncan MacRae

Am J Soc 73:639 Mr '68 320w

"A thorough, scholarly, and lucid investigation. . . . No serious student of the problems of our society can proceed without reading this splendid monograph. It is a necessary purchase for all pertinent collections." Jack Van Derhooff

Library J 92:4421 D 1 '67 140w

PITT, VALERIE. Let's find out about the city; pictures by Sheila Gramda. 48p $2.65 Watts, F.
301.3 Cities and towns—Juvenile literature 68-10507

The book "stresses the bustle and variety of city life and the laws and services that keep it running. . . . Kindergarten to grade one." (Library J)

Reviewed by Roderick Nordell
Christian Science Monitor pB4 My 2 '68 50w

"The lively detailed drawings convey far better than does the text the appearance and character of a city. Only because of the illustrations, the book suggests itself as a basis for discussion in kindergarten and first-grade community study units." Linda Slavin

Library J 93:1304 Mr 15 '68 60w

PITTENGER, W. NORMAN. Reconceptions in Christian thinking, 1817-1967. 127p $4.50 Seabury

230 Theology. Church of England 68-11591

The author "reviews the evolution in theological thinking that has taken place in the last 150 years. [He] first describes the climate of theology in the early decades of the 19th century, and then traces the developments that have occurred . . . since, as theology encountered the new emphasis on scientific inquiry." (Publisher's note)

"[Pittenger] is well informed historically and doctrinally. . . . In limiting his scope to the Anglican tradition, however, the author leaves out some undeniably important developments in his survey of changes in the theological world, such as demythologizing and hermeneutics. Pittenger has a facile and accessible style in language a layman can understand, though the appeal of this book may be limited to Anglicans. Unfortunately, one finds no footnote references, index, or bibliography. . . . Occasionally one encounters insights which are very helpful for the understanding of contemporary theology, such as the recognition that the issue of secularization hangs upon the understanding of the doctrine of creation. The book has a specific task which no recent book explores, but it is this specific Anglican concern which will limit its usefulness."

Choice 5:514 Je '68 170w

Christian Century 85:359 Mr 20 '68 50w

PIZARRO, PEDRO. Relation of the discovery and conquest of the kingdoms of Peru. See Glubok, S. The fall of the Incas

PIZER, VERNON. The world ocean; man's last frontier; with drawings by Lewis Zacks. 192p $4.95; lib bdg $4.61 World pub.

551.4 Oceanography—Juvenile literature.
Marine resources—Juvenile literature 67-23360

The author attempts "to explore the ocean world in a meaningful way, and to relate the discoveries to ourselves and our future." (Intro.) Index. "Grades seven to ten." (Best Sell)

"This book, made more attractive by a number of drawings and photographs, tells what man is learning about the ocean depths. . . . The young reader learns of the abundance of the sea, the first steps in oceanography, the tools used in that science, and he reads about some of the new underwater vehicles now being developed. Pizer has given the reader a fascinating look at the oceans." F. R. Carmody

Best Sell 27:467 Mr 1 '68 110w

"In the main, the author gives his readers solid fare. But they should be wary of details. . . . As with many another good book, specific 'facts' such as this should be checked out with other sources before they are used in essays, term papers, or science fair projects." R. C. Cowen

Christian Science Monitor pB10 (children's issue) My 2 '68 180w

Reviewed by M. L. Birmingham
Commonweal 83:308 My 24 '68 70w

"Jammed full, perhaps too full, of accurate facts, this book covers such a wide area that it cannot provide sufficiently detailed explanations to answer the questions that interested young people constantly ask. The illustrations are fair, but almost none show what is actually found in the ocean." J. E. Waters

Library J 93:885 F 15 '68 80w

PLACE, MARIAN T. The frontiersman; the true story of Billy Dixon. 128p $2.95; lib bdg $2.92 Holt

B or 92 Dixon, Billy—Juvenile literature 67-1963

"Billy Dixon was a tough . . . hero of the Old West, a bullwhacker at 14 and a Texas rancher at 24. Spun from Dixon's own diary, 'The Frontiersman' trails him as he hunts buffalo, scouts for the Army, fights the Indians and wins a Congressional Medal of Honor. . . . Ages ten to fourteen." (N Y Times Bk R)

"[This is one of] a new series [Pacesetter] designed for young people who do not read easily or well. The reading level is 5th grade or lower and the interest level is intended to be 7th grade or higher. The format is excellent with wide margins and well-leaded but not embarrassingly large print. [The] book is short, and the style and vocabulary are simple though not obviously juvenile. . . . [However,] this is a conventional account of the stereotyped Western scout: Indian-hater and buffalo-killer. As superficial as grade-B Western films, this is written in a poor style that will do nothing to entice word-by-word readers." Ruth Roth

Library J 92:4257 N 15 '67 110w

"Rugged exploits gallop through this folksy life story. Unfortunately it has a lot of talk—punctuated with 'Yahoo,' 'Swell' and 'Gee'—of a sort that only a tenderfoot would use, never Billy." M. F. O'Connell

N Y Times Bk R p22 Mr 26 '67 130w

PLACE, MARIAN T. The Yukon. 211p $4.50 Washburn

917.98 Yukon River—Juvenile literature 67-22008

This account of the Yukon River and its surrounding areas includes tales of "early Indians, Eskimos, fur traders, and gold seekers, the race to Nome with diphtheria serum [and] the conquering of Mount McKinley. [Bibliography. Index.] Grades six to nine." (Library J)

"In tracing [the Yukon River's] history the author gives young readers an interesting account of the total history of Alaska. Naturally a greater part of the book covers the Goldrush period near the end of the last century. . . . The volume has a definite place in the high school history collection."

Best Sell 27:394 Ja 1 '68 100w

"Perhaps too much has been attempted. The first two chapters, for example, try to give a panoramic overview of the geography and history of the Yukon, but are only a confusing presentation of an overwhelming number of facts. The style of writing is uneven and there is some fictionizing. On the plus side, there is considerable interesting and useful information, particularly for social studies programs, and one commendable chapter on the plight of modern Eskimos." Shirley Ellison

Library J 92:4625 D 15 '67 140w

PLANK, JOHN, ed. Cuba and the United States; long-range perspectives; essays by Henry Wriston [and others]. 265p $6.75 Brookings 327.7291 U.S.—Foreign relations—Cuba.

Cuba—Foreign relations—U.S. Cuba—History—1959- 67-21483

The ten essays in this volume were commissioned by the Brookings Institution and submitted between 1963 and 1965. They deal with "the history of U.S.-Cuban relations, the sources and the foreign and domestic consequences of Castro's revolution, Cuban business and economic relations before and after Castro, hemispheric relations, European reactions and attitudes, Castro as product and agent of the Cold War, and military affairs. The final chapter outlines the elements of recent Soviet, European, Latin American, and U.S. experience that [may] have a strong influence on Cuba's future." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"To measure the Castro revolution in United States terms, [this book] will become an essential yardstick. . . . Henry Wriston tells more in the thirty-five pages of his 'Historical Perspective' than many authors do in entire books. . . . Bayless Manning offers an excellent summation in his 'An Overall Perspective.' He describes six critical problems that would have to be faced by the United States 'if the Castro regime were in some way to be unseated.' . . . The Tad Szulc chapter, . . . 'Exporting the Cuban Revolution,' is sobering. . . . He shows . . . that the example of Castro has set in motion powerful currents of nationalism and extreme Leftist trends. Most chilling of all is Hanson W. Baldwin's chapter, 'A Military Perspective.' " R. R. Rubottom

Ann Am Acad 376:171 Mr '68 290w

"All [the contributors] write well, but with varying authority. Most of the information and interpretation is readily available in other works on Cuba, but the addition of essays by two Frenchmen and an Englishman are a refreshing change from many other compilations. All interpretations are balanced and moderate; most of the authors agree that there is little danger of the spread of Castroism. A contribution from the radical left would have strengthened the volume's scope. For the layman rather than the specialist."

Choice 5:227 Ap '68 140w

"[This book is] in the tradition of the Brookings Institution's distinguished publications program, the purpose of which is to aid the development of sound public policies and to promote people's understanding of them. [It] contains ten provocative and judicious essays by American and European scholars. . . . A six-page bibliography and a good index conclude this informative and timely work." R. D. Harlan

Library J 92:2933 S 1 '67 80w

PLANTINGA, ALVIN. God and other minds; a study of the rational justification of belief in God. 277p $8.50 Cornell univ. press

211 God 67-20519

"Can belief in God be rationally justified? Reviewing in detail traditional and modern arguments for and against the existence of God, Professor Plantinga concludes that they must all be judged unsuccessful. He then turns to the related philosophical problem of the existence of other minds, and defends the so-called analogical argument against current criticisms." (Publisher's note) The author is professor of philosophy at Calvin College. Index.

Choice 5:1142 N '68 180w

"Presupposing the reader's familiarity with the more important arguments, Dr. Plantinga's closely-reasoned analysis of the key issues involved is adequate to show the grounds on which he finds these arguments inconclusive. . . . [Dr. Plantinga suggests that] it is as reasonable to believe in God's existence as to believe in the existence of human minds other than one's own. This 'tentative conclusion' is daring indeed, and sure to provoke vehement discussion in the journals." J. K. Amrhein

Library J 93:192 Ja 15 '68 190w

"This is one of those books which deserve to be called brilliant, and like many such may not deserve to be called profound. . . . [Mr. Plantinga] brilliantly cuts through the less sophisticated kinds of skepticism which refuse serious consideration to the three major arguments for the existence of God: the Cosmological, the Ontological, and the Teleological, in order to acknowledge his own more sophisticated skepticism. Meanwhile, what he has up his sleeve is the demonstration in the last part of the book that the same difficulties adhere to all the arguments we use to support our belief in the existence of other persons. . . . In the course of defending this thesis Mr. Plantinga most interestingly out-analyzes the analysts. . . . His criticisms of Professor Malcolm's tours de force are particularly interesting and telling. Yet, how far does Mr. Plantinga go in giving a rational explanation for the fact that the generality of men, including philosophers, have always felt that belief in other minds is more firmly dependable, and nearer to certainty . . . than belief in God?"

Va Q R 44:1xxxii spring '68 340w

PLANTINGA, LEON B. Schuman [sic] as critic. 354p $10 Yale univ. press

780.1 Schumann, Robert Alexander. Music—History and criticism 67-13446

The author "describes the founding of the Neue Zeitschrift für Musik, and in so doing he dives into the history of German music periodicals and the traits of their editors. . . . Then come discussions of Schumann as editor and critic, Schumann's probable knowledge of music history . . . and aesthetics, his views on contemporary music and musicians, on virtuosos, and on certain romantics (also mostly contemporaries). . . . The longer quotations from Schumann's critiques are offered in new English translations, and the original passages are found in a first appendix. . . . A second appendix, all in German, contains Schumann's contributions to the Neue Zeitschrift which were not included in Kreisig's edition of the Gesammelte Schriften." (Music Lib Assn Notes)

"There must be a book somewhere which has more footnotes than this one, but it is hard to imagine where. There is hardly a paragraph that does not have a footnote—a footnote which might easily have been incorporated into the body of the text. Also, Plantinga assumes his readers read German. Otherwise, he would have provided translations for the profusion of titles and phrases in that language. The idea for the book is good. If one has the patience to wade through these reading obstacles (in this case, a kind of pseudo-scholarly approach that is needlessly cumbersome), there is the wonder revealed that the great composer, Schumann, was also a fine journalist-editor."

Choice 4:1390 F '68 130w

"This book is as packed with meat as a newly stocked butcher shop! . . . The reader—admittedly the serious and scholarly reader—can delight in a mine of information which not only illumines the composer's mental and philosophical approach to his art, but also offers many insights into the musical life of his time. . . . Now people have a fine opportunity to dip into his essays, nibble on his most important and sagacious passages (happily presented in the original as well as in translation), follow his mental development, and form their own conclusions about his critical capacity. . . . Professor Plantinga has organized his book in exemplary fashion. . . . One very slight fault in the book is this: There should be references from the German passages back to the English, as there are from the English to the German. . . . A few errors have escaped an editorial eye. . . . [but the book] is a major contribution to Schumann literature, is conducive to a reconsideration of critical writing, and it adds greatly to our knowledge of musical life and practice 125 years ago." E. N. Waters

Music Lib Assn Notes 24:476 Mr '68 950w

"[Plantinga] has gone not to the familiar collections of selected reprints but to the columns of the paper itself, quoting in an appendix the actual German texts and providing musical quotations from the forgotten works of Thalberg, Hiller, Schunke et hoc genus omne, so that the reader can simultaneously assess the music criticized and the criticism of it. His method therefore can hardly be too highly commended. He appears to have been right through the files of the Neue Zeitschrift and to have tracked down a large amount of the forgotten music. He has also examined closely the longer articles, such as that on Berlioz's Symphonie Fantastique, in order to arrive at his own sympathetic understanding of Schumann's mind."

TLS p59 Ja 18 '68 700w

PLASS, MARGARET WEBSTER. African miniatures; goldweights of the Ashanti. 26p pl $10 Praeger

739 Sculpture, African. Goldweights. Weights and measures 68-72309

An account of the history of the Ashanti tribes, and "the tiny brass weights used by the Ashanti goldsmiths and their patrons for measuring and checking gold dusts and gold nuggets . . . [with] illustrations of 166 items." (Economist) Bibliography.

"[This is] an important and attractive contribution. . . . The British Museum classificatory scheme appears both definitive and workable. One of the most distinguished of scholar-collectors, Plass has . . . produced a photographic anthology of interest both to layman and scholar."

Choice 5:767 S '68 140w

Economist 225:1232 D 23 '67 130w

"In the renowned Webster Plass collection of African sculpture, the Ashanti goldweights from Ghana undoubtedly held a unique place. Upon her husband's death, Mrs. Plass in 1956 donated much of the collection to the British Museum. She has drawn upon this and other public and private collections to assemble this excellent book. . . . The photographs are explicit and well reproduced, and Mrs. Plass's comments following them are a delight. Two textual sections add to the historical background; the 'draft classification' of Ashanti goldweights will interest art historians. Recommended for specialized collections." H. K. Flad

PLASS, M. W.—Continued

Library J 93:538 F 1 '68 150w

Sci Am 218:136 Je '68 600w

"Any serious collector of gold-weights, and anyone interested in African metalwork, will want to own this book. It is a great pity, therefore, that the text is distinctly sketchy. . . . The illustrations are well chosen, though there is no index, and only a few geometric weights are shown. . . . The last section of the book deals, rather irrelevantly, with relations between Ashanti and Europe. In fact, it is a kind of miniature history of the wars fought during the last century between Britain and Ashanti. In compression, some accuracy has been lost."

TLS p209 F 29 '68 600w

PLATO. Great dialogues of Plato; tr. by W. H. D. Rouse; ed. by Eric H. Warmington and Philip G. Rouse. rev ed 607p il $12.50 New Am. lib.

184 Philosophy, Ancient 67-11495

This collection includes Ion, Meno, Euthydemus, Symposium, The Republic, The Apology, Crito and Phaedo. The editors "have Anglicized spelling, added footnotes and diagrams . . . and a summary of The Republic by J. C. G. Rouse." (Choice) Pronouncing index.

"Rouse's translation of Plato was and is a standard, valuable source. Now his work neatly counterbalances that of the 'modern' classicist. . . . The [editorial] changes aside, this edition is vintage Rouse and is needed by all libraries minus previous editions."

Choice 4:1392 F '68 70w

"Rouse's translations met with an enthusiastic reception when they were first published in a paperback . . . edition in 1956. . . . Rouse, who died in 1950, was a coeditor of the Loeb Classical Library, editor of the Classical Review, and master of the famous Perse School in England. His style is fresh and vigorous and many a familiar passage in the dialogues will strike the reader as a new discovery. Strongly recommended for all pertinent collections." Joseph Bram

Library J 92:4504 D 15 '67 180w

PLATT, KIN. The boy who could make himself disappear. 216p $4.95; lib bdg $4.70 Chilton co.

68-24842

"The central character is seventh-grader Roger Baxter, handicapped by a severe speech impediment which resulted from a childhood accident and has been compounded by emotional problems with his parents, who have just been divorced and are both indifferent to the boy's welfare. . . . Roger begins to lose the few threads that keep him in touch with reality and gradually disappears into the world of the schizophrenic. . . . Grades eight to ten." (Library J)

Best Sell 28:173 J1 15 '68 100w [YA]

"[This] is an unforgettable book, full of shrewd and in my opinion authentic observations about the hang-ups, some of them severe and crippling, that young boys and girls suffer. . . . The author tells this story directly, but with great power and feeling. He shows us how troubled Roger is—and why—but he has not, thank God, written a psychiatric case-study. Rather, he emphasizes the wounded mind's constant effort toward repair, toward coherence and recovery. . . . Perhaps we the psychiatrists should read this unusual story, and so should thousands of sensitive youths who will feel a sense of camaraderie with the hurt and the suffering Rogers of this world—a sense of camaraderie that parents presumably want their children to experience." Robert Coles

Book World p20 O 6 '68 350w

"An unusual and disturbing novel which is apt to be controversial because of its theme and the way in which that theme is developed. . . . The reading is not easy; the author uses many flashbacks, and some passages verge on stream-of-consciousness. Nor is the book without flaws—Roger's mother, for example, seems at times unbelievably heartless. But in its painful honesty, this . . . is a book that will remain with thoughtful young people long after it is read." John Gillespie

Library J 93:3986 O 15 '68 200w

"Few novels about mental illness, of which not too many have been written for young people, have the poignancy and shock value of this touching story. . . . The writing is intense, almost painfully immediate and complex, the protagonist a touching and lovable child who is a symbol of all troubled children."

Zena Sutherland

Sat R 51:43 Ag 24 '68 110w

PLIMPTON, GEORGE. The bogey man. 306p pl $5.95 Harper

796.352 G6M

68-28213

This account of the author's 'month on the professional golf circuit . . . [tells of] the amateurs, pros, caddies, officials, fans, and hangers-on he met; the golf legends, adventures, stroke-saving theories, superstitions, and other golfing lore which he absorbed; and his actual experiences as a player from tee to green." (Publisher's note)

Reviewed by Joseph Epstein

Atlantic 222:130 D '68 1600w

"This is a well-written, literate book that rises above the stylistic level of most sports journalism. . . . Plimpton has a remarkably keen sense of humor and it pervades the entire book. . . . The author himself is frequently the object of the humor as can be expected when a player with a handicap of eighteen enters the ranks against America's greatest professional golfers. I recommend the book for pure pleasure, or as a sure-to-be-appreciated gift for the golfing enthusiast." J. W. Hattman

Best Sell 28:361 D 1 '68 220w

Reviewed by Jack Richardson

Book World p6 N 3 '68 800w

Reviewed by P. E. Edlund

Library J 93:4575 D 1 '68 140w

"The Walter Mitty touch that gave [Paper Lion, BRD 1966] a fine feeling of insanity has vanished [here]. . . . Plimpton is an excellent reporter, with an acute eye and a sharp ear, but his gifts alone cannot overcome the fact that pro golfers . . . are an introverted, secretive, solitary bunch. Plimpton looks and listens, but not a single contemporary golfer springs boldly to life. . . . [The dominant character] is Plimpton himself, but even the self-portrait is incomplete. . . . Measured strictly against the average sports book . . . [this] could be considered a success. It is literate and intelligent . . . yet is would be unfair not to measure [it] against 'Paper Lion.' Plimpton always likes to put himself up against the best." Dick Schaap

N Y Times Bk R p8 N 10 '68 1050w

"Plimpton continues to make silk purses from the sow's ear of his athletic talent with this volume. . . . Because [he] thinks of himself as a writer, not just a sportswriter, his work has certain extras. . . . He knows his golf lore cold. There is a marvelous chapter on bizarre golf statistics. . . . He is also good on golf personalities and the personalities of golf courses themselves. . . . [This book] will interest even the man who can't tell a pitching wedge from a putter and doesn't care to learn. This is really a book about a kind of madness with rules, and anyone can appreciate the appeal of that." R. A. S.

Newsweek 72:108A N 11 '68 550w

Time 92:122 'N 8 '68 600w

PLOSKI, HARRY A., ed. The Negro almanac; comp. and ed. by Harry A. Ploski and Roscoe C. Brown, Jr. 1012p il maps $22 Bellwether pub. co.

973 Negroes

66-29721

The editors are a clinical psychologist and a professor of education, both affiliated with N.Y.U. [The almanac] covers the historical, economic, political, and social aspects of the emergence of the American Negro from slavery to the civil rights revolution . . . and includes biographical material, statistical tables, charts, and graphs which summarize and analyze [various] circumstances of Negro life—organizations, legal status, population trends, the family, employment and earnings, labor, government assistance programs, suffrage, education, sports, military affiliation, entertainment, press, and culinary arts. Three sections, 'Slavery in the Western Hemisphere,' 'Africa: the Changing Continent' and 'The Negro in the Western Hemisphere' provide perspective and background for the Negro's role on the contemporary scene." (Booklist and S B B) Bibliography. Index.

"An attractive format, wide coverage, logical arrangement of sections, short biographies, generous illustrations, clear text and concise treatment are outstanding features of The Negro Almanac. . . . Five maps . . . provide visual evidence of the current legal status of American Negroes by state. . . . Noteworthy for its coverage and organization, Section 17 is subdivided into Federal Government, The Fine Arts, Inventors and Scientists, Jazz, The Judiciary, Literature, The Performing Arts, Sports The United Nations, and Women. Each of the subdivisions is prefaced by a concise but comprehensive introduction or summary which scans the progress of the Negro in the area. . . . An unusual and valuable feature is the section 'Inventions by Negroes: 1871-1900.' . . . Many black-and-white illustrations and photographs . . . are liberally interspersed throughout the volume and placed near the text they illustrate. . . . [There is a] selected bibliography of approximately 750 titles covering works published between 1872 and 1965 . . . subdivided into general works, biographies, history, juveniles, and literature. The section would have added value had the books been listed chronologically under more specific subjects rather than alphabetically by author. . . . Recommended as a well-documented and comprehensive reference volume . . . for use in homes and all types of libraries [and by students of all age levels]."

Booklist and S B B 64:601 F 1 '68 2250w

Choice 5:1291 D '68 160w

"At first glance [this book] appears to duplicate in some respects J. P. Davis's The American Negro Reference Book [BRD 1966] and The Negro Handbook compiled by the editors of Ebony [BRD 1967]. . . . However, this particular work offers more to the reader and will more than supplement the information contained in [those] books. The chronology, which is part of an extensive historical review of major events in Negro history from 1492 to 1954 will prove very helpful. . . . [Included are] significant recent statistics from the Bureau of Census pertaining to the Negro family, and the chapter on 'The Negro in Education' includes a chronology, a listing of scholarships earmarked for Negro students, facts about the predominantly Negro colleges and universities, and other selected educational facts. . . . Helpful in all types of libraries—public and academic." M. M. Jackson

Library J 92:4492 D 15 '67 300w

"Documents like the U.N.'s Declaration of the Rights of the Child, the Birmingham Manifesto and a digest of the Civil Rights Act [are included]. . . . The Almanac has a section on historical landmarks of Negro Americans. . . . There is even a handful of favorite Negro recipes that seem surprised at finding themselves in the 1,000 amply illustrated pages of this serious and impressive compendium." D. M. Glixon

Sat R 50:43 N 18 '67 120w

PLOTNICOV, LEONARD. Strangers to the city; urban man in Jos, Nigeria. 320p il $6.95; pa $2.95 Univ. of Pittsburgh press

309.1 Jos, Nigeria—Social life and customs. Sociology. Urban. Ethnology—Nigeria

67-13928

This book presents "portraits of eight immigrants to Jos, Nigeria, a city about fifty years old with sixty thousand inhabitants. There is also a map, and introductory chapters on Jos's political, economic, and social origins and characteristics." (Am J Soc) Bibliography. Index.

"While Plotnicov does not demonstrate differential individual response to the same specific events, he does carry his point that individual choices are guided by a search for order and are not chaotic responses to chaos, however heterogeneous the total urban universe appears to be. The strict methodologist may not be persuaded by the author's defense of his 'sample,' which is older and more successful than the population of Jos generally, but he may also find this a less important issue than did the author. . . . Those . . . concerned with the literature of comparative urban studies will want to add [this] well-made and modestly priced volume to their libraries." George Jenkins

Am J Soc 74:93 J1 '68 400w

"In considerably less than a hundred pages, the author accomplishes his general description of the town. . . . He then devotes about twice that space to a rather intensive assessment of individual town dwellers and their lives and adjustments in the town. Four of these have a chapter each and four others share a somewhat longer chapter. They were representative of the diverse ethnic composition of the town. This approach to 'urban man' in an African town is certainly innovative as compared with other urban studies on that continent. . . . This reviewer would like to see more of this kind of reporting." D. F. McCall

Ann Am Acad 378:192 J1 '68 340w

PLUCKROSE, HENRY. Introducing crayon techniques. 100p il $6.95 Watson-Guption

741.2 Crayon drawing [68-10021]

This book describes and illustrates the following crayon techniques: drawing and sketching, resist, pattern and texture with crayon, rubbings, cutting, painting, crayon transfers, crayon and oil, crayon and fabric. Bibliography.

J Home Econ 60:679 O '68 140w

"[This is a] reliable [book] written by [a] craftsman who [is] interested in the techniques discussed; [it has] stimulating illustrations, and [is] reasonably priced. . . . The author describes practical aspects of the specific technique, presents work of good quality, and indicates the American and British suppliers. . . . Recommended for art teachers, students, craft leaders, and the libraries which serve them." Delores McColm

Library J 93:2474 Je 15 '68 140w

POCHMANN, RUTH FOUTS. Triple Ridge Farm. 232p il $5.95 Morrow

920 Farm life—Wisconsin 68-12155

"The farm of the title was 100 eroded acres in central Wisconsin. . . . The farmers were a university professor from nearby Madison, his wife . . . and their teen-age daughter. All the Pochmanns wanted in the beginning, Mrs. Pochmann tells us, was a weekend trout-stream that her husband could stock and improve, and a barn and trails for Virginia's horse. . . . This book tells how one man's family helped part of those 100 'worn-out' acres to produce again, how they reforested the rest of Triple Ridge as a wild-life refuge, how they rebuilt a year-round home for themselves in the center." (N Y Times Bk R)

"What [Mrs. Pochmann] has written is not a literary masterpiece but it is genuine; she relates a real experience simply and sincerely . . . [which] entreats the reader to read on as one would listen to a friend's account of what really happened to him. To the uninitiated it will be dull." C. S. Johnson

Library J 93:69 Ja 1 '68 100w

N Y Times Bk R p26 Mr 31 '68 180w

POCOCK, H. R. S. The conquest of Chile. 256p maps $7.95 Stein & Day

983 Chile—History. Valdivia, Pedro de 67-25618

An account of the invasion of Chile by Pedro de Valdivia in the sixteenth century. Bibliography. Index.

"The author of this chronicle . . . has lived 20 years in Chile and has read all the original documents on Valdivia and the discovery years. He makes no pretense at writing a source book; rather he has given us a serious popularized biography, enriched with material from contemporary letters and reports—and with an unceasing admiration for his hero. . . . If one has to select a 'first book' on Chile for North Americans, this one, not too long for a day's reading and written in an open, easy style, would be a happy choice." E. K. Culhane

America 118:420 Mr 30 '68 370w

Reviewed by J. F. Rippey

Ann Am Acad 378:180 Je '68 330w

POCOCK, H. R. S.—Continued

"Up to the present, only one account has been written in English: Robert B. C. Graham's biography Pedro de Valdivia [BRD 1927]. To set those wrongs right Mr. Pocock has written this thorough and judicious account of the Spanish invasion of Chile. Mr. Pocock is no Prescott, but then Chile is no Mexico or Peru. Yet this story is interesting enough, primarily because it is different. . . . While [Pocock's] scholarship and style are generally pedestrian, he has provided a useful account in English. [His] book is recommended for large public and academic libraries." R. D. Harlan
Library J 92:4412 D 1 '67 270w

"Sober, straightforward, respectable, informative, and unexciting. . . . [Pocock] shows little gift for character depiction, so that only a few of the more outrageous rascals even begin to come alive. And, strangely, though we are told that he spent twenty years in Chile, Mr. Pocock gives us scant feeling for place and scene. The result is a book in which faceless names march through shadowy landscapes. . . . [But,] it offers valuable details of military tactics, political maneuvers, and legal wrangling in sixteenth-century South America. It informs, clarifies, and explains; but it very rarely gives delight." Robert Silverberg
Sat R 51:27 Ap 6 '68 650w

PODHORETZ, NORMAN. Making it. 360p $6.95
Random house

B or 92

67-22655

The editor of Commentary magazine writes of his own experience "as a writer, editor, and intellectual in order to explore the major spiritual contradictions that plague every young American in the life of his career. . . . [The story] touches as well on the careers . . . of such writers as Norman Mailer, Saul Bellow, James Baldwin, Lionel Trilling, and Mary McCarthy." (Publisher's note) Index.

Reviewed by E. P. J. Corbett

America 118:161 F 3 '68 600w

Reviewed by Wilfred Sheed

Atlantic 221:97 Ap '68 3850w

"[This] is a literary-intellectual autobiography in which we get very little of the author's emotional life. . . . The prose . . . does not have the force Podhoretz generates in his essays. The sentences have no ring to them; the paragraphs go mushy. . . . Though we get tantalizing glimpses of [literary figures], . . . we never get a crust of memorable dialogue or satisfying gossip. [Podhoretz] never draws a picture of the life of his heroes. . . . [He] wants you to focus on him, on his mind, on the things he has to say. And he does not cheat. . . . Perhaps unconsciously, he has been tougher on himself than is really fair. With scarcely a trace of human warmth he has drawn the portrait of someone, surely not himself, who is an intellectual nebbish." Mario Puzo
Book World p1 Ja 7 '68 2050w

Reviewed by Roderick Nordell

Christian Science Monitor p11 Ja 11 '68 850w

"[This] is at the heart of it a dishonest piece of work. . . . [Podhoretz's experiences] could enclose a life of achievement and integrity. Instead, [he] inadvertently tells us of his failures—and makes a virtue out of the irrelevance of integrity. . . . Podhoretz' tale of success [can be evaluated and found to be] a tale of failure by instinctively applying intrinsic standards. What I have left out is all the exciting extrinsic stuff with which he has crammed his book. . . . [This] could have been forgivable if the book created characters that came to life. . . . [However] there is no sense of characterization in either the major or minor figures. The sense of pertinent detail is absent. . . . [Podhoretz] strikes me as a man deeply committed to the examined life. This is why his attempt to generalize an empty point of view—to make us all share in his cynicism—does not succeed." Daniel Stern

Commonweal 87:594 F 16 '68 2100w

Critic 26:92 Ap '68 140w

Reviewed by E. C. Rinehart

J Higher Ed 39:416 O '68 700w

"Mr. Podhoretz's introspective investigations delve mainly into his drive for literary distinction, fame, and money, and his desire to get them all in one big package. Writing such a book, he acknowledges, can be 'a very dangerous thing to do.' But he has written it exceedingly well." G. A. Cevaloco
Library J 93:69 Ja 1 '68 290w

Reviewed by Mordecai Richler

Nation 206:180 F 5 '68 2000w

Reviewed by James Burnham

Nat R 20:193 F 27 '68 2650w

Reviewed by Stanley Kauffmann

New Repub 158:27 Ja 27 '68 2700w

Reviewed by Philip Toynbee

New Statesman 76:258 Ag 30 '68 2000w

Reviewed by E. Z. Friedenberg

N Y Rev of Books 10:11 F 1 '68 3100w

"Nowhere in the whole of his frank and honest book is Podhoretz more frank and honest than in those passages where he recounts his frantic aspirations to belong to [the New York Literary Establishment]. . . . I suspect that 'Making It' seems so fresh, so miraculously right for the times, because Mr. Podhoretz, ever adroit at scenting the coming climate, is not only telling his own sad story with attractive wit and self-mockery but also presaging a far more fundamental assault on the whole metaphysical and social basis of the Artistic Life." Frederic Raphael

N Y Times Bk R p4 Ja 7 '68 2300w

"Podhoretz's strategy is to proceed from self-revelation to self-revelation, from shock to shock. . . . Clearly, [he] thinks of his book as pinpointing a kind of sociological pornography for our time. . . . with the difference that . . . [he tells about the] insatiable itch for fame, money, power—drives that have displaced the libido as the perpetual dynamo. . . . [Podhoretz] persuaded himself that he was writing a kind of 'Advertisements for Myself' [by N. Mailer, BRD 1960]. . . . and to undertake that without any of Mailer's gifts for rhetoric and irony is to court catastrophe. . . . [Podhoretz's] gifts are present in the best passages of this book. But the book itself is both too much and not enough. Morbidly intent upon showing the folks back home he has made it, that he can ride beautifully, no hands, he reveals only his thumbs, all ten of them." Saul Maloff
Newsweek 71:62 Ja 8 '68 1150w

Reviewed by A. M. Greeley

Reporter 38:46 Mr 7 '68 1850w

Reviewed by Granville Hicks

Sat R 51:77 Ja 13 '68 850w

Time 91:94 Ja 19 '68 900w

TLS p920 Ag 29 '68 1550w

Va Q R 44:lxii spring '68 390w

POETRY SOCIETY OF LONDON. The pattern of poetry; the Poetry society verse-speaking anthology; comp. by William Kean Seymour and John Smith; il. by Annie Gillott. 223p $4.95 Watts, F.

821 English poetry—Collections—Juvenile literature. American poetry—Collections—Juvenile literature 67-19790

This anthology prepared in 1963, and covering the sixteenth to mid-nineteenth century, includes the poems in the then current syllabus for the Poetry Society's verse-speaking examination. Indexes to first lines and to authors. "Grade six and up." (Library J)

"[This collection] demonstrates strong aural qualities. . . . All the poems are of top literary quality, many standard choices as well as a good number of less familiar modern poems. The variety in verse forms, level of comprehension, and topics are wide, and the collection, as a whole, has British emphasis. The book fulfills its purpose to instill a love of poetry and sharpen the ability to appreciate its beauty and meaning." Terry Myers
Library J 92:4627 D 15 '67 100w

"There are traditional favorites here, needless to say, and some 20th-century poems, but Americans are scarcely to be seen. As in several of these collections, the stress on reading aloud is welcome." Walker Gibson
N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p44 My 5 '68 100w

POGGI, GIANFRANCO. Catholic action in Italy; the sociology of a sponsored organization. 280p $8 Stanford Univ. press

262 Catholic action. Church and social problems 66-22985

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by Jacques Gellard

Am J Soc 73:353 N '67 370w

Reviewed by Joseph Lopreato

Am Pol Sci R 62:255 Mr '68 950w

Reviewed by C. F. Delzell

Ann Am Acad 376:159 Mr '68 490w

POGGIOLI, RENATO. The theory of the avant-garde; tr. from the Italian by Gerald Fitzgerald. 250p $6.50 Harvard univ. press

709.04 Modernism (Art) 68-17630

The intention of the late professor of Slavic and Comparative Literature at Harvard University is "to 'study avant-garde art as a historical concept, a center of tendencies and ideas. . . . We shall here examine avant-garde art not under its species as art but through what it reveals, inside and outside of art itself, of a common psychological condition.' Poggioli develops a unified theory based on the belief that all aspects of modern culture have been affected by avant-garde art, from expressionism to pointillism to surrealism to dadaism. . . . Alienation is a major theme of the book, as seen in psychological and social expressions as well as in such artistic movements as futurism, art for art's sake, and abstractionism. . . . [He] explores the relationships between the avant-garde and our scientific civilization. . . . and popular taste, . . . and earlier stylistic traditions, notably romanticism, to show that the contemporary avant-garde is the 'sole and authentic' one." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index. Originally published 1962 entitled Teoria dell'arte d'avanguardia.

"The book . . . contains many interesting insights and a definite sense of perspective [and] is recommended for art and literature students who have some background in the movements considered and are therefore able to read with some discernment."

Choice 5:940 O '68 160w

Reviewed by J. B. Gordon

J Aesthetics 27:244 winter '68 1000w

"Despite Mr. Poggioli's contention that he has directed his essay to 'a middle-level audience' (and, hence, has omitted footnotes), this volume suffers from heavy dissertation-like prose and format. . . . [This] is the kind of study that requires of the reader a great deal of intellectual equipment to mine and assay its ore. Of interest only to the aesthetician and of value mainly to university collections." G. A. Cevasco

Library J 93:1901 My 1 '68 310w

"The higher confusions in paint and prattle about paint are most admirably classified, described and dated in [this book]. . . . How so sane a man could bear to know about Yugoslav zenithism, cubofuturism, ImpulSIONisme, Sincérisme and Syncrétisme I find marvellous. Anyone who has suffered from art-historical movement-mongers must be grateful to Poggioli for pointing out that 'they don't see the trees for the woods'. Being advanced in the arts now is more a matter of arguments than of eyes." Frederick Laws

New Statesman 76:148 Ag 1 '68 200w

Reviewed by Martin Lebowitz

Yale R 58:149 O '68 650w

POIGNANT, AXEL. Animals of Australia [Eng title: The improbable kangaroo and other Australian animals]. unpub 200il $7.50 Dodd

591.994 Zoology—Australia 67-6925

The author has spent fifteen years observing and photographing the land vertebrates of Australia. Index.

"This book is an excellent statement of the aesthetic satisfactions of the naturalist and an eloquent argument for protection of vulnerable species. Highly recommended for pleasure reading with some details of special interest to zoologists. Minimal index."

Choice 5:218 Ap '68 90w

"What distinguishes [Poignant's] book from other collections of photographs is that he had the happy inspiration of including alongside his pictures and comments the drawings and descriptions made by early explorers and settlers. These, while not always strictly accurate, make interesting reading and viewing. The result is a fascinating blend which should appeal to both the adult and to the young reader." Norman Horrocks

Library J 92:3432 O 1 '67 100w

POINT, NICOLAS. Wilderness kingdom: Indian life in the Rocky Mountains: 1840-1847, the journals & paintings of Nicolas Point; tr. and introduced by Joseph P. Donnelly; with an appreciation by John C. Ewers. 274p il col il $21.95 Holt

970.4 Indians of North America—Missions. Indians of North America—Pictures, illustrations, etc. Jesuits. Rocky Mountains 67-19048

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by H. E. Fritz
Am Hist R 73:1641 Je '68 550w

Choice 5:258 Ap '68 160w

Reviewed by A. M. Gibson
J Am Hist 54:889 Mr '68 300w

New Yorker 44:188 My 4 '68 250w

POLE, J. R. Political representation in England and the origins of the American republic. 606p maps $16.50 St Martins

323.4 Representative government and representation. U.S.—Politics and government—Colonial period 66-23487

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by H. F. Gosnell
Am Pol Sci R 62:608 Je '68 280w

Reviewed by A. F. McC. Madden
Engl Hist R 83:409 Ap '68 600w

Reviewed by John Cary
New Eng Q 41:308 Je '68 750w

POLGREEN, CATHLEEN, jt. auth. The stars tonight. See Polgreen, J.

POLGREEN, JOHN. The stars tonight, by John and Cathleen Polgreen. 87p il $3.95 Harper

523.8 Stars—Juvenile literature 67-17104

This book features star charts showing the position of the constellations for each month of the year. Glossary. "Grades eight to ten." (Best Sell)

Reviewed by Mrs. B. E. Kueny
Best Sell 27:394 Ja 1 '68 90w

"The narrative seems to fall between two schools: it is too puzzling for beginners and not detailed enough for the serious minded." F. C. Waugh

Christian Science Monitor pB8 N 2 '67 60w

"In order to locate the positions of constellations, stars, planets, etc., in the sky one must know about celestial direction and the motions of the stars. . . . Tables at the end of the book enable one to adapt the charts for use at any time of the night. . . . The authors describe such fascinating sights as nebulae, changes in position and brightness of stars, etc. Legends which make the figures of the constellations easy to remember are incorporated smoothly into the factual information." M. B. Wenger

Library J 92:4625 D 15 '67 110w

POLIER, JUSTINE WISE. The rule of law and the role of psychiatry. 176p $7.95 Johns Hopkins press

340 Medical jurisprudence 68-12900

The chapters of this book were first presented as The Isaac Ray award lectures at the University of Maryland in 1966. The author, a "judge of the Family Court of the State of New York, seeks . . . to shed light on the interrelation of law and psychiatry by identifying the questions and conflicts, especially in those areas where the applicability of psychiatric concepts is recognized by the courts yet subtly rejected through both action and inaction." (Library J) Index.

"The interrelationship of law and the behavioral sciences is developing at an amazing rate. Still, both practitioners in law and in psychiatry have much to learn of the significance of each other's disciplines to their professional aptitude and effectiveness. . . . [Judge Polier] attempts to further this understanding and does so rather well. . . . [Her] book is a thought provoking one reflecting her understanding, wisdom and sophistication." J. J. Marke

Library J 93:3143 S 15 '68 210w

"The dreary and endless procession through the courtroom of the alcoholic, dope addict, sexual psychopath recidivist and the delinquent is testimony both to the failure of the rule of law and the role of psychiatry in our society. [The author] offers her view of this grim procession in a manner which alternates between the scholasticism typical of law journals and the peculiar optimistic jingoism of a new breed of community psychiatrist. . . . The judge reads best when she describes the workings of her own family court. It is unfortunate that she attempted to catalogue and comment on, albeit thoughtfully, almost every juncture of law and psychiatry." A. A. Stone

POLIER, J. W.—Continued

N Y Times Bk R p20 O 6 '68 250w

POLING, JAMES. The man who saved Robinson Crusoe; the strange surprising adventures of the original Robinson Crusoe and his most remarkable rescuer; drawings by Fermin Rucker. 234p $4.50; lib bdg $4.14 Norton 910.4 Rogers, Woodes—Juvenile literature.
Selkirk, Alexander—Juvenile literature
67-15453

"Seafaring, politics, and warfare fill the background of a dual biography tracing the lives of Alexander Selkirk, whose experiences on Juan Fernandez Island [in the eighteenth century] formed the basis of [Daniel Defoe's] Robinson Crusoe, and of Woodes Rogers, the sea captain who rescued him." (Horn Bk) Bibliography. Index. "Grades seven to ten." (Library J)

"This is a substantial book, somewhat pedestrian at times, but well researched and with the ring of authenticity." J. P. Wood
Book World p12 Ja 21 '68 230w

"It is not often that a biographical study becomes the basis of an exciting sea story rich in personalities, incidentally exploring the source of [Coleridge's] The Rime of the Ancient Mariner as well as that of Robinson Crusoe." P. H.
Horn Bk 43:764 D '67 330w

Reviewed by M. S. Bart
Library J 92:3867 O 15 '67 160w

"It has been almost forgotten today that Selkirk's life before and after his fantastic experience on the island was filled with adventure and strangeness almost to equal the island sojourn. Even more unknown is the man who rescued Selkirk, Capt. Woodes Rogers, one of the great sea captains of the 18th century. In fact, Rogers's three-year privateering expedition . . . was so epoch-making that the rescue of Selkirk in the course of it becomes almost a minor detail. . . . World events, literary history, battles, exotic adventures and seafaring lore are all part of this rattling good story, made all the better because it is true, and recounted with skill and conscientiousness. This is a book to warm a teacher's heart, edify a parent and more important—fascinate a youthful reader." Richard Horchler
N Y Times Bk R p46 O 29 '67 270w

POLLACK, PHILIP. Careers and opportunities in engineering; rev. and brought up to date by John D. Alden; with an introd. by John R. Ragazzini. 224p il $4.95 Dutton

620 Engineering as a profession—Juvenile literature
67-11381

This revision of Pollack's original book (BRD 1959) discusses basic questions "about engineering—from aptitude and preparation to schools, salaries, and just what the work in various fields of engineering is like." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index. "Grade nine and up." (Library J)

"The approach is historical and descriptive, conveying the impression that engineering is dull and routine. . . . [E.V.] Krick's An Introduction to Engineering and Engineering Design and R. J. Smith's Engineering as a Career actively involve the reader in the problems and concepts of engineering, and thereby use an idiom more likely to appeal to the future engineer than does that of mere description. Lists of engineering societies and accredited engineering schools."

Choice 4:1277 Ja '68 140w [YA]

"In revising Mr. Pollock's book, Mr. Alden . . . has supplied many new references and statistics on the engineering profession today. He has organized the material in the classical categories of engineering and discusses problems of engineering education. This book could stand alone as a survey of engineering in the United States. . . . [It] would be especially useful in career collections where current material is needed." R. J. Havlik Library J 92:1322 Mr 15 '67 70w [YA]

POLLAND, MADELEINE. To tell my people; il. by Richard M. Powers. 209p $4.50; lib bdg $3.97 Holt

68-11832

"Life in a British lake village is harsh for 12-year-old Lumna, the chief's daughter. . . . She encounters a Roman scouting party and . . . [becomes] a well-treated slave in a Roman household. . . . [She escapes to try] to convince her people that resistance to Rome is futile and to persuade them to accept the Roman ways . . . [but is] met with hostile disbelief. . . . Grades six to eight." (Library J)

Reviewed by Ethna Sheehan
America 119:656 D 21 '68 80w

Reviewed by Polly Goodwin
Book World p16 S 22 '68 270w

"The developing attachment between Lumna and young Cassilus, earlier enslaved to Durus, is an important element in the story; but the shock of the denouement is justifiable as a realistic ending. Though not attaining the author's highest levels, the story effectively deals with the question of how the primitive mind attained knowledge." V. H.

Horn Bk 44:566 O '68 230w

"Thoughtful readers will find Mrs Polland's latest novel a deepy moving presentation of a doomed effort. Beautiful descriptive passages evoke the sights, sounds, and feelings of the period, and the characterizations are believable. Less complex and easier reading than the historical novels of Rosemary Sutcliff, this book could also be used as a basis for discussions on the tragedies inherent in the failure to communicate—now, as well as in Lumna's time." Ruth Robinson
Library J 93:[3324] S 15 '68 180w

Reviewed by Geoffrey Trease
New Statesman 76:594 N 1 '68 100w

Reviewed by Della Thomas
N Y Times Bk R p44 O 27 '68 210w

"The shape of this story . . . is classically simple, and the author shows creative imagination and warm feeling for people. Is it allowable to suggest that Mrs. Polland needs to sharpen her tool? An over-detailed, over-rich, and structurally over-loose descriptive style (sometimes leading her into actual ambiguity) obscures the fine line of the story and sentimentalizes the epic vision behind it. It is sometimes due to a genuine struggle to see through Lumna's simple eyes; but mostly it is repetitive self-indulgence."

TLS p1119 O 3 '68 430w

POLLARD, GRAHAM. Renaissance medals: from the Samuel H. Kress collection at the National gallery of art. See United States. National gallery of art

POLS EDWARD. Whitehead's metaphysics: ■ critical examination of Process and reality. 205p $6.50 Southern Ill. univ. press

110 Whitehead, Alfred North—Process and reality. Metaphysics
67-10721

An examination of the philosopher's metaphysical thought expressed originally "at the University of Edinburgh [in] a series of ten Gifford Lectures under the title, 'Process and Reality.' . . . These lectures [were] expanded . . . and published in 1929 with the subtitle, 'An Essay in Cosmology,' [BRD 1929 and 1930]." (J Philos)

"This critique is clearly superior to W. Mays' The Philosophy of Whitehead [BRD 1960] which badly distorts his theory in order to assimilate it as closely as possible to contemporary British empiricism as championed by Russell. While exposition has not been his strength . . . Pols has been meticulous and fair in marshalling his evidence and in exploring alternative interpretations. . . . [He] concentrates on a single issue, the interplay between causality and freedom, and applies this to Whitehead's analysis of a single actuality as an actual occasion. . . . This is the most searching critique of Whitehead's metaphysics available, written on a rather sophisticated level. Its arguments, however, are not unanswerable."

Choice 5:509 Je '68 210w

"[This book] is a must for Whitehead specialists. The absence in it of a general introduction to the philosophy of organism makes it unsuitable for the uninitiated. Pols' undertaking is quite limited. Only when he comes to discuss certain principles concerning 'eternal objects' which Whitehead set forth in Science and the Modern World [BRD 1926] . . . [does he] examine any part of any of Whitehead's other metaphysical books, nor, except in one footnote, does he consider any other passage in them. But the critic who neglects Adventures of Ideas does so at his peril. This fact is more serious than the almost complete absence of discussion of others' interpretations of Whitehead's metaphysics. . . . For the most part, [Pols'] book shows a masterly grasp of the details of Whitehead's metaphysics and acuteness in their use. . . . The richness of [his] study makes it repay reading and re-reading. . . . The book has a fine index." Victor Lowe

J Philos 65:515 S 5 '68 2050w

POLSKY, NED. Hustlers, beats, and others. 218p $5.95 Aldine pub.

301.18 Deviant behavior. U.S.—Social conditions 67-11416

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by E. M. Lemert
Am J Soc 73:649 Mr '68 800w

Reviewed by K. T. Erikson
Am Soc R 33:460 Je '68 1250w

Reviewed by Joseph Boskin
Ann Am Acad 316:197 Mr '68 450w

POMEROY, WARDELL B. Boys and sex. 157p $4 Delacorte press bk.

612.6 Sex instruction 68-12047

The author, who is president-elect of The Society for Scientific Study of Sex and a member of the American Association of Marriage Counselors, states in his Introduction to Parents, "I have tried here to produce an honest, informational book which would help both boys and parents. . . . I have dealt here with all the various kinds of sexual behavior, beginning with preadolescent sex play, going on through masturbation, petting, dating, intercourse and its consequences, and still other aspects of sex. I have tried to provide the boys who read this with the most up-to-date facts on the subject available, but more importantly, I have tried to give the teenage boy a framework which he can use to come to grips with his own sexuality, no matter what form it takes."

"Written to be read by the teen-age boy, with parent looking over his shoulder, this book represents the practical suggestions of a researcher in the Kinsey tradition. . . . To this reviewer it represents the total bankruptcy of the taxonomic approach from the moral, psychological, sociological and religious point of view. The book is totally amoral. . . . If you wish to preserve the personal meaning of sexuality and some of its mystery and meaning, as well as its Christian morality, look elsewhere for reading matter." H. V. Sattler
Best Sell 28:40 Ap 15 '68 400w

"Dr. Pomeroy, the father of three children and coauthor of the two Kinsey Reports, seems well qualified to give advice to boys and their parents about sexual problems. . . . If [adolescent boys] can be persuaded to read [this book] the generation gap may be narrowed appreciably. Believing that fear, anxiety, and guilt are the enemies to be overcome in one's sex life, Dr. Pomeroy only considers briefly the physiology of sex but devotes the bulk of his expertly written narrative to the subjects boys are really interested in. . . . He is frank to the point of using the slang words boys all recognize in naming the sexual act and the parts of the body related to it, and, although it is obvious that Dr. Pomeroy favors love in marriage, he refrains from moralizing. This is indeed a 'modern' guide, probably too advanced for some parents, but it makes sense and should be widely purchased by school and public libraries." E. T. Smith
Library J 93:2516 Je 15 '68 200w

Reviewed by Eric Moon

Library J 93:[3325] S 15 '68 270w [YA]

"Dr. Pomeroy does not warn the growing boy of the possibility of boredom or the easy monotony of habit. His book seems to be written for the earnest, humorless American with big, wide, liberal horizons. Even so it is a remarkable book, clear, sane and realistic about those ineradicable habits of male life that our immediate ancestors viewed with such stern disapproval. . . . Dr. Pomeroy allows little for the personal disasters that affect so many—not only physical shortcomings but also the problems of temperament." J. H. Plumb

Sat R 51:23 J1 '68 650w

POMMER, HENRY F. Emerson's first marriage. 126p pl $4.95 Southern Ill. univ. press

B or 92 Emerson, Ralph Waldo. Emerson, Ellen Louisa (Tucker) 67-22023

This biography of Emerson and his first wife, who died from tuberculosis after eighteen months of marriage, attempts to show that many aspects of Emerson's later life "were affected by both her life and death. . . . Professor Pommer has used . . . published material about Ellen Louisa Tucker Emerson and enjoyed the privilege of quoting from unpublished documents at Harvard University and from unpublished family correspondence held by Emerson's descendants." (Publisher's note) Chronology. Annotated bibliography. Index.

"Mr. Pommer's short but valuable book . . . is heavily documented (at the rate of about three notes for every 250 words). . . . His story of the relations between Emerson and his second wife, though a little unfair, is mainly persuasive; but until Lidian's letters are made available to scholars (contrary to Mr. Pommer's statement, they are not lost), we cannot feel secure in our judgment. He is on firmer ground when he shows how much of Emerson's supposedly abstract thought is actually a reflection, even a translation, of experience. . . . Unless new evidence is discovered we are not likely to need another study of Emerson and his first wife. Mr. Pommer has said just about everything there is to say." W. G. Gilman
Am Lit 40:403 N '68 450w

"Most of the information contained here can also be found in Ralph Rusk's life of Ralph Waldo Emerson [BRD 1949] except for some quotations from letters that Ellen wrote which have only recently been made available. This book is recommended for large collections and for young adults." A. M. Fasick
Library J 92:4498 D 15 '67 130w [YA]

Reviewed by Edward Wagenknecht
New Eng Q 41:291 Je '68 800w

"Emerson is an interesting man, but he is interesting intellectually, not emotionally, and the story of his love for Ellen Tucker makes for quiet, speculative reading."
TLS p311 Mr 28 '68 170w

PONENTE, NELLO. Who was Raphael? tr. from the Italian by James Emmons. 149p il col il il $10 Skira

759.5 Raphael (Raffaello Sanzio d'Urbino) 67-25119

An account of the life and career of the Renaissance painter, by a professor of art at the University of Rome. Contents: Urbino, light of Italy; At the source of the Renaissance; The remaking of Rome. Bibliography. Index and bibliographical notices.

Best Sell 27:387 Ja 1 '68 170w

"The plates are of fair quality. Raphael's architecture, as well as his painting, is considered. The text is generally reliable, but no more. Critical and historical problems are ignored or glossed over. There is a useful index, but it reveals the book's main failing: the omission of any discussion of major late works by Raphael and his school. . . . Recommended with reservations."

Choice 5:477 Je '68 110w

"Mr. Ponente provides the layman with a thoughtful, well-documented, consistently interesting insight into all phases of Raphael's creative development and assimilation of the social, philosophical, political, and artistic concepts of his environment. References to and quotations from the work of prominent 16th-Century authors and interesting illustrative comparisons of Raphael's work with that of his predecessors and contemporaries further enhance the value of this exceptionally well-illustrated book. . . . Regrettably, this book, like others published by Skira, will not stand heavy use. Highly recommended for high school and public libraries. Academic libraries will find the illustrations and original comparisons useful." Jacqueline Sisson
Library J 93:982 Mr 1 '68 120w

PONENTE, NELLO—Continued

"Skira-World has begun a new series called 'Who Was?', of which [this] is the first volume. If the series, which concerns itself with the great artists in their time, maintains the level of this first one, it will afford both the scholar and the person with a more general interest a valuable new tool of study. . . . [The text is] so perceptive that one feels Raphael has just been discovered, rather than having been one of the major art figures for over four centuries, and one gains an idea of the very high standard with which the series has been begun."

Va Q R 44:cxvii spring '68 160w

PONTECORVO, GIULIO, ed. Issues in banking and monetary analysis; ed. by Giulio Pontecorvo, Robert P. Shay [and] Albert G. Hart [papers delivered at a seminar sponsored by the Graduate school of business, Columbia university]. 236p $7.50 Holt

332.1 Banks and banking. Money 67-18878

"Six of the nine papers are concerned with questions of domestic finance and monetary policy. Issues discussed include: effectiveness and coordination of monetary and fiscal policies; competition and relationships among various types of financial institutions; recent and proposed changes in banking structure and financial instruments. The three papers discussing matters of international finance examine recent developments in European capital markets and explore proposals for international monetary reform." (Choice)

"Each paper is preceded by a short introduction by the editors and followed by a critical comment (though none of the comments is very critical). Whatever the limitations of this volume, it is clear that the seminars must have been unusually interesting. . . . The papers included in this volume are of generally high quality. This does not necessarily mean that it is a worthwhile venture to put [them] between hard covers and sell them for $7.50. The papers do not make a consistent whole; there is no single theme running through the volume; and there are few if any courses for which [it] would make a suitable text or collection of readings." P. M. Horvitz

Am Econ R 58:253 Mr '68 1250w

"The collection represents a useful addition . . . in the field of money and banking." Choice 5:384 My '68 130w

POOL, BERNARD, ed. The Croker papers, 1808-1857. See Croker, J. W.

POOLE, GRAY, jt. auth. Men who dig up history. See Poole, L.

POOLE, LYNN. Men who dig up history, by Lynn and Gray Poole. 175p il $4 Dodd

920 Archeologists. Archeology 68-14242

The authors of One Passion, Two Loves; the Story of Heinrich and Sophia Schliemann. Discoverers of Troy (BRD 1967) describe the careers of ten contemporary archeologists. The book portrays "Yigael Yadin uncovering Masada; Max Mallowan (with his wife, Agatha Christie) digging in Assyria; George Bass pioneering underwater archeology off Turkey; Oscar Broneer coming upon the Temple of Poseidon at Isthmia; and others." (Christian Science Monitor) Index.

Best Sell 28:66 My 1 '68 50w

"Teen-agers in search of vocations that challenge and satisfy may find much here to ponder. The authors underline the current concept of archeology as utilizing a combination of disciplines from both the humanities and the sciences, the better to understand and interpret past cultures, and, by extension, our own." M. W. Stoer

Christian Science Monitor pB6 My 2 '68 200w

"Sparked by short quotations from the original field reports [this book] recounts some important archeological achievements of the past 20 years. The Pooles . . . emphasize through illustrations from the careers of ten prominent archeologists such recent concerns as osteology, speleology, underwater excavation techniques, and the formation of specialized professional schools, research centers, and institutes. . . .

[The book] lacks a bibliography. It is recommended for libraries serving the general reader." J. W. Stevenson

Library J 93:1140 Mr 15 '68 100w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland
Sat R 51:33 Je 15 '68 70w

POPE, DUDLEY. Drumbeat [Eng title: Ramage and the drumbeat]. 279p $4.95 Doubleday

67-22467

A sequel to Ramage (BRD 1965). In this novel Lieutenant Lord Nicholas "Ramage sails his little sloop Kathleen to glory and destruction in this tale of naval warfare in the Mediterranean in 1797. On his way he captures—and loses—a Spanish frigate, steals a Spanish admiral's secret orders, and leads Jervis and Nelson to victory at Cape St. Vincent." (Library J)

"A sea-story in the great tradition of sea-stories. . . . Not only is [it] vivid, alive with real people,—not necessarily historically real, but real for this novel,—it is alive with a style which is biting and salty as long as the sea is the setting, a style which is transformed to suit all of the other settings: the drawing room, the conference room, the diplomatic tête-a-tête of men who enjoy a linguistic skirmish as well as a naval encounter. . . . Here is one vote for more novels like 'Drumbeat': adventure, romance, and a dash of schmaltz." O. A. Bouise
Best Sell 27:443 F 15 '68 470w

Reviewed by R. R. Rea

Library J 92:4525 D 15 '67 140w

"The setting is the high seas during the Napoleonic Wars. . . . A splendid action story, with enough love interest to satisfy girls but not so much as to discourage boys." Regina Minudri

Library J 93:1334 Mr 15 '68 130w [YA]

"There is a brisk nod at love stuff with a refugee marchesa which doesn't amount to anything. Mainly, this likely contender for the mantle of Hornblower is interested in naval engagements. In these, he lives up to the highest traditions of seafaring fiction." Martin Levin
N Y Times Bk R p45 Mr 31 '68 120w

POPE-HENNESSY, JAMES. Sins of the fathers; a study of the Atlantic slave traders, 1441-1807. 286p pl maps $7.95 Knopf

380.1 Slave trade. Slavery 67-11141

Based on "the journals and letters of slave traders, merchant seamen, landowners, and, in some instances, of the slaves themselves and from his own personal knowledge of Africa, [the author gives an] . . . account of the Atlantic slave trade from its origins in the fifteenth century to its gradual dissolution in the early 1880's. He explains how the slave trade operated and [describes] . . . what life was like in the African trading ports, on board the slave ships, at the New World slave markets, and on the plantations. . . . He attempts to [reveal] . . . the mental outlook of the men who encouraged or condoned slavery." (Publisher's notice) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by Ambrose Agius

Best Sell 27:409 Ja 15 '68 700w

Choice 5:246 Ap '68 180w

Reviewed by Henrietta Buckmaster

Christian Science Monitor p9 Ja 23 '68 650w

Economist 225:ix D 2 '67 420w

Reviewed by W. S. Howard

J Am Hist 55:378 S '68 410w

"[The author] has delved deeply into the primary sources to write a valuable history of the slave trade. . . . This is an authoritative, well-written book which will appeal to scholars and general readers. It is highly recommended to both public and academic libraries." R. F. Kugler

Library J 93:74 Ja 1 '68 130w

"These pages are alive with pain, heavy with human misery. . . . On and on the book goes until we are bludgeoned into insensitivity by the endless barbarity. . . . [The author] guides the reader along the old, well-trodden paths, and his book will be useful to those who are ignorant about the Atlantic slave trade. . . . It contains no new information, no new thoughts, no perceptive historical analysis. It adds nothing to history, nothing to literature. . . . Anyone turning to this book for a study in depth of the ideology, sociology, and economics of slavery will look in vain." J. H. Plumb

N Y Rev of Books 10:24 F 15 '68 1300w
Time 91:84 F 2 '68 550w

"Mr. Pope-Hennessy is not much concerned with the exact size of the slave trade, nor the precise tribal origins of the African slaves, nor even the significance of the trade in the economic history of West Africa, western Europe or the Americas. . . . [His main purpose is] to recreate the realities of slave trading on the West African coast and on the Atlantic, both for the trader and for the slave. In this he succeeds admirably. [His accounts] are both vivid and harrowing. . . . What puts Mr. Pope-Hennessy's book in a different league from Black Cargoes by Daniel Mannix and Malcolm Cowley [BRD 1963, which is] in many ways a more satisfactory history, better organized, more comprehensive and, indeed, more informative, is, first, the quality of the writing and, second, the personal involvement of the author. It is more than a history of the Atlantic slave trade: it is as much an account of how exposure to the history of the trade affected the author."

TLS p1170 N 30 '67 1750w

POPE-HENNESSY, JOHN. Essays on Italian sculpture. 243p pl $16 Phaidon

730.945 Sculpture, Italian. Bronzes

[68-189061]

Most of the articles "collected in this volume deal with Italian Gothic and Renaissance sculpture. Among the artists whose works are examined are Giovanni Pisano, Donatello, Antonio Rossellino, Agostino di Duccio, Jacopo Sansovino, Michelangelo, Benvenuto Cellini and Giovanni Bologna. . . . [Included are the] texts of four booklets originally issued by the Victoria and Albert Museum, in which an attempt is made to elucidate the personalities of major artists through analysis of single works. . . . A final article discusses the life and work of Bernard Berenson." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

Book World p7 D 8 '68 10w

"Acute scholarship is combined with urbanity and sensitivity. These splinters from the workshop of an accomplished scholar presuppose previous acquaintance with the subject. The 248 illustrations are entirely adequate. A magisterial collection for advanced students and scholars." Peter Fingesten

Library J 93:4285 N 15 '68 130w

"[Mr Pope-Hennessy has] added at the end a scathing review of the late Sylvia Sprigge's biography of Berenson [BRD 1960]. In the course of it, he remarks, first, that Berenson can be read with pleasure by the non-specialist and that 'the importance of this cannot be overstressed'. Secondly, he concedes that 'Berenson was never an easy or seductive writer', and attributes this to the difficulty of the task he had set himself as a critic and historian of art. Presumably, these are precisely the standards by which Mr Pope-Hennessy himself would wish to be judged. It must be admitted that he stands up to them triumphantly. What is impressive about his writing is the keenness of physical observation, linked to intellectual rigour." Edward Lucie-Smith

New Statesman 76:290 S 6 '68 500w

POPKIN, ROY. The environmental science services administration; including: the Coast and geodetic survey; the Weather bureau; the Inst. for telecommunications sciences and aeronomy and other related services. 278p $5.95 Praeger

353.82 U.S. Environmental Science Administration 67-20492

This book provides "accounts of the history of each of the agencies (Coast and Geodetic Survey, Weather Bureau, and [the former] Central Radio Propagation Laboratory); a description of their reorganization under ESSA, and discussions of their roles in serving aviation, participating in the nation's war efforts, warning against environmental hazards, including hurricanes, tornadoes, floods, and earthquakes, and cooperating with other nations and international agencies in the study of the physical environment." (Science) Bibliography. Index.

"Aimed at young people who might be considering a career in government service and as such might be useful in an undergraduate library or even in a high school library. . . . Some items in the bibliography are wrongly dated."

Choice 5:1166 N '68 110w [YA]

Reviewed by A. L. Fessler

Library J 92:2798 Ag '67 150w

"The book is one of a series, the Praeger Library of U.S. Government Departments and Agencies, written to give the general reader an understanding of the development, scope, and operation of the components of the executive branch of the U.S. government. It succeeds reasonably well in this objective, although the scientific operations are mostly listed rather than described. . . . The discussion of the impact on the public of the hurricane and tornado warning services of the Weather Bureau is the most graphic part of the book, perhaps because the author, as an official of the National Red Cross, has had personal experience in using the warnings to reduce the human suffering resulting from these disasters. . . . An appendix is devoted to a description of career opportunities in ESSA." M. Neiburger

Science 160:755 My 17 '68 750w

POPPINO, ROLLIE E. Brazil; the land and people; il. by Carybé and Poty. 370p maps $7.50 Oxford

981 Brazil—History

68-17608

The professor of history at the University of California, Davis, writes on Portuguese America from 1500 to the present. Chronology. Annotated bibliography. Index.

"Poppino says only that he reviews the evolution of the society and economy of Portuguese America since 1500, but it is doubtful whether such a review can take place in the absence of a more extensive political analysis. With that proviso, however, this . . . can be recommended for both beginners and specialists. For the 20 years of research the author invested do show in the wealth of invaluable statistical material, though it is to be regretted that the sources . . . [are] not specially footnoted. . . . The point of view coincides with that of most U.S. authors, namely, that the Brazilian élite, including the army, can best bring the internal stability necessary for foreign investment and economic development. . . . Celso Furtado's The Economic Growth of Brazil should be consulted for a counterpoise to Poppino's interpretations."

Choice 5:1210 N '68 190w

"For those interested in specialized studies, Mr. Poppino has appended a very good 'Selective Guide to the Literature on Brazil.' His study should appeal to undergraduates and public libraries will want to buy the book because there are many people who would be interested in South America if only properly balanced, interesting books could be made available to them. Mr. Poppino has captured the flavor and dynamism of Brazil as only a person could who has travelled widely and sympathetically in this country." W. L. Morin

Library J 93:2652 J1 '68 150w

"[The] emphasis is almost exclusively economic and social. . . . Brazilian politics in the twentieth century, about which the author has written extensively elsewhere, are almost totally neglected. As an introduction to the economic and social history of Brazil . . . the book is first-rate—lucid, straightforward, well organized, interesting and informative, if a little uncritical and conventional in its approach to controversial issues."

TLS p1292 N 14 '68 650w

"An immense amount of information has been compressed into this book which is a volume in the Latin American History series. Mr. Poppino's grand design . . . has succeeded and the sweep, variety, and expanse of the nation are sensed in the text. It is, however, so rich as to be only tolerably digestible. That very richness . . . makes it more than tolerable as a reference."

Va Q R 44:clxx autumn '68 80w

PORTE, A. W. DE. See DePorte, A. W.

PORTEOUS, A. J. D., ed. The credibility of divine existence. See Smith, N. K.

PORTER, BRIAN. Britain and the rise of Communist China; a study of British attitudes, 1945-1954. 195p $5.60 Oxford

327.42 Great Britain—Foreign relations—China. (People's Republic of China). China (People's Republic of China)—Foreign relations—Great Britain [67-82632]

The author "organizes British opinions according to topics that fall in a roughly chronological order: the 1945-1949 rise of Chinese Communism, the recognition question especially of 1949-1950, the Chinese seat in the United Nations, the Formosa problem, the several phases of the Korean War, and the 1954 Indo-China crisis. In relation to each of these topics and so for each period in which the topic commanded attention, Porter tells us how Communist China was perceived by various British political groups. His sources are parliamentary debates, governmental statements, newspapers, magazines, and Gallup polls (forty-eight of them reprinted in an appendix)." (Am Hist R) Index.

"The author succeeds in distinguishing the generally British, as opposed to the American, response to Communist China and in explaining the difference without invidiousness. He also analyzes temperately the difference between the international idealism of the Liberal-Radical perception of Communist China and the national power politics of the Tory perception. More notable, however, is a short-run historical hindsight not emphasized by the author. Both sets of perceptions now appear to share an erroneous estimate of the relative danger posed by Communist China." L. D. Epstein

Am Hist R 73:486 D '67 320w

"Porter's chief conclusion is that, because of the remoteness of East Asia and because of the lack of vital British interests there, the British have a greater degree of objectivity concerning Far Eastern questions than Americans do. . . . The book is not completely satisfying. One is obliged to define it as an interpretation, essentially a journalistic piece. It is interestingly presented in a pleasing style but the reader is left with grave doubts about the validity of at least some of the conclusions. Are the analyses sufficiently rigorous? Is the lack of precision acceptable? Is the author's methodology adequate?"

Choice 4:1298 Ja '68 130w

PORTER, CHARLES A. Restif's novels: or, An autobiography in search of an author. 441p il $10 Yale univ. press

843 Restif de la Bretonne, Nicolas Edme 66-21531

The author "examines for their literary value Restif's extensive writings, including . . . [the] pornographical novel L'Anti-Justine, as well as Paysan Perverti and Monsieur Nicolas [BRD 1968]. He traces in the earlier imitative and 'schools' novels Restif's basic themes and obsessions, [attempting to] show how certain autobiographical experiences appear in different forms. In addition, he separates Restif's scientific works from those essentially narrative, and distinguishes fictional material from autobiographical. Porter concludes that in Restif's novels the relationship between real and imagined life is almost inextricable." (Choice) Bibliography.

"Porter systematically examines . . . many nearly unreadable books. . . . [However, he] fails to relate Restif's fiction, except in passing, to the work of 'good second-rate authors,' his contemporaries, Baculard, Bernardin, Mercier, Marmontel; also he appears to shy away from Restif's erotic interests as distasteful or 'insane.' The appended bibliography, 1949-66, brings up to date J. Rives Childs' exhaustive Restif bibliography."

Choice 4:1250 Ja '68 190w

"[Porter] has here undertaken to examine the relationship between Restif's life and his work. It is a method particularly susceptible of exposing why intrinsic merits exist in this great bulk of fiction considered generally worthless. . . . Mr. Porter pursues his task through an exhaustive analysis of each novel in chronological order, commenting and illustrating from the text, and his conclusions do not invite caviling. Restif is greatest as an artist when he is least an artist. . . . Mr. Porter's focus on Restif's craft throws, by refraction, more light on this life and personality about which we remain impenitently curious." Laurent Le-Sage

Sat R 50:70 Je 10 '67 480w

PORTER, GEORGE. The world of the frog and the toad; text and phot. by George Porter. 153p $4.95 Lippincott

597 Frogs

68-10419

In text and photographs this study follows "frogs and toads seasonally from spring to winter, from courtship to hibernation. . . . [Included] is information on how to keep frogs and toads in captivity and how to photograph these well-camouflaged amphibians." (Horn Bk) Bibliography. Index.

"Rare photographic views of wildlife are combined with a highly readable text. . . . The author scientifically describes the physiology and habitats of his subjects. But on a more dramatic level he recalls the delicate beauty and multivoiced clamor of Pine Barrens tree frogs; the strange spectacle of a young toad yawning and yawning in preparation for molting; and a shock-filled face-to-face meeting with a moose, which kept him from photographing the boreal chorus frog." Jane Manthorne

Horn Bk 44:85 F '68 120w [YA]

Library J 93:3340 S 15 '68 20w [YA]

A PORTION of that field; the centennial of the burial of Lincoln [by] Gwendolyn Brooks [and others]. 97p $3.50 Univ. of Ill. press

973.7 Lincoln, Abraham. U.S.—History—Civil War 67-12993

Included in this volume are a poem by Gwendolyn Brooks and seven "of the papers presented at the centennial of the burial of Abraham Lincoln, held in Springfield and New Salem, Illinois, May 1965. . . . The addresses [are] by Aldai Stevenson, Paul H. Douglas, Otto Kerner, Paul M. Angle, Bruce Catton, Mark Van Doren, and Allan Nevins." (Choice)

"A unique volume . . . full of stimulating insights and easily quotable passages, both from Lincoln and several authors."

Choice 4:1440 F '68 80w

Reviewed by F. G. Davies

J Am Hist 54:676 D '67 120w

"Each [contributor] in his own way sums up his or her conclusions on the centennial period. Librarian Paul M. Angle is most critical in his hard look at Lincoln scholarship, while Allan Nevins and Bruce Catton do the same for Civil War scholarship and the centennial itself. This is not the last book on the Civil War centennial, but it is a transcription of the last official program." R. J. Havlik

Library J 92:1156 Mr 15 '67 140w

PORTIS, CHARLES. True grit; a novel. 215p $4.95 Simon & Schuster

68-14844

"The narrator and main character is Mattie Ross. Mattie, who tells the story 30 years after it happened, was 14 years old when she left a Yell County farm one winter in the 1880's to go to Ft. Smith, Arkansas where her father had just been murdered by a farm tenant, a man with a criminal record in Texas, and who has fled into Indian Territory. Pert little Mattie Ross convinces Rooster Cogburn, a U.S. marshal who has 'true grit,' to join her in tracking down the murderer. Texas Ranger LaBoeuf joins them in the hunt." (Library J)

Reviewed by W. B. Hill

America 119:566 N 30 '68 40w

Reviewed by Edward Weeks

Atlantic 221:119 Je '68 200w

Reviewed by Brother Vernon Poore

Best Sell 28:144 J1 1 '68 200w

Reviewed by Lucy Rosenthal

Book World p11 Ag 11 '68 300w

"A comic western, this entertaining book will be widely read. Largely because [it] will appear in the Saturday Evening Post and movie rights to it have been sold, the book is strongly recommended as a popular fiction item in general collections." William McCleary

Library J 93:1918 My 1 '68 200w

Reviewed by K. C. Vogel

Library J 93:3336 S 15 '68 120w [YA]

"[This story] is pure, beautiful corn. Mr. Portis, who wrote Norwood [BRD 1966], is what they used to call a natural, but there's more to it than that. [It is] surely some kind of classic; readers of William Eastlake might appreciate it best, but only a mean person won't enjoy it. If there are people who still follow the custom this is a fine book to read aloud." Sara Blackburn

Nation 207:92 Ag 5 '68 140w

Reviewed by Richard Rhodes
N Y Times Bk R p4 J1 7 '68 €00w

Reviewed by R. A. Sokolov
Newsweek 72:82 J1 12 '68 150w

"This remarkably moving book possesses a universality long lacking in American fiction. As delightful to a twelve-year-old as to a cultivated adult, [it] is lively, uproarious high adventure. It is also a commentary on the American character, then and now. Although the tale is straightforward, told in an ingenuous nineteenth-century style, its nuances are endless. . . . Portis destroys absurdity by overwhelming it with truth. Mattie Ross is nineteenth-century America; it is impossible to doubt her, impossible to doubt the tale that she tells. Hers is a yarn with swagger, color and song." Brian Garfield

Sat R 51:25 Je 29 '68 400w

PORTMANN, ADOLF. Animal forms and patterns; a study of the appearance of animals; tr. by Hella Czech; il. by Sabine Baur. 254p $6.50 Schocken

591 Anatomy, Comparative 67-14962

The author, a professor of zoology at the University of Basle "aims to 'stimulate thoughtful observation,' by describing the results of minute, appreciative examination of structures ranging from feathers to giraffes and from microorganisms to the brains of mammals. . . . Chapter titles include 'The Brain as a Measure of Differentiation,' 'The Mollusc and Its Shell,' and 'Form as an Expression of Inwardness.' But throughout [the book] there are two constant elements: the study of pattern for its own sake, and the biological significance of appearances. [Originally published in 1948 as Die Tiergestalt.] the book was first published in English in 1952 (in London), and now appears unchanged." (Book Week) Glossary. Bibliography. Index.

"The joy of looking at beautiful organisms and structures . . . surely influenced Dr. Portmann in writing [this book]. . . . He is much helped by 117 drawings by Sabine Baur; these, through exceptionally skillful use of light and shade, line and dot, combine accuracy with elegance to an extraordinary degree. The translation from German is also good, but includes 'morphological' for structural, 'tracks' for nerve tracts or trunks, 'viz.' for namely, and 'medullary strands' for nerve net. The short bibliography contains no entry later than 1951. [Moreover,] the implication on the jacket that this book is a contribution to science can hardly be upheld. Dr. Portmann has not, as the blurb states, 'reconciled scientific biology with . . . an aesthetics of animal behavior,' but has instead illustrated the hazards of an uncritical response to private feelings." S. A. Barnett

Book Week p6 J1 2 '67 1350w

"In dealing with animal form and appearance, Portmann takes the view that, for example, patterns arise not as secondary or necessary byproducts during development, but have an intrinsic value of their own. The development of outward appearance is considered as fundamental to the animal's welfare as is the form of the internal organs. In pursuing this idea, a vast variety of animal types are described, and the descriptions are accompanied by many excellent drawings. Entertaining and of value to the biologist as well as the general reader."

Choice 4:1269 Ja '68 100w

POSELL, ELSA Z. Russian composers. 181p il $3.50 Houghton

920 Composers, Russian—Juvenile literature 67-22172

The author "attempts to discuss 17 composers, their music, and their influence on the musical world. She begins with Glinka who was born in 1804 and ends with Shostakovich who is still influencing the present-day musical scene. Her list of composers [includes] Mussorgsky, Rimsky-Korsakoff, Tchaikovsky, Stravinsky and

. . . others." (Christian Science Monitor) Bibliography, Index, "Grades six to eight," (Library J)

"The biographies are necessarily brief, consisting of fact after fact presented at almost breathtaking speed. There is little here to hold the interest of 9-11's." B. L. Glatz

Christian Science Monitor pB10
My 2 '68 100w

"Students who have some background in music will enjoy reading this well-written, interesting account of Russian composers and performers. . . . Information about the development of music in Russia, the 'Mighty Five' (a group dedicated to keeping Western ideas out of Russia) and the training of musicians in Russia are effectively presented. School and public libraries will find this book a useful addition." Don Phillips

Library J 92:3867 O 15 '67 200w

POSNER, ERNST. Archives & the public interest; selected essays; ed. by Ken Munden; introd. by Paul Levinson. 204p $6 Public affairs press

350 Archives 67-27811

A collection of articles assembled by the Society of American Archivists in honor of its former president, Ernst Posner, on his seventy-fifth birthday.

"Unlike the more usual Festschrift that often bestows students' esteem without focusing on the honoree's major contributions, this book admirably represents Posner's thinking. And in a country where the archival profession is yet comparatively young and the field of archival theorists uncrowded, Posner's contribution stands as a significant achievement. . . . Perhaps the most impressive aspect of this book is Posner's grasp of the problems that have faced and still face the National Archives." Walter Rundell

Am Hist R 73:1609 Je '68 420w

"[This] is a must for the aspiring or the accomplished archivist, and it will help the scholar to understand his primary sources. Ernst Posner's thorough knowledge of the archival field, his keen insight, and his good humor are quite evident. . . . The essays show an impressive breadth of subject matter. The opening one, on European archival development, brought American archivists unmatched learning at a critical time. It and others treat the growth of basic principles, the training of archivists, and the handling of records during and after wars. These essays are climaxed by a thoughtful and entertaining account of the author's return to Europe after World War II. . . . The somewhat artificial thematic arrangement of the articles is rather confusing; a chronological order would make possible a better understanding. A work of this importance deserved a more attractive format, and certainly an index." P. C. Brooks

J Am Hist 54:867 Mr '68 330w

POSNER, M. V. Italian public enterprise, by M. V. Posner and S. J. Woolf. 160p $5.50 Harvard univ. press

338.945 Government ownership. Industry and state—Italy 67-4204

A survey of "the role of the State enterprises in Italy over the last fifteen years. . . . [The authors describe] the size, rate of growth, and pattern of diversification of the public sector, . . . [outline] the State enterprises' methods of raising funds, and assess the effect of such borrowing on the economy as a whole. . . . [They] analyse the relationship of State enterprise investment to the overall pattern of Italian growth . . . [and] examine the implications of the structure of control over the public sector which has developed in Italy. Lastly, they suggest the lessons to be learnt from the Italian experience." (Pref) Index.

"[The authors deal with] the ambiguities of a 'mixed economy' in which it is impossible to draw a clear line between public and private enterprise, the inconsistencies of public planning agencies which in practice plan rather haphazardly, and the riddle of how part of the profits of public concerns is diverted into private hands. It is clear from this study that, in spite of such obstacles, the achievements of the public sector are impressive. . . . In so far as the authors make the labyrinthine complexities of public enterprise generally intelligible, they perform a truly worthwhile service. . . . If the explanations are occasionally less than clear, the fault lies in the nature of the subject rather than in any lack of attention on the authors' part." Roland Sarti

POSNER, W. V.—Continued

Am Hist R 73:172 O '67 600w

"A study of the dynamics of 'growthmanship' in which the public sector plays not only economic but social and political roles as well. Posner and Woolf are 'non-ideological,' at least in the conventional socialist-private enterprise sense, and try to evaluate on several levels the plus and minus factors of a mixed economy. The authors are British, and there are constant references to the relevance of the Italian situation to the British. Posner is a leading Cambridge economist. Woolf is in Italian studies. Comparable to G. H. Hildebrand, Growth and Structure in the Economy of Modern Italy [BRD 1966], and more recent and theoretically sophisticated than V. C. Lutz, Italy, a Study in Economic Development [BRD 1963]. Well written, suitable for undergraduate libraries."

Choice 5:236 Ap '68 130w

POST, ELIZABETH L. The Emily Post book of etiquette for young people. 238p il $5.95 Funk

395 Etiquette—Juvenile literature 67-25416

This book "provides broad guidelines to behavior and personal development as well as to manners. . . . Standard subjects, such as introductions, party giving, and letter writing are covered, but there are also chapters on 'Sportsmanship and Sports,' and 'On Keeping it Cool.' [Index.] Grades nine to twelve." (Library J)

"Every High School library (Junior or Senior) will be well advised to invest in a copy of this excellent book. . . . Particularly sensible is the chapter on Personal Appearance; so, too, the Art of Conversation, which also includes introductions. . . . A chapter on Dating is also sensible without being didactic. . . . Recommended."

Choice 27:394 Ja 1 '68 160w [YA]

"[This etiquette book is] for middle- and upper-class (e.g. debutante) teen-agers. Even for libraries holding [M.] Beery's Manners Made Easy and Mind Your Manners by [B.] Allen and [M. P.] Briggs, it will prove an excellent addition, especially because of the changing opinion of what is considered good form. Written on a slightly more adult level than the aforementioned books, yet in a forthright, interesting style, Mrs. Post's book can serve as a good transition to adult books on etiquette."

Bernice Levine

Library J 93:310 Ja 15 '68 120w [YA]

Reviewed by D. M. Glixon

Sat R 51:64 My 18 '68 70w [YA]

POST, LAURENS VAN DER. See Van der Post, L.

POSTAN, M. M. An economic history of Western Europe, 1945-1964. 382p $7.50; pa $4 Barnes & Noble

330.94 Europe—Economic conditions—1945-1964 [67-94672]

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by P. M. Hohenberg

Am Econ R 58:574 Je '68 850w

Choice 5:385 My '68 150w

TLS p90 Ja 25 '68 900w

POSTMAN, NEIL. Linguistics; a revolution in teaching [by] Neil Postman and Charles Weingartner. 209p $5 Delacorte press

428 English language—Study and teaching. Language and languages 66-22201

"In format the book is divided into two parts. Part One establishes definition and rationale for the linguistic approach to the teaching of language. It asks and answers the following questions: What is linguistics? What do linguists do? What is linguistics good for? Following on the rationale, Part Two sets up and exemplifies the linguistic enterprise in the areas of grammar, usage, semantics, lexicography and dialect geography, reading, and extensions of linguistics called metalinguistics and psycholinguistics." (Record) Bibliography.

"This book apparently came about from the authors' desire to provide parents and teachers with a brief book which would explain the underlying assumptions of modern linguistics and would show how linguistics can be used in schools. They have accomplished this laudable intention. . . . However, the authors' dogmatism is sometimes wearying. [For example they] insist that linguistics is best taught as a system of discovery; and in their long and useful chapter on semantics they reject every approach but that of the secular positivist. Despite these minor criticisms, this is a useful book which deserves recommendation." J. A. Rycenga

Library J 92:580 F 1 '67 140w

"This book is engagingly and succinctly written. It's fun to read. It should serve as an excellent introduction to what linguistics is about. It is not technical. It is not a book on grammar. It serves to establish a broad and powerful definition for the linguistic enterprise which . . . would change the traditional approach to language instruction. The book is so written as to expand the viewpoint of the reader regarding the pervasive influence of language on the individual. Anyone reading the book should become more interested in language. . . . I recommend the book for use in pre-service and in-service programs for teachers. It's worth any teacher's time to read. Its rationalization of the linguistic enterprise and examples of classroom action should make it possible for the teacher at any grade level to derive specific and appropriate language activity for his classroom." J. M. Ward

Record 69:193 N '67 1050w

POTTER, JOHN MASON. Plots against presidents. 310p $5.95 Astor-Honor

364.15 Presidents—U.S.

67-30944

In this examination of assassination attempts, "the author concerns himself solely with serious assassination attempts—successful and unsuccessful. . . . [He describes the murder of Lincoln], Garfield, McKinley and Kennedy. . . . [He] also mentions the alleged poisoning of Presidents Harrison, Taylor and Harding and the threat to Buchanan." (Library J) Bibliography.

"Potter's book follows a familiar pattern: each president who was a victim of assassin is placed in his historical perspective; the assassin is then introduced to the reader with remarkable biographical detail. Potter has delved into the eccentric conduct and known idiosyncracies of John Wilkes Booth, Charles J. Guiteau, Leon Czolgosz, and Lee Harvey Oswald. Other would-be assassins, such as Richard Lawrence, John Schrank, Giuseppe Zangara, and Oscar Collazo, are given briefer but thorough analysis. . . . [This] book is well written, but marred by printing and spelling (editing?) errors." F. C. Brown

Best Sell 23:121 Je 15 '68 500w

"This book will appeal to the general reader but historians will find it lacking in depth, since it is a compilation from other more detailed reference sources. Actually the title is misleading because plots against Presidents are legion. . . . [The author] has the skills and techniques of a journalist in extracting every bit of suspense and excitement from each dramatic incident. His book is recommended for large libraries." W. C. Kiessel

Library J 93:2492 Je 15 '68 200w

POTTS, ABBIE FINDLAY. The elegiac mode; poetic form in Wordsworth and other elegists. 460p $9 Cornell univ. press

821 English poetry—History and criticism. Wordsworth, William 67-12093

The author "surveys poems and poets from antiquity to the present to determine the nature and tone of the elegiac genre. In the elegiac imagination she finds enduring themes. . . . Elegy's metrical habit and procedures reflect its tone of passionate meditation and speculation. Its most characteristic device is discovery, frequently in the form of recognition or revelation. Her central concern in tracing Wordsworth's development and influence leads the author to characterize the nineteenth century as 'The Elegiac Century.' Chapters on Hardy, Yeats, and D. H. Lawrence carry the inquiry well into the twentieth century." (Publisher's note) Index.

"Posthumously published, this book completes Potts' trilogy of studies in literary form. More ambitious than her Wordsworth's Prelude [BRD 1954] and Shakespeare and the Faerie Queene [BRD 1959], it is, in effect, a history of poetry. Though she devotes five central chapters to Wordsworth, in defining the form and noting the recurrent imagery of the elegiac mode, Potts begins with ancient flute song and ends with Dylan Thomas. . . . [The book] is a labor of much learning and love; its allusive and breathless style may alienate younger readers. Recommended with that qualification."

Choice 5:344 My '68 80w

"Professor Potts is at her best with . . . perceptive hints about form. Unfortunately, these connexions are obscured by her making others of a different sort, the hunting out of apparent correspondences between Wordsworth's poetry and some of the obscurer stretches of his reading. Some are undeniable, some seem absurdly forced; a few are illuminating but too often one is left with nothing but—Wordsworth had a phrase for it—a 'sense of dim similitude'. . . . [This volume] oppressed by a mass of material and with the additional difficulty of a rather wandering style, suffers (especially in the Wordsworth sections) both from its American over-intellectualism and its feminine intuitions. . . . But there are many rewards."

TLS p798 J1 25 '68 900w

POTTS, E. DANIEL. British Baptist missionaries in India, 1793-1837: the history of Serampore and its missions. 276p $10 Cambridge

266.6 Missions—Serampore, India. Baptists—Missions [67-13806]

"The author looks at the background of missionary activity in India, the Baptist literary effort, their role in social reform, their relationship with the government, and the Indian response. . . . [His discussion focuses on the work of] William Carey, Joshua Marshman, and William Ward." (Am Hist R) Bibliography. Index.

"In this study Dr. Potts has cultivated intensively a small section of the wide field surveyed by K. Ingham in his Reformers in India, 1793-1833 [BRD 1956]. Like Ingham, Potts has made good use of rich missionary archives that have been otherwise relatively neglected, especially by American scholars. . . . The chapter called 'Translation, Literature, Journalism, and Printing' is academic history near its best. It was in these endeavors . . . that the Serampore brotherhood was most effective. . . . Every scholar in the field will experience the pleasure of recognizing a first-class work as he reads these pages." Mark Naidis

Am Hist R 73:1224 Ap '68 470w

"This book's title . . . may suggest to some readers that it will be of interest only to those concerned with the history of missions. The author has in fact written a study that provides essential information about a crucial time and place for modern India—Calcutta at the beginning of the nineteenth century. . . . There is still no history of the missionary movement in India that is not marked by hagiography, superficiality, or lack of knowledge of India itself. What is needed before even a beginning can be made at such a history are numerous studies of particular mission societies at work in their chosen regions. . . . This is precisely what D. Potts of Monash University, Australia, has been able to do in this valuable book." A. T. Embree

Pacific Affairs 41:315 summer '68 650w

POTTS, JEAN. The trash stealer. 158p $3.95 Scribner

68-11539

"Tending bar at a summer resort, Joe Florio in self-defense kills a man bent on holdup. Joe's guilt is complicated and increased by encountering the daughter of the dead man soon afterward; and he returns to New York in search of her. . . . He is drawn into her strange life and that of her family; and before he can break out of the dangerous entanglement he must solve the mystery of a missing diamond necklace." (Publisher's note)

"[The book] has a pedestrian plot which is rather forced."

Best Sell 27:406 Ja 15 '68 50w

"You'll find subtlety, sensitivity and a gentle, late-summer sadness in [this novel] . . . along with one of the finest kook-heroines in years—a girl who is certainly a liar, possibly a thief and conceivably a killer, but whose defenseless innocence is as touching as that of Melisande. You'll also find a well-shaped plot, an attractive young hero, and the quiet authority of a first-rate craftsman." Anthony Boucher

N Y Times Bk R p43 F 4 '68 70w

Reviewed by Sergeant Cuff

Sat R 51:52 F 24 '68 40w

"American Jean Potts compares very nicely with English Joan Fleming, always an intelligent writer, never a self-repeating writer, but sometimes not bringing it off at all. This short book, however, is all right, the story of a nice boy who accidentally kills a man. . . . The nice boy—Freckles redivivus—is pleasant to meet again in fiction."

TLS p833 Ag 1 '68 80w

POTVIN, RAYMOND H., jt. auth. College women and fertility values. See Westoff, C. F.

POULET, GEORGES. The metamorphoses of the circle; tr. from the French by Carley Dawson and Elliott Coleman in collaboration with the author. 400p $10 Johns Hopkins press

809 Literature, Modern—History and criticism 66-24406

A third book of literary criticism by a professor of French at the University of Zurich and a founder of the new criticism in France, whose previous studies include "Studies in Human Time [BRD 1956] and the Interior Distance [BRD 1960. In this book] . . . he examines the persistent recurrence of the emblematic circle and its center. . . . Single chapters are devoted to literary periods and major literary figures, mostly French, but including Poe, James, and Eliot." (Library J)

"From the medieval scholastic's metaphors of the circle as the Godhead and eternity, the circle becomes, increasingly after the Renaissance, the vehicle for speculations on the duration of the moment or conceptions of an elusive, mysterious universe. . . . This monumental work of creative scholarship will interest philosophically inclined students of literature. For large public and academic collections." J. R. Willingham

Library J 92:778 F 15 '67 130w

"Brilliantly translated . . . the language of this critic is a ceaseless effort to reach an identification with the conscience of the writer he is studying. It is a struggle to bring about some closeness between the writer's language and the critic's. In these studies where Poulet tries to show how 'the metamorphoses of the circle' molded the minds of Pascal, Balzac, Poe, Flaubert, Baudelaire, James, Claudal, Eliot, and others, the critic . . . ends by prolonging the thought of the writer. He learns to live on the life of the writer. And yet the critic's writing is never an empty echoing of the novelist or the poet. It is a deepening of the original work, a contemplation of the entire expanse of the work, and precisely that kind of contemplation which the writer himself never enjoyed." Wallace Fowlie

Poetry 112:41 Ap '68 350w

POULLIER, JEAN-PIERRE, jt. auth. Why growth rates differ. See Denison, E. F.

POUND, EZRA. Pound/Joyce: the letters of Ezra Pound to James Joyce, with Pound's essays on Joyce; ed. and with commentary by Forrest Read. 314p $10 New directions

816 Joyce, James

66-27616

This "volume gathers together all of Pound's surviving letters to Joyce [written from 1913 to 1939], most of which are published for the first time, all of his essays and articles on Joyce's work, his radio broadcast . . . and a number of miscellaneous pieces and extracts." (Book World) Index.

POUND, EZRA—Continued

Reviewed by B. I. Duffey

Am Lit 40:413 N '68 650w

"Professor Read has arranged all this material in chronological order and supplied a running commentary in preference to footnotes. . . . The quantity and quality of Pound's criticism of Joyce, here reprinted from mainly ephemeral publications, will astound even most Joyce scholars. . . . Read has assembled more than a dozen . . . separate pieces, of which the most impressive dates from 1918 and is entitled simply 'Joyce.'" Vivian Mercier
Book World p4 Ja 7 '68 600w

Choice 5:197 Ap '68 150w

"Pound's genuine appreciation of, and efforts in behalf of, the impecunious and ailing Irishman are clear. . . . Pound sustained and encouraged Joyce. Joyce influenced Pound. The letters reveal Pound as Joyce's link with the English literary world during Joyce's years of exile in Trieste, Paris, and Zurich. But in addition to Pound's letters, there are his essays bearing on Joyce and the stage, Ulysses, Joyce and Flaubert, Dubliners, and so on. Mr. Read's most useful commentary explains matters and persons mentioned in the letters and provides a transition between letters and essays." L. W. Griffin

Library J 92:4159 N 15 '67 190w

Reviewed by Hugh Kenner

Nat R 20:195 F 27 '68 1550w

"'Pound/Joyce' shows us the poet scarcely at all, except as the qualities of the entrepreuring Pound, and notably his capacity for paying attention, underlay the work of the poet. Yet attention is the central quality in the poetry: the poet's attention on each detail, exacting a comparable attention in the reader. It was, finally, one man who helped feed Joyce and who wrote 'Personae' and 'The Cantos.' His postulation of an ideal Joyce, and his more publicized errors had similar motives; and watching him busy on James Joyce's behalf, busy over minute daily particulars, we can understand better than by reading summaries of his life the values behind the sharp clear words he arranged." Hugh Kenner

N Y Times Bk R p5 Ja 7 '68 500w

Reviewed by Louise Bogan

New Yorker 43:133 Mr 30 '68 390w

Va Q R 44:lxv spring '68 230w

"The editorial work is impeccable, but the presentation of these documents could have been clarified had the designer of the book adopted some device differentiating between letters, essays, and editorial notes rather than printing them all in the same type. The chronological arrangement results often in a fascinating demonstration of the development of Pound's views. . . . Certainly Ezra Pound appears here at his best. . . . The Pound-Joyce friendship is one of the key relationships in the literary history of our age, and this book, in providing most of the necessary documentation for the Pound side of it, makes a welcome contribution to scholarship."

Yale R 57:XXVI Mr '68 800w

POUND, REGINALD. Mirror of the century; the Strand magazine, 1891-1950 [Eng title: The Strand magazine, 1891-1950]. 200p il $5.95 Barnes, A.S.

052 The Strand magazine

67-12836

The history of a popular magazine. "Founded by George Newnes in 1891, during the reign of Queen Victoria, The Strand lasted through the Edwardian Age [and] two world wars . . . [until] falling circulation forced its demise in March, 1950. . . . [The author] was its editor during the magazine's struggle for survival in World War II. . . . The Strand was middle class in outlook, and it featured articles and short stories by some of England's leading authors—A. Conan Doyle, Winston Churchill, H. G. Wells, Somerset Maugham, Rudyard Kipling, and many more—and was one of the first magazines to feature photography. . . . [Mr. Pound describes] the personalities of the authors, editors, and artists who were involved in its publication . . . [and he includes some] anecdotes and photographs [which appeared in its pages]." (Publisher's note) Index.

Economist 219:979 My 28 '66 550w

Reviewed by John Gross

New Statesman 72:262 Ag 19 '66 550w

"The Strand reflected the smug face of late Victorian and Edwardian England, but was it the mirror of the century, as former editor Reginald Pound alleges? Only in the sense that it took the surface for the fact. The Strand missed the deeper currents that were to sweep away the world on which it was founded. . . . Mr. Pound writes affectionately of The Strand. He depends a good deal upon anecdotes and vignettes, but he has a sure touch with these. His best stories concern Winston Churchill as a contributor. . . . [The author's] observations on the life of The Strand are unfailingly interesting without being profound. He has written the sort of book that would have qualified for excerpting or serializing in The Strand itself." Gene Baro

N Y Times Bk R p6 Ap 9 '67 1500w

"From its very beginning the Strand was ■ success: it was excellent value at sixpence; it embodied to perfection Newnes's one truly original idea of purveying 'information as entertainment'. . . . Its recurrent features, its illustrated interviews, its Portraits of Celebrities at Different Times of Their Lives, its cartoons by H. Maxwell Beerbohm and others, retain their fearful fascination. So too do the Holmes stories, which may here be seen to owe much of their effect to the splendid drawings by Sidney Paget which accompany them. . . . [The author] has handled the copious material at his disposal with great address even if, as is only natural, he is inclined to dilate more lengthily upon the period he knew than upon the greater days, which preceded it. He is full of good stories."

TLS p467 My 26 '66 500w

POUNDS, NORMAN J. G. Europe and the Soviet Union; with a contribution by George J. Demko. 2d ed 528p il maps $9.95 McGraw

914 Europe—Description and travel. Russia
—Description and travel 65-24529

A survey of the geography of every country in Europe as well as the U.S.S.R. and Turkey. This is a revised edition of Europe and the Mediterranean, originally published in 1953. Chapter bibliographies.

"Pounds has enriched his survey with graphic figures, informative statistics, and some unusual photographs, often of his own, which one does not find in standard works. In the text one appreciates the straightforward and economical presentation as well as Pounds' faithfulness to the rendering in the native tongue of the names of different regions, places, rivers, mountains. One would have appreciated, however, a greater consistency in their spelling.

The usefulness of some works [cited in the bibliographies] which date from the beginning of the century is questionable."

Choice 3:1062 Ja '67 140w

"This college text may be within the grasp of superior high school students, but it probably will be more useful as a quick reference for the hard-pressed teacher. . . . [There is] one outstanding chapter, entitled 'Unity and Division,' which in fifteen pages traces the varying regional organizations of Europe from the Greek and Roman civilizations to the modern Councils and Communities. Teachers of geography should find this chapter alone worth the price of the book. The current revision varies considerably from the 1953 original which included the south shore of the Mediterranean and only considered European Russia. The three new chapters encompass the entire Soviet Union. They were written by Professor George J. Demko of Ohio State University. Professor Pounds, the chief author, is British-born and trained. . . . He has studied Germany in depth. As a result, the chapters on the two Germanies are nicely detailed." George Beishlag

Social Studies 58:331 D '67 260w

POWELL, ANTHONY. From ■ view to ■ death. 213p $4.95 Little

68-11178

The story "begins with the arrival at Passenger Court, a small country estate in Central England, of a man called Arthur Zouch. It ends about a month later with the departure of Zouch—in a hearse. Zouch is a tough, selfish, predatory London artist who thinks of himself as a superman. He manages to get himself engaged to Mary Passenger but in the process he gains Mary's father, Vernon Passenger, as a dangerous opponent to the marriage. 'The country gentry and their life provide the setting for this novel, and the characters in the drama . . . with the exception of the unlucky Arthur Zouch—are country gentry.' (Publisher's note) This novel was first published in England in 1933. For the American edition entitled Mr Zouch: Superman see BRD 1934.

"Without meaning modishly about 'alienation,' Powell vividly dramatizes the fragmentation on all levels of a presumably stable society. 'Artist' and 'patron' no longer communicate because both are self-serving egoists. . . . Most alienated of all is Major Fosdick. . . . [whose] secret pleasure is to smoke his pipe and clean his guns in the privacy of his den while attired in a sequin dress. Powell's attitude to all these goings-on in the England of the British Travel Association is a complex one. While he lacks the outrageous, exuberant satiric force of Evelyn Waugh, he is more sadly reflective. . . . For all its mild traditional elements, [this novel] has an acrid vision and a firm technique which make it vastly superior to all the current stuff about 'swinging London.'" Richard Freedman

Book World p7 F 18 '68 500w

Choice 5:486 Je '68 60w

"At first glance, like much of Powell's writing, [the novel] leaves a false impression. In this case, the impression is that we have before us just another comedy of English country life—a 'return match,' as V. S. Pritchett has put it, featuring 'the undesirable artist among the speechless fox hunters.' . . . Yet this is no sniffing, supercilious novel, mixing concealed nostalgia with unconcealed spite at the modern. . . . The significant death in the novel is not physical. The victim is Major Fosdick, the very personification of the English squire. . . . An amusingly eccentric way of life is reappraised as a quietly feckless way of nonlife." Melvin Maddocks

Christian Science Monitor p13 Ja 25 '68 500w

Reviewed by Guy Davenport

Nat R 20:350 Ap 9 '68 300w

"The book belongs in an English fictional tradition extending roughly from Trollope to Muriel Spark. Lacking a commanding philosophical theme, it gets its strength from its whippy dialogue, its offhand brightness, and its gallery of amusing eccentrics. Historically, the book is very 1930-ish. . . . This between-wars mood, although fresh and funny, also carries an omen of sour despair. . . . [The author] adroitly shapes his busy plot to a climax both dramatically exciting and morally inevitable. The central nerve of the novel is its stylized social milieu. . . . Powell's wry, understated style sharpens his general picture of nastiness." Peter Wolfe

Sat R 51:39 F 3 '68 600w

POWELL, DAVID, comp. Wood is sweet. See Clare, J.

POWELL, FERN. Especially sisters; II. by Nancy Grossman. 160p $3.95; lib bdg $3.91 Dutton

67-20134

"Small Susie Morgan had been living with her grandfather in the Welsh village of Merthyr Tydfil since the death of her parents, and she was not at all pleased when Grandpa decided that it was time she went to live with her two older sisters and Uncle David in another town. Nancy and Mary were alarmingly lively. . . . and nothing was at all like the security of Grandpa's cottage and the familiarity of Merthyr Tydfil. Gradually, however, Susie adjusted to her new, wider world. . . . Ages eight to ten." (Sat R)

"The author spent her childhood in Wales. This, her first book, written from happy memories, has a delightfully childlike flavor, situations that are both funny and touching, and plenty of conversation—all qualities to endear it to little girls." Polly Goodwin

Book World p24 O 1 '67 190w

Horn BK 43:754 D '67 150w

"A warm and charming style distinguishes this story. . . . Celebration of Christmas and Guy Fawkes Day add to the Welsh village scene which is reflected well in the illustrations." P. A. McKenzie

Library J 92:3854 O 15 '67 70w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland

Sat R 50:35 Ag 19 '67 130w

POWELL, LAWRENCE CLARK. Bookman's progress; the selected writings of Lawrence Clark Powell; with an introd. by William Targ. 246p $6.75 Ward Ritchie press

814 Books and reading

68-23647

This collection of the author's previously published essays is arranged in four sections; Music and Travel, Librarianship and Reading, Bookmanship, and Authorship. Index.

"Over-enthusiasm is Powell's major literary limitation. . . . Many of these essays started as public addresses and, delivered with Powell's almost incomparable fervor and vivacity, can rarely have failed to move and enchant his audience. Reduced to print, their substantial content of egotism, banality, and gush are disturbingly apparent. Powell's sensitivity to literature and landscape is profound and catholic; the enthusiasms it begets betray him all too frequently into extravagances, bordering upon the ludicrous. . . . An air of smugness pervading the essays on librarianship has not evaporated on second reading. . . . Physically, [the book] cannot easily be faulted. . . . [It] is a pleasure to the hand and eye." George Piter-nick

Library J 93:3106 S 15 '68 600w

"Certain topics, however interesting to the speaker, are noted for putting the listener to sleep. . . . Powell has not missed one. . . . He meanders pleasantly along . . . well-trodden lanes, and only the author's kindly and winning nature inhibits the reader from asking the obvious question: Why and for whom was this elegantly printed book published? . . . When he casts cultural and scenic chit-chat aside and discusses professional book-hunting it is quite a different story. . . . [This is] by far the most entertaining stage of his Progress." Jean Gardner

Y Times Bk R p28 Ag 18 '68 270w

"Among the bookish pieces are two admirable portrait-sketches of booksellers, one American (Dr. R., of course) and the other an Englishman of diametrically opposite style; others are devoted to authors, such as Henry Miller and Raymond Chandler; all are zestful, companionable, redolent of what Mr. Targ rightly calls their author's 'lifelong love affair with books and bookmen'."

TLS p1392 D 5 '68 450w

POWELL, TOM. The restless American; a middle-aged man on a middle-aged horse; with il. by the author. 344p $6.95 Little

917.3 U.S.—Description and travel 68-15560

The author, an artist, describes his trip on horseback travelling on back roads from Rhode Island to Arizona.

"America is what it used to be. . . . The captive motorist never sees beyond [the garish edges of the main highways]; the countryside for him has changed into one vast fluorescent blur. But not for Mr. Powell and Sioux, nor for the vicarious traveler who, thanks to his book, can eat his regular meals and have his adventures too. Mr. Powell obviously intends his tidbits of advice to be acted on, not merely fed to the imagination. . . . In retrospect, I'm certain that the greatest dividend gained from the long journey," writes Mr. Powell, "was the large number of friendships struck up along the way." He had all kinds of adventures (not all of them pleasant). He saw some of the loveliest scenery in the world, glimpsed an armadillo or two, an odd scissor-tailed fly-catcher, rabbits by the score, collected experiences and anecdotes—but more than anything else, this is a record of spontaneous kindness." Pamela Marsh

Christian Science Monitor p13 Ap 29 '68 700w

"In his delightful description of the personality of [his pinto mare] Sioux, [Mr Powell] gives the reader the impression that this account may be another Steinbeck's Travels with Charley [BRD 1962]. Unfortunately, he never quite makes the grade. But in his almost daily account of his adventures of more than seven months from late fall to early summer, the reader gets a good idea of the 3000 miles of countryside they ride through. . . . His black-and-white sketches add a certain amount of charm. This book will interest men, especially horsemen, but the occasional bits of rough language may deter some librarians from adding it to collections for young adults. Too good a book to be rejected by librarians, but not outstanding enough to justify the stiff price." M. M. Caffall

Library J 93:994 Mr 1 '68 200w

POWLEDGE, FRED. To change a child: a report on the Institute for developmental studies; pub. in coop. with the Anti-defamation league of B'nai B'rith. 110p il $5.50 Quadrangle bks.

371.9 Socially handicapped 67-30850

"A former New York Times reporter describes the work of the Institute for Developmental Studies, New York University School of Education. In the first section he leans . . . on quotations from Martin Deutsch, director of the Institute, and various colleagues. . . . In the second section he gives in detail the happenings of a day in a preschool classroom. He obtained this information by having the teacher wear a microphone attached to a tape recorder. Here, Mr. Powledge illustrates . . . ways to promote growth in children in the . . . categories of language, conceptual abilities, reading, self-concept, and social interaction." (Library J)

"Although there is lack of agreement that the Institute has accomplished the most significant work in the education of disadvantaged children, few would question that the Deutsch group was the first in the U.S. to apply an interdisciplinary approach to a description of economically poor children and a prescription of educational intervention procedures. In addition, the Institute has offered supportive services throughout the country and has provided a wealth of written material. This work does not have any counterparts in that its aim was to describe what one group has done for disadvantaged children, and this it has accomplished well. . . . Useful and informative for social and behavioral science and education undergraduates and graduate students."

Choice 5:1344 D '68 160w

"[The book's] principal problem is the lamentable failure to target an audience. . . . It is a curious mixture of doctrinal statements, pedestrian description, long and only partially integrated quotations from Institute publications, incomplete and confusing presentations of data, and a lengthy and unfocused transcript of 'A Day in the Classroom.' The book touches perfunctorily on what one assumes are major components of the Institute's purpose and programs. . . . But it covers all of these topics inadequately. . . . Another omission of content that is hardly forgivable is the failure to provide source references. . . . Especially unfortunate is the failure to portray the Institute and its program in believable human terms of genuine people grappling with intensely human issues." B. Z. Friedlander

Harvard Ed R 38:589 summer '68 1300w

"[The author] concludes the book with short sections on the need to sensitize teachers and on the importance of including parents in the school's plans. Well-selected photographs add to the book's impact." Martin Wozencraft

Library J 93:2859 Ag '68 150w

"[Powledge] holds that the American public school system is 'an agency of discrimination' in that it fails to cope with disadvantaged children. According to the author, what appears necessary to improve the situation is massive 'intervention,' by which he means early infancy classroom experience to rectify cultural deficiencies. Theoretically dependent on Martin Deutsch, the book is highly descriptive. What it lacks in unity it makes up in charming anecdotes and arresting photographs." John Calam

Sat R 51:73 Ap 20 '68 90w

PRADO, CAIO. The colonial background of modern Brazil [by] Caio Prado, Jr; tr. from the Portuguese by Suzette Macedo. 530p $11 Univ. of Calif. press

330.981 Brazil—Economic conditions. Brazil —History. Brazil—Social conditions

67-11849

A study of the economic, social, and political structure of Brazil in the early nineteenth century. Translated from the seventh edition entitled Formação do Brasil contemporâneo. Bibliography. Index.

"[Prado] describes the settlement of the coast and the interior, and the characteristics of both. . . . Other chapters deal with races, large-scale and subsistence agriculture, mining, stock raising, social organization, administration, and social and political life. Those on stock raising and administration seem particularly valuable, for too little information on these is easily available. The book, already a classic in its native land, is a genuine aid to understanding contemporary Brazil. It is an excellent synthesis of the elements of Brazilian life on the eve of independence, a proper background for examining the transformations that followed." D. E. Worcester

Am Hist R 73:946 F '68 350w

"The three parts of the book—Population and Settlement, Material Life, and Social and Political Life—are based on impeccable and apparently exhaustive research in printed sources of at least four languages. By far most interesting is Social and Political Life, in which Prado discusses such matters as slavery, compadrecio (kinship-client system), and administrative hierarchy. His heavy dependence on the controversial notions of Gilberto Freyre concerning miscegenation was perhaps to be expected, given Freyre's influence on Brazilian historical and social studies. The relatively conservative attitude of Prado toward the Brazilian social order is also worthy of debate, though it is not rigid or obtrusive."

Choice 5:255 Ap '68 270w

"This translation allows the non-Portuguese reader to become familiar with an important standard work. . . . Although this book is too demanding for the casual reader, it is recommended as an essential addition to the collections of academic and large public libraries."

R. D. Harlan

Library J 92:1485 Ap 1 '67 140w

The PRAEGER encyclopedia of ancient Greek civilization; Pierre Devambez, chief curator; with the collaboration of Robert Flacelière, Pierre-Maxime Schuhl, [and] Roland Martin. 491p il $15 Praeger

913.38 Civilization, Greek—Dictionaries 67-25162

"This reference book focuses upon 'the civilization that took shape in Greece during the second millennium BC, spread throughout the civilized world, and remained a living force well into the Christian era.' . . . A principal objective of the work is to emphasize the real, day-to-day or 'familiar' aspects of Hellenistic life, giving . . . background to the more well-known 'eminent figures and splendid creations' of the culture. . . . Articles appear in dictionary arrangement." (Col & Res Lib) Originally published in 1966 entitled Le dictionnaire de la civilisation grecque.

"[The illustrations are perhaps this volume's] strongest feature. . . . Some [of the articles] are excellent, for others, serious objections can be raised. The chief objections, however, are editorial: inadequate cross references, unexplainable omissions. . . . Even though incorporating results of recent research in archaeology and anthropology not available in earlier works, in general this encyclopedia seems inferior in factual content, depth, and inclusiveness to standard works already available."

Choice 5:326 My '68 220w

Col & Res Lib 29:71 Ja '68 140w

"This admirably concise encyclopedia . . . covers in more than 750 entries such far-ranging topics as warfare, athletics, mythology, daily life, place names, divination, and mysteries. Drama and epic poetry are explained in terms of playwrights and poets as well as in terms of the characters they created, the sections on art, ceramics, and sculpture are major entries amply illustrated with significant photographs. The articles, all signed, are fresh approaches to fascinating subjects. Thoroughly cross-referenced, this encyclopedia is highly recommended as a useful and stimulating source book for teachers, students, and general readers." F. D. Lazenby

Library J 92:4139 N 15 '67 170w

Reviewed by D. M. Glixon

Sat R 50:39 N 18 '67 90w

PRATOLINI, VASCO. Metello; a novel [tr. by Raymond Rosenthal]. 283p $5.95 Little 67-14460

"The young bricklayer, Metello Salani, . . . orphan from San Niccolò, too illiterate to read road signs, has drifted into Florence at the age of fifteen and immediately collides with the workers' solidarity. . . . The anarchists and Socialists around him promptly re-educate Metello, who ultimately wins their respect as an organizer. Though not an anarchist, Marxist, or Socialist, [he] is jailed three times by an anti-labor society. . . . Metello's personal life (love affairs, military service, marriage to the saintly Ersilia, paternity) form a counterpoint to the story of his unionist activities." (Sat R) The historical setting is the Italian workers' strike of 1902.

"Interwoven with the tale of love is the much more significant story of the Italian workers and their fight for a living wage and for recognition of their dignity as workers and as men. Throughout much of the story Metello is indistinct; he does not come completely alive for the reader. Except for Ersilia, the other main characters are at best vague outlines. . . . The author writes a magnificent climactic ending to his tale in which all of the factions of the novel meet face to face and the earlier blurred outlines of individual characters come to a striking and dramatic intensity. . . . The one complaint a reader might have in regard to this book is that the print is much too small." F. M. Rotondaro

Best Sell 28:132 Je 15 '68 500w

"[Pratolini] tells the story of one of the great strikes of skilled workers at the opening of our century. He keeps the story well balanced—the central figure, his wife, and fellow workers are much alive as individuals in the setting of history. . . . One of the most appealing qualities of the book is his carefully wrought scenes of . . . [Florence's] people, streets, rivers, and skies. There is poetry here besides an authentic record." Elizabeth Cameron

Library J 93:1918 My 1 '68 150w

Reviewed by Harry Roskolenko

N Y Times Bk R p32 Je 16 '68 600w

"[The author's] particular realism, meticulously retained in Raymond Rosenthal's English, offers deep satisfactions for the reader as he shares Pratolini's objective re-creation of a transitional era. . . . Metello [is presented] as an autonomous novel, and it may be enjoyed as such. However, it is the first volume of Pratolini's Florentine trilogy An Italian Story, followed by Lo scialo (The Show) and Allegoria e derisione (Allegory and Derision). . . . One can only hope that the entire roman fleuve will become available to the English-reading public." R. J. Clements

Sat R 51:31 JI 13 '68 800w

"[Pratolini does not] present any serious linguistic problems to his translators: his staid, prolix prose goes well into staid, old-fashioned English (or, in this extremely flat translation, American), as reassuring as are his portraits of tough, passionate, high-minded proletarians. . . . Stodgy, but likable, like all Pratolini's novels, [this] has the advantage of being set in an age that seems to suit his style. In dealing with present-day workers he always seems a little out of things, a shade uneasy. Simpler, more stirring times seem to suit him better, and the end of the nineteenth century puts him, technically, in just about the right place."

TLS p1321 N 21 '68 250w

PREDMORE, RICHARD L. The world of Don Quixote. 133p $4.95 Harvard univ. press

863 Cervantes Saavedra, Miguel de—Don Quixote 67-20879

This is the author's "translation of his own earlier edition of this book in Spanish. . . . His plan is to treat six themes which reveal the world inhabited by the knight: literature and life, adventures, enchantment, reality, illusions, and madness and recovered sanity. Mr. Predmore sees the mosaic of imprecision, contradictions, and other lifelike ambiguities within the novel as part of Cervantes' own narrative technique." (Library J)

"Not all that Predmore says is new by any means but the warm and unpretentious book which he has now given us in an English edition is a testimonial both to the greatness of a perennial masterpiece and to the author's obviously long and affectionate familiarity with the tale of the Noble Don. Footnotes are used sparingly. Don Quixote becomes the primary authority and close and sympathetic reading Predmore's chief vehicle for explication. . . . [This eminently readable book] should inform and please readers at all levels, from the novice first entering the Knight Errant's world to the knowledgeable Hispanist."

Choice 5:349 My '68 170w

"[This analysis contains] copious quotations from the Quixote, all superbly translated by Mr. Predmore. . . . [w]hol has written a book which is extremely useful for a study of the Quixote in English whatever the reader's sophistication." R. C. Turner

Library J 92:3042 S 15 '67 170w

PRELL, ED. Jolly Cholly's story: Baseball, I love you! See Grimm, C.

PRESLEY, C. F., ed. The identity theory of mind. See Australasian association of philosophy

PRESTON, RICHARD A. Canada and "imperial defense": a study of the origins of the British Commonwealth's defense organization, 1867-1919. 576p $12.50 Duke univ. press

355.03 Great Britain—Defenses. Canada—Defenses 66-29550

"The history of the military relations between the United Kingdom and the old dominions which resulted in their close war-time collaboration. . . . The author, who is W. K. Boyd Professor of History at Duke University, covers . . . the strategic thinking and military planning during . . . the period which opens with the achievement of colonial autonomy and with withdrawal of imperial garrisons and closes with the emergence of a Commonwealth of associated nations. Although he focuses on Canadian attitudes and actions, Professor Preston has included the contemporary relations of the other self-governing [nations]." (Am Pol Sci R) Bibliography. Index.

"This book is the most wide-ranging, thorough, and substantial study of the defense aspect of the history of the Commonwealth yet to appear. One of its outstanding qualities is the author's mastery of the technical aspects of defense organization, especially on the army side, and of their historical evolution. . . . The book's thesis, not too clearly set forth in the introduction, is open to question. In the introduction Preston suggests that he is doing battle against history written with 'a bias toward an imperialist point of view.' . . . 'Imperial defence' seems to be equated by the author with the idea of 'an enforced centralised military establishment.' The temptation to build interpretations on the imprecise terminology of the times can lead to questionable historical generalization." H. D. Hall

Am Hist R 73:943 F '68 650w

"Because almost all studies of the subject have been written from a British point of view and based upon British sources, the author's approach is the pioneering one of utilizing dominion archives to present problems and policies as they appeared to Canadians, Australians, and New Zealanders. . . . One would like to see the author's demonstrated skills in research, analysis, and exposition devoted to the subsequent Commonwealth period of military cooperation. In the present book he has laid an admirable foundation." H. M. Stout

Am Pol Sci R 62:306 Mr '68 1000w

"Apart from an understandable emphasis on Anglo-Canadian relations, the military and political thinking of the self-governing Dominions as well as the United Kingdom is well presented and organized. A work of this scope warrants full use in British imperial studies throughout English-speaking academe." R. A. Shields

Canadian Forum 48:91 JI '68 1000w

"[This is] too large a subject to be handled in a single volume. . . . Almost inevitably the result is over-simplification. The major concept used to cut through the tangle of material is 'Imperial Defense'; unfortunately Mr. Preston never quite explains what 'Imperial Defense' was. He says it was not the system that existed in 1914, and complains that the English called the 1914 system 'Imperial Defence' when he wants to use the phrase for something else. . . . There are some very interesting chapters on the Canadian militia and the quarrels that broke out between the Canadian government and every single G.O.C. of the militia. . . . One of the most interesting parts of the book is the way that everybody wanted someone else to pay the bills." Trevor Lloyd

Engl Hist R 83:426 Ap '68 600w

PRICE, CHRISTINE. Made in ancient Greece. 160p il $5.95; lib bdg $5.89 Dutton

913.38 Greece—Antiquities—Juvenile literature. Civilization, Greek—Juvenile literature. Art, Greek—Juvenile literature 67-20135

"The Greeks worked in radically different styles at different periods, and Miss Price has focused . . . on this diversity in their art. . . . In addition to many great works of art, she has also illustrated small bronzes, pottery, and coins . . . [and] presented [them] against a geographical and historical background." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. "Grades five to eight." (Library J)

"[The author's] systematic approach to the subject and her efforts to extend the virtues of Greek art beyond architecture and sculpture to the artifacts of everyday life are admirable. The illustrations are closely bound in to the text so that young readers will have little trouble following the account. Some little background would be helpful for the reader since there is no glossary of terms, although the list of books for further reading will help librarians as well as interested students."

Best Sell 27:362 D 1 '67 100w [YA]

Horn Bk 44:75 F '68 130w

"The third of Miss Price's 'Made In' books differs in format, scope, and reading level from the first two [Made in the Middle Ages, BRD 1962, and Made in the Renaissance, BRD 1963]. Whereas the previous books took a comprehensive, everyday-life approach, . . . the new text, printed on glossy paper, is more strictly a history of Grecian art and architecture, supported by numerous illustrations (photographs and a few drawings) on every page. However, by explaining what the artists were trying to express in sculpture, temples, vases, jars, cups, jewelry, coins, and other works of art, Miss Price weaves in a good deal of information about the lives of the people, the geography of the islands, and the important historical events of the ancient Greek world. . . . Suitable for both recreational and informational purposes." M. J. Shapiro

Library J 92:4617 D 15 '67 160w

TLS p1381 D 5 '68 320w

PRICE, DANIEL O., ed. The 99th hour; the population crisis in the United States. 130p $3.95 Univ. of N.C. press

301.3 U.S.—Population

67-27159

Following an introductory chapter, this book presents five papers, "the manuscripts of lectures given at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill during the academic year 1965-66 in a seminar on population policy in the U.S. The assumption on which the lectures rest is that a program of public education about the domestic population problem is essential." (Choice) The final chapter is excerpted from the United States Department of the Interior, Conservation Yearbook, No. 2, entitled The Population Challenge; What It Means to America.

"As so often happens when the 'population question' is discussed, one side usually gets more emphasis than the other. . . . Those who are convinced that the U.S. faces a population crisis will like this book; those who are not will not like this book. There are some excellent chapters by Taeuber and Spengler dealing with demographic projections and optimum population, some very informative material on public policy and family planning, and a very controversial chapter on premarital sex, but the book lacks a certain balance which can be found more readily in books by Hauser, Wrong, Bogue, and Landis."

Choice 5:89 Mr '68 190w

"Contentions about the seriousness of the [population] problem are adequately supported, and myths are exploded; but most of these lectures do not contribute effectively toward a popular understanding. J. J. Spengler's discussion of optimum population is relatively incomprehensible and not explicitly related to the United States; L. H. Day's approach to a solution is not concrete and quite conservative; P. H. Todd's and P. R. Lee's contributions pertinent to government policy are little more than summaries of past history; the Reverend Joseph Fletcher's comments on the morality of unmarried sex, though extremely interesting will continue to be misunderstood." H. O. Marcy

Library J 92:3435 O 1 '67 180w

PRICE, GLENN W. Origins of the war with Mexico; the Polk-Stockton intrigue. 189p pl $5 Univ. of Tex. press

973.6 U.S.—History—War with Mexico

67-27372

In this volume the author presents his thesis that President Polk plotted with Commodore Stockton "to help provoke general hostilities with Mexico, thus anticipating the Mexican War. . . . [He presents] the careers of Polk and Stockton in detail, along with the historiography of the war." (J Am Hist) Bibliography. Index.

"Ponderous (sometimes unintelligible) prose, poor organization, irrelevant material, and boring repetition detract from the author's purpose. . . . If Price had advanced his thesis in a precise article, instead of a jumbled monograph, he might have won many converts."

Choice 5:866 S '68 170w

"Price does not sufficiently emphasize the Texan fear of Mexican attack during the period of transition to American rule, and rumors of Mexican invasion are just as pertinent to a defensive theory as to one of aggressive intrigue. . . . At this time Polk maintained an unofficial envoy in Mexico City, W. S. Parrott. . . . Price does not even mention Parrott. . . . The background of Stockton's career is well filled in. But Price's exposition becomes mere padding unless he can establish his case against Polk. . . . Such a charge requires direct, positive, documentary evidence. . . . Supposition and circumstantial evidence are simply not enough by themselves. Judged by these criteria, Price has gone very far." D. M. Pletcher

J Am Hist 55:143 Je '68 550w

"The ranking of Polk as a near-great President is sardonically discussed. Even the authority of the famous Polk Diary is questioned. . . . The most interesting part . . . is the account of Commodore Stockton. . . . The best one can do for [Polk] is to return a verdict of 'not proven'. . . . It is noteworthy that this polemic is the product of the University of Texas."

TLS p915 Ag 29 '68 500w

PRICE, MARTIN, ed. Dickens; a collection of critical essays. 184p $4.95; pa $1.95 Prentice-Hall

823 Dickens, Charles

67-25931

A collection of criticism that concentrates on the art of Dickens' novels. Chronology. Bibliography.

"[These essays are] intended to represent the best 20th-century views of Dickens. Like many anthologies, this one fails in its purpose. Most of the essays belong to the 1960's and none is earlier than 1950. One looks in vain for the seminal critics. . . . One is grateful to have Auden on Pickwick, Barbara Hardy on the change-of-heart motif in the novels, Steven Marcus on Martin Chuzzlewit (certainly his best essay), and Kathleen Tillotson on Domby; other essays in the collection are rather shopworn. . . . Specialists will have these essays available elsewhere, and undergraduates need a broader, more basic collection. . . . Incomplete bibliography."

Choice 5:958 O '68 160w

"[An] excellent collection. . . . Their approaches vary, but all [the authors] explore the art of Dickens's novels through their complex plots, characters, comedy, psychological insights. . . . [This volume] belongs in any library's literature section." M. L. Garvey

Library J 92:3424 O 1 '67 130w

PRICE, REYNOLDS. Love and work. 143p $4.50 Atheneum pubs.

68-22422

The author of A Generous Man (BRD 1966) examines in this novel the effect of the death of his mother upon Thomas Eborn, a 34-year-old college professor who, in an essay written for the college literary magazine "calls work 'the attempt to control chaos.' But . . . to control chaos is to deny life, Eborn learns. Not only does he turn from his deepest personal needs; by enclosing himself inside the shell of his work, he also undermines both his friendships and his loves. . . . Eborn gets a boost when he rummages through a stack of papers after his mother's death. The papers launch his parents into life for the first time as real people. . . . He then maps out a novel based on their marriage." (Book World)

"Price makes you feel that you are living through an experience, not reading a book. . . .

[This] is more flowing, melodic, and conventionally told than Price's first two novels. . . . The maneuvering, the resentment and the non-communication that mark [Eborn's] childless marriage to Jane spell out his sense of guilt and failure. Price . . . offers a merciless picture of the writer's inner life. . . . We are left to ponder the effect that the novel will have on [Eborn's] life. . . . Each reader will have to decide for himself whether Eborn has creatively joined his personal and vocational impulses. It is a serious question and, by tracing the disorders of alienation and fragmentation to man's subdivided nature, a timely one. Price has asked it with eloquence and depth." Peter Wolfe

Book World p12 Je 23 '68 450w

Reviewed by W. J. Smith
Commonweal 88:636 S 20 '68 480w

Harper 236:92 Je '68 180w

"Mr. Price seems to say in this novel that in love and work lies man's true purpose. . . . None of the characters in this novel are of dimensions to be reckoned with. Not one of them is so finely developed a character as Rosacoke, the girl in Mr. Price's earlier novel, A Long and Happy Life (BRD 1962). In fact, the underdeveloped character of Tom Eborn's mother flaws the novel because from what the reader sees of her he cannot readily accept what she meant to her son. The book is further flawed by the lack of the lyrical style and the exquisite mosaic structure which were basic components of Mr. Price's two previous novels. But, nonetheless, academic and public libraries will want this novel in their collections because of its honesty, compassion, and the integrity and respect its author has for his craft." R. F. Cayton

Library J 93:2260 Je 1 '68 250w

"Mr. Price's novel about a prissy, ungiving man whose relationship with his parents has locked him into helpless isolation from his wife and his world is overcontrolled where it is meant to be spare, and prissy itself where it is meant to be dramatically low-keyed. The tautness of the style of Love and Work (what a beautiful title!) is attractive—since the author, at his best, writes with a disciplined lyricism that recalls the finest of James Agee's prose—but it is finally irritating because it is so unrelieved." Sara Blackburn

Nation 207:59 J1 22 '68 100w

Reviewed by Vernon Scannell
New Statesman 76:588 N 1 '68 300w

Reviewed by John Wain
N Y Rev of Books 11:35 Ag 22 '68 390w

Reviewed by Anatole Broyard
N Y Times Bk R p4 Je 30 '68 700w

Reviewed by P. D. Zimmerman
Newsweek 71:90B Je 10 '68 110w

Reviewed by Granville Hicks
Sat R 51:17 My 25 '68 1000w

TLS p1357 D 5 '68 490w

Va Q R 44:cxlv autumn '68 120w

PRIESTLEY, J. B. Essays of five decades: selected and with a pref. by Susan Cooper 311p $8.95 Little 824

68-24247

This volume contains "selections from J. B. Priestley's essays beginning with Papers from Liliput and ending with examples of his work from the New Statesman in 1966 and 1967. The essays include forays into literary criticism: descriptions of much-loved pieces of the English local scene; . . . abstract flights of fancy; and reflections on topical problems ending . . . with "Growing Old." (Library J)

"In many matters of social interest, Priestley manages to pinpoint the real background of some distressing phenomenon, (youth, revolt, hippies, and such), and open a fruitful avenue of approach to its solution. Students of sociology will find in these essays endless enlightening subjects for discussion. Miss Susan Cooper's compact and capable Introduction is . . . stimulating in itself and indicative of the good fare to follow." Ambrose Agius

Best Sell 28:294 O 15 '68 1350w

"Of the 79 essays, . . . all but seven appeared in . . . previous volumes of Priestley essays, beginning in 1922. . . . It is quite a test to which to put a writer, setting his apprentice work up against his later, mature performance, and Mr. Priestley doesn't pass that test quite so handsomely as Miss Cooper would suggest. . . . [The early essays are] of small interest except . . . to scholars. . . . What you will take from [this book] is a sense of the range of the old Yorkshireman's interests, from education and the world power struggle to county fairs and how to smoke a pipe; and the depth of his sympathy. . . . He would not have been the playwright and the novelist he eventually became without the stuff of life that runs all through this gleaming." J. K. Hutchens

Book World p4 O 6 '68 1050w

"There is material here to rededicate Priestley lovers and convert the recalcitrant. General libraries should buy this book." A. J. M. Pedley

Library J 93:3006 S 1 '68 150w

Reviewed by Alan Trachtenberg
Nation 207:534 N 18 '68 1400w

Reviewed by David McCord
N Y Times Bk R p4 O 27 '68 1200w

PRINCE, CARL E. New Jersey's Jeffersonian Republicans; the genesis of an early party machine, 1789-1817; pub. for the Inst. of early Am. hist. and culture at Williamsburg, Virginia. 266p $7.50 Univ. of N.C. press

329.3 Democratic party—History. New Jersey—Politics and government 67-15103

This is a "study of the structure and operation of party machinery on a state level. [It explains] the peculiarities of New Jersey politics yet shows the relationship of that state's politics to the national party system. . . . Finding the county organization to be the keystone of the state Republican party, Prince gives considerable attention to the county party machinery and describes its operating procedures and the variations among counties." (J Am Hist) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by H. M. Tinkcom
Am Hist R 73:596 D '67 500w

Reviewed by M. J. Dauer
Am Pol Sci R 62:594 Je '68 1100w
Choice 5:552 Je '68 110w

"Based on extensive research and perceptive questioning of the sources, this is an excellent study. . . . [Prince's] decision to select five of the state's thirteen counties for analysis, though all were studied, adds both to clarity and brevity. On the state level, the treatment of the operation of the Republican caucus is particularly valuable. . . . It was concerned with distributing patronage and marshaling majorities in the legislature on critical issues. So important did it become that legislative sessions frequently became anticlimactic. The methods of patronage distribution and the relationship between party activism and officeholding are well presented and add dimension to the book, although Prince has published much of this material in an article." N. E. Cunningham

J Am Hist 54:644 D '67 550w

Reviewed by R. F. Nichols
Va Q R 44:146 winter '68 600w

PRITCHETT, V. S. A cab at the door; a memoir. 244p $5.95 Random house

B or 92

[68-84511]

The English "novelist, essayist, and critic writes about the first 20 years of his life." (Library J) Portions of this book originally appeared in the New York Review of Books.

Reviewed by W. A. S. Dollard
America 118:738 Je 1 '68 700w

Reviewed by Theodore Solotaroff
Atlantic 22:92 J1 '68 2000w

Reviewed by Joseph Epstein
Book World p1 Ap 21 '68 1200w

Reviewed by Robert Peel
Christian Science Monitor pB11 My 2 '68 600w

Reviewed by Robert Kiely
Commentary 45:73 Ag '68 1800w

Economist 226:53 F 24 '68 700w

Reviewed by K. G. Jackson
Harper 236:89 My '68 480w

"[Pritchett] gives a vivid, almost theatrical, account of his unusual family in turn-of-the-century London and rural England. His father's ups and downs in trade provided the basic unsettling factor for the rootlessness, poverty, and rifts of a family which ■ not always believable mother kept afloat. Abrasive personalities on both sides of the family further contributed to the stresses in which Mr. Pritchett's boyhood was passed. . . . He mentions his early reading of Corelli, Barrie, and Ruskin and his later exposure to W. J. Locke, Du Maurier, and Belloc. . . . But there is no great intimacy here of an author and critic in the making. . . . This is a memoir that shows the artist's touch. Relevant asides on such themes as English schooling [and] the lower classes on the way up . . . add up to a readable book for the biography shelf in any collection." J. M. Carroll

PRITCHETT, V. S.—Continued

Library J 93:1472 Ap 1 '68 280w

Reviewed by Lawrence Graver

New Repub 158:36 My 11 '68 1600w

"This autobiography is very close to [Pritchett's] novels and stories. It is dense with particulars, the scenes are all vivid dramatic glimpses, the ideas never work loose from the objects, and the pattern emerges from the events but is never imposed on them. It could have been loud with the grinding of axes or drenched in the treacherous tenderness we bestow on our young selves; but there are none of these intrusive afterthoughts. It is a many-sided book. Edwardian England has rarely come to life so clearly—not the long summer afternoon beloved of ageing memoir writers, but the tightness, the meanness, the exposed and uncushioned life of working people and the shabby-genteel. . . . But there is nothing of the 'typical' social document about it. The Pritchett family was quite extraordinary. . . . Life in the leather trade occupies the last quarter of the book, and it is a superb piece of writing—taut, comic, and above all, unindulgent." Graham Hough

New Statesman 75:240 F 23 '68 1550w

Reviewed by Elizabeth Janeway

N Y Times Bk R p8 Ap 28 '68 1900w

Reviewed by Penelope Gilliatt

New Yorker 44:206 O 12 '68 2100w

Reviewed by Saul Maloff

Newsweek 71:98 Ap 22 '68 750w

Reviewed by Walter Guzzardi

Sat R 51:26 My 4 '68 950w

"There are many brilliant character sketches in the book, but undoubtedly it is dominated by the author's father. . . . Some of the episodes are uproariously comic, like the story of his misadventures with a Sunbeam car or the account of the day when Victor and his brother were taken to enroll at Alleyn's, their first fee-paying school. . . . Here one comes to the heart of the book, the fact that the portrait of Walter Sawdon Pritchett is not objectively true or false, but one made by his son in his own image. This is of course the way in which all intimate biographical portraits are composed, but Mr. Pritchett's affectionate yet firmly detached picture is so unassuming that the reader may not appreciate fully the art that must have gone into it, the rejection of one episode as too crude, the heightening of another as particularly illuminating. . . . It seems unlikely that the volumes to come can be as good as this one, but the result will certainly be one of the half-dozen autobiographies of our time which are works of art."

TLS p171 F 23 '68 1100w

Va Q R 44:cxxi summer '68 130w

PROCTER, MAURICE. Exercise hoodwink. 185p $4.50 Harper

67-28826

"The focal point [of this novel] is Granchester, where two macabre discoveries start things off. . . . First, a wrecked Aston-Martin, awash with blood but with no occupant, dead or alive, is found one morning at dawn near the village of Kingsmead, outside Granchester. Second, a battered corpse is discovered resting in the heather of the West Riding Moors, seventeen miles from Kingsmead. The connection between the two discoveries is soon established. . . . Scotland Yard, and Chief Inspector Martineau of Granchester [unmask the] . . . diamond thieves in Granchester, London, Amsterdam, and Walvis Bay . . . in South-West Africa." (New Yorker)

Reviewed by Dick Adler

Book World p14 F 25 '68 100w

"Martineau finds himself part of a Top Secret international police team. Admirably persuasive grand-scale police novel." Anthony Boucher

N Y Times Bk R p26 D 17 '67 40w

"Procter's manner is as beguiling and as businesslike as ever, and his present story, about gangs of cruel thieves who show no honor even among themselves, proves once again what a thoroughgoing craftsman he is." New Yorker 43:68 D 30 '67 140w

"[Contains] a magnificent land-and-water chase. Professional all the way, and brilliantly written." Sergeant Cuff

Sat R 50:33 D 23 '67 30w

TLS p824 S 14 '67 30w

PROFFER, CARL R. Keys to Lolita. 160p $5 Ind. univ. press

813 Nabokov, Vladimir Vladimirovich—Lolita 68-63001

"This is not an 'interpretation' of [Vladimir Nabokov's] Lolita. . . . What I offer are keys to some of the technical puzzles—isolation, labeling, and commentary on the literary allusions, an inventory of the clues and deductions leading to Quilty's identity, and a listing of some characteristic stylistic devices." (Foreword) Index.

"The first book-length study of a single Nabokov work. Lolita is treated in the spirit that Nabokov wrote it—as an elaborate and subtle linguistic and literary puzzle meant to be solved rather than casually read. . . . The book is a gold mine of information and will be a great source of pleasure to every student of Nabokovian prose."

Choice 5:770 S '68 210w

"[A] welcome addition to Nabokov scholarship [by the] . . . assistant professor of Slavic languages and literatures at Indiana University. . . . It is gracefully written and suggestive rather than dogmatic or exhaustive." Dorothy Curley

Library J 93:1634 Ap 15 '68 70w

Reviewed by W. H. Gass

N Y Rev of Books 10:3 Je 6 '68 950w

"Only a quick intelligence is needed to solve some of the puzzles [of Lolita,] but others require a wide literary knowledge and some acquaintance with the several languages Nabokov has mastered. As Proffer admits, he doesn't know everything he needs to know, but he knows a lot that may be useful to the ordinary reader of Lolita. For the rest, Proffer presents a careful though sometimes mechanical analysis of Nabokov's style: phonetic structure, figures of speech, rhetorical devices, etc. . . . [He] has provided a helpful guide to Lolita, and that is all he set out to do. In general he treats the novel as if it were a series of uncommonly ingenious double crostics and shows us what fun we can have if we work them out. If there is anything else to be said about Lolita, he does not try to say it." Granville Hicks

Sat R 51:25 Je 22 '68 300w

"Unpretentiously and without claiming to be exhaustive, Mr. Proffer probes the various strata of Nabokov's many literary allusions. . . . Technical details of style are examined in depth, but Mr. Proffer's admirable passion for the minutiae of scholarship never makes him forget that he is dealing with a work of art. His own allusions, like those of Humbert's arch-enemy in the novel, are 'definitely high-brow'. He, too, is well read. He knows French—and Russian as well, which is very much to the point in this context. He is versed in logodadally and logomancy, and much else. Above all, his keys to 'Lolita' creates, as a good work of criticism should, an irresistible desire to re-read the work which it considers."

TLS p1153 O 10 '68 600w

PROFFER, CARL R., ed. Letters of Nikolai Gogol. See Gogol, N.

PROFILE (periodical). Classic cars in Profile, 2v. See Classic cars in Profile

PROGER, SAMUEL, ed. The medicated society. 274p il $5.95 Macmillan (N Y)

615 Drugs

68-19025

This book is based upon lectures sponsored by the Lowell Institute in cooperation with Tufts—New England Medical Center. Essays by twelve physicians describe and evaluate the broad range of drugs available and spell "out the kind and degree of benefits we may expect to reap from the valid use of drugs—and the dangers we face as a consequence of their misuse." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"[This collection] provides factual information written with human interest while pointing out the imperfect state of knowledge today. . . . [The] lectures range through such topics as abuse of hallucinogens, anti-cancer agents, antibiotics, contraceptive pills and methods for global control of population, effect of drugs on the unborn child, drugs in prevention of heart attacks and strokes, the drug approach to mental illness, and diseases due to drug treatment. The book is recommended for general collections." Harold Oatfield

Library J 93:2991 S 1 '68 210w

"What does this American passion for drugs mean? Where has it come from, and where is it leading us? Who deserves the blame—or the praise—for this state of affairs? How have physicians contributed to the situation? . . . Should we look forward to more drugs more commonly taken in the future? Should we expect to view drugs differently? There is some evidence that we should. . . . [The] authors of this volume were in a unique position to answer such questions, but they escaped without doing so. One can hardly blame them for sliding past difficult questions, but one is disappointed nonetheless." M. J. Crichton

N Y Times Bk R p28 N 10 '68 270w

PROGRAMMED LEARNING CONFERENCE, LOUGHBOROUGH, ENGLAND, 1966. Aspects of educational technology; the proceedings of the Programmed Learning Conference held at Loughborough, 15-18 April 1966 (held under the auspices of the Assn. for programmed learning and the Leicestershire programmed learning group) ed. by Derick Unwin and John Leedham. 545p il $18.75 Barnes & Noble

371.3 Programmed instruction [67-78519]

This volume consists of "forty-three papers. . . . Some deal with pilot studies, others report how programmed learning is being used or should be used. The areas covered include industry, the armed forces, Germany, Soviet bloc countries, mathematics, computer assisted instruction, and the 'feedback classroom.'" (Choice) Bibliographies. Index.

"While these papers offer little beyond that which is already known, they do provide valuable information on the state of the art of programmed instruction in Great Britain. The book should be in any library seriously interested in educational technology."

Choice 4:1149 D '67 100w

"The fairest possible comment . . . is the one made by the editors in their introduction: the papers lacked rigour; only a few would have qualified for inclusion in a major educational or psychological journal. This is not necessarily a bad thing. Rigour in this field is often rigor mortis. . . . Here we have a large number of reasonably careful reports, of reasonably successful approaches to learning, with most of which modern learning theory is quite unable to cope. Certainly the strict and simple-minded Skinnerianism of early years has been left far behind. Here is a challenge to psychologists to devise some rather more adequate theory."

TLS p584 Je 28 '67 360w

PROKHOVNIK, S. J. The logic of special relativity. 128p $5.95 Cambridge

530.1 Relativity (Physics) 67-13854

This volume "discusses the sources of the difficulties and apparent contradictions which have come out of the special theory of relativity. The [book] starts out with the background and development of the theory as normally presented. The resulting development includes time dilation and associated relativistic effects, the clock paradox . . . and the asymmetric twins. [It] goes on to discuss the logic and limitations of different approaches. The final chapter deals with the relation of the problems and modern views of the universe, and discusses a way to reconcile the various viewpoints within a cosmological interpretation of the theory." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"[The book contains] a good collection of references. Should be interesting reading for advanced undergraduates and graduates. Certainly belongs on the shelves of all college libraries."

Choice 5:833 ■ '68 170w

"The major part of [this study's] elaborations centers on the physical significance of the Lorentz transformation equations and their consequences. . . . The most thought-provoking part of the book is probably the fifth chapter, which is entitled 'The logic of absolute motion.' . . . The mathematical proofs of the theorems used in the main arguments are supplied in six appendices, so that the reading of the text is coherent and smooth. Whether right or wrong in the position it adopts, Prokhorovnik's book makes . . . a valuable contribution to the understanding of a scientific controversy which has led to heated debates and is by no means yet resolved." Max Jammer

Science 160:667 My 10 '68 600w

PROKOSCH, FREDERIC. The Missolonghi manuscript. 338p $5.95 Farrar, Straus

Byron, George Gordon Noel Byron, Baron—Fiction 68-10646

The author of The Asiatics (BRD 1935) has written "a fictional picture of the dying Lord Byron supposedly through a series of notebooks kept by the poet. . . [who] died in the Greek village of Missolonghi at the age of 36. . . . Prokosch's Byron alternates brief observations from the last months of his life with more extended re-examinations of his past. All his adventures and misadventures are there: his loves—heterosexual and homosexual; his friendships with Shelley and Madame de Staël; the nature of his love for his sister, Augusta; his travels in Italy; his role in the struggle for Greek liberation; and his slow realization that the . . . handsome youth he once was is no more. 'Out of the jumble of my past my vision chooses not the ordinary. . . but the strange, the enigmatic, the bizarre, even the repulsive. . . I am stylizing and dramatizing.'" (Publishers' Weekly)

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 221:142 F '68 850w

Reviewed by W. H. Archer

Best Sell 27:403 Ja 15 '68 550w

"Prokosch, himself a cosmopolitan, a lover of the exotic and a prolific writer (15 novels) as well as a lavish stylist, has now fabricated for Byron an intimate, retrospective journal. . . . Here and there, it is only fair to say, Prokosch does amplify and extend, retrench and imagine. I just feel that, after reading this insufficiently bold exercise, I've not found out about Byron much that I didn't know, whereas I have found a suave, earthy prose virtuoso imposing on Byron an erotic witness which is vividly his own. . . . The book tells us less of the processes of Byron's imagination than do things as incidental and as little read as Byron's notes to his own poems. Mr. Prokosch has missed his chance here, I'm afraid; and that's a double pity because he is one of the few writers who could have done concise justice to Byron's last delirium." Paul West

Book World p1 Ja 14 '68 1650w

Choice 5:958 O '68 210w

Reviewed by W. J. Smith

Commonweal 88:110 Ap 10 '68 1000w

"This is the best biographical novel on Byron known to this reviewer. . . . Prokosch's portrait of Byron is perfectly valid: a complex, introspective man of animal appetites, torn between exultation and terror. . . . With a gifted writer's intuitive skills and lyrical style, he provides insights into Byron's life that will be useful even to scholars. The world Prokosch creates is distinctly his own, a unique mixture of romanticism and realism, subtly suggestive of decay and doom. He is an enemy of hypocrisy, as Byron was, and fond of four letter words. Some library patrons will be deeply offended by all this, perhaps to the point of comparing him to a demented delinquent whispering obscenities. But this is Prokosch at his best." P. F. Moran

Library J 92:4525 D 15 '67 190w

Reviewed by Naomi Lewis

New Statesman 75:875 Je 28 '68 230w

Reviewed by G. M. Matthews

N Y Rev of Books 10:23 My 23 '68 700w

"How much do [these memories] indeed add to our knowledge, or even to our imaginative insight into the nature of this great poet and very odd man? It should at once be admitted that the reader unacquainted with Byron's own letters and journals will not find this book dull. Once again, Byron's gift for galvanizing everyone who came near him is at work. But for those already familiar with his writing, I do not think this book has much to add. . . .

PROKOSCH, FREDERIC—Continued

If this book is an attempt to delve more deeply than Byron himself did into his inner self, to look back upon his life with a clearer and more detached vision than his own, I do not think it has succeeded. But it is only fair to add that what Mr. Prokosch has attempted was singularly difficult." Iris Origo

N Y Times Bk R p5 Ja 14 '68 950w

Reviewed by H. T. Moore
Sat R 51:82 Ja 13 '68 600w
TLS p549 My 30 '68 550w

PRONKO, LEONARD CABELL. Theater East and West; perspectives toward a total theater. 230p il $7.50 Univ. of Calif. press

792 Theater—Asia 67-22176

The author discusses various types "of Eastern theater—among others, the Balinese dance-drama, Chinese opera, Japanese Kabuki and Noh—and examines the influence they . . . have exerted on such . . . contemporaries as Artaud, Brecht, Copeau, G  net and Beckett. He analyzes styles and themes . . . evaluates their prospects as models and motive forces in the West . . . [and] suggests new directions for experiment." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Pronko believes that Western theater suffers from a surfeit of rationalism, overemphasis on text, and a blind need for absolute representation of reality. He calls instead for a 'feast of total theater' in which the senses, the emotions, the intellects, and the souls of the performers and the audience are activated so that everyone becomes a participant in a wholly transformational experience. . . . Short of a failure to note how recent experiments in Off-Off Broadway and in Happenings have made use of Eastern techniques or attitudes, Pronko's study is a most useful and much needed work. Hopefully it will contribute to a greater interest in Oriental theater despite minor limitations. Recommended for any college collection."

Choice 5:74 Mr '68 170w

"The book explores the Oriental theater from a curiously European point of view. . . . The author has a disappointing tendency to support himself on established opinion rather than venturing any but the most general opinions of his own. The strongest parts of the book are his descriptions of the direct experience of attending these Oriental performances, especially the Balinese. When it comes to what these experiences have to teach, he prefers to quote. . . . Less is revealed explicitly in what he writes, which is studiously impersonal, than in what he chooses to write about. Despite the implications of his stated purpose, he is evidently not interested in contemporary theater at all, certainly not in America; he is interested in French literature and in the Oriental theater itself, particularly Kabuki." Michael Smith

N Y Times Bk R p42 N 5 '67 1150w

PROUD, NORA. Introducing textile printing. 88p il col pl $6.95 Watson-Guptill

746.6 Textile printing 68-10202

The author discusses this craft medium by means of photographs of techniques and finished products, with explanatory textual notes. Bibliography. Index.

"[This book], though practical enough for the novice to follow, still offers stimulation to the craftsman or teacher. . . . [Included are] lists of suppliers in both Great Britain and the United States. . . . Recommended as [a] splendid addition to school craft libraries." R. R.

J Home Econ 60:679 O '68 20w

"Recommended for art teachers, students, crafts leaders, and the libraries which serve them." Delores McColm

Library J 93:2474 Je 15 '68 20w

PRUYSER, PAUL W. A dynamic psychology of religion. 367p $10 Harper

201 Psychology, Religious 68-17589

A clinical psychologist who is director of the Menninger Foundation's education department has based this book "on the 1968 Lyman Beecher Lectures at Yale University Divinity School. He discusses the perceptual and intellectual processes in religion, the thought organization, linguistic functions, and emotional processes. . . . After discussing the relationship of the body's motor system and religion, he concerns himself with relations to persons, things, ideas, and the self. He concludes by discussing certain perennial problems, for example, the problem in defining religion." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"Pruyser intends his work not to replace but to complement other important psychological studies of religion. Nevertheless, for anyone influenced by this book the scientific study of religion will never be the same again. Pruyser consistently views religion not as an isolated experience but as a vital factor in man's relationship to himself and his world. . . . [However] the religion he has studied is almost exclusively that of Christianity in the Western world, and he pays too much attention to variants of conservative and sectarian Protestantism. . . . Aggravating the book's methodological faults is an apparent lack of focus. . . . Much of the book is extremely elementary. Moreover, it is misnamed; it really constitutes an introduction to a dynamic psychology of religion. Often the author belabors the obvious. . . . Only his pleasing style saves the book from becoming tedious in many parts. It is at least twice as long as it should be. . . . Though marred by flaws, [this work] sets a new trend in the study of religion." W. A. Sadler

Christian Century 85:1212 S 25 '68 1650w

"Mr. Pruyser has made a valuable contribution to studies in this field, and the book is highly recommended, even for the evangelical who may entertain serious objections both to the subject and to some of the content of this work." Shildes Johnson

Library J 93:2244 Je 1 '68 210w

PRYCE-JONES DAVID. The stranger's view. 246p $5.95 Holt

68-12214

The "events and aftermath of the Hungarian uprising and the Suez crisis provide the background for this . . . novel about four young men coming to terms with the world they have inherited. The successes and failures of these men's search for a purposive existence are depicted. . . . There is Robert de Courville, a . . . French aristocrat who becomes a . . . politician in the ranks of the extreme left; Nicholas, who volunteers to drive an ambulance into embattled Budapest; Charles, who questions the values of his upper-class English heritage after witnessing . . . the Suez invasion; and the stranger, the narrator, whose own conflicts parallel those of his friends." (Publisher's note)

Reviewed by Pamela Marsh

Christian Science Monitor p11 Je 13 '68 500w

Reviewed by Barry Baldwin

Library J 93:1919 My 1 '68 100w

Reviewed by Kenith Trodd

New Statesman 74:475 O 13 '67 200w

"It is the narrator who has 'the stranger's view' of the title. Although he is able to see clearly, he is quite unable to act from any real involvement. Alone of the four, he remains little changed by the clamorous events of the year. . . . Dozens of characters touch the lives of the four. Notably there is Vali, with whom the anomalous observer is half in love, and there is Sandra, Charles's sister, whom he marries for no compelling reason. David Pryce-Jones has a lightness of touch and a seriousness of purpose that give consistency to his itinerant story. . . . [The book] has sharp little jabs of observation and insight. The technique is in fact pointillist. . . . By the end of the story dots that appeared obscure or arbitrary—points that seemed pointless—are seen to have meaning and relevance. For the total effect is absorbingly alive." Burke Wilkinson

N Y Times Bk R p32 Je 23 '68 600w

"The most obvious characteristic of David Pryce-Jones's dispirited fiction is the sense of alienation. The title of his latest novel (taken from Byron) is apt, though it does not seem intended to suggest as much as it does. The Stranger's View concentrates on the mood of the morose young narrator in what might be called the John Osborne period. . . . We see this narrator in public-school and country-house environments, in France, Austria and Athens, at a Conservative public meeting and under training as an army officer. The various environments are seen with a blurred familiarity. He is not a 'stranger' in the manner of an interested foreigner, but more like a bored resident, unable to see anything of significance in his surroundings. Unfortunately, readers are likely to share the narrator's dissatisfaction and to lose interest in his listless observations."

TLS p1205 D 14 '67 800w

Reviewed by D. J. Gordon

Yale R 58:121 O 68 850w

PRZIBRAM, K., ed. Letters on wave mechanics. See Letters on wave mechanics

PSOMIADES, HARRY J. Pictorial history of Greece. See Spelior, T.

PUGH, ERIC. A dictionary of acronyms & abbreviations; some abbreviations in management, technology and information science. (Archon bk) 214p $7 Shoe String

603 Technology—Dictionaries. Management—Dictionaries [68-83454]

A dictionary of some five thousand abbreviations. Entries are classified alphabetically and under subject.

"A useful dictionary. . . . Principal attention is given to organizations and institutions in the U.K. and U.S. although those in the Commonwealth and other industrialized countries are included. A selective subject index makes it possible to search acronym lists relating to chemistry, statistics, water, etc. . . . Recommended."

Choice 5:932 O '68 160w

Economist 228:44 Ag 17 '68 100w

PULLAN, BRIAN, ed. Sources for the history of medieval Europe from the mid-eighth to the mid-thirteenth century. 277p $6.50 Barnes & Noble

940.1 Middle Ages—History 67-1506

The author "has selected, translated and introduced excerpts from a varied range of sources to highlight the great themes of the period." (Engl Hist R)

"The selection of documents . . . is principally aimed at undergraduate students. . . . The merit of the present collection is primarily in its limitation of scope. . . . It concentrates on some sources for the ideas of law and government from the eighth to the thirteenth century. . . . The translations read well; the sources and editions are tied together logically by solid comments. For once, England is left out. A table of sources completes this useful book."

Choice 4:899 O '67 150w

"[This] anthology, it must be said, avowedly follows well-trodden paths. The popes and emperors, the kings and barons, the bishops and learned clerks are there but the men and women who produced most of their wealth for them are nowhere and the new societies of the towns are seen only through the eyes of their princely would-be masters. Mr. Pullan's translations are cautious and for the most part reliable as well as readable. They do not aim at interpreting or seeking out the hidden messages and associations of their Latin originals. Technical terms are sometimes missed. . . . Mr. Pullan has also found the names of German magnates troublesome. . . . But it would be churlish not to welcome a translation of [the Gelnhausen Charter] and many other important texts." K. Leyser

Engl Hist 83:375 Ap '68 260w

PULZER, PETER G. J. Political representation and elections; parties and voting in Great Britain [Eng title: Political representation and elections in Britain]. 165p $5.50 Praeger

324.42 Elections—Great Britain. Politics. Practical. Great Britain—Politics and government 67-28784

"In the past twenty years the study and conduct of elections in Britain have undergone a minor revolution. . . . I have aimed in this book at summarizing the present state of knowledge in these matters, up to and including the General Election of 1966. Since this new knowledge also raises . . . questions concerning the rôle and value of our representative institutions, and the place of elections in the representative system, I have supplemented the narrative portions of the book with a formulation of these questions and an attempt to suggest answers to them." (Pref) Bibliography. Index.

Choice 5:872 S '68 110w

Economist 227:58 My 4 '68 190w

"Speaking as an American political scientist, I am pleased to see the growing acceptance of American behavioral political science—its data, its methods, and its hypotheses—as a legitimate intellectual basis for study. If Professor Pulzer's study is an indication of things to come, this acceptance will be modest rather than zealous and will be wedded to the traditional concerns of political philosophy. . . . One regrets his bland fusing of old ideas to new data in a summary way. But then, the book seems to be for students and for Bagehot's 'baldheaded man at the back of the omnibus.' Libraries with large student readership might well consider this volume." H. J. Steck

Library J 93:1002 Mr 1 '68 230w

"In the classical liberal theory of democracy a key assumption was that of the basic similarity between political and economic choice. . . . Both intellectually and morally the theory had its attractions; but, as Mr Pulzer shows in his useful digest of British electoral studies, it is one that can scarcely be reconciled with what is now known about the sociology and psychology of voting behaviour." John Goldthorpe

New Statesman 75:178 F 9 '68 700w

"Pulzer does not attempt to say anything highly original or controversial about political representation and elections. His more modest aim, in which he succeeds admirably, is to summarize and discuss the present state of our knowledge of the subject. . . . [He] consistently contrives to maintain the reader's interest as well as to tell him what he ought to know. A short and concise work, it will be valuable to the student, both for its text and for its excellently-compiled classified bibliography. It should also make a strong appeal to the non-specialist with an interest in the peculiarities of the British system of government. In so far as Mr. Pulzer ventures to make judgments about the system, he rarely departs from what might be described as current Butlerian-Mackenzian orthodoxy."

TLS p364 Ap 11 '68 550w

PURCELL, FRANCIS P., Jr. ed. Community action against poverty. See Brager, G. A.

PURCELL, WILLIAM GRAY. St Croix Trail country; recollections of Wisconsin. 123p il maps $6.50 Univ. of Minn. press

917.75 Country life—Wisconsin. Wisconsin—Social life and customs 67-15435

These are the late "architect's sentimental recollections about his boyhood summer vacations in northwest Wisconsin during the final decade of the 19th century, plus some . . . insights into Indian life and white pioneering in the lake country." (Choice)

"The overall content affords a few hours of pleasant reading, and the photographs help to sustain the feeling of escape. A tidy picture of the recreational habits of Midwestern 'mugwumps.'"

Choice 4:1440 F '68 60w

"Camping out, even in summer, in the wild country of Wisconsin was adventuresome and hazardous. With a scant glance toward the hardships, Mr. Purcell's account brims over with the joy of being alive and of fitting into an orderly, meaningful world. Fireside tales, accounts of Indians and pioneers, innocent pleasures, and a never-ending awe of nature fill this small, beautiful book with much for any reader to harvest. . . . Of special importance to libraries in the Midwest, this book is one that will capture its own audience wherever it is available. At first glance, it may seem overpriced; but its excellent format, not to mention its fascinating text, will make it a bargain in disguise. Highly recommended."

C. D. Pipes

Library J 92:1928 My 15 '67 330w

PURDY, KEN W. Young people and driving; the use and abuse of the automobile; foreword by Stirling Moss. 92p $3.50 Day

629.28 Automobile drivers 66-22933

In this discussion of good driving and accident prevention, the author deals with "the psychology of the driver, techniques to use on the road when danger looms, and basic good manners behind the wheel." (Library J)

"[Mr. Purdy's] advice is easy to follow. If taken, and will certainly save lives. 'Any idiot can drive an automobile,' he flatly states. It's preventing an accident that calls for concentration and preparedness. And it's these points Mr. Purdy stresses. . . . This is sound, well-written advice everyone should take to heart. For all public and academic libraries and YA collections." F. B. Davenport

PURDY, K. W.—Continued

Library J 92:2798 Ag '67 120w [YA]

"An ideal gift for the about-to-be-driver. . . . Despite its off-putting title, the book is unpreachy and plain spoken, with plenty of solid information . . . and just enough scare-sell to get the point across." P. Rugg

Nat R 19:1437 D 26 '67 90w [YA]

PURSELL, CARROLL W., jt. ed. Technology in Western civilization, 2v. See Kranzberg, M.

PURVER, MARGERY. The Royal society: concept and creation; with an introd. by H. R. Trevor-Roper. 246p il $7 Mass. inst. of technology

506 Royal Society of London. Science—History 66-25631

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by Robert Kargon
Am Hist R 73:810 F '68 400w
Choice 5:804 S '68 170w

Reviewed by H. F. Kearney
Engl Hist R 83:568 J1 '68 800w

Reviewed by W. B. Rayward
Library Q 38:209 Ap '68 600w

Reviewed by David Kubrin
Science 160:1828 Je 21 '68 850w
Yale R 58:XXVIII O '68 350w

PUSHKIN, ALEXANDR SERGEYEVITCH. The complete prose tales of Alexandr Sergeyevitch Pushkin; tr. from the Russian by Gillon R. Aitken. 495p $6.95 Norton

67-17685

This volume includes Pushkin's unfinished Novel in Letters.

"The bright red cover on this new book is alluring, but the contents are not so bright as the cover. The 10 prose tales included are three more than one finds in the Modern Library Giant edition of Pushkin's works. Though it may be useful to somebody to have 'A Novel in Letters,' 'The History of the Village of Gorukhino,' and 'Roslavlev' at hand, in English, the price of the book seems too steep for just three pieces. . . . Aitken's translations seem uncomfortably close to those by Keane, reprinted in the Modern Library Giant edition." Choice 4:1387 F '68 150w

"Aitken ably carries over the tautness and rapid pace of the narratives into his translations here, often more ably than have such predecessors as T. Keane and R. Edmunds. The availability under one cover of Pushkin's complete output of prose tales, including the unfinished fragments, the readability of the translations and the unquestionable interest of the tales themselves, make this volume valuable. Recommended for student and general reader alike." V. D. Newman

Library J 93:554 F 1 '68 150w

Reviewed by Robert Taubman
New Statesman 72:879 D 9 '66 100w

"Simple in narration and lively in plot, these novels and stories appeal above all to literary sophisticates for their lovely lucid language and subtly concealed symmetries. . . . Aitken has done well by English readers, preserving as much as one can reasonably expect of Pushkin's pure, compressed and precise language. . . . Most distinctive of his genius, however, was Pushkin's constant experimentation with various narrative stylizations. He composed for his tales petty-bureaucrats' letters, officials' decrees, historians' footnotes, creating precise tones and atmospheres with every awkward or pompous word. Ivan Belkin, his naive, muddled country squire and earnest author, is one of the great figures of Russian literature." Kathryn Feuer

N Y Times Bk R p6 N ■ '67 1050w

PYE, LUCIAN W. Southeast Asia's political systems. 98p $4.95; pa $1.95 Prentice-Hall 320.959 Asia, Southeast—Politics 68-47

"The author analyzes the foundations of politics in terms of ecology, history, social structure, and ideology; political dynamics, the organs of government in decision-making, and governmental performance are considered; and a final chapter focuses on problems and prospects. . . . [The book includes] a historical chart of Southeast Asia, a map of the area, outline descriptions of its political systems, [and] a chart on religious and ethnic composition." (Ann Am Acad) Bibliography. Index.

"From the theoretical viewpoint, Professor Pye is interested in comparative patterns of modernization in Southeast Asia. An area of ten political systems—Burma, Cambodia, Indonesia, Laos, Malaysia, the Philippines, Singapore, Thailand, North Vietnam, and South Vietnam—lends itself to various patterns of modernization. The comparative approach is especially valid for Southeast Asia. . . . [This book] merits a place in the library of all people interested in the area. . . . It is brief, but it is basic." R. H. Fifield

Ann Am Acad 337:179 My '68 500w

"The present book, much of which appeared previously in R. E. Ward and Roy C. Macridis (eds.), Modern Political Systems: Asia, is competent, and there are some distinguished sections, for instance on Ideology and on Political Leadership. The subject, however, is much too complex to be dealt with in a potted book of eighty pages of text plus tables. There is a high proportion of factual errors." R. S. Milne

Pacific Affairs 41:152 spring '68 110w

PYE, LUCIAN W. The spirit of Chinese politics; a psychocultural study of the authority crisis in political development. 255p $8.95 Mass. inst. of technology

320.951 China (People's Republic of China)—Politics and government. Authority

68-14451

"Examining China's traditional values from the perspectives of social psychology and political sociology. . . . Mr. Pye attempts to identify the nature of the crises which modernization has thrust upon the Chinese people. Among these he finds the 'authority crisis,' the quest for acceptable alternatives to traditional cultural symbols and institutions, to be paramount." (Library J)

Reviewed by R. W. Wilson
Am J Soc 74:310 N '68 850w

"Pye once again combines rich imagination, sober judgment, and an impressive knowledge of Asian political culture to produce a very probing analysis of mainland Chinese politics. . . . [The book] presents no new information. But it thoroughly reexamines modern China's political plight from the standpoint of social psychology and of current suppositions about modernization." Choice 5:1368 D '68 190w

"[This] is a pioneering study. It is as intellectually invigorating in its methodology as it is heady in its substantive implications. . . . [Mr. Pye singles out] the element of 'voluntarism' as the unique feature of Chinese Communism, or Maoism. His study demands line-by-line reading and much reflection, but the result should be deeper insight into the nature of Chinese civilization, past and present." Hyman Kublin

Library J 93:2886 Ag '68 200w

"At first sight the author's hypothesis . . . might seem not only plausible but of explanatory value. There is no doubt that the study of an individual's childhood can be extremely helpful in explaining his adult behavior and attitudes. Unfortunately it is less easy to explain the behavior of societies in the same way. . . . Mr. Pye's hypotheses can explain almost every possibility; hence they are of almost no use whatever. . . . If 'psycho-culture' is often redundant as an analytical tool, there is no doubt that many of the ideas Mr. Pye has assembled under its rubric have some validity. . . . Unfortunately, however, the book's merits are very much outweighed by the hostile attitude underlying it. Some of the author's scorn for modern China itself—presumably in order to avoid the label of cold warrior he nearly always lumps Nationalists and Communists together—seems to come from his own predisposition." Martin Bernal

N Y Rev of Books 11:25 N 7 '68 3200w

PYKE, MAGNUS. The science century. 183p pl $5.95 Walker & co.

609 Technology—History. Science—History. Technology and civilization. Science and civilization 67-13241

"Pyke traces the development of technology from mid-19th to mid-20th century . . . [showing] how technology, fed by science, has pervaded every aspect of social life during the science century. The development of great cities is traced to the invention of rapid and efficient means of transportation and communication; the population explosion to discoveries by Pasteur and others; and the growth of shopping centers to the automobile. . . . Pyke suggests that the hundred years of revolution—the revolution of an idea—may be coming to an end and that the challenge facing man now is that of learning to live with the intellectual illumination given him by science." (Choice)

"A small, highly readable book. . . . Although [it] relates many little known incidents and anecdotes from the world of science and technology, its principal value should be to those who wish to understand the nature of the impact of science and technology upon the modern world. . . . Contains an index which is remarkably complete for a book of its type." Choice 5:983 O '68 260w

"This book is a lively and imaginative work of vulgarisation. . . . A populariser must not care too much about getting everything exactly right, and the author in this case does not do so. Indeed, on matters outside his main interest he sometimes cuts his corners a little fine; and anyone who wants to demonstrate how rash and unscientific writers trained as scientists can be when they venture outside their own field will find some ammunition in this book. . . . But despite these features—or just possibly because of them—the book is a success: it arouses interest and is exciting. . . . There ought to be a welcome among unscientific laymen for Dr Pyke's work." Economist 225:188 O 14 '67 480w

"The rain of material goods falls so thick and fast from Dr Pyke's recital of scientific achievements that it may seem ungrateful to ask what they add up to in ultimate good, social and moral. He is very short on aeronautics and space penetration and nowhere answers those who think that the crippling cost of high speed puts it on the debit side of the account. He is short too on the real function of computer development and its effect on the scientific management of industry. . . . He writes an expert chapter on the revolution in food production in fully developed countries. . . . Most surprising of all is his omission to write a chapter on nuclear research." TLS p1016 O 26 '67 900w

Q

QUANBECK, WARREN A., ed. Challenge . . . and response; a Protestant perspective of the Vatican council; ed. by Warren A. Quanbeck in consultation with Friedrich Wilhelm Kantzenbach and Vilmos Vajta. 226p $5 Augsburg

262 Vatican Council, 2d

66-22566

Ten "Protestant theologian-observers respond to a number of the questions raised at the fourth and final session of the Council. Numbered among the contributors are . . . George Lindbeck, Oscar Cullmann, and Kristen Skyds-gaard. The book is divided into three parts: (1) Proceedings, a brief chronicle of the fourth session of the Council; (2) Evaluations, a series of seven articles dealing with specific issues of the final session—e.g. scripture and tradition, pastoral office of bishops, priestly life and the laity, missiology, religious liberty, and the Church in the modern world; (3) Perspectives, a compilation of five articles and a postscript intended to be an overall analysis of the entire Council." (Choice)

"Can be profitably read as a companion volume to The Papal Council and the Gospel and Dialogue on the Way. Of considerable interest to anyone concerned with the ecumenical dimensions of the Second Vatican Council. No Index." Choice 4:1004 N '67 200w

"This book is the third volume of a trilogy on Vatican II produced by the Lutheran observer corps at the council and is yet another proof of how seriously they took their work and how well they did it. . . . [Focussing chiefly on the final session, this book] also reviews the event as a whole. . . . Professor Skyds-gaard's analysis of the dogmatic constitution On Divine Revelation is one of the best essays on the problem of Scripture and tradition that I know. G. Lindbeck's appraisal of the declaration On Religious Liberty is almost as notable. O. Cullmann's chapter on 'The Council and the Essence of the Gospel' is short and meaty. On the other hand, Professor E. Schlöcker's two articles—one on Catholic social ethics, the other on the new ecumenical situation—are disappointing. . . . All these fourteen pieces are by Lutherans for Lutherans, with the rest of us welcome to listen in." A. C. Outler

J Religion 47:376 O '67 400w

QUARLES, BENJAMIN, jr. ed. The Negro American. See Fishel, L. H.

QUARTON, GARDNER C., ed. The neurosciences: a study program [2d ed]. See The neurosciences: a study program

QUBAIN, FAHIM I. Education and science in the Arab world. 539p $12.50 Johns Hopkins press

378 Education—Near East. Professional education 65-26182

A "study sponsored by the Middle East Institute and the National Science Foundation. Arab countries surveyed include Egypt, Lebanon, Iraq, Syria, Libya, Jordan. . . . Emphasis is upon scientific, medical and technical institutions of higher education. . . . Topics considered are number and type of institutions, curricula, teaching staffs, student bodies, admission policies, support, manpower, scientific research, needs and shortages, library and laboratory facilities, ranks and salaries of teaching staffs, students studying abroad, and so on." (Library J) Annotated bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by M. H. Kerr

Bul Atomic Sci 24:30 Mr '68 450w

"This is an original, extensive study. . . . The whole educational spectrum from elementary level to graduate university work is touched upon with an imposing array of statistical tables, based upon the author's personal observations and official statistics, whenever these are available. Some statistics are estimates. . . . An important, and probably a unique study of Arab countries in which educational progress since the late 1950's has been very impressive. . . . This work could be very useful in pointing up deficiencies, overlapping, opportunities for foreign and international assistance, need for emphasis upon quality rather than quantity, and likely future trends in higher education in this important part of the world." J. C. Shipman

Library J 91:4105 S 15 '66 180w

QUELLER, DONALD E. The office of ambassador in the middle ages. 251p $7.50 Princeton univ. press

940.1 Diplomats. Diplomacy. Middle Ages

67-11034

This study of medieval diplomatic history "concerns the evolution of the office of ambassador [in Western Europe] from the late twelfth through the fifteenth century. The first three chapters study the various names and types of diplomatic agents. . . . The author then analyzes the functions of ambassadors: the different sorts of letters they carried (letters of credence, procurations, instructions, and pre-sealed 'blanks'); their reports; the personnel and expenses of embassies; their privileges, immunities, and ceremonies; and the ratification of their acts. . . . The book concludes with a summary." (Am Hist R) Bibliography. Index.

"Extensively documented and written with discrimination and good sense, [this] is valuable not only for the history of diplomacy but also for the study of the emerging national states, the concept of plena potestas, and other aspects of late medieval political development. It even contributes to the debate over the nature of the Renaissance by suggesting that some scholars have exaggerated the significance of diplomatic oratory. It is limited in its chronological and geographical scope, however. It concentrates on Italy, especially Venice, pays some attention to Northern Europe, but says almost nothing about Spain, Byzantium, and the non-Christian world." Giles Constable

Am Hist R 73:1500 Je '68 380w

QUELLER, D. E.—Continued

"An unusual book because it treats a hitherto ignored, major subject with competence and thoroughness. Queller has made ample use of original documents in a clear and interesting narrative. . . . There is no doubt that it should be in every college and university library."
Choice 5:1208 N '68 100W

QUENEAU, RAYMOND. The blue flowers; tr. from the French by Barbara Wright [Eng title: Between blue and blue]. 224p $5 Atheneum pubs.

67-14102

A French novelist, poet and mathematician presents a novel in which "the 13th-Century Duke of Auge falls asleep and dreams of Cidrolin, a 20th-Century eccentric living on a barge in the Seine. Cidrolin sleeps and dreams of the Duke. 'Which dreamed it?' . . . The Duke appears in successive centuries until he and Cidrolin meet on the barge." (Library J) Translated from Les Fleurs Bleues.

"[This book] displays Queneau's technical virtuosity considerably, yet remains a completely unsatisfactory work of art. . . . Much ingenuity and erudition have gone into this historical mock-reconstruction and into the playing with anachronism which draws upon it. . . . Much ingenuity has gone as well into the book's word-play, . . . and a kind of mechanical ingenuity has gone into the book's structure. . . . Having little besides ingenuity to offer, [this novel] . . . begins to seem like a long and rather tasteless collection of jokes and gimmicks, many of them rather stale. . . . Indeed if it were not by Queneau, it would hardly deserve being talked about at all. . . . In any case, it is a book quite unworthy of its author." Paul Warshaw

Commentary 45:65 Mr '68 2200W

"The style is nearly as surrealistic as the action. Do the puns and the cyclical view of history as blue flowers trampled in and growing out of mud suggest Joyce? Or is the author of Exercices de Style parodying his master? The method is not new, nor is the theme of history ■ dream. But those who enjoy Queneau's wordmongering will have fun picking the flowers he displays here." Elaine Bender
Library J 92:1511 Ap 1 '67 130W

Reviewed by Edwin Morgan

New Statesman 73:156 F 3 '67 330W

"[This book] whose title has been oddly changed in Barbara Wright's clever translation, derives its tension quite predictably from the relationship between art and actuality. . . . It would take a very long time and many re-readings to reveal the structure of this novel in its entirety. . . . [Nevertheless] all the necessary clues are present in the text and not somewhat outside it. Although a full interpretation is obviously out of the question one cannot resist pointing to one or two of the directions it might need to take. For example, the novel is full of mathematics, involving certain of the writer's favourite numbers. . . . Queneau, as a poet, does not rely wholly on number, he also uses rhyme. . . . [In fact the book] is actually one long rhyme."
TLS p438 My 25 '67 1250W

QUIERY, WILLIAM H. Facing God; with a foreword by Bernard J. Cooke. 211p $4.95 Sheed

248.3 Prayer

67-13760

The author discusses what constitutes prayer and offers a guide on how one prays and faces God today.

"This volume should quickly become standard equipment for every novice, young or not so young, in the spirituality of Vatican II. And in this, which of us . . . does not feel himself a novice? . . . At first glance, the abundance of quotations (largely from such contemporaries as von Balthasar, . . . Rahner, Schillebeeckx, . . . and the like) might invite the snap judgment that this ■ only an anthology, though a very felicitous one; so apt and far-ranging are the chosen texts. If this were all, it would still be a most useful book. However it is a personal and fresh synthesis, uncomplicated, down to earth and practical. . . . [This work] does not summon us all into the desert of un-Christian solipsism. It teaches us, rather, how to face God in the poor no less than in His word, in our still unfinished liturgy ■ well as in secular work and deep friendships. Should this listing sound a bit worn or 'old hat,' ten minutes of exploration in the book itself will be totally reassuring." C. J. McNaspy

America 116:322 Mr 4 '67 410W

"This work has the value of trying to situate the role of prayer for the 20th-century Christian living after the Second Vatican Council, and is free from an unrealistic and impractical view of prayer. However, the author's approach is at times too simplistic and too obvious. This book would be of some value to the Christian undergraduate seeking some new insights into the nature of prayer. It tries to do for the methodology of prayer what the books by Michel Quoist accomplish for the content of prayer."

Choice 4:1004 N '67 190W

"Query points his book toward a Roman Catholic audience, but there is something in it for anyone who seeks a more vivid personal spiritual life in Christ."

Christian Century 84:238 F 22 '67 30W

QUINN, KENNETH. Virgil's Aeneid; a critical description. 448p $9.75 Univ. of Mich. press

873 Virgil (Publius Vergilius Maro)—Aeneid 68-12248

"The purpose of this book is . . . to present the poem in a single volume of manageable size, and with just so much of explanatory, introductory, or critical matter as may enable it to be read continuously with intelligent appreciation. . . . Chapter 1 attempts a preliminary exploration of what seems to me an important theme. Chapter 2 pieces together the circumstances, literary and historical, in which the poem took shape. Chapter 3 deals with the outlines of the poetic structure. Chapter 4, the longest, provides a fairly full analysis of the text; the twelve books are taken in order. . . . Chapter 5 deals with Virgil's use of form and some related theoretical problems. Chapter 6 returns to the text for a closer examination of the verbal fabric than was appropriate earlier." (Pref) List of passages discussed. Index.

"After what was almost a generation of absence of any interpretive books in English on Virgil, the present decade has presented us with at least four: those of Duckworth, Otis, [M.] Putnam [Poetry of the Aeneid, BRD 1965], and now Quinn (not to mention an English translation of the work of Poeschl. . . . Less penetrating perhaps than Otis, the present work is nevertheless more solid and broader in its scope than Putnam. . . . Although his precise divisions are different from Duckworth's, Quinn seems equally committed to a tri-partite structure in the poem, at least as far as the individual books are concerned. The bibliography as represented in the footnotes is highly selective and makes no pretense of being complete."
Choice 5:772 S '68 190W

"In his longest chapter, extending over almost 175 pages, Quinn gives a careful reading, book by book, of the poem. It will have the same usefulness as [B.] Otis' two fine chapters on the Odyssean and Iliadic Aeneid [in Virgil: a study in civilized poetry, BRD 1964]. But Quinn adds two more substantial chapters to deal with important matters of form and style. I particularly stress the chapter on style, because so often that area is taken for granted in general books. For its breadth, then, above all, Quinn's book deserves our respect; moreover, equipped as it is with fuller and more up-to-date scholarly references than Pöschl's and Otis' studies, it can be heartily recommended to our students and to any intelligent reader approaching Virgil." W. S. Anderson

Class World 62:22 S '68 290W

QUINTANA, RICARDO. Oliver Goldsmith; ■ Georgian study. (Masters of world lit) 213p $4.95 Macmillan (N Y)

828 Goldsmith, Oliver

67-26641

In this critical study of Goldsmith's writings, the author, professor of English at the University of Wisconsin, "blends historical, sociological, philosophical, psychological, and . . . symbolic methods [of analysis]." (Yale R) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"This chronological examination of Goldsmith's major works, woven together with brief summaries of his circumstances, activities, friendships, and attitudes, and capped with ■ first-rate bibliographical discussion, is . . . intelligent, smooth, copious, widely read, responsible, scholarly, and conventional. It is full of informative comments on such matters as the use of the persona in the essays, the Virgilian background [for The Deserted Village, and individual social or political ideas; but it has no unifying standpoint and tends to become vague just where we could best learn from precision."

Choice 5:344 My '68 160w

"This modest biographical and critical study should aid in reestablishing Goldsmith as a significant figure in the development of British literature. Dr Quintana, . . . a recognized authority in the field of 18th-Century British literature, demonstrates conclusively the extent of Goldsmith's considerable talents, particularly in the area of criticism, social thought, and the manipulation of comic-ironic distance. This important book makes a definite contribution to the field." J. A. Rycenga

Library J 92:4002 N 1 '67 200w

"This is not a biography but ■ critical study; not an introduction for general readers but a book for people who propose to study Goldsmith. . . . Professor Quintana has probably been wise to conform to the prevailing academic mode of close and specialized analysis. His approach, however, is more catholic than most. . . . He is thorough, giving attention to pieces now little read or little discussed. . . . His systematic report on texts and 'literature' will benefit all teachers of the period and many students. . . . To me the most interesting passages in Professor Quintana's book are those in which he detects sly self-parody in the downright corn which Goldsmith unabashedly resorts to in serious writing." F. A. Pottle

Yale R 57:425 Mr '68 2000w

QUINTUS OF SMYRNA. The war at Troy; what Homer didn't tell; tr. and with an introduction and notes, by Frederick M. Combellack. 279p $5.95 Univ. of Okla. press

883

67-24612

The "professor of Greek literature at the University of Oregon has produced [an] English prose translation of an epic Greek poem which probably appeared in the third or fourth century A.D. Nothing is known about its author. The poem is in effect ■ sequel to Homer's Iliad, and covers the events at Troy immediately after the death of Hector." (Library J) Index.

"Mr. Combellack has produced an accurate and fairly readable translation, but it merely serves to show how good the original Homeric Iliad is. Quintus's poem is a patchwork of minor issues, with no outstanding heroes or heroines, and no unifying leitmotiv. There are occasional felicities, but the addiction to an overuse of the Homeric simile, and the wholesale copying of ideas and episodes which are better described in Homer, soon make it clear why the poem has up to now been consigned to near oblivion. . . . This reviewer, for one, will be astonished if the academic world is now suddenly overwhelmed by a wave of repentant Quintusforschung. The book will interest scholars, specialists, and informed readers." T. M. Robinson

Library J 93:1634 Ap 15 '68 200w

"Combellack's prose translation is the purest delight, and so far superior to A. S. Way's muddled verse in the Loeb Classics that it deserves to be regarded as the first attempt to render the work into English. . . . It quite properly deserves a place on the shelf between [Homer's] Iliad and the Odyssey, for it bridges the gap between them." Robert Payne

Sat R 51:29 J1 20 '68 850w

R

RABB, THEODORE K. Enterprise & empire; merchant and gentry investment in the expansion of England, 1575-1630. 420p $12.50 Harvard univ. press

338.0942 Great Britain—Commerce. Great Britain—History 67-29629

The author "does not follow the usual historical methods in this study, but instead turns to computer data processing techniques. In studying each of the 6,000 persons who had ■ financial interest in any of the overseas enterprises in England during the period, Rabb 'programs' this information into the computer. One of his main conclusions from this mass of data is that the gentry (property classes) discarded the traditional European antipathy toward the world of commerce and those associated with it. Instead, they . . . invested and, on occasions, took part in overseas expeditions." (Choice) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"Scholars have been aware of this unique English, gentry-merchant economic alliance, but no one up to now has proved it as conclusively. Rabb has made a valuable contribution to the field of overseas expansion. Yet, this is a curiously uneven book. The basic arguments and analysis are found in one chapter; whereas the largest part of the work includes a discussion of the methods used and a listing of 8,000 names of investors and members of the House of Commons. The author is perhaps too convinced of the value of computers in providing answers to most historical problems."

Choice 5:1184 N '68 190w

"This book has a rather perplexing title since it deals with neither enterprise nor empire. . . . Professor Rabb, associate professor of history at Princeton, has produced mainly a statistical study. . . . Of special interest is the chapter in which he comments on the limitations, pitfalls, and advantages of programming. . . . The great drawback of quantitative analysis is that it takes the life out of history leaving only the dry bones. The appendix listing all investors will be a useful checklist." Raymond de Roover

Library J 92:4499 D 15 '67 130w

RABE, OLIVE. It. auth. We Alcotts. See Fisher, A.

RABIL, ALBERT. Merleau-Ponty: existentialist of the social world. 331p $7.50 Columbia univ. press

194 Merleau-Ponty, Maurice

66-15954

The author offers an "exposition of the development of Merleau-Ponty's political thought. His thesis is that the influence of Sartre on Merleau-Ponty was pernicious and tended to lead Merleau-Ponty into fruitless by-paths away from his own more fundamental insights." (Library J) Bibliography.

Choice 5:356 My '68 200w

Christian Century 84:1225 S 27 '67 30w

"One of the principal merits of Rabil's book is its facts about the political situation in France immediately after World War II, in the context of which Merleau-Ponty worked out his political and social philosophy. Other merits are the rather full sketch of the sources of Merleau-Ponty's thought and the 72 pages of notes. . . . For all college libraries and large city libraries." R. L. Perkins

Library J 92:121 Ja 1 '67 120w

"Viewed [as an effort to trace Merleau-Ponty's development] alone, the book succeeds admirably. The author does claim that the title indicates a 'thesis that will be defended throughout,' which seems to be that Merleau-Ponty's existentialism is more socially and politically oriented than that of his contemporaries. This is a very questionable thesis. . . . [However, Rabil] has a thorough acquaintance with all of Merleau-Ponty's writings, and knows when and under what circumstances they were written, something obviously very important for his task. This in itself is a major accomplishment. . . . [The] bibliography represents an immense labor of scholarship. . . . Rabil is successful as long as he is merely describing, comparing, and contrasting, but he becomes shaky as soon as he passes beyond this level. An important [exception] is his critique of Merleau-Ponty's views on religion at the end of the book. . . . Here the author engages wholeheartedly in a philosophical-critical argument for the first time, and is very persuasive."

Yale ■ 57:X D '67 950w

RABINOVITZ, RUBIN. The reaction against experiment in the English novel, 1950-1960. 243p $7.50 Columbia univ. press

823 English fiction—History and criticism 67-14064

The author "surveys novels and novelists of the 1950's, then examines Kingsley Amis, Angus Wilson, and C. P. Snow as representing 'anti-experimental' novelists. The basic conflict is that of the traditional in English art and literature (Dickens, etc.) versus the new and exceptional (Joyce, Woolf) with . . . the anti-experimentalists favoring the "traditional." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

RABINOVITZ, RUBIN—Continued

"The three writers are presented in terms of their growth though the analyses of their works are brief and descriptive rather than evaluative, the start of a strongly evaluative position reserved for the overly brief last chapter. Though this seems aimed at the undergraduate need, the . . . scholarly contributions make it welcome at any level. . . . [There is] a thorough index, a bibliography of general works on the modern English novel, and—in terms of the three writers—bibliographies of books written and edited, critical essays and reviews, and major criticism about them." Choice 5:344 My '68 170w

"Rabinovitz has studiously examined both the critical writings and the fiction of the three [writers], and he is able to prove that they rejected experiment in theory as well as practice. . . . Although he disagrees with Amis and Wilson, Rabinovitz treats them gently, saving his big guns for Snow. . . . [He] treats Snow's critical activities not merely as mistaken but as pernicious, as if he had poisoned the London water supply. As for Snow's novels, Rabinovitz finds no merit in them, but all the faults he can think of. . . . Why Snow rouses Rabinovitz to such a pitch of moral indignation I cannot imagine; I only know that his rage has weakened his book. I also think that Rabinovitz, for the sake of his thesis, has minimized the experimentation that has gone on in England since the war." Granville Hicks Sat R 51:27 F 10 '68 800w

"[The author's] description of English literary life was presumably not intended for an English audience which might not readily share [his] solemnity of approach. . . . But this study does stir into fitful life when Mr. Rabinovitz finds the inconsistencies and misrepresentations of C. P. Snow's attacks on Joyce and Virginia Woolf and their so-called school a bit more than he can take. All the same, the substance of what this absurdly over-documented book offers could easily have been shrunk to an article, or even to a few fighting paragraphs." TLS p680 Je 27 '68 380w

RABINOWITCH, ALEXANDER. Prelude to revolution; the Petrograd Bolsheviks and the July 1917 uprising. 299p il $8.50 Ind. univ. press

947.084 Russia—History—Revolution, 1917-1921 68-10278

This "book is the first part of a projected two-volume study of the Petrograd Bolsheviks in the critical period from February to October 1917. . . . [The author contends] that the July 1917 uprisings illustrated the interfactional struggles within the Bolshevik party. . . . [He] describes the anatomy of a revolutionary party before it assumed power." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"The Institute of Marx-Engels-Lenin would have one believe that Lenin invariably responded masterfully and consistently to each and every political event. . . . This is a gross distortion. The author's rather impressive research shows that the Bolshevik leaders in the summer of 1917 were quite at a loss as to just how to respond. . . . Dr. Rabinowitch recounts just why [the uprising] was 'less than a revolution,' although he admits the 'relevant archives are closed and few of the necessary documents have been published' by which scholars could make a definitive assessment as to why the Bolsheviks Central Committee . . . declined to seize power on these tumultuous days. . . . The book includes a clearly drawn map which fixes the loci of the principal events taking place." A. L. Weeks

Ann Am Acad 378:151 J1 '68 650w

"A thorough, well-written, well-documented account of an important phase in the history of the Russian Revolution. . . . [This] book is for college and research libraries." A. F. Peterson

Library J 93:2240 Je 1 '68 120w

RABKIN, NORMAN. Shakespeare and the common understanding. 267p $6.95; pa $2.95 Free press

822.3 Shakespeare, William—Criticism, interpretation, etc. 67-19237

Rabkin "defines Shakespeare's way of seeing, in a word taken from the physicist Niels Bohr, as complementarity—an approach to experience in which 'radically opposed and equally total commitments to the meaning of life coexist in a single harmonious vision.' . . . [He attempts to] demonstrate that this mode of vision is at once wholly Shakespearean, basic to much significant aesthetic experience, and central to the way in which the world is seen today. [He] shows that this way of seeing is present in the greatest literature (including the works of Homer, Dante, Chaucer, Goethe) and is the way in which many contemporary physicists see the world. . . . [There are] interpretations of Troilus and Cressida, Othello, Richard II, Julius Caesar, Coriolanus, Romeo and Juliet, Pericles, Cymbeline, The Winter's Tale, and The Tempest. In addition, shorter studies of a number of other plays are included." (Publisher's note) Index.

"[An] impressive study of Shakespeare's attitude toward life and art. . . . Due credit is given to standard studies on similar themes by such scholars as Granville-Barker, Ellis-Fermor, Tillyard, Traversi, Schanzer, Harbage, and Hellman, but Rabkin's study is more inclusive and penetrating. Thoroughly informed, authoritative, and closely argued, it is nevertheless written with distinction of style. This brilliant, perceptive, and stimulating volume is best fitted for selected seniors and graduate students." Choice 5:779 S '68 120w

"Complementarity is carefully if too briefly treated in the first chapter. . . . After Chapter One, complementarity weaves through the argument usually as a synonym for paradox. Problems of scientific methodology disappear; the book's value lies in the discussions of particular plays and their thematic or structural interrelations. . . . [Rabkin] considers in separate chapters major Shakespearean themes of reason, selfhood and love's value, politics, eros and death, and the nature of the artistic imagination. . . . The idea of complementarity gives Mr. Rabkin a freedom to explore the interdependence of opposite principles, actions, and characters within a single play [and] in different plays. . . . Yet it is not new to assert that paradox is the essence of poetic vision. Instead of establishing a new conceptual framework, Mr. Rabkin has found another way of asserting a familiar doctrine of the New Criticism. . . . [He] remains well within his own culture." Yale R 57:XXII Mr '68 600w

RABOFF, ERNEST. Paul Klee; art for children. unip il col il $3.95 Doubleday

760 Klee, Paul—Juvenile literature 68-26550

"A brief biography is supplemented by some words of the artist himself concerning his craft. The bulk of the book is devoted to analysis . . . of 15 representative works reproduced [here]. (Book World) 'Ages nine to twelve.' (N Y Times Bk R)

"[The reproductions]—occasionally poor—[are] in full color. While Mr. Raboff's comments are often sensitive, even instructive, and the overall production job is seductive, one wonders if, in the end, [this kind of book is] not too much of a good thing. In helping the child to see, Mr. Raboff often leaves nothing more to be seen. By interposing himself so forcefully between artist and viewer, the author may be erecting more of a barrier to true appreciation than a little healthy ignorance. These books are probably best used by a child about to visit an exhibition of work by the artists in question. A judicious sampling of Mr. Raboff could prove enlightening." S. G. Lanes

Book World p6 (children's issue) N 3 '68 60w

"An imaginative attempt at a different kind of art book for children. . . . The author utilizes his own artistry and poetic sensibility to cue the child into the experience of knowing a great artist's works. Good color reproductions of paintings are supplemented by line drawings. . . . The deft use of multi-colored hand print typography adds an intimacy of tone that fortifies the author's ability to bridge the actual world of the child and Klee's painted fantasies that draw so compellingly on that world." N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p54 N 3 '68 130w

RACHLIN, CAROL K., jt. auth. American Indian mythology. See Marriott, A.

RACINE, JEAN. Complete plays; tr. into English verse and with a biographical appreciation, foreword and notes by Samuel Solomon; introd. by Katherine Wheatley. 2v 444:459p $20 Random house

842

67-12715

Volume I contains translations of The Theban Brothers, Alexander the Great, Andromache, The Litigants, Britannicus, and Berenice. Volume II contains Bajazet, Mithridates, Iphigenia, Phaedra, Esther, and Athaliah.

"I do not mean to insinuate the thought that the very latest translation of Racine be burned. No, [these volumes] can, for all I care, remain on the shelves of the book stores which is what is going to happen . . . in any case. . . . This last glimpse into Racine through Solomon's blank verse, is simply not worth criticizing. . . . Perhaps it will be said that Racine's lines are untranslatable: they are indeed; but certainly one can do better than Solomon has done. . . . His best is not too bad; unfortunately it cannot match the original." Lionel Abel

New Repub 159:30 O 26 '68 1000w

"What more can you ask of a translation of Racine than that it be scholarly and passionately respectful of the original . . . [with] a shared esthetic between translator and author to . . . [close] the gap between two not very sympathetic languages? Samuel Solomon not only gives us all this but makes his prefatory and running notes a discussion of the special problems imposed by a poet who set exceptional standards for the use of language. . . . Readers who think they already know the originals are likely to find their enjoyment expanded by his explanations of why he has done what he has done in English. And if this apparently best of all possible translations must end by proving that Racine is untranslatable, it will probably remain the standard English substitute." John Canaday

N Y Times Bk R p26 Ag 18 '68 400w

RACKL, HANNS-WOLF. Diving into the past; archaeology under water; tr. by Ronald J. Floyd. 292p il maps lib bdg $4.89 Scribner

913.03 Archeology. Salvage. Excavations (Archeology) 68-16121

This volume "summarizes the finds and methods of underwater archeology." (N Y Times Bk R) Bibliography. Index.

"This attractive account of the treasures to be found on the floor of the sea will be of special interest to young people who are already eager about scuba-diving. . . . The book is packed with instances that make fascinating reading . . . for the high school library." Best Sell 28:195 Ag 1 '68 200w [YA]

"Shipwrecks of nearly every historical period and geographical area are included in this tedious account of underwater archaeological discoveries which contains more minutiae than highlights of major finds. Ship contents, nautical measurements, and ancient naval customs dominate the text. The excitement associated with the you-are-there approach is lacking in this author's use of it. This time the technique fails to create, and cannot sustain, reader interest." Marsha Shapiro

Library J 93:[3325] S 15 '68 100w [YA]

"Mr Rackl's book on a very discursive subject is well put together and written in a kind of German permitting a smooth translation.

Not only the archeological buff and the scuba fan, but anyone contemplating a trip to out-of-way places in the Mediterranean will find his interest held." E. B. Garside

N Y Times Bk R p16 Jl 7 '68 260w

RACZ, ISTVAN. Art treasures of medieval Finland; phot. by István Rác; introd. and notes on the pictures by Riitta Pykkänen; tr. from Finnish by Diana Tullberg and Judy Beesley. 252p $15 Praeger

709.471 Art, Finnish. Art, Medieval 67-15670

A "collection of works of art ranging from the 13th to the early 16th century." (Choice)

"[The collection] which this volume illustrates will undoubtedly be unfamiliar to most readers. The value of the publication is enhanced by the quality of the photographs and their generally excellent reproduction. Yet it is to be regretted that the editor has succumbed to the . . . habit of presenting for the most part only details, whose expressive character is undeniable, but which the reader will find hard to replace in their original context. A short introduction and a useful descriptive catalogue have been provided. As rendered in English, however, the text sometimes betrays an uncertain grasp of appropriate usage and terminology."

Choice 5:336 My '68 160w

"Mr. Rác's photographs are superb and reflect his personal enthusiasms. . . . There are no captions on the plates, which necessitates using the notes constantly; the notes are admirably done. The English translation reads smoothly and clearly. For art collections and larger libraries." Julia Sabine

Library J 92:4494 D 15 '67 170w

RACZ, ISTVAN. Early Finnish art; from prehistory to the middle ages; phot. by István Rác; with an introd. by C. F. Meinander and notes on the il. by Pirkko-Liisa Lehtosalo; tr. from Finnish by Diana Tullberg. 176p $15 Praeger

709.471 Art, Finnish. Art, Primitive. Finland—Antiquities 67-15669

After an introduction on Finnish prehistory are photographs of art objects ranging from "pieces of quartz, bashed to a handy shape some 9000 years ago, through stone axes of satiny, lethal elegance, to silver jewelry with Christian motifs." (Atlantic) Notes on the plates follow the photograph section. Originally published in Finnish under the title Kivikirves Ja Hopearisti: Suomen Esihistorian Taidearteita.

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 221:119 Ja '68 120w

"The first book, in other than Finnish, to deal fully with the [subject]. . . . The photographs, of highest quality, provide the only source for detailed studies of most of the pieces presented. The inclusion of measurements in the fine plate descriptions constitutes a rare blessing. The listing of museum provenience and number helps overcome the total lack of a bibliography. The introduction by one of Finland's finest archaeologists . . . is a masterpiece of a short but well rounded cultural picture of Finland's early periods. Unfortunately, the translator has no archaeological knowledge so the text in places becomes incomprehensible to anyone not very familiar with North European archaeology. This work, which anyone can enjoy, is a must for all scholars, be they art historians or archaeologists."

Choice 5:336 My '68 200w

"Admirably clear introduction . . . [and] superb photographs. . . . Much of the information about prehistoric and early Finland is naturally conjectural, but it is interesting to note the early influence of Western civilization on Finnish culture and development. More than 150 photographs of buttons, buckles, ornaments, weapons, and stoneware are beautifully presented and show a wide range of design and technique. . . . The notes on the plates give such facts as can be proved, and suggest possibilities about the derivation of design in some cases. It is too bad that there is no short title on each plate. It is not easy to know whether the plate shows several buttons, buckles, or what, since the identification and actual size are given only in the notes. However, because of its coverage of Finnish materials and its marvelous photographs, this book is highly recommended for art collections and larger libraries." Julia Sabine

Library J 92:4494 D 15 '67 170w

RADANO, GENE. Walking the beat; a New York policeman tells what it's like on his side of the law. 192p $4.95 World pub.

363.2 Police. New York (City)—Police 68-13709

Written by a man who was a New York City policeman for twenty years, this book describes "police life in a big city. Through the eyes of Paul, a rookie policeman (the names are changed, but all the incidents described actually happened), we learn of the fears and anxieties, ideals and disillusionments, pressures and satisfactions that constitute the job of the policeman. . . . In this book,

RADANO, GENE—Continued

Mr. Radano traces Paul's early police career, from his initial job dedication up to the point where he has 'adjusted' enough to accept ■ small bribe." (Publisher's note)

Reviewed by W. L. Lucey
America 118:612 My 4 '68 60w
Best Sell 28:58 My 1 '68 120w

"Retired policeman G. Radano . . . writes with a sensitivity remarkably intact after 20 years with the New York City Police Department. In a slim plainly written book, Radano illustrates through his central character the extraordinary dehumanization process through which conscientious, bright young police candidates become . . . sour, brutalized, cynical, corrupt and insular. . . . [The] chapter entitled 'Locker-room Talk' will be a revelation to those who are unfamiliar with police society. Snatches of dialogue capture their racial and sexual prejudices. . . . And their ethnic clannishness." Nicholas Pileggi
Book World p5 Je 23 '68 200w

"[The author] contributes nothing to the systematic body of knowledge required to gain insights into crime, urban problems, violence, poverty, or police activity. Infinitely more satisfactory for all college level libraries is [J.] Skolnick's Justice without Trial: Law Enforcement in Democratic Society [BRD 1966]. . . . [Radano's book is] episodic in nature and conversational in style; no systematic record is developed. Easy reading but a disservice to law enforcement officers and the complexity of the law enforcement problem." Choice 5:1054 O '68 130w

"In a series of short sketches and random snatches of locker-room talk Mr Radano gives a startling picture of the fantastic tasks ■ patrolman is called upon to perform, many of which demand wisdom and courage. But his main concern is to tell of a highly vulnerable police force, where men are exposed 'to many forms of almost irresistible temptation' to which too many succumb and where venality pervades higher ranks. . . . Radano cynically defends the situation. All men, he contends, gradually adjust their morality to fit their circumstances. 'A cop . . . adjusts too, but at a much more rapid rate. The only real difference . . . is their rate of adjustment to the realities of life.' An alarming book for thoughtful citizens." R. W. Henderson
Library J 93:1157 Mr 15 '68 190w

"[Told] without ghostly assistance, for the author has won two Wagner College playwriting contests and has had a play produced off Broadway." Sergeant Cuff
Sat ■ 51:33 My 25 '68 50w

RADDALL, THOMAS H. Footsteps on old floors; true tales of mystery. 239p il $4.95 Doubleday

68-11785

These six stories all "have some connection with Nova Scotia. Of these 'true tales of mystery' three are sea stories: a battle between a French and British ship; three murders at sea; a ship abandoned at sea. The others feature a self-styled Indian who hoaxed tourists; an Indian who discovered gold and kept the discovery secret; and a rich madame." (Best Sell)

Best Sell 28:11 Ap 1 '68 70w

"Particularly interesting is the study in depth of the Mary Celeste, her bulding on the Bay of Fundy, and her disastrous career after she was discovered empty. . . . More spell binding, and more varied than the usual such collection." M. K. Grant
Library J 93:574 F 1 '68 60w

"Mr. Raddall is a Nova Scotian novelist and journalist. . . . He is wonderfully vivid on the details of small-time shipbuilding. Quite on a par with the fine Mary C. essay are a powerful account of the classic murders on the Herbert Fuller. . . . What matters is that Raddall knows how to do intensive research and how to make the results palatable, how to write a book of marked appeal to an unlimited public. I hope he has further curious cases in his notebook." Anthony Boucher
N Y Times Bk R p34 F 25 '68 260w

Reviewed by Sergeant Cuff
Sat ■ 51:50 Ap 27 '68 30w

RAE, DOUGLAS W. The political consequences of electoral laws. 173p il $5 Yale univ. press

324 Elections. Political parties 67-24511

A "study of the influence of electoral laws on party politics in 121 general elections between 1945 and 1965 in 20 countries." (New Statesman) Bibliography.

"Rae's study is distinguished by its careful empiricism, its comparative focus, and its lack of theoretical pretension. . . . Those who are interested in political engineering may find some results uncomfortable for they imply the impossibility of simultaneously realizing certain goals. Three classes of scholars, however, must own this book—those who concern themselves with politics in Western liberal democracies, those who specialize in political parties, and those who focus on elections and electoral politics." John Sprague

Am Pol Sci R 62:606 Je '68 950w

"A meticulously argued and utterly convincing discussion of the old 'single-member districts lead to two-party systems' folklore which demonstrates from a wide range of data that the methods by which legislatures are elected influence their partisan composition. . . . Rae is a Yale political scientist, and clearly a most promising one. Fully annotated and indexed."

Choice 5:556 Je '68 70w

Reviewed by Asa Briggs
New Statesman 75:487 Ap 12 '68 440w

RAE, THOMAS I. The administration of the Scottish frontier, 1513-1603. (Edinburgh. Univ. Publication; hist, philosophy and economics) 249p il pl $8.50 Aldine pub.

354.41 Scotland—Politics and government.
Great Britain—Politics and government—
Tudors, 1485-1603 [625-22503]

"The book is divided into two parts. In the first and much larger section, Rae, after describing the geography of the Scottish border and its economic and social structure. . . . [gives an] account of border officials, particularly the wardens: who they were; their duties; their relations with the central government and with the men, usually great lords or privy councilors, who were occasionally sent from Edinburgh to supersede them. In the second section he . . . describes the functioning of border administration at selected periods." (Am Hist R)

"Administrative history is popular now, and Dr. Rae, following the fashion, has filled a gap in Scottish historiography with this well-written monograph. . . . Every chapter is meticulously documented; Rae has a thorough command of the sources and interprets them most perceptively. Several important conclusions emerge from this study . . . [which] deserves a wider readership than it is apt to get. It is of interest not only to Scottish specialists and Tudor historians, but also to all students of the relations between central authority and local officialdom, a timeless problem that is perhaps the most important issue of all administrative history." Maurice Lee

Am Hist R 72:967 Ap '67 360w

"Dr. Rae modifies somewhat the account of an unaltered Scottish machinery standing opposite a more 'developed' English government. By the end of the century, he says, 'the centralization of Scottish border administration had advanced to a significant extent; . . . The king-pin of the system was the lay central official'. This may well be so; but the picture remains somewhat blurred. . . . A more detailed analysis is needed of the social links of kinship, allegiance and patronage. . . . But to ask for more is to pay tribute to Dr. Rae's book: he has mapped the institutional territory with precise scholarship and he has pointed the way to further investigations." Penry Williams

Engl Hist R 83:392 Ap '68 490w

RAEFF, MARC. The Decembrist movement. 180p $4.95; pa $2.95 Prentice-Hall

947 Russia—History 66-11188

The factors "that contributed to the December rebellion against Nicholas I's ascendance to the throne are examined. The author's thesis is "that the Decembrist movement represented an early 19th-century Russian attempt to produce a synthesis between 'the political traditions of the eighteenth century and the historicist and nationalist ideas of the early nineteenth." (Choice) Annotated bibliography.

"[Raeff's thesis] is based upon thorough knowledge of the intellectual movements of the period. The source materials included in this anthology not only support his thesis but reveal the reasons for the intellectual ferment in Russia during the reign of Alexander I. The author's introduction is illuminating, although there is a seeming inconsistency in his brief descriptions of the Decembrist leader, Pestel. Furthermore, although he did provide a summary of the events of December 14, 1825, he failed to include in the anthology a fuller, more dramatic description. The anthology can easily be converted into a study unit for an undergraduate course in Russian history. The translations of source materials are readable and usefully annotated."

Choice 3:707 O '66 140w

Reviewed by Lionel Kochan

Engl Hist R 82:847 O '67 80w

RAHILL, FRANK. The world of melodrama. 334p $7.50 Pa. state univ. press

809.2 Drama—History and criticism 66-25466

This work "follows the development of melodrama in France, England, and the U.S. Rahill recreates characteristic plots and climactic moments from this essentially 19th-century genre and documents the development of its stock characters and situations. Specific authors such as Pixérécourt and Boucicault are dealt with . . . as individuals and as representatives of their theatrical environments . . . [and] attention is given to the role of plagiarism in the history of melodrama." (Choice) Bibliographical notes on plays. Bibliography. Index.

"This valuable addition to a drama collection provides rare appreciation of plays as performances and of theater as a social institution. [It is] well written and fully documented. . . . Rahill presents his material interestingly without either condescension or grandiose claims."

Choice 4:1402 F '68 110w

"Regrettably, Mr. Rahill gives too much space to retelling the plots of countless melodramas and not enough to the rich details of the social milieu and the theater people of the times. When he does involve himself in such matters, as in his description of Belasco or the American Wild West drama, his writing suddenly sparks with life. Despite my disappointment at his dry, academic treatment, I would still include this book in all college theater collections." Henry Halpern

Library J 92:4520 D 15 '67 210w

RAHNER, KARL. Belief today; with a pref. by Hans Küng. (Theological meditations) 128p $3.50 Sheed

248.4 Christian life. Faith 67-21908

"The three chapters of the book represent translations of as many articles separately published earlier in German. The first treats of 'Everyday Things'—of work, of laughter, of eating, of sleep. . . . [The second chapter] speaks of 'Faith Today.' . . . Writing originally for an audience of priests, Rahner here stresses the fraternal aspect of faith. . . . The final chapter, 'Intellectual Integrity and Christian Faith,' addresses itself to . . . [the question]: how can the scientifically orientated man be true to himself and yet believe in the Christian revelation?" (America)

"During his recent three-week lecture visit to this country, Fr. Karl Rahner impressed many of his hearers more, perhaps, by his deep humanity and concern for the concrete problems of Christian life than by his recognized theological competence. It is such an impression, probably, that many readers will carry away from the present volume. . . . The considerations [of the first chapter] are brief and meaningful. Nothing world-stirring, but it is rewarding reading just the same. A deep honesty born of an awareness of what the present-day Christian is experiencing is reflected on every page of the second and third chapters. . . . Though no reader will find that all his questions have been treated, and though some would prefer to see other aspects highlighted, most will agree that what Rahner has to say reflects the mind of an intelligent, modern, deeply committed believer." D. J. Murphy

America 118:199 F 10 '68 340w

"One of the most prominent Catholic theologians writes in a very readable style. . . . The book will be of most value to the informed layman." Richard Walz

Library J 92:3426 O 1 '67 100w

RAHNER, KARL. Everyday faith [tr. by W. J. O'Hara]. 217p $4.95 Herder & Herder

242 Meditations 68-6375

A collection of thirty meditations by the author of The Church After the Council (BRD 1966). Bibliography. Originally published in 1966, entitled Glaube, der die Erde Liebt.

"This book presents quite varied articles: simple yet profound meditations on Advent, Christmas, a new year, time and eternity; more didactic discourses on pagan Christians, marriage, the laity's responsibility to make the practical prescriptions in Christian life . . . and direct prayers. Especially in the more meditative essays, one finds the deep sincerity of trust and love and searching that have inspired Rahner's more technical theological studies. . . . [He] has a knack for giving a strange yet simple twist to the familiar, opening a new depth to thought." Kenneth Becker

America 119:494 N 16 '68 260w

"Written in a popular style yet without appreciable diminution of theological substance, these meditations by Fr. Rahner speak meaningfully to Catholic and non-Catholic alike."

Christian Century 85:1109 S 4 '68 30w

"The exploitation of European theologians will end one day, but obviously not until every ancient piece by anyone of any fame has been dug up and palmed off as something new and interesting. . . . Only four [of the meditations] are previously unpublished, and one actually dates from 1939. Even Karl Rahner's mother, bless her soul, would find the collection dated and uninspiring."

Critic 27:102 O '68 70w

RAHNER, KARL. Theological investigations; v3. The theology of the spiritual life; tr. by Karl-H. and Boniface Kruger. 409p $8.50 Helicon press

230.2 Catholic Church—Doctrinal and controversial works (61-8189)

This third volume "completes the set of five which have been translated into English. It contains 25 essays. . . . Christian perfection, renunciation, asceticism, priesthood, and devotion to the Sacred Heart are some of the topics considered." (Choice) For volumes four and five see BRD 1967.

"Each essay offers fresh insights and new relationships of ideas reminding the reader of the coherence of revelation. . . . This work can best be appreciated by one who has some background in Catholic theology, and so by students with advanced standing. It lives up to the high standards of original and creative theology set by the other . . . volumes."

Choice 5:1150 N '68 140w

"This collection of studies on the spiritual life are perfectly consistent with Rahner's previous work. He brings the same sure insights and resounding conclusions after leading us painstakingly through the groundwork of his selected subject. . . . There are large sections of his book which will be welcomed both by nuns and by their confereñciers; a useful chapter on good intention where Freud and some common sense are well-married. Jesuits will turn with interest to [Rahner's] treatment of the Sacred Heart and Ignatian mysticism. In all, the book is something of a Christmas stocking, and probably Rahner at his most readable."

TLS p1018 O 26 '67 430w

RAINE, KATHLEEN. Defending ancient springs. 198p $6.50 Oxford

821 English poetry—History and criticism 67-112238

A poet describes her philosophy of poetry the sources of which, "as she states in this study, lie in the symbolism stemming from Indian thought, Platonism, and Christianity. She rejects the poetry which reflects today's positivist philosophy. The real world is the world of the myth and the symbol. . . . She discusses the work of Edwin Muir, Vernon Watkins, David Gascoyne, William Butler Yeats, William Blake, Coleridge, Shelley, and St. John Perse." (Library J) Index. Some of these essays have previously appeared in such periodicals as The Dublin Magazine, Encounter and the Sewanee Review.

RAINE, KATHLEEN—Continued

"Here is a collection of lectures and articles upholding Miss Raine's view that poets are mediators between the worlds of eternity and time. Her title borrowed from a poem by Vernon Watkins, is apt, for the whole book is a defence of poetry, and the metaphor is crystal clear. . . . The essays all reflect Kathleen Raine's entire dedication to the pursuit of wisdom through the study and practice of poetry. The articles most directly epitomising her beliefs and explaining her literary preferences are those 'On the Symbol' and 'On the Mythological.' . . . The book is strongly personal, with a good many autobiographical asides. . . . [Miss Raine] explains quite clearly on what grounds she rejects most of the current assumptions about life and literature; though at times she disdains argument. . . . She deserves to be listened to."

Economist 225:viii D 2 '67 450w

"Kathleen Raine is a poet's poet. . . . In the ten beautifully written essays contained here, . . . [she discusses] some of the poets who engage in 'symbolic discourse, the only language we have in which to express not merely the appearances but the content, the quality of experience.' She says, 'We can learn about beauty only from beauty.' Her book is recommended for public, college, and university libraries. Now is the time to check your shelves for the work of Muir, Watkins, Gascoyne, and St. John Perse." Jerome Cushman

Library J 93:1899 My 1 '68 250w

"Again and again we are made aware that [the author] is rebelling against the Cambridge of her undergraduate days. If this had resulted in the articulate appraisal of the writers she admires, or in a sharp critique of the ideas she rejects, this could have been a worthwhile book. . . . For the most part however, the affirmations are assertive and sentimental rather than persuasively argued. . . . What makes the book more depressing is that [Miss Raine] takes so much courage from her impression that she is almost alone. Anybody who has read any of the criticism of the last two decades knows that it just isn't true that the importance of myth, symbol and the realm of 'ideas' has been ignored." John Goode

New Statesman 75:144 F 2 '68 420w

TLS p717 J1 11 '68 4300w

Va Q R 44:cliii autumn '68 150w

RAINE, RICHARD. The Corder index [Eng title: A wreath for America]. 216p $4.75 Harcourt

67-20316

"David Martini, an English investigator, is asked to find his old friend, Dick Raine, a writer of thrillers [and who has in his possession The Corder Index, a file containing the industrial espionage system of the GILA Corporation. Martini's] . . . search begins with the GILA Corporation in Hamburg, its American president Eisenbach, and its world wide tentacles. Fortunately, he also meets Nordenain, a Swedish millionaire, who can also muster valuable forces in the rescue operation." (Library J)

Best Sell 27:339 N 15 '67 60w

Reviewed by M. K. Grant

Library J 92:3450 O 1 '67 80w

"[The novel contains] an exciting midwinter chase through northern Germany and Denmark. Compact and well told." Anne Kincaid.

Library J 92:4636 D 15 '67 70w [YA]

"The presumably pseudonymous Richard Raine makes a good debut with [this book]. . . . The over-all plot is fairly obvious and lacking in twists; but the action and the color (of Schleswig-Holstein, Denmark, and other Baltic regions) are entrancingly vivid." Anthony Boucher

N Y Times Bk ■ p56 D 10 '67 50w

"In a thriller whose quality recalls Gavin Lyall's, and not only for its unusual setting on the Danish-German border. Mr. Raine writes thrilling sophisticated suspense on one of the very latest of line-ups in fictional enmities—Industrial America versus Europe."

TLS p317 Ap 13 '67 30w

RAINE, RICHARD. Night of the hawk. 212p $4.75 Harcourt

68-12595

David Martini, whose first adventure "was narrated in the Corder Index [BRD 1968] . . .

is retained by a Swiss banker-diplomat to deal with a matter that could easily compromise Swiss neutrality. Martini's task is to find and negotiate with a brilliant, but neurotic photographer, Rolf Sterne, who has highly sensitive evidence in hand. But Sterne is definitely missing. . . . Martini's adventures range from the heart of Europe to North Africa." (Publisher's note)

"A brilliant suspense novel of a conspiracy involving Switzerland, America and the Near East, with the possibility of a third world war. The British investigator, David Martini, is more than equal to the occasion with his acute analytic mind and more than usual share of good luck. Yet the book suffers, as do many suspense stories these days, by the utterly pagan outlook of the author in his disregard of the worth of human life and any moral restriction in the sexual sphere."

Best Sell 28:34 Ap 15 '68 70w

Reviewed by M. K. Grant

Library J 93:1022 Mr 1 '68 60w

"You are taken on the grand tour of Switzerland (a larger country than you thought, perhaps) in this highly satisfactory teaming-up of British and American intelligencers. Field of action also takes in North Africa." Sergeant Cuff

Sat R 51:50 Ap 27 '68 30w

TLS p512 My 16 '68 60w

RAINES, ROBERT A. The secular congregation. 144p $3.95 Harper

260 Church and social problems. Church renewal 68-17584

"Raines, a Methodist clergyman, has written a study of the tension existing in today's church between what he calls the 'pietist' and the 'secular.' Can a Christian be a 'pietist' and a 'secularist' at the same time? Mr. Raines believes he can and that, indeed, he must. Drawing upon his own pastoral experience as minister of the First Methodist Church in Germantown, Pennsylvania, he stresses the necessity and implementation of what he calls 'secular' evangelism, covenant, and prayer." (Library J) Scripture index.

"Here is a book attempting to show how churches can explore the expanding frontiers of ministries. . . . [it] will interest any Christian seeking a meaningful form of life. The lively descriptions of various projects—First Methodist, Covenant House, Wellsprings Ecumenical Center, The Glass Door, the Mental Health Mission Group—encourage us on our way, to seek to serve and live creatively, experimentally, even daringly in the particular and peculiar situation in which we are located. It is not a 'how-to-do-it' book [although it] may yield some guidelines and some pointers for comparable situations." David Kirk

Commonweal 89:228 N 8 '68 100w

"Those who have appreciated [Mr. Raines'] earlier books, Reshaping the Christian Life and New Life in the Church, will profit from this book. . . . Of particular value for theological collections." W. S. Sparks

Library J 93:1635 Ap 15 '68 180w

RAJ, JAGDISH. The mutiny and British land policy in North India, 1856-1868. 191p $5.25 Asia pub.

333 Land tenure. Oudh SA66-5142

"The author has directed his attention to the nature and variation of land policy in North India at the crucial period of the Indian Mutiny. The period considered spans the terms of office of Dalhousie, who favoured for Oudh the yeoman pattern of the Punjab, of Canning who after Mutiny felt compelled to seek allies in the taluqdars, and of Elgin and Lawrence who tried to shift the emphasis once again." (Publisher's note) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"[This book] traces the evolution of British policy in Oudh [from its annexation] to the final resolution of the land question. . . . Despite the title, scant attention is paid to other areas, for some years after the upheaval of 1857 Oudh was, however, the center of an intense official controversy over land policy, which culminated in the restoration of the talukdari or landlord system of landholding. The province is therefore worthy of study on its own terms. Unfortunately . . . there is little that is new in this book. . . . Much of [it] is little more than extended summaries of the letters that passed between Lucknow, Calcutta, and London. . . . Raj's account is nevertheless of value to the student of Indian history for it provides a clear and connected narrative, and much useful detail, on a subject of immense importance. His masterful summary of the 1865 investigation of tenant right is itself sufficient to justify the existence of the work." T. R. Metcalf

Am Hist R 73:572 D '67 240w

"An authoritative and thoroughly researched work by a competent scholar in the field of Indian history who now serves the government of India in its Ministry of Education, this book breaks new ground and can be considered a contribution to the field. Following a generous and thoughtful foreword by C. H. Philips, Director of London University's School of Oriental and African Studies, there are seven carefully written and well documented chapters. . . . Any library wishing to keep up with scholarship of South Asia, including most college libraries, should plan adding this volume."

Choice 4:1303 Ja '68 110w

RAKOSI, CARL. Amulet. 88p $4.50; pa $1.50
New directions

811

67-23490

This is the author's second collection of poetry. It contains "many poems, though often in revised form, from his first book [Selected Poems, BRD 1942]." (N Y Times Bk R)

"[After] 25 years, Carl Rakosi has begun writing poems again. . . . [He] had been a well-thought of member of the Objectivist Group. . . . The positive effect of Rakosi's social concerns are direct and evident. . . . [This] is a tremendously engaged poetry, humane, attentive to the ordinary . . . but scarcely ever committing the usual objectivist sin of mere attitude. . . . The faults in the lesser and generally earlier poems are obvious. . . . But this is quibbling. . . . There are at least a dozen poems here that should be consistently anthologized or given any other small portion of immortality. . . . There are a number of delights in Rakosi's work, not the least the use of words which often betray a purely esthetic intoxication. . . . Rakosi begs our attention with these fine poems . . . and should be read and saluted by those who care for the life of the poem." Jim Harrison

N Y Times Bk ■ p10 Ja 28 '68 600w

"Rakosi's chief strength is the constant surgical purposefulness in the management of his line. . . . But the surprises of the line-to-line ingenuity are not enough to sustain the structure. In the best poems, imagistic adventurousness—alluring to the ear and eye—saves the arbitrary framework. . . . In most poems the enticing sequence of images is interrupted by . . . the voice skipping from imagism to clever fancifulness. Usually, the formal observation and wry extraneous remarks don't mix well. . . . [The] contents are reduced to inert components of an overtentative line movement. Due to this . . . a single aspect of style—the line-weave—dominates all other quantities in the poems. This disturbing mannerism often leaves the feeling as though I'm reading the same poem over and over . . . despite a resourceful variety of subjects." Lawrence Liberman

Poetry 112:340 Ag '68 300w

RALSTON, DAVID B. The army of the Republic; the place of the military in the political evolution of France, 1871-1914. 395p $12.50
Mass. inst. of technology

944.081 France—Politics and government—1799-1914. France. Army 67-16494

"With the emergence of the Third Republic in the 1870's, France found herself confronted by . . . the coexistence of a republican regime, increasingly democratic in form and spirit, and . . . large standing army, led by a caste of professional officers. . . . The present work seeks to examine, and possibly to explain, how the French army and the Third Republic managed to reach an effective and workable understanding." (Introd) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by Geoffrey Bruun
Am Hist ■ 73:1542 Je '68 360w

"Although his style needs a dash of verve and drama, Ralston writes clearly. . . . That economics, foreign affairs, and colonies are too peripheral is at once a disappointment and an indication of Ralston's steady focus on the army in the politics of the Third Republic. In this book, army often means the officer corps, and sometimes the army is almost an abstraction rather than a living group of men. Although his sympathies are largely with the army, he does write with restraint and balance. . . . This book should be the first volume of a trilogy. The second volume should trace the relations of the army and the Republic during World War I until the disaster of 1940: the last should narrate the rise of conditional obedience, the wars in Indo-China and Algeria, and the de Gaulle revolution and regime." This is history that our society needs." Garland Downum

Ann Am Acad 376:160 Mr '68 600w

"The outgrowth of a recent Columbia doctoral dissertation, this is a broad and lucid survey of the French army. . . . The subtitle is slightly misleading: rather than a study of the place of the army in the political evolution of the Third Republic, it deals primarily with army organization and the relation of the military to the politicians. . . . While Ralston may underestimate the strength of conservative beliefs and ideological currents among the military, he does demonstrate how the army was built into an effective fighting organization by 1914. There is no comparable study in English. . . . Suitable for any audience."

Choice 4:1039 N '67 300w

RAMM, AGATHA. Germany, 1789-1919; a political history. 517p maps $13.50 Barnes & Noble

320.943 Germany—Politics and government

67-111047

A political history presented in narrative form. Bibliography.

"Ramm (Oxford) has presented a long and heavily detailed account of 19th-century German political history. The narrative of governmental, parliamentary, and diplomatic affairs is occasionally broken for analyses of constitutional structure and political thought. She has wisely chosen to treat the other German states with the same scholarly care she has devoted to Prussia. And she must be applauded for avoiding the temptation to see 19th-century Germany as a lengthy prologue to Nazism. Though some specialists may feel her work to be insufficiently comprehensive at one point or another, there is no doubt that she has written a solid and judicious survey of the field. . . . Recommended."

Choice 5:548 Je '68 140w

Economist 226:51 Ja 13 '68 300w

"In contrast to most of her competitors Miss Ramm refrains from expressing strong opinions and sticks to the facts. On these, she proves a reliable guide—more reliable indeed than her predecessors—and full weight is given not only to events in Prussia and to the Prussian solution of the German problem, but also to the Habsburg monarchy and to the 'third Germany', the south German states and Saxony. . . . There are occasional lapses . . . which may be due to faulty proof reading. In her attempt to avoid controversial issues Miss Ramm goes still further. Although she mentions the growth of anti-semitism and 'the success of the Jew in learning, literature, music and above all business', there is no proper discussion of the subject." F. L. Carsten

New Statesman 74:849 D 15 '67 750w

Reviewed by Geoffrey Barraclough

N Y Rev of Books 11:14 O 24 '68 1000w

"[The author's] judgments on men and events are sound. . . . Her bibliography will be of great service to students and shows that she has read widely yet selectively in the dauntingly vast literature of her subject. For the first two chapters, in which she brilliantly depicts the state of Germany in 1789 and then describes the impact upon Germany of the French Revolution, Miss Ramm has used the archives in Stuttgart, Munich, Darmstadt and Karlsruhe. . . . Her narrative skill united to a clear and vigorous style impels the reader onwards from the first to the last page of a long book. Miss Ramm has also an exceptional power of exposition by which she makes abstruse subjects effortlessly understandable, as in [the chapters in which] she summarizes and expounds the political theories of Kant, Hegel, Novalis, Treitschke, Karl Marx and other German philosophers and publicists to make clear their individual influence upon German political development."

RAMM, AGATHA—Continued

TLS p291 Mr 21 '68 600w

RAMUNDO, BERNARD A. Peaceful coexistence; international law in the building of communism. 262p $6.95 Johns Hopkins press

341 International law. Russia—Foreign relations 67-12421

The purpose of this study is "to determine the manner in which the Soviets utilize international law to support policy objectives, and to decide whether, and to what degree, the Soviet approach to international law differs from that of other countries. . . . In Part I, Dr. Ramundo focuses on the impact of the new law of peaceful coexistence upon traditional concepts of international law, and attempts to identify the 'socialist content' ascribed by Soviet jurists to international law in the interests of the foreign policy objectives of the Soviet Union. In Part II he illustrates how the principles of peaceful coexistence are used to support specific Soviet policies on peace and war, colonialism, arms control, collective security, and so forth." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"[This volume] is a scholarly and richly documented study of the current Soviet interpretation of international law. . . . All the aspects of Soviet doctrine are carefully analyzed. . . . Perhaps one of the author's main contributions is his analysis of the Soviet concept of a sort of 'natural law.' . . . Ramundo has offered to lawyers and political scientists, interested in the Soviet ways of thinking, a valuable reference book." W. W. Kulski

Am Pol Sci R 62:312 Mr '68 360w

Reviewed by J. B. Whitton

Ann Am Acad 337:168 My '68 500w

"Mr. Ramundo does prove that the Soviets use international law to support their foreign policy objectives. He also promises in his introduction to show whether the Soviets use law differently from other nations; he does not fulfill this promise. The extravagant footnotes and quotations and the jargon of political science make this dissertation-turned-book laborious to read. . . . For research collections on Soviet politics and law." P. E. Leinbach

Library J 92:1941 My 15 '67 220w

RAMUZ, CHARLES F. Terror on the mountain; tr. from the French by Milton Stansbury. 151p $4.50 Harcourt

68-12597

Set in Switzerland, the story "proceeds from the fateful decision of villagers to send their herds and a few men to an upland pasture below a mountain endowed by folk imagination with mystery and thus unused for years. The gradual drift of herdsmen and the populace below into terror and death provides the dramatic tension. . . . Within this context Mr. Ramuz unfolds a tale of the blighted young lovers, Joseph and Victorine." (Library J) Originally published in France under the title La Grande Peur dans la Montagne.

Best Sell 27:425 F 1 '68 300w

Reviewed by Jane Manthorne

Horn Bk 44:342 Je '68 150w

"Although [Ramuz] ultimately offers rational causes for all events, their very totality gives to nature an awesome and pervasive spirit of its own. A story commendably translated [it] is recommended for public and academic collections." J. R. Willingham

Library J 93:210 Ja 15 '68 200w

"The end of the book is positively Jacobean in its dispatching of the characters—Jacobean, and theatrical. A crisp book, but not a penetrating one." Christopher Rick

N Y Rev of Books 10:32 Ap 11 '68 850w

"Ramuz is the greatest interpreter of the mountain in modern letters. He does not describe, as a more pictorial prose writer might do, the colors of the dawn on the glaciers. Fear is the key word of his stories. . . . The translator, . . . an expert on modern French fiction, has accurately and artistically rendered the manner of writing of Ramuz. That style aroused much controversy in France, on account of repetitions, an almost too conspicuous simplicity, its selection of weighty, earthly concrete words. Ramuz often seems closer to painters than writers of harmonious, musical prose. . . . [He] is no regionalist author. As in Faulkner and many another novelist, the most local and particular prove to be also the most broadly universal. [This] is a concentrated tragedy of instinct and passion, overflowing with pity and terror, free from tricks or supernatural interventions. It recalls the great Hellenic dramas. Yet the flavor of the style and the stark spirit animating it are Biblical rather than Greek." Henri Peyre

N Y Times Bk R p4 F 4 '68 2000w

RAND, ABBY. A ski guide to Europe; the fabulous forty. 464p il $10 Award house; for sale by Crown

914 Europe—Description and travel—Guide books. Skis and skiing 68-1299

The "travel editor of Ski magazine has compiled a list of 40 European ski resorts [which she considers] most likely to appeal to Americans. These include 13 Austrian, 9 French, 1 German, 4 Italian and 13 Swiss resorts. . . . For each area she discusses geographical features, ski terrain, after-ski life, hotels, restaurants, shops and services, and tells how to get there. She also includes introductory material on planning the trip, how to shop and pack, and European skiing customs." (Library J)

"Miss Rand's candor is refreshing. In St. Anton, 'a bathtub salesman would do well,' and the best way to get from Val d'Isère to Kitzbühel is 'to go home and come back next year.' French resorts get their comeuppance ('A shocking $3 drink in a discothèque'). But on the whole, Miss Rand is charitable and warm-hearted." C. W. Casewit

Book World p12 Ja 7 '68 200w

"[The author's] lively account of what to expect and what to avoid makes good reading even for stay-at-homes. Although the resorts she lists are the luxurious ones like St. Moritz, Chamonix, and Kitzbühel, Miss Rand gives information with an eye for the best bargains, and for having fun. . . . Black-and-white photographs add to the attractiveness of the book." Barbara Pfrogner

Library J 93:1897 My 1 '68 140w

RAND, AUSTIN L. Ornithology; an introduction. 311p il $8.50 Norton

593 Birds

67-12448

This "survey of the biology of birds emphasizes the evolutionary aspects that have given birds their dominant place in nature; . . . it relates birds to their environment, their ancestors, and to each other. Dr. Rand [discusses] . . . flight and bipedal locomotion, . . . color and vision, feathers, . . . voice and display, and . . . instinctive behavior." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Rand, curator of zoology at the Chicago Natural History Museum, has written this introduction to avian biology for the lay reader. . . . Although he is straightforward and understandable, his book is a monotonous recital of facts unalleviated by personal touches or efforts at literary style. A more serious question is that of the book's currency. Internal evidence, such as the date of the preface and the publication dates of books cited in the bibliography, indicates that the text was completed in 1964. . . . However, there are no serious inaccuracies. A useful but not essential book, it is recommended for larger public libraries." P. B. Cors

Library J 92:4013 N 1 '67 130w

"The book is written for the nonspecialist, but is not written down to him, with the result that the technical ornithologist will also find it interesting and rewarding to read. . . . [The illustrations] are all black-and-white drawings with no attempt at a high degree of finish, but they are effective as visualizations of points made in the text. [The book closes with] useful appendices containing information on such topics as classification and field-study techniques . . . and the scientific names of all birds mentioned in the text." Herbert Friedmann

Science 159:617 F 9 '68 350w

RAND, CHRISTOPHER. The changing landscape; Salisbury, Connecticut. 192p $5 Oxford

917.46 Salisbury, Connecticut 68-17619

"These essays have been written over a long period, from 1952 to 1966, and I have altered them very little here. Thus a few of the situations described are out of date. . . . I [have not] tried to show consistency in my own attitude throughout. In 1952 I was almost offended by the changes in Salisbury, but by 1966 I had come to see change itself as an enduring, reliable quality in the town. . . . Finally, the essays sometimes overlap: a change in some aspect of the landscape is noted slightly in an early essay, then explored at more length in a later one." (Author's note) All the material in this book appeared originally in The New Yorker in somewhat different form.

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams
Atlantic 221:114 My '68 50w

"[These essays] are not properly integrated. . . . But there is something about [Mr. Rand's] low-key, conversational tone, his delight in his subject, . . . his calm certainty that we will find it equally enthralling . . . that should make 'The Changing Landscape' fascinating even to lifelong country-dwellers who rarely approve books about themselves." Pamela Marsh
Christian Science Monitor p13 Ap 4 '68 750w

Reviewed by R. C. Hilton
Library J 93:2238 Je 1 '68 180w

"I think [this] is the best book I have yet read about a rural community trying to maintain its own integrity and keep from being overwhelmed by what the author frankly calls the Welfare State. . . . The early [essays] are strongly nostalgic. . . . The next three chapters are about how the birds and animals have fared since farming declined, and about the woodland and the iron industry that once flourished here. . . . The final two chapters of the book, written in 1964 and 1966, deal with the town today. . . . In the final chapter [Mr. Rand] explores the whole process of hatching fish . . . and at the end one sees that he has been discussing manipulation of environment all the while, for the fish in this chapter, for people throughout the book." Hal Borland
N Y Times BK R p8 Mr 24 '68 950w

RANDALL, RICHARD E. Squash racquets. See Khan, H.

RANDALL, RICHARD S. Censorship of the movies: the social and political control of a mass medium. 280p $7.95 Univ of Wis. press
791.43 Moving pictures—Censorship 68-14035

The author, "a former newspaper reporter and editor and now assistant professor of political science, University of Nebraska, presents . . . [a study] of film censorship in the United States. . . . [He] treats all forms of censorship, legal and extralegal, past and present. He also . . . scrutinizes court decisions, the activities of state and local censorship boards, customs officials, and private groups (notably the Catholic Office for Motion Pictures), and such attempts at self-regulation as the Motion Picture Code." (Library J)

"A detailed and scholarly study. . . . [The author's] point of view is avowedly libertarian but here he deals not with the justness or evil of censorship but rather with its historical development and machinery. . . . The book is full of statistics, legal references and illustrative examples. It is often quite technical. Academic, law, and large public libraries will want to acquire this well researched, heavily documented work." J W. Palmer
Library J 93:2895 Ag '68 150w

"[This] is not very lively reading, but then Mr. Randall would no doubt disclaim any intention to be merely entertaining. The only mystery is why anyone thought another book on this subject to be worth writing or publishing. It has been adequately, nay exhaustively done several times recently, most notably in . . . I. H. Carman's Movies, Censorship and the Law [BRD 1966] and Murray Schumach's The Face on the Cutting Room Floor [BRD 1964]. . . . [Randall's] book, for all his first hand investigation, comes up with virtually nothing that one or all of the other books has not already told us."

TLS p1080 S 26 '68 220w

RANDELL, ARTHUR R. Sixty years a Fenman; ed. by Enid Porter. 126p pl $5 Folklore associates

B or 92 Fens, England' [66-71910]
Memoirs of a native of the Fen district of England. The author's "father was a professional molecatcher and stack-dresser—i.e., one who put poison into haystacks to kill rats and mice. He would also, when required, convey prisoners, tramps and beggars in his pony and trap to Terrington police station. . . . [The author] gives a chapter to superstitions, one to ghost stories, and one to . . . rural remedies." (TLS)

"It is practically impossible to compare this volume with others in the field. It is a delightful autobiography by a very simple, fundamental human being who has spent all of his life in the Fen district of England. He includes a wealth of personal information and many amusing anecdotes of the happenings in the area. The folklorist will be especially intrigued by this book, for Randell makes mention of many folkways and beliefs, with considerable attention given to folk remedies of all kinds. . . . The ghost and witch accounts and the stories of rabbit and mole hunting, are especially interesting to the general reader."

Choice 4:1383 F '68 140w

"[Randell's] memories of the first fourteen years of this century evoke the crunch and tang of life in what is surely the strangest landscape in England. . . . Fifty years ago this was a district so isolated that many of its inhabitants had never been more than five miles from home. . . . Mr. Randell's pages are populated by men of now almost forgotten occupations—plover catchers, tinkers, scissor grinders, umbrella men, navvies (or dyke-diggers) and clayers (who spread the clay from the dykes across the fields). They also display a lively gallery of country characters. . . . His memories are neither folksy nor heavily nostalgic, for he is a practical man who has worked for forty-three years as signalman and railway porter and now looks after a level-crossing."

TLS p1063 N 24 '66 470w

RANGER, T. O. Revolt in Southern Rhodesia, 1896-97; a study in African resistance. 403p pl maps $12.66 Northwestern univ. press

968.9 Rhodesia, Southern—History. Rhodesia, Southern—Native races 67-25663

The author attempts to show the attitudes and reactions of both Europeans and Africans in this analysis of the uprisings of the Matabele and Mashona tribes. He has "investigated the archival material available in [Salisbury] Rhodesia and Great Britain. . . . anthropological literature concerning his subject, . . . [and has also used] oral sources." (Ann Am Acad) Index.

Reviewed by L. C. Duly
Am Hist R 73:1593 Je '68 330w

"[The author] is familiar with colonial history of the more conventional kind. He tries to do justice to the White as well as to the Black actors in the grim drama he describes. Finally he attempts to place the rising into its wider setting. His book is, therefore, much more than a specialized monograph, but a major contribution to Rhodesian history. Ranger's study will interest political scientists as much as historians. . . . This reviewer disagrees with the author on a number of issues. The Matabele military monarchy, for instance, appears to have suffered from many more internal contradictions than the author would allow. Little is said concerning how some Africans adapted themselves to the new economic opportunities brought about by the white intrusion. . . . Despite these criticisms, . . . [the book] will remain a classic of Rhodesian historiography." L. H. Gann

Ann Am Acad 376:169 Mr '68 500w

"A thoughtful and effective concluding chapter relates the risings to later Rhodesian history, particularly to the development of opposition to white domination. Undistinguished style. . . . Of interest to students of British Empire history and of African history, the volume also has value for those concerned with problems of race relations and the conflict of cultures. A scholarly work on a topic of obvious relevance."

Choice 5:393 My '68 170w

"[Ranger] has to explain a very complex kind of movement—and his task is made more difficult by the fact that . . . he has had to rely heavily upon the evidence of police spies, prisoners under interrogation and the like, reflected by the distorting mirrors of European ignorance and prejudice. . . . Essential reading for all those concerned with the strategy of southern African liberation." Thomas Hodgkin
New Statesman 75:271 Mr 1 '68 360w

RANGER, T. O.—Continued

"Professor Ranger takes a detailed look at the sudden uprising of the [tribes]. . . . His aim is to ram home the lesson that the resultant white folk tale (based on fear) that 'you can never trust a nigger' has very largely made Rhodesia what it is today. To the general reader, the greater part of this book will be as heavygoing as a mid-winter fenland field. . . . But for the concluding chapters, Mr. Ranger comes precious close to losing himself in the labyrinth of his own painfully constructed kopjes. And a story which has noble elements of the despairing underdog pitted against the might, the wealth and blindness of the intruder comes near to foundering on a reef of anthropological detail. The summary, however, redeems the whole."

TLS p1179 D 7 '67 700w

RANKAMA, KALERVO, ed. The Quaternary, v2. 477p il maps $19.50 Interscience

551.7 Geology, Stratigraphic (64-22580)

This volume covers "the Quaternary of the British Isles (by R. G. West), France (by H. Alimen), Germany (by P. Woldstedt), and the Netherlands (by J. D. de Jong)." (Science) Chapter bibliographies. Author and subject indexes. For reviews of volume one see BRD 1966.

"The manuscripts of these noted regional authorities have all been clearly translated. The interpretation, division, and correlation of regional stratigraphy are emphasized. Many interesting features are mentioned, such as volcanic activity in France and Germany, tectonic activity, earthquakes, and the evolution of rivers and river valleys. . . . West devotes 10 pages to the 'history of the flora' and three to the 'history of the fauna' of the British Isles. Economic deposits in the Quaternary are briefly discussed. . . . An excellent reference for graduate students and ambitious undergraduate students in geology and archeology."

Choice 5:822 S '68 180w

"The coverage in all of the four chapters in the book is comprehensive and broadly similar. . . . Archeology figures strongly throughout the treatment of France, which has relatively few Quaternary sediments. The chapter on Germany is condensed by Woldstedt from pertinent parts of his great three-volume treatise Das Eiszeitalter, and thus makes available in English a broad summary of much of his volume 2. As a basic reference this book should be essential for all American Quaternary scientists who wish to understand the kind of record that glaciers and climate have left in another now-temperate region, or to obtain ideas they might use in their own investigations. . . . Illustrations and tables are generally good, but too many of them preserve the European tradition of burying in the caption the explanations for numbered map patterns. . . . All the papers were written in 1962; . . . some of the book must be considered out of date already."

H. E. Wright

Science 160:868 My 24 '68 750w

RANSFORD, OLIVER. The battle of Majuba Hill: the first Boer War. 154p il maps $5.95 Crowell

968.2 Transvaal—History—War of 1880-1881. Majuba Hill, Battle of, 1881 68-21370

A description of an encounter in the Transvaal resulting in the defeat of the British by the Boers. The author "gives an account of the historical, political, and military events leading to the battle and . . . examines the leadership and fighting on both sides." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"[Ransford] gives a concise description of [the] debacle. . . . His presentation of the background of the battle and the political outcome which finally led to the longer war is masterly. Though only about 400 soldiers occupied the hill, Mr. Ransford shows how the battle itself influenced history out of all proportion to its importance. His succinct analysis should be in larger public libraries and in most history department." P. W. Filby

Library J 93:2654 J1 '68 130w

"As a political and historical event the British defeat at Majuba Hill was of the first importance: as a military encounter it was trivial. . . . The simple story of Majuba . . . occupies less than half of Dr. Ransford's short book. The background and postscript to the story are more interesting, and so are the reasons for the defeat. Dr. Ransford uses no new sources, but his account of the British annexation of the Transvaal and the Boer's curiously slow reaction to the discovery that they had signed away their freedom is admirably concise."

TLS p610 J1 13 '67 300w

RAPHAEL, CHAIM. The walls of Jerusalem; an excursion into Jewish history. 230p maps $6.95 Knopf

296.1 Midrash—Commentaries. Bible. O.T. Lamentations—Commentaries 67-18623

This "work comprises a translation of extensive selections, topically arranged, of one of the oldest rabbinic classics, and . . . [an] introduction limning its historical and conceptual framework. The text is the Midrash on the Book of Lamentations, enshrining the panoply of reactions to the Roman destruction of Jerusalem in 70 A.D. . . . The introduction . . . traces the role of Jerusalem in Judaism and its history from the revolts preceding the year 70 to the disastrous end of the Bar Kokhba rebellion in 135 [and] . . . explains the nature of rabbinic thought and writings and focuses briefly on the composition of the Midrash on Lamentations." (Library J) Annotated bibliography. General index and index to biblical references.

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams
Atlantic 221:124 Je '68 60w
Choice 5:1193 N '68 170w

Reviewed by David Daiches
Commentary 46:100 S '68 1650w
Economist 229:vi N 9 '68 750w

"The introduction, written with verve, imagination and scholarship, and the translation, clear and excellent, make this thematic excursion into rabbinic Judaism a delightful and instructive reading experience for Jewish and non-Jewish laity. The book definitely merits a place on reading lists in general courses in Judaica on the college level." Martin Cohen

Library J 93:998 Mr 1 '68 160w

Reviewed by T. R. Fyvel
New Statesman 76:839 D 13 '68 500w

"The physical arrangement of the book would seem to suggest that Raphael gets [his] effect . . . by proceeding from one level to another, uncovering the successive strata of textual meaning and historical experience and laying them bare so that they are simultaneously visible. A prefatory 'Personal Word' describes his personal involvement with his subject. . . . The selections and translations from the Midrash are clearly intended to be the heart of this work. Yet it may be not irreverent to suggest (in view of the large latitude for irreverence in Judaism) that for many readers the 'Personal Word' will be more immediately meaningful. If there is any criticism to be made of Raphael it is of the false modesty that made him relegate this section to a preface humbly paginated in lower-case roman numerals. For surely his thesis requires that this part of the book be granted equal status with the rest, his personal relationship with his subject being precisely that which he takes to be characteristic of the Jewish faith in general and of the Midrash in particular." Gertrude Himmelfarb

Reporter 38:49 Je 13 '68 1200w

"[Raphael] weaves the text skillfully together with the anecdotes, relevant references, and obiter dicta of savants of succeeding generations, adding his own often eloquent, urbane, and witty comments, a union of Cambridge and the Talmud. . . . In his erudite journey through Jewish history, Raphael reappraises many issues and episodes which had been distorted by the reckless iconoclasm of nineteenth-century German pedants. He is especially effective in his evaluation of the Pharisees, whose image, in the tradition of the Gospels, was cast as rigid, unbending, legalistic. . . . The revisions are not revolutionary. . . . But Raphael no longer depends solely on exegesis. He speaks with the substantiated authority of historical documentation and archeological evidence." A. L. Sachar

Sat R 51:41 Ap 13 '68 1000w

RAPHAEL, D. D., ed. Political theory and the rights of man. 151p $5.75 Ind. univ. press 323 Civil rights 67-24523

"What is meant by the 'rights of man'? Where do such rights 'come from' and how are they justified and implemented? Are there distinctions between 'human rights' and 'civil (or political) rights'? Are rights protected and advanced by states, or are they guarantees against political encroachments? These and related questions are examined and debated in the nine essays that comprise this volume." (Choice) Index.

Reviewed by John Rawls
Am Pol Sci R 62:977 S '68 1300w

"The first two papers (by Macpherson and Polin) are traditional and uninterestingly brief discussions of the notion of rights in Hobbes and Locke, the political philosophers to whom the modern theory is usually traced. The remaining papers—especially those by Raphael, Cranston, and Mayo—attempt to combine the methods of modern ethics with sociological and legal awareness and unashamed political persuasion. The exchanges are lively and valuable; and if in the end none of the fundamental questions have been answered, the reader is aware of their complexities and the importance in raising them. Moderately difficult but intelligible to interested juniors in both historical and contemporary political philosophy."

Choice 5:409 My '68 170w

"With learning and urbanity, . . . Professor Raphael and his collaborators [discuss human rights]. It cannot be said that they have found the answers; indeed, one would be most pleasurably surprised if they had. Some of them, perhaps, have not even tried quite hard enough; for one often feels, when reading their contributions, that the philosophical issues have been pushed aside to permit a more practical type of discussion about what rights are appropriate for emphasis and 'universalization' in a twentieth-century context. A considerable part of the book is occupied, for instance with a controversy between Professor Raphael and Mr. Maurice Cranston, both political philosophers of considerable repute, about the legitimacy of associating the older 'liberal' rights with the newer 'social and economic' ones."

TLS p132 F 8 '68 2150w

RAPHAEL, FREDERIC. Orchestra & beginners.
532p $6.95 Viking

68-11413

The author "pursues two crisscrossing story lines. One deals with British printing magnate Leonard Strauss and his gentle wife [Linda] from Lakeside, Ill. . . . Tensions growing out of years of marriage, an antique desk full of old correspondence, and Leonard's imminent departure for a secret wartime mission pry open ancient history. It includes a German mistress before his marriage to Linda and an illegitimate son. . . . The other plot line follows [Marcus] the Strausses' young son's life at an old-line public school away from London during the blitz. Raphael shows that beginning, as contrasted to the orchestrated lives of his adults, to be a hellish start toward growing up." (N Y Times Bk R)

Reviewed by Alice McCahill
Best Sell 27:454 Mr 1 '68 700w

Reviewed by Patricia Stiles
Library J 93:1502 Ap 1 '68 200w

Reviewed by Francis Hope
New Statesman 74:592 N 3 '67 750w

Reviewed by Bernard Bergonzi
N Y Rev of Books 10:38 Ap 11 '68
300w

"One way to keep plowing through [this] aggressively tedious new novel, is to pretend it's required reading for a Comparative English Lit. course and Mr. Raphael is sure to spring a pop quiz on it Monday morning. . . . [His] dialogue is brilliant to the point of excess. He animates his characters. But virtually everything his people do and say dispatches one back to other novels and other fiction postures. The author cannot summon the intensity to make of his material more than illusions of transplants from the old tradition of 19th-century realism or variations on its surviving forms. . . . By habitually telling us instead of showing us, Raphael sacrifices the drama and action his novel cries for. He presents Linda's [affair] as a trifle and [Marcus's friend] Patrick's death as an accident, both isolated from the decay of the culture in which they occur. When a writer cannot construct from his inventions more than a series of socially decorative tableaux that footnote the history of literature, his novel becomes exactly what 'Orchestra & Beginners' is: pictures at an exhibition of speech." Webster Schott

N Y Times Bk R p41 Mr 31 '68 950w

"Raphael has an incredibly intimate feel for place and atmosphere, which he creates with something of the delicate skill of the man who builds castles out of matchsticks, by carefully accumulating seemingly inconsequential details. Now and then, however, the technique is carried to excess. . . . The dialogue exhibits the same contradictions: most of it is charming and adroit . . . but part of it is so slick and polished . . . as to seem contrived and stagey. The prose, again generally superb, can launch at intervals into purple passages. . . . The most telling flaw in the book, however, lies in the characterization of Leonard. . . . It is Leonard's remoteness . . . not only from Linda but from the reader as well, that undermines the interest in the battle between Linda and her husband. It is perhaps a tribute to the over-all strength of the plot and its construction that this book, despite faults and excesses, emerges as an intensely moving, charming, intelligent novel, told with such skill and energy that its 500-odd pages never seem long." Eric Moon

Sat R 51:43 Mr 23 '68 850w

"Yet another long, sad novel about cruel little boys in a fee-charging boarding-school. . . . [Raphael] has attempted to relate his story of prep-school gang-warfare to the condition of the British bourgeoisie during the war with the Nazis. His suggestion is, quite clearly, that the British ruling class shared certain values with the Nazis; it was a question of where to draw the line. . . . These parents are a strange couple, treating their marriage as a theatrical performance. . . . The author has laboured over the details of their marriage, often boring the reader with jokey banter which reads like the contents of Noël Coward's wastepaper basket. The conversation is not clearly attributed to the speakers, so that the reader has to work out for himself who is saying what. . . . It is almost a relief to escape from these scented adults and return to the vile, sweaty prep-school—where the children are, after all, performing actions, not merely striking attitudes. . . . If the author can edit this self-indulgent novel, concentrating on his main theme, he could make a first-rate film script from it."

TLS p977 O 19 '67 1050w

RAPPORT, SAMUEL, ed. Anthropology; ed. by Samuel Rapport and Helen Wright; academic editorial adviser: Joseph Bram. (N.Y. univ. lib. of science) 332p il $4.95 N.Y. univ. press

572.08 Anthropology

66-12601

A collection of "readings on anthropological theory and practice, including evolution, culture considered theoretically and through institutional examples, and specific treatment of primitive cultures." (Choice)

"Articles by Leaky, Benedict, Hoebel, and Malinowski lend authority and interest. It must be added, however, that some of the articles have, according to the editors, been abridged. References to alternative or supporting source material is lacking—as is an index. These exclusions are doubtless consistent with the intent of Rapport and Wright to prepare this volume for the benefit of the lay reader rather than for serious study or scholarly research."

Choice 5:274 Ap '68 110w

"The book is divided into four parts. In Part I the authors take up the evolution of man and present accounts of important anthropological discoveries. In Part II they discuss the scientific methods used in anthropology. . . . Part III 'Aspects of Culture,' includes both the universality as well as the variety of the human family, its language, social order, mores, and religion. Part IV concludes with essays on such diverse cultures as the Scandinavian Lapps, African Pygmies, Navajoes, and Amish. Most of the articles . . . are excerpts from older works. Selections are well chosen to develop significant highlights of the physical and cultural study of man in this century. It will serve the interested layman and the beginning student of anthropology well." Suzanne Lennon

Library J 92:1847 My 1 '67 150w

RASKIN, EDITH. The pyramid of living things; il. by Joseph Cellini. 192p $4.50 McGraw

574.5 Ecology—Juvenile literature. Natural history—Juvenile literature 67-22961

The author of Watchers, Pursuers and Masqueraders (BRD 1964) describes "the ecological communities or biomes of the world: the Arctic and Antarctic Tundra, the Taiga, Deciduous Forest, Middle-Latitude Grassland, Desert, Tropical Rain Forest, and Savanna. She describes . . . the life patterns and activities of plants and animals . . . [and] evaluates the effect of man on nature—his efforts at preservation and conservation as well as his destructive behavior." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index. "Grades seven to ten." (Best Sell)

Reviewed by Francis Carmody
Best Sell 27:467 Mr 1 '68 100w

"This is a carefully written book . . . based on thorough scientific knowledge. The author divides the earth into eight broad climatic zones, and within each she describes the year-round weather, vegetation, wildlife, and the various patterns of human existence, emphasizing the interdependence of all living things. . . . Though tedious reading in places, this will be of use as supplementary reading in geography and biology programs." E. F. Grave
Library J 93:310 Ja 15 '68 80w

RATHBONE, JULIAN. Diamonds bid. 190p $3.95 Walker & co.

67-23107

"When Julian Smollett, teacher in Turkey, witnesses the exchange of a huge bribe in a police station and is warned to keep silence, he reacts by involving himself in a plot of assassination and a coup d'état." (Best Sell)

Best Sell 27:286 O 15 '67 70w

"Mr. Rathbone is clearly fond of Turkey and the Turks and conveys well their appeal and charm. His writing is a little uneven and might have benefited from tighter editing. Yet this is a promising beginning. Recommended for larger fiction collections." Norman Horrocks
Library J 92:2811 Ag '67 90w

Reviewed by Anthony Boucher
N Y Times Bk R p50 S 24 '67 50w

"A promising first thriller. . . . But our hero, mainly motivated by his desire to marry someone else's wife, is not an attractive figure, and his largely selfish movements hurt too many other people and make it unnecessarily difficult to scotch a violently reactionary plot." TLS p634 J1 27 '67 50w

RATNER, LORMAN. Powder keg; Northern opposition to the antislavery movement 1831-1840. 172p $6 Basic bks.

301.15 Slavery in the U.S. 68-22863

"In describing popular opinion Lorman Ratner explains why northern opposition existed. He finds that racism was at the heart of antiabolition. The opinion leaders of the time extolled slavery and warned of the dangers of emancipation. Novelists such as James Fenimore Cooper and James Kirke Paulding wrote of the inferiority of the Negro and the danger of intermarriage in the future. Northern society, then, the author points out, feared that granting freedom to slaves would threaten the Union, the Constitution, the rights of states to govern their own affairs, and that it could lead to violence and race war." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"A dry and one-dimensional doctoral thesis which seeks out 'overt' expressions of antiabolition opinion, and finds it. . . . Ratner has limited perception of the individuals cited, thanks to a meagerly used bibliography. . . . However, [the book] contributes to a sense of 'white' opinion, and can serve graduate libraries in the area." Choice 5:1034 O '68 140w

"[The author] has demonstrated here his mastery of the primary and secondary sources on his subject. His . . . approach is an historical analysis of the North as a whole. . . . The book is highly recommended for most libraries." R. F. Kugler
Library J 93:1479 Ap 1 '68 150w

RATTE, JOHN. Three modernists: Alfred Loisy, George Tyrrell, William L. Sullivan. 370p $6.95 Sheed

282 Modernism. Loisy, Alfred Firmin. Sullivan, William Laurence. Tyrrell, George 67-13763

An examination of "the development of the ideas, and an explanation of the . . . thought of three Modernists [two European and one American]. . . . The author shows how the Catholic emphasis on nonessentials, lack of intellectual life and the resulting defensiveness served as a source of growth for the radicalism of the Modernists and explain the absoluteness of Pius X's condemnation." (America)

"Alfred Loisy, usually considered the leader of Modernism, receives careful study. While developing Loisy's ideas on scriptural criticism, dogmatic evolution and symbolism, and theological relativism, the author also treats the French priest's personal loss of the faith. George Tyrrell, the English Jesuit, says Ratte, is the most relevant for today, in that he prepares for a 'tolerance for ambiguity in faith which was something more than the sum of a series of historical and logical contradictions.' . . . William L. Sullivan is interesting not only because he was an American . . . but also because his views were different from those of the European modernists. . . . The book's thought is deep and penetrating, and the style is a bit difficult. It is nevertheless a good introduction to the subject of Modernism." Michael Morrison

America 118:234 F 17 '68 420w
Choice 5:639 J1 '68 200w

"This work ought to become a best seller in American Catholicism today (and many non-Catholics should kibitz). The modernism of Loisy, Tyrrell and the less known William L. Sullivan sidetracked Catholic theology on the theme of development; today nonmodernists are trying to get on the track and have to take another look at these major figures. Ratte's is a scholarly but readable [account]." Christian Century 84:1466 N 15 '67 70w

Reviewed by Robert Coles
New Repub 158:35 Je 8 '68 2000w

RAUCH, IRMENGARD, ed. Approaches in linguistic methodology; ed. by Irmengard Rauch and Charles T. Scott. 157p $6 Univ. of Wis. press

410 Language and languages 66-22863

Of these eleven essays, "eight illustrate the application of a particular methodological procedure to a specific linguistic problem from a synchronic point of view and three from a diachronic point of view. The remaining two essays are metalinguistic statements, one concerned with the mathematical nature of a linguistic description and the other with the bounds of linguistic investigation." (Publisher's note) Chapter bibliographies. Index.

"[Some of the articles] deal with problems of lexicon, phonology, morphology, or syntax. [The book] was compiled for students specializing in general linguistics and for scholars occupied with the development of linguistic methodology. For such readers it should be very useful, perhaps the most useful collection of articles on linguistics that has appeared in some time." Choice 4:1376 F '68 150w

"[This is] a very mixed bag, only tied together by common membership of the Linguistic Circle of Madison, Wis. There are some excellent papers, others good but better consigned to specialist journals, and others again not worth preserving in book form. There is very little link between Professor Cassidy's paper (which falls into the last class) on the theoretical approach to an impossible lexicographical task, and its neighbour, Mr. Kuo-Ping Chou's paper on 'The uses of shr in Mandarin Chinese', which seems very thorough but needs a sinologist to judge it. One up to the editors for including two papers on that unfashionable subject, the design of grammars and dictionaries for ordinary readers. It is a pity that they relate to Sanskrit and Arabic and that only the former is valuable." TLS p1073 N 16 '67 330w

RAUSCHENBUSCH, WALTER. The righteousness of the kingdom; ed. and introduced by Max L. Stackhouse. 320p $5.95 Abingdon

261 Church and social problems. Christianity 68-17441

Although written "three quarters of a century ago . . . [when the author was] a struggling young pastor of an immigrant church in the slums of New York City. [this] book was never published [before.] . . . [In it] he first worked out the foundations of his life's concern for the Social Gospel." (Editor's introd.) Bibliography. Index of scripture references. Index of persons and subjects.

"This early word of the prophet reveals how far we have moved about in these three-quarters of a century and how little we have progressed. In his introduction Dr. Stackhouse underscores the importance of this treatise. . . . [It] contains metaphors and allusions that are anachronistic in an ecumenical age, and its scientific idiom is equally dated. Nonetheless the work has a contemporary ring, particularly in respect to the need to change 'structures.' But in contrast to current intoners, Rauschenbusch never forgets his evangelical roots. . . . In awareness of the injustices which are endemic in our social and economic systems he is second to none." Paul Peachey

Christian Century 85:1245 O 2 '68 700w

"Now, some 50 years after [Rauschenbusch's] death, one of his early and central books is appearing, ably introduced and edited. Rauschenbusch has often been called the father of the social gospel. This book makes clear how appropriate that title is. But it also does more: it makes clear that Rauschenbusch remains an exciting and timely theologian."

Commonweal 88:415 Je 21 '68 110w

RAWLEY, CALLMAN. See Rakosi, C.

RAWLINSON, JOHN L. China's struggle for naval development, 1839-1895. 318p $6.50 Harvard Univ. press

951 China—History, Naval 66-10127

In this "history of the rise and fall of the Chinese Navy between the Opium War and the first Sino-Japanese War [the author describes] the erection and operation of modern shipbuilding and repair facilities, the training of naval officers and navy yard personnel, the conflicts among powerful provincial officials for control of China's warships and the abortive attempt to achieve centralization under a Navy Board created in 1885, . . . and the naval debacles of the Sino-French and Sino-Japanese Wars." (Am Hist R) Glossary of terms and titles, in Chinese. Bibliography. Index.

"The conclusion to be drawn from Professor Rawlinson's study is that a combination of the provincial and professional jealousies, bureaucratic confusion and indecision, and widespread official corruption and nepotism that were characteristic of the second half of the nineteenth century made the maintenance of an effective navy impossible, regardless of the number and quality of modern warships built or purchased. . . . Clearly shown are Li Hung-chang's leading role in the building of the modern navy and his contributions to its ultimate failure. . . . Rawlinson has used all available Chinese and Western-language sources, both primary and secondary. This is an important study, and in all probability it will remain the definitive work on the subject." Knight Biggerstaff

Am Hist R 73:563 D '67 400w

"Rawlinson is the first Western scholar to deal comprehensively with Chinese naval power in modern times. For this we are grateful. But, unfortunately, his book is not altogether satisfactory. His use of sources is at times uncritical; his research, particularly concerning the Sino-Japanese War of 1894-95, is not thorough; and his style is wooden. College libraries with special Asian collections will want the book; others will be less interested in acquiring it."

Choice 4:568 Jl '67 110w

Reviewed by F. H. H. King
Engl Hist R 83:423 Ap '68 300w

Reviewed by B. L. Evans
Pacific Affairs 40:374 fall-winter '67-
'68 500w

RAWSON, PHILIP. The art of Southeast Asia; Cambodia, Vietnam, Thailand, Laos, Burma, Java, Bali. 288p 219il 32col il maps $7.50 Praeger

709.54 Art, Southeastern Asian. Asia, Southeastern—Antiquities 67-29399

This book discusses the architecture and sculpture of continental and insular Southeast Asia, including the temples at Angkor. Bibliography. Index.

"This small, compact volume, richly illustrated, is a surprisingly gratifying achievement by both the author and his publisher. To the general reader it offers a pleasant introduction. . . . The virtue of this popularly-priced and well designed volume is to permit a student of Southeast Asian cultures to obtain at a glance, as it were, some vivid comparative impressions of the converging and diverging elements in the ideational and formal aspects of the various regions' Indianized arts. . . . Inevitably, in a relatively brief text encompassing such a vast field, some generalizations or sporadic historical data could create misconceptions, and errors can creep in. . . . But this book, I think, successfully meets the need for an overall view of Southeast Asian art and can usefully serve to stimulate closer interest and study of each region separately in the available scholarly works." Claire Holt

Pacific Affairs 41:296 summer '68 550w

"Cambodian (=Khmer) art, with which is included the art of Funan, occupies almost half this book. The author, who is Keeper of the Gulbenkian Museum of Oriental Art and Archeology at Durham, has studied the art but not, it seems, the background. The results are patchy, and he is not consistent with his own mistakes. . . . The arts of Champa and Dong-Son are examined, but these are not what is understood as the art of Vietnam. Why is Vietnam listed, but not included? Mr. Rawson's account of art in Java and Bali, where he feels more at home, occupies a quarter of the book. . . . After too brief accounts of art in Thailand and Laos Mr. Rawson turns to Burma. . . . Excellent examples of South-east Asian art are provided by thirty-two colour and 219 black-and-white plates. The sculpture is most alluring. Many of the illustrations have already appeared in more expensive books. Their reappearance is welcome."

TLS p1236 D 21 '67 800w

RAY, DOROTHY JEAN. Eskimo masks: art and ceremony; phot. by Alfred A. Blaker. 246p $12.50 Univ. of Wash. press

970.1 Eskimos—Art, Eskimos—Religion and mythology. Masks (Sculpture) 66-19570

The author describes a collection of masks from the coasts and islands of nineteenth-century Alaska. Divided into two major sections, "the first part, in addition to a short introduction and 12 color plates, contains chapters on the history of Eskimo masks, why and how they were carved and how they were used. The second part . . . consists of 70 full-page plates and a . . . chapter of descriptions of the masks depicted. About 170 masks are illustrated and described." (Science) Bibliography. Index.

"This work has no parallels in the literature simply because it is an anthropological interpretation of objects of artistic character. The handling of ethnographic and archaeological data is knowledgeable and provides an excellent setting for understanding Eskimo art in general and Eskimo masks in particular. The old case for an origin in Northwest Coast art is nicely done away with, but the independent origin of Eskimo masks is not so well done. . . . The style of writing is lucid and concise. . . . Excellent index. [Altogether] of a high order and useful for undergraduate, graduate, and professional persons and should have reference value in museums."

Choice 4:1186 D '67 130w

"This beautiful book written by a skilled anthropologist and expert on the culture of the Eskimo is a model of careful scholarship. . . . [The photographs] in color and black and white are works of art. [The book] should become a work of permanent interest in the field. For public, college, and university libraries. Many high school libraries will be interested." Jerome Cushman

Library J 92:2754 Ag '67 150w [YA]

"In one sense, the book falls between two stools, for it is neither solid ethnography nor a study in depth of a plastic art form. . . . Ray has by no means exhausted her subject. Further, in treating historical and ethnographic data, she is inclined to take a kind of potshot approach that is bound to disconcert the serious researcher. She also makes a few mistakes. [However, the book] is without question a fine catalog of the western Eskimo masks in the Lowie Museum [at Berkeley]. . . . In a generally well-documented summary, the author presents a convincing case for the genesis and development of western Eskimo masks. Finally, Ray has managed to say something about how the Eskimos, in the world beyond nature, found weapons against hunger and sickness and cold." J. M. Campbell

RAY, D. J.—Continued

Science 158:1660 D 29 '67 800w

Va Q R 43:clxxxiv autumn '67 130w

RAY, MICHÈLE. The two shores of hell; tr. by Elisabeth Abbott. 217p il $4.50 McKay

959.7 Vietnamese Conflict, 1961- 68-22686

The author, a "newly employed war photographer, managed to get into the thick of things in Vietnam—to the extent that she was captured by the Vietcong. She reports good treatment from her captors; at least she lived to tell the story. . . . She is against American involvement and admits a strong sympathy for the Vietcong, from the standpoint of nationalism." (Library J)

Reviewed by Elbridge Colby

Best Sell 28:108 Je 1 '68 430w

"[This] reads like high school girl reportage at its mediocre best. . . . [It] might be subtitled 'a Study in Ambivalence' because Michèle Ray saw the war from both sides and she sympathizes with both. She suffered bombardment from both. What her reports lack in objectivity they make up in empathy. They are the efforts of a disillusioned, somewhat worldly yet basically naïve Alice in Miseryland whose very naïvete makes her war documentary ever more harrowing page after page. It is a poorly organized, poorly written book, and paradoxically because of its faults one of the most truthful to come out of the horror of Vietnam. This reviewer recommends it for the shelves of general library collection." H. S. Camenson

Library J 93:2492 Je 15 '68 220w

"Another interesting viewpoint to add to the growing list of personal observations pouring out on Vietnam, this will have more appeal to girls than do most of the others." Dorothy English

Library J 93:2742 Jl '68 90w [YA]

Reviewed by J. M. Mecklin

N Y Times Bk R p3 Je 30 '68 190w

Reviewed by Richard Dudman

Sat R 51:36 Je 15 '68 320w

RAYACK, ELTON. Professional power and American medicine; the economics of the American medical association. 298p il $7.25 World pub.

610.6 American Medical Association 67-13628

An analysis of "organized medicine's role in the medical marketplace. Major thesis: to further its own economic interest, organized medicine has used its power as a professional organization to limit the supply of physicians, to restrict practices of health practitioners in competition with medical doctors, to control hospital staff privileges, and to oppose development of voluntary health insurance. Since these actions are against the best interest of most other groups, the [author] proposes curbing organized medicine's power by limiting physician role in policy area to an advisory capacity. To support this position, the book discusses growth and present structure of A.M.A., sources of its power and influence, [and] changes in profession and medical area which create conflict and discord; and examines A.M.A.'s role historically in areas mentioned above." (Choice)

"[This book resembles] R. Harris' A Sacred Trust [BRD 1967] and M. Gross' The Doctors [BRD 1966, although it] does differ somewhat in its overemphasis on the economic motivation argument. . . . Extensive footnotes, tables, charts; adequate name and subject index. Should be worthwhile addition to undergraduate, public health, or hospital administration libraries."

Choice 5:827 S '68 210w

"The subject here is much broader than the title indicates. It includes a chapter on physician supply, for example, in which Dr. Rayack, who is professor of economics at the University of Rhode Island, analyzes considerable material. It also includes 551 references or notes in monographic, periodical, newspaper, and report literature. Although his approach is primarily economic, Dr. Rayack indulges in some biased language and interpretation. Despite this, his study should have considerable value as a reference in medical libraries and in those of chiropractic, osteopathy and optometry. It is complete in depth and breadth, is well written, and its logic, impeccable. . . . Outside the medical field the book will be of interest to organizational theorists, economists, and should be perused by all librarians." R. G. Cheshier

Library J 93:546 F 1 '68 140w

RAZZELL, ARTHUR G. Symmetry, by Arthur G. Razzell and K. G. O. Watts; il. by Ellen Raskin. 47p $2.50; lib bdg $3.25 Doubleday

516 Symmetry—Juvenile literature 67-19124

"Bilateral and rotational symmetry in nature, architecture, geometrical figures, and everyday objects are systematically introduced through [an] integrated progression of text and pictures. . . . Simple experiments with cardboard, paper, scissors, pins and string provide readers with opportunities to develop their powers of observation. . . . Grades four to six." (Library J)

Reviewed by M. L. Birmingham

Commonweal 88:307 My 24 '68 60w

"[This] seems intended for elementary-school readers but strikes me as being good for any age. Most of us would have a hard time composing a sentence, or even a paragraph, which would explain just what is meant by this concept, since words are not really adequate; but the combination of words with Ellen Raskin's illustrations puts the book on top of this month's pile as far as the clarifying of abstractions is concerned." H. C. Stubbs

Horn Bk 44:338 Je '68 90w

"There are unanswered questions and puzzles that will frustrate some readers while they challenge others. Miss Raskin's green, black, and white illustrations serve adequately to expand the text. This book helps to fill the growing need for special mathematics materials in the middle grades." J. K. Meyers

Library J 93:1314 Mr 15 '68 90w

READ, DONALD. Cobden and Bright: a Victorian political partnership. 275p pl $8.50 St Martins

B or 92 Cobden, Richard. Bright, John 68-15436

This biographical study is "an analysis of the Cobden-Bright personal relationship and political partnership. . . . [The political issues discussed include] the Anti-Corn Law League, . . . international affairs, retrenchment and reform, state intervention and laissez-faire, newspapers, the land, Ireland, the empire, and the American Civil War." (Economist) Index.

"Read offers a new interpretation of the partnership of Cobden and Bright in a revisionist study which is convincing, interesting, objective to an unusual degree, and well organized. Earlier works made the partnership much more equal than Read believes was the case. . . . [He] clearly shows that Bright caused some of these errors of interpretations by his statements made in his last years—statements which clearly contradict earlier speeches or letters of his or Cobden's. This is a fine example of the danger of using recollections of an elderly person. A valuable addition to undergraduate and graduate libraries."

Choice 5:1029 O '68 180w

Economist 226:51 Mr 23 '68 1250w

"There is a curiously mid-Victorian flavour about Mr. Read's account. . . . [His] apparent acceptance at face value of the high moral tone of his subjects' motives is accompanied by a teleological view of history. . . . In spite of the serious flaw of the naivety of many of its judgments, this is a readable and in many ways an interesting book. It certainly gives a clearer idea of the relative contribution which the two men made . . . than can be gained by reading the standard biographies. It remains hagiography in tendency, and an objective study would be welcome. But the extensive quotations from the letters of both men are illuminating, and will help the reader to make up his own mind about [them]."

TLS p761 Jl 18 '68 1050w

READ, FORREST, ed. Pound/Joyce. E Pound, E.

READ, HERBERT. Art and alienation; the role of the artist in society. 176p pl $7.50 Horizon press

701.15 Artists. Art and society. Art—Psychology. Modernism (Art) 67-25449

"The essays collected in this volume were written on various occasions, but they all revert . . . to the central theme of the alienated artist. Part One consists of general essays that deal with the situation of the artist in a world dominated by science and technology. . . . Part Two discusses individual artists. . . . [including] two or three artists of the past." (Intro) "The essay on Vincent van Gogh has not previously been published. All these essays have been subjected to varying degrees of revision and extension." (Note) Annotated chapter bibliographies. Index.

"Read's theme is familiar: society is alienated from itself and from the sources of art; the artist suffers as a result of his awareness of alienation; and elements of style and expression in modern and traditional art reflect alienation of man from man. . . . [This] is a gracefully written work based on equally elegant thinking and seeing."

Choice 5:617 J1 '68 110w

"The structure of the volume is characteristic of Read's sequence of thought: primary attention given to ideas, these then applied unsystematically to a series of artists. . . . The reader has an impression of bumping along from well-known biographical details to philosophical statements to brief descriptions of certain works and back again, with no sense of a sequential progression. . . . What Read offers for the most part is a personal anthology of set pieces describing the psychological varieties of artistic experience: . . . the type of thing now readily available in such collections as Robert L. Herbert's Modern Artists on Art or, in a wider context, [R.] Ellmann and [C.] Feidelson's The Modern Tradition [both in BRD 1965]. . . . While the book has illustrations, there are few extended analyses of art works, illustrated or not." J. K. Simon

Sat R 50:29 D 2 '67 1650w

"[Maintaining] that [H.] Wölfflin's critical principles [in Principles of Art History, BRD 1932] were based on and are applicable to figurative art alone, . . . [Read] proposes an attempt to establish scientific principles of art criticism for non-figurative art, whether Byzantine, Egyptian or modern. So far so good, but these new principles do not emerge. . . . Sir Herbert is too sympathetic to his material to enable him to write rigorously of and around it. He asks nearly all the right questions and instinctively seems to know most of the answers—if only he was rather better at showing his reader how he arrives at them. His chosen territory is that unhappy middle ground between art and criticism, and he is at his best when he goes in for straight exposition, at his least happy when he is trying to steer a line of argument, particularly when he chooses to steer it through chunks of other men's ideas."

TLS p17 Ja 4 '68 750w

READ, HERBERT. Art and society. 1966 ed 152p, il $6.95; pa $2.45 Schocken

701 Art and society. Art—Philosophy 66-26728

A reissue of the second (1945) edition, which was a revision of a book originally published in 1936, based on lectures delivered at the University of Liverpool. The present volume "represents a reassessment and enlargement of the first (1936), taking into consideration the historical and sociological events of nine years [including the rise of fascism, the second World War and the European resistance movement] and their influences on contemporary art of the free world as well as a reconsideration of the effects on art of the socialistic state. . . . [The author's] range of artistic subjects covers the realm of magic, mysticism, religion, the secular, the unconscious, Freudian theory, the social function of the artist, and education. The final section . . . deals with art in transition." (Choice) Appendix: William Hogarth. Index. For the 1936 edition see BRD 1937.

"In this new text, straightforward and clearly written, there is no hint of pessimism with regard to contemporary art as a development of the free and creative artist. . . . Well documented, although no bibliography; extensive index; . . . [and] illustrations—none of which are referred to in the text. A fine companion to Read's Icon and Idea [BRD 1956] and The Origins of Form in Art [BRD 1965]. Should be included in every college library."

Choice 4:1112 D '67 200w

"Thirty years ago when Herbert Read wrote [this book] . . . the hot issue in the arts was their social usefulness. . . . Written under the shadow of totalitarianism, [Read] traces a path between the extremes of an art concerned only with itself and an art built as a vehicle for preconceived social concepts. . . . To make his point that art's value to society lies in the free expressiveness of the artist, Sir Herbert presents a capsule history of art from rock paintings to Radek. He endeavors to refute the idea that art in any period has really owed its character to magic or religion, on the one hand, or to the economic or political structure of society, on the other. . . . Since this thesis can neither be proved nor disproved, it doesn't matter, I suppose, that despite the recent extensive literature on primitive art, the references in the chapters on prehistoric and savage art remain works dated previously to 1936. . . . Sir Herbert does not go all the way into anti-intellectualism. But he does see mind as a danger to art . . . [and] society as essentially inhibiting the artist. . . . In that it raises the question of what art is good for, [this book] is again thoroughly timely." Harold Rosenberg

N Y Times Bk R p12 Ja 1 '67 1750w

READ, PIERS PAUL. Game in heaven with Tussy Marx. 160p $4.95 McGraw

67-26173

"The 'game' here is a dialogue in the anteroom of heaven among Karl Marx's daughter, a duchess and a snotty young Englishman. Below on earth people are massing for revolution. To amuse his companions, the young Englishman improvises upon the events below, invents the history of Watkinson (a party member who sells out to the CIA) and of Hereward, a leader who sells out for love, moves on to debauchery, and returns shriven to head a puritanical revolt." (Nation)

"The loosely connected plot . . . consists of sections which focus on the types. But the bite is slight; the fun is thin. Only a humorless revolutionist would be offended. An amusing first novel, revealing intelligence and wit, but finally trivial." Elaine Bender

Library J 92:3447 O 1 '67 120w

Reviewed by Alan Cheuse

Nation 206:57 Ja 8 '68 230w

"[This] experimental novel is an infuriating mixture of the trenchant and the perverse. . . . The devious irony at times cuts deep. . . . But painful passages are outweighed by ones whose only aim seems to be to annoy the conventional reader. . . . All Read can do is stand the conventional novel on its head. He cannot put his finger on any actual seed or source of revolution—of radical change—in the world he belongs to. For all the 'advanced' cachet sought by the title and the trappings, the book remains the furious shadow-boxing of someone trying to run a r-r-r-revolutionary one-man-band in a situation where the only practicable line for the Left is cooperation and patience." David Craig

New Statesman 71:817 Je 3 '66 220w

"Mr. Read has adopted a frivolous pattern, rather than a frivolous tone, to make a short but complicated statement about the nature of revolution in the modern world. His novel turns loose upon our society a pair of super-agents dedicated, each in his different way, to bringing it down. One is a middle-aged degenerate, a nicely conceived comic character, who virtuously believes himself to be hastening the collapse of capitalism by his dissolute life. For the other, the hero Hereward, this is the wrong approach: he learns that the enemy must never be fought on its own terms. A certain amount of delayed-action comic impact makes itself felt as we realize that society is all too capable of defending itself. . . . It makes an interesting if enigmatical first novel."

TLS p489 Je 2 '66 300w

* READE, BRIAN. Aubrey Beardsley. See Beardsley, A.

READY, WILLIAM. The Tolkien relation: a personal inquiry. 184p $3.95 Regnery

B or 92 Tolkien. John Ronald Reuel 68-18276

"This book discusses Tolkien as a man and describes his ecology. South Africa. Oxford.

READY, WILLIAM—Continued

and various points in between. . . . It also discusses Tolkien's thought . . . and those activities of the mind and spirit that operate behind and below a writer's thought." (Christian Science Monitor)

"Ready has produced an interesting, intellectual, and informative study that should be included in any collection dealing with Tolkien and his colleagues at Oxford. At the same time it must be noted that readability is seriously impaired by an awkward literary style decorated with bursts of purple prose. In addition, the book is, on occasion, repetitive, self-contradictory, and irritating. . . . However, Ready, by dint of interviews and letters, has obtained a great deal of personal information about Tolkien, which, as distasteful as it is to Tolkien himself, merits publication and helps one to appreciate his stature. Ready also seeks to help many potential Tolkien readers who are repelled by Frodo faddism, but his own relation often gets in his way."

Choice 5:1310 D '68 160w

"Tolkien can never be understood; he must be experienced. . . . All that Mr. Ready wisely does is to hold open a door through which his subject may emerge. . . . The virtue of Mr. Ready is that he knows the size of his subject and therefore does not concern himself with a 'petty consistency.' From chapter to chapter his Tolkien . . . contradicts himself, and is the greater for so doing. . . . This book's message is that a reading and . . . repeated rereadings of 'The Lord of the Rings' will help us with delight and courage 'to do what is in us for the succor of these years wherein we are set.' It is a most valuable un-understandable unreadable non-introduction to Tolkien lore."

P. J. Henniker-Heaton

Christian Science Monitor p7 My 23 '68 600w

Reviewed by F. M. Lauritsen

Library J 93:1889 My 1 '68 90w

"According to Mr. Ready, the current popularity of Tolkien among hippies, teen-agers, and others is due to the wrong reasons. Tolkien, he says, is fundamentally a conservative, facing head-on the very real problem of evil and writing his own folklore about it. . . . Ready's analysis of the Ring trilogy quickly leads to murkiness and all sorts of unresolved problems, but it is these very flaws that make Tolkien great. This book is not one that will necessarily follow the reading of the fantasies, but it does give biographical information (not easy to find), and, above all, considers the deeper levels of meaning in Tolkien's work."

Janet Strothman

Library J 93:2743 J1 '68 120w [YA]

"If [this] book accurately represents Mr. Ready's appreciation of Tolkien, it is a little difficult to see why he bothered. I am not speaking of merely annoying errors. . . . The real malaise lies deeper, in every word where, to praise Tolkien, Mr. Ready . . . intrudes his own personality and his own reactions—not inquiring (the subtitle is a lie), but stating; not rushing in . . . but stumping, sauntering in where greater and more perceptive critics would fear to tread. It is well to pass over Mr. Ready's own style . . . better yet to pass over his prejudices . . . which like the style are irrelevant when they are not absolutely intrusive; best of all to pass over the book entirely." J. C. Lobdell

Nat R 21:35 Ja 14 '69 160w

REAMAN, G. ELMORE. The trail of the Iroquois Indians; how the Iroquois nation saved Canada for the British Empire. 138p il maps $5.75 Barnes & Noble

970.3 Iroquois Indians

67-5697

"Reaman writes of the Iroquois from pre-historic times to the present with an emphasis on those Indians who settled on the Grand River in Canada after the American Revolution. His thesis is that the Iroquois have been depicted in an unfavorable light and that "The time is long overdue when they should be studied and appreciated as human beings of high ideals and not as 'lesser breeds.'" [He] devotes thirty pages to the prehistoric Iroquois and aspects of their culture, another thirty to the tribe from first contact to the middle of the American Revolution, and the remainder of the book to those Iroquois who went to the Grand River in Canada. Two ap-pendixes list biographies of some of the late nineteenth-and twentieth-century descendants." (J Am Hist)

"The in situ development of Iroquois culture is positively supported and the old lifeway described in some detail. Errors are minor. Relations with both the French and English are carefully examined. . . . Johnson's exploits and those of Molly and Joseph Brant and Handsome Lake, the Seneca prophet, are carefully described. . . . The final chapters are devoted to the plight of the Indians on the Canadian reserves and their acculturation. . . . Many illustrations (black and white), two maps, and facsimiles of letters written by Joseph Brant to John Wheelock are also included."

Choice 5:404 My '68 230w

"There is little doubt that this is a labor of love. Not only does [Reaman] pursue the familiar thesis that the Indians in general have been harshly treated by the European settlers in North America but he also takes the point of view that because of their particular merits the Iroquois in Canada deserve different treatment from the rest of the Indians in that country. . . . The book's subtitle, 'How the Iroquois Nation saved Canada for the British Empire,' apparently refers to the role of these Indians in the War of 1812, but the author devotes only five pages to that conflict. . . . Historians will find little that is new in the book." Reginald Horsman

J Am Hist 54:635 D '67 240w

RECK, ANDREW J. Introduction to William James; an essay and selected texts. 205p $6.50; pa $2.65 ind. univ. press

191 James, William

67-25137

"Originally written for the series 'Philosophes de Tous les Temps,' this book contains brief selections from William James and an editorial essay which comments on the selections. Mr. Reck, professor of philosophy at Tulane University, . . . gives the broad outline of James's philosophy. . . . [stressing its] contemporary relevance." (Library J) Chronology of James's life. Bibliography. Index.

"The 80-page introduction is clear, accurate, interesting, and indicates, whenever it is relevant, James' relation to French thought. . . . The selected texts, which amount to fewer than 100 pages, have been well chosen to interest a general reader, but in almost every case they consist of short sections from essays. Students can profit from the introduction but can form few competent judgments from the selections; it's a pity to bury an admirable introduction to James in an expensive and otherwise pointless volume."

Choice 5:972 O '68 160w

"[Mr. Reck has written a] systematic, accurate, and appropriately elementary essay . . . in good plain prose . . . [with] an adequate chronology and bibliography." B. P. Brennan

Library J 92:4421 D 1 '67 150w

RECK, MICHAEL. Ezra Pound; a close-up. 205p $5.95 McGraw 811 Pound, Ezra Loomis

67-22962

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Choice 5:344 My '68 120w

Reviewed by Louise Bogan

New Yorker 43:133 Mr 30 '68 80w

TLS p388 Ap 18 '68 400w

Reviewed by Alan Holder

Va Q R 44:337 spring '68 500w

RECK, RIMA DRELL, ed. Explorations of literature. 179p $3.50 La. state univ. press

809 Literature—History and criticism

66-21757

This "is a collection of essays by the members of Departments of English, Speech, and Foreign Languages at Louisiana State University." (Mod Lang J)

"The refined interests of these essays seem more suited to the concerns of graduate students than to undergraduates."

Choice 4:417 Je '67 80w

"Reck, the editor of this scholarly work and contributor of one of the essays, 'Flaubert's Artistic Wager,' has brought together a wide range of subjects which treat literary problems in works as early as John Gower's Confessio Amantis, and as recent as [F. S. K.] Fitzgerald's Tender is the Night [BRD 1934] and John Dos Passos' One Man's Initiation [BRD 1922]. . . . There is sufficient variety here to insure that almost any serious student of literature will find something of interest in the collection. What is especially impressive in all of these articles is the abundance of documentation that the authors supply to support their main theses. Here, then, we have sound scholarship which is certain to justify the claim of the flyleaf that it will 'stimulate further critical thought.' J. Z. Knopp

Mod Lang J 52:132 F '68 1200w

REDDING, SAUNDERS. The Negro. 101p il $3.75 Potomac bks.

301.451 Negroes—History 66-19024

"The seventh in a series designed to present concise reports of such aspects of American life as the farmer, education, cooperatives, and civil liberties. It summarizes the history of the Negro in the U.S. from 1619 to 1967, outlining what Redding sees as the effects on American Negroes of major social, economic, and political events as well as presenting his views on the present Negro revolution." (Choice) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"[The] book would serve as a sound introduction for anyone wholly uninformed about the Negro in the U. S., but would provide little in the way of information or insight for anyone who has read almost any other contemporary book on the same subject. . . . Suggestions for further reading are few but good."

Choice 5:230 Ap '68 160w

"To trace adequately the history of the Negro in the United States in less than 100 pages is an exercise in futility. Although Dr. Redding is a recognized scholar and authority on Negro life and history, this little book is too superficial to be of any real value." Edward Mapp
Library J 93:201 Ja 15 '68 150w

REDEKOP, JOHN HAROLD. The American far right: a case study of Billy James Hargis and Christian crusade. 232p $4.50 Eerdmans

323.2 U.S.—Politics and government—20th century. Hargis, Billy James. Right and left (Political science). Christian Crusade 67-28375

This study begins with "a survey of Hargis' opinions as expressed in his published statements. [It] then proceeds to an examination of the sources for Hargis' doctrine . . . [and] concludes with an assessment of Hargis' place in society and a summary evaluation of both Hargis and of the Far Right in general." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index of subjects. Index of persons.

"Redekop very nearly accomplishes that which may actually be impossible: the analysis of the ideas of Billy James Hargis as if they emanated from a mind which had mastered the processes of logical thought. . . . While presenting literally hundreds of . . . insults to the intelligence . . . Redekop is able to keep his balance almost completely, as he traces the sources of 'Hargisism' to Christian fundamentalism, militant Americanism and to various of the troubles of our time, and places his subject in the Christian conservative and extremist traditions in America. . . . The author has done his homework well, intelligently interpolating material from diverse sources, and he deserves much credit for his willingness to peruse reams of the dulllest polemics imaginable. . . . Although his own lack of sympathy with Hargis' crusade and the ideas which motivate it is apparent, the utter fairness of Redekop's analysis must be commended." R. A. Schoenberger
Am Pol Sci 62:982 S '68 900w

"Refreshingly, this case study . . . employs serious and responsible analysis rather than the free-swinging, irresponsible condemnation often applied to the far right. In a well written foreword Senator Mark Hatfield affirms what the far right often denies—that 'the democratic process must be . . . guided by rational political discussion.' . . . Fully half of this volume is devoted to the political views of Hargis, especially his writings. But Redekop's chief contribution is his explanation of 'Hargisism.' In this context Redekop uses Hargis as a type or model of the far right. . . . There have been much carelessness and slovenliness in dealing with Hargis and the far right in the past. Redekop rightly calls us to responsible analysis." George Shriver

Christian Century 85:920 J1 17 '68 410w

REDFERN, W. D. The private world of Jean Giono. 203p $6.75 Duke Univ. press

843 Giono, Jean 67-20396

A "critical study of the prose-poet of Provence who set up a sanctuary of myths and words against the mechanization of the modern world. From Naissance de l'Odysée through Jean le Bleu to Le Poids du Ciel Redfern emphasizes Giono's concern for natural, instinctual living, the horror of war, and an apocalyptic reaction to the State and the Church. . . . His passion for living freely with nature is compared to Rousseau, to his idol Stendhal, and to his contemporaries Gide and Camus." (Choice) Bibliography.

"[This splendid critical study] is an articulate synthesis of Giono's thought and style, highly recommended, and with an excellent bibliography."

Choice 5:349 My '68 130w

"Dr. Redfern is well aware of Jean Giono's weaknesses. . . . His book would be more digestible if it were less emphatic, but the critic seems to have been contaminated by Giono's verbal aggression and the short, confident sentences follow one another so unrelentingly that arguments seldom develop. Moreover Dr. Redfern is in such a hurry that he sometimes has to invent words to speed him on his way. . . . But he has rightly tried to strip off the 'regionalist' label which has often been pasted over this oddly sedentary novelist and to stress that he is above all a creative liar and an extreme reactionary."

TLS p491 Je 1 '67 250w

REDSLOB, EDWIN, ed. The Berlin-Dahlem gallery; great paintings from the former Kaiser Friedrich museum; with an introd. and commentary; tr. from the German by Sophie Wilkins. 242p il col il $35 Macmillan (N Y)

759.43 Paintings—Catalogs. Berlin. Museum Dahlem 67-19551

This "volume was prepared for the bicentennial of the Berlin-Dahlem gallery in 1963. . . . [The editor offers a] history of the gallery and a commentary on the painters and paintings in the collection. Paintings included range from 13th-Century panels, a . . . collection of Flemish painters, Rembrandt, Dürer, through to 18th-Century rococo canvases." (Library J)

"This folio sized volume gives a pictorial record of the once proud collection of the Kaiser Friedrich Museum of which the larger portion is now in the museum in Dahlem (West Berlin). . . . The color plates as well as the black and white ones are of the finest quality, excellent details provide experiences which the roving eye of the spectator never can obtain for himself. The comments of . . . Redslob maintain a very high level throughout and are a pleasure to read." Alfred Neumeyer J Aesthetics 27:119 fall '68 110w

"Previous catalogs of the Kaiser Friedrich art collections . . . are valued more for historical data than for current holdings because of the intervention of World War II. This is the first catalog published of the Berlin-Dahlem Gallery holdings. Necessary for art collections, and recommended for large public libraries." Delores McCollm

Library J 93:1130 Mr 15 '68 130w

REED, DAVID. Up front in Vietnam. 217p $3.95 Funk

959.7 Vietnamese Conflict, 1961- 67-29883

A collection of anecdotes selected to "reveal the experiences of the individual combatant." (Sat R)

"This collection of anecdotes catches in prose the panorama of Americans at war, catches it so vividly that the reader is left with the sensation that he has just put down a Life photographic essay. . . . The reader joins a tiger stalking a United States patrol, which is in turn stalking the Viet Cong; he flies with Phantom jets and helicopters; and encounters Medevac crews who sacrifice themselves and their ships to evacuate every wounded GI

REED, DAVID—Continued

... Propaganda, but not jingoistic, the anecdotes are full of blood and cruelty. In giving the names, places, units, and battles of Americans involved, Mr. Reed has produced in this too-slim book a wonderful gift to rekindle pride and remembrance in the minds of returned servicemen." J. W. Delonas

Library J 92:4153 N 15 '67 190w

"Though Reed does not deal explicitly with the domestic or international implications of the Vietnam conflict, they emerge in his skillful account of individual incidents. ... The Americans who want a better understanding of Vietnam in terms of human beings and their experiences can profit from [this] book." R. H. Field

Sat R 51:34 F 17 '68 80w

REED, GWENDOLYN, comp. Out of the ark; an anthology of animal verse; drawings by Gabriele Margules. 228p $5.75 Atheneum pubs.

808.81 Animals—Poetry—Juvenile literature. Poetry—Collections—Juvenile literature 68-12228

This collection covers "animals—real, extinct, or mythical ... the unicorn, the bunyip, ... cranes, mice, and a host of others ... [by such poets as] Theodore Roethke, W. B. Yeats, Chaucer, Robert Graves, Walt Whitman, the Chinese poet Po Chui, Marianne Moore, John Clare, Thomas Gray, [and] Rainer Maria Rilke." (Publisher's note) Author-title index. "Grades six to nine." (Library J)

Reviewed by Ethna Sheehan
America 119:658 D 21 '68 40w

Reviewed by Martha Bacon
Atlantic 222:153 D '68 120w

"A splendid anthology of verse, animal verse by adults, originally for adults, but suitable for children." Melvin Maddocks

Christian Science Monitor pB9 (children's issue) My 2 '68 140w

"The poems in this collection are either too esoteric or too sophisticated for most young readers. The volume will attract older children who already have a feeling for and familiarity with poetry. ... The great mixture of moods and styles is unified by the format. Imagination and taste characterize the well-designed pages; the marvelous line drawings provide continuity. Obscure words are unobtrusively defined, and the notes at the back of the book are of incidental interest." S. D. L.

Horn Bk 44:434 Ag '68 130w

"The poets represented span the centuries, from the 7th B.C. to the present, in myriad moods. The random arrangement and graceful impressionistic sketches ... [invite browsing]. Cole's The Birds and the Beasts Were There [BRD 1963], with striking woodcuts by Helen Siegl, has a wider appeal by including more light verse and more poems for younger readers. However, both collections have many choice offerings for mature readers, and there are only seven selections duplicated in the two anthologies." Priscilla Moxom

Library J 93:[3326] S 15 '68 130w

Reviewed by Walker Gibson
N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p44 My 5 '68 60w

Reviewed by Philip Morrison
Sci Am 219:128 D '68 100w [YA]

REES, DÉSIRÉE EDWARDS. See Edwards-Rees, D.

REES, ENNIS. Brer Rabbit and his tricks; drawings by Edward Gorey. unpag lib bdg $3.95 Scott, W.R.

398.2 Folklore—U.S.—Juvenile literature. Folklore, Negro—Juvenile literature. Animals—Stories 67-21800

The author provides a rhymed verse rendition of three Brer Rabbit tales: The Tar Baby, Hello, House!, and Winnianimus Grass. "Grades four to five." (Library J)

"A cheer should go to Ennis Rees for bravely confronting and ... felicitously reviving three of the best Brer Rabbit tales. ... Stripped of the dialect which some found offensive and others obscure [his rendition] manages to retain much of the pace and flavor of these African folk tales transposed to the American South by Negro slaves. ... Possessed of a good ear for lively language, Rees preserves many of the best words and images. The tales' lesson that the small and weak can, with wit and wile, subdue the large and powerful is sure to fall on receptive little ears. Gorey's Spartan taintypes, rendered in mellow shades of molasses and corn pone, keep what was best in Arthur Frost's original drawings and seem exactly right." S. G. Lanes

Book World p26 N 12 '67 280w

"Gorey's illustrations are tremendously well done, incorporating the suggestion of movement into the static line of near-primitive prints, and he uses color, costume and characterizing postures in a way that will keep small children both amused and informed. The text is enough to make students of Uncle Remus weep. Mr. Rees is an indefatigable rhymester. ... The best you can say about his total body of work is that he's always been lucky in his illustrators. These three ... tales are strong enough to resist his tampering and, given today's sensitivities about Southern Plantation Negro dialect as well as the dearth of storytellers capable of handling it, these scrubbed and rub-a-dub-dubbed rhymed versions ... may be as close as this generation of listeners ever gets to Brer Rabbit. The rhymes and meters are pedestrian, the tricks as kooky as ever and this is that rare book where the illustrator makes the purchase worthwhile." L. N. Gerhardt

Library J 93:1803 Ap 15 '68 190w

Reviewed by M. L. Bird
N Y Times Bk R p36 O 15 '67 170w

"The character of Brer Rabbit is so engaging in itself and so typical of the sly and clever hero of animal tales in the folklore of the world that it is a pleasure to see his ploys and coups described in a simplified style. ... The verse has rhythm and humor, echoed by the elegant understatement of the Gorey illustrations. For reading aloud to ages 5-8." Zena Sutherland

Sat R 51:34 Ja 27 '68 100w

REESINK, MARYKE. The two windmills; 1l. by Georgette Apol. unp $3.95 Harcourt 67-6406

This tale set in Holland is "about a good miller, in a nice white windmill with his wife and nine children, and a bad miller across the fields alone in a dirty grey windmill, with his disagreeable wife. The stingy miller tries to ruin his cheery rival, but an Act of God turns evil to good and brings repentance and a happy ending." (TLS) "Grades one to three." (Library J)

"The bad miller (gray windmill, sour wife and no children) seems destined to triumph, via wicked machinations, over the good miller (spanking white windmill with national flag flying, rosy-cheeked wife and nine cheery offspring). ... Perhaps the very young thrive on such black-and-white tales, where even the artist's palette underscores the moral coloration. But, alas, the good are not always cheerful and bright, and national flags fly in bad as well as noble causes. This reader favors verisimilitude, even for four-year-olds!" S. G. Lanes

Book World p26 N 12 '67 150w

"The theme, not a new one, ... is here treated with originality. ... The illustrations, all doublespreads reflecting dramatically the moods of the characters and of the weather, have a definite homespun quality. The young child will be left with a real feeling for life in the Dutch countryside." M. M.

Horn Bk 43:745 D '67 130w

Reviewed by N. Y. Orr
Library J 92:3842 O 15 '67 100w
TLS p1148 N 30 '67 90w

REEVE, F. D. The red machines. 191p $3.95 Morrow 68-18105

"This is the story of one day in the lives of several dozen men members of an itinerant combine crew and their families, who follow the ripening wheat from Texas to Saskatchewan. ... [During the day] an old truck driver, Blue, dies and is given a makeshift burial. The tenor of the day is rudely interrupted, but only for a moment." (Library J)

Reviewed by J. W. Hattman
Best Sel! 28:101 Je 1 '68 400w

Reviewed by J. C. Pine
Library J 93:1163 Mr 15 '68 240w

"[This] is a good book. For what has been put in place of the now conventional sensational, are the implicit signs, rendered through a style cool and austere, of all that is inescapable in human life: desire, fear, boredom, weariness, rage, hope, death. . . . For part of the time, beginning the novel, [the characters] may strike the reader as being more or less indistinguishable from one another. . . . Yet as the book develops, the sweating, swearing, obscure, dull, beer-drinking men begin to live as human beings. . . . A strange and wonderful thing happens in this novel: . . . out of nothing come not merely characters but people. Nothing greatly dramatic happens to any of them. . . . Yet all of them engage our sympathy, our pity, our sense of fellow-humanity." Edward Abbey

N Y Times Bk R p46 My 26 '68 800w

"Faceless, flat characters . . . occupy Mr. Reeve in his materialistic first novel reflecting the consequences of a hard, bitter life and unrelenting toil. All concerned are tough, foul-mouthed individuals in a yarn that begins abruptly and trails off to an inconclusive, undramatic, and not entirely satisfying terminal point."

Va Q R 44:cxlv autumn '68 70w

REEVES, JAMES. Rhyming Will: il. by Edward Ardizzone. $3.50; lib bdg $3.28 McGraw

68-12425

Set in eighteenth century England, this is "about a small boy who can speak only in rhyme. He is so ridiculed at home that he runs away. He is welcomed in London where there are 'many stranger characters' and is happy until his gift deserts him at a critical moment." (Book World) "Grades one to three." (Library J)

"An English poet and an English artist combine forces to create a lovely period piece. . . . Double-spread pages in water colors alternate with Ardizzone's black and white to create the England of an earlier day, when a king could ask help from a cobbler. This will be most successful with the senior set of pre-school group." Anne Izard

Book World p7 (children's issue) My 5 '68 100w

Reviewed by M. L. Birmingham
Commonweal 88:302 My 24 '68 50w

"Although action is low-keyed and the curing of Will's affliction seems implausible, this slight story should briefly divert children who are themselves discovering the pleasures of rhyming." Elva Harmon

Library J 93:2731 JI '68 100w

TLS p1148 N 30 '67 120w

REGAN, RICHARD J. Conflict and consensus: religious freedom and the second Vatican council. 212p $5.95 Macmillan (N Y)

261.7 Vatican Council, 2d. Declaratio de libertate religiosa. Church and state 67-19679

"The aim of the present study is principally historical, to record and evaluate the principal events surrounding the framing of the Declaration on Religious Freedom for the service of future theological and political analysts." (Intro) Chronology. Index.

Commonweal 87:390 D 22 '67 120w

"While he was writing this legislative history of the Declaration on Religious Freedom, Father Regan, a specialist in political science, not only discussed the principal issues with Father John Courtney Murray, the chief architect of the document, but he had access to Father Murray's personal files containing preliminary drafts and other material not yet published. He is thus able to outline the gradual development of the Declaration, point out reasons for changes, and interpret the discussion of the Council. For any library that wishes to maintain a scholarly collection on the Council." W. C. Heiser

Library J 92:3044 S 15 '67 90w

REICH, HANNS. Animals of many lands. unnp il $3.95 Hill & Wang

591 Animals—Pictures, illustrations, etc. 67-25685

A "photographic bestiary that takes in the seven continents and the seven seas." (Library J)

"The editor has collected from varied sources beautiful animal shots, but without clear rhyme or reason. Short captions, all gathered together at the front of the book, sometimes give no more information than the pictures; for example, 'Orangutan behind bars.' They are always too brief to be of much informational value or to have any literary quality. The book lacks organization and fails to tell in what continent or sea most of the animals are found. Perhaps it would be of use as a children's book for rainy days. Only for libraries wanting odds and ends of attractive animal photographs." C. P. May

Library J 92:3031 S 15 '67 110w

Library J 93:1828 Ap 15 '68 50w [YA]

"Black-and-white photography . . . has been having hard sledding in the children's book field. Animals of Many Lands is this medium's closest and most satisfying approach to excellence, both in content and reproduction quality. . . . Unlike many animal picture books, this one, selected from the work of several photographers, is not merely a succession of ordinary portrait and behavioral shots. It communicates visual excitement as well. Its appeal, like the circus, is as much for parents as for children—an ideal picture album for the whole family." Jacob Deschin

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p62 N 5 '67 100w

REICH, HANNS, ed. Mexico; text by Hans Leuenberger; phot. by Thomas Cugini [and others]. 124p $7.95 Hill & Wang

917.2 Mexico—Description and travel

68-18848

This collection of photographs is preceded by "a short descriptive text of the history of Mexico from pre-Columbian times to the present." (Library J)

"For anyone planning to attend the forthcoming Olympics in Mexico City, or preparing for an end-of-summer trip to Mexico, or for the armchair [traveler] who has no such plans, this handsome book . . . is strongly recommended. A brief and eminently readable text precedes the collection of exceptionally lucid photographic illustrations, which give a remarkably varied look at the land and people and places of Mexico. . . . The book was printed in Switzerland, presumably in several different language editions, which will account for the fact that the captions for the plates are contained in a three-page fold-out at the back of the book. There is also a page of maps."

Best Sell 28:204 Ag 15 '68 200w

"The 124 photographs here, all but six of them in black and white, by Thomas Cugini, Arpad Elfer, Armin Haab, and others . . . show originality and avoid trite interpretations. . . . Many of the views are familiar to readers who have visited Mexico and will bring nostalgic memories in addition to . . . up-to-date scenes of a rapidly changing country. . . . These photographs are representative of the people and their way of life. This is a highly entertaining book for travelers and general readers." L. B. McCauley

Library J 93:2495 Je 15 '68 170w

Reviewed by John Canaday

N Y Times Bk R p6 D 1 '68 180w

REICH, HANNS. The world from above; introd. & texts by Oto Bihalji-Merin; other texts by Rudolph Braunburg and Klaus Völger. 103p il col il $7.50 Hill & Wang

910 Views. Photography, Aerial 67-26851

This collection of aerial photographs, including some by Reich, is arranged in "five sections: 'The Origins of the Earth' (volcanoes, glaciers, rivers); 'Man Changes the Face of the Earth' (agriculture, mining); 'Urbanization and Human Housing' (cities, highways, houses, fortifications, and nature and agricultural shots); . . . 'Vision of Art'; . . . and 'Pictorial Reports from the Universe' (spaceage pictures). In the introduction Bihalji-Merin gives historical background, Braunburg gives a subjective view, and Völger provides technical information on aerial photography." (Library J) Originally published as Die Welt von oben.

"To show us our world from the air, Reich has collected here strikingly handsome and generally informative aerial photographs. . . . Captions (a few are missing) are separated from the pictures, which makes using them difficult; some merely supply identification. The captions that include details add to the reader's knowledge of his world and/or aerial photography. An interesting book for large and medium-sized libraries to consider." C. P. May

REICH, HANNS—Continued

Library J 92:4144 N 15 '67 170w

Reviewed by Regina Minudri

Library J 93:1825 Ap 15 '68 80w [YA]

"Aerial photographs presented frankly as objects of beauty—abstract, metaphorical and revealing. A hundred in black and white and a handful in color, these photographs, with a few pages of critical text, set out to dazzle the eye and the mind. They succeed all too easily. . . . The book is all artifice of choice and viewpoint, beautifully contrived."

Sci Am 218:144 Ap '68 80w

REICH, WILHELM. Reich speaks out on Freud; Wilhelm Reich discusses his work and his relationship with Sigmund Freud; ed. by Mary Higgins and Chester M. Raphael; with tr. from the German by Therese Pol. 296p il $5.95 Noonday

150.19 Freud, Sigmund 67-27519

"This book consists of an edited transcript of the tape-recorded interview conducted for historical purposes by Dr. Kurt R. Eissler for the Sigmund Freud Archives with Dr. Reich at his Rangeley, Maine laboratory on October 18 and 19, 1952. There is also a 'Documentary Supplement' comprising well over half the book and consisting of letters, excerpts from Reich's diaries, and other papers which help round out the record of the [psychoanalyst] . . . who claimed he was more of a true follower of Freud than so many who have that reputation." (Library J)

"Historians will surely have to study this revealing and often bitter work and even laymen with some rudimentary background in psychology and psychiatry will find it a strangely compelling book with unique details—and good gossip—about the astonishing band of men who made the Freudian revolution." Allan Angoff

Library J 93:760 F 15 '68 330w

"This book will undoubtedly seem a strange concoction. . . . Much the most interesting part of it consists of [the] tape-recorded interviews . . . between Eissler and Reich [which] will remain an important source of raw materials for all serious students of psychoanalysis. . . . In terms of its structure, Reich Speaks of Freud belongs to the category of non-book. . . . The editors have not properly integrated [the various] material for the general reader. On the other hand, this book will be appreciated by those who need no such introduction and who would relish uncensored contact with one of Freud's most brilliant if erratic pupils." Paul Roazen

Nation 206:510 Ap 15 '68 1200w

"Wilhelm Reich, once one of Freud's most promising disciples, made several brilliant contributions to analytic theory, but these have been largely overshadowed by the tragedy of his later career. . . . In 1934, without formal explanation, he was expelled from the International Psychoanalytical Association. . . . Oddly enough, no mention of Reich's imprisonment or death is made in this volume, which was edited by two members of Reich's still existing Orgone Institute. One may charitably conclude that they prefer to remember Reich for his early contributions."

N Y Times R p26 F 18 '68 230w

REID, B. L. The man from New York; John Quinn and his friends. 708p pl $12.50 Oxford

B or 92 Quinn, John 68-29724

This biography of the New York lawyer who amassed a great collection of modern European art and helped to organize the Armory Show in 1913 is based on Quinn's correspondence with such writers and artists as William Butler Yeats, Ezra Pound and Augustus John. The author tries "to show the concurrence of his concurrent lives—as lawyer, Irish-American patriot, patron of writers, patron of artists." (Pref) Bibliography. Index.

"[The book] is almost too much concerned with [Quinn's] correspondence and may prove to be too long and meaty for the average reader. Notes, a Selected Bibliography, and Index will make this definitive study easy to refer to." Richard Conlin

Best Sell 28:346 N 15 '68 500w

"[Quinn's] service in the cause of modernism and his career as one of the greatest collectors of modern art are fully recorded in this massive, detailed and quotation-packed biography. . . . Reid's reluctance to surmise the nature of the man, the human being, is understandable, though disappointing. This biography is unquestionably the definitive story of Quinn. . . . But anyone wanting a somewhat livelier, even if less complete, picture . . . must still go to the chapter on Quinn in Mrs. [A.] Saarinen's The Proud Possessors [BRD 1959]. It is the solid achievement of Reid's book, however, . . . that the lives of the artists and writers whom [Quinn] befriended and who wrote to him should be extended and illuminated through this volume. . . . These letters to John Quinn are the greatest value of Mr. Reid's book." J. M. Edelstein

New Repub 159:36 D 14 '68 800w

"[This is] a great big doorstep of a book, written in a flat-footed style that says much for Reid's impartiality as a scholar, but little for his ability to humanize his subject. . . . [It] is really the biography of a correspondence in which Quinn the man remains largely obscured. This is not entirely Reid's fault. . . . Quinn wrote more than five thousand letters. . . . [to] well over fifty persons of note, including all of the important figures in the Irish literary revival; . . . most of the French modernists; and Americans such as Walt Kuhn and James H. H. Necker. Yet [he] was by no means a good letter writer and he revealed very little about himself. . . . Mr. Reid has done as much as anyone can do in clearing a path to the enigmatic figure whose life was enclosed in a forest of books, paintings, and, above all, words." David Dempsey

N Y Times Bk R p1 N 10 '68 4600w

REID, GEORGE K. Pond life; a guide to common plants and animals of North American ponds and lakes; under the editorship of Herbert S. Zim and George S. Fichter; il. by Sally D. Kaicher and Tom Dolan. 160p goldencraft ed $2.99; pa $1 Golden press

574.92 Fresh-water biology 67-16477

Fishes, "plants, insects, amphibians, birds, and snakes are among the hundreds of life forms whose appearance, habits, and habitats are described . . . and illustrated with nearly 500 . . . little color pictures." (Sat R) Bibliography. Index.

"Librarians and teachers will be pleased to see this newest nature guide. Bound in bright buckram (in the larger format which has replaced the former pocket-book size), this is a useful new reference tool. . . . Although a few of the illustrations and some of the content can be found in other titles in the [Golden Nature Guide] series. . . . The material has been completely reorganized and rewritten, with much that is new in both pictures and text. . . . Grade four and up." Della Thomas

Library J 93:874 F 15 '68 150w

Reviewed by D. M. Glixon
Sat R 50:41 N 18 '67 60w

REID, J. M. Traveller extraordinary; the life of James Bruce of Kinnaird [maps by W. Bromage]. 320p pl $6.95 Norton

B or 92 Bruce, James. Ethiopia—Description and travel 68-16563

The eighteenth century biographee was a young man "with intense curiosity about his fellow man, a talent for languages and art, and wealth to finance his urge to travel. His post-school tour of Europe grew into 12 years of wandering through the Near East, Arabia, and into Africa. His profusely illustrated account of life in unknown Ethiopia, his collections of ancient manuscripts, his archaeological research, his studies of fauna and flora are included in this account." (Library J) Index.

"The name of Bruce is a time-honored one in Scotland, and the James Bruce . . . of the present book more than holds his own in history. . . . General readers will enjoy this book. Recommended for public libraries, and for pertinent collections in other libraries." E. L. Yonge

Library J 93:2869 Ag '68 110w

Reviewed by Christopher Wordsworth
New Statesman 76:85 Jl 19 '68 400w

"Bruce's extraordinary journeys in Ethiopia and what is now the Sudan occupied the better part of five years, and are remarkable not only for hardships and choses vues, but also for the degree to which the traveller himself became involved with the personalities he encountered. . . . Mr. Reid, in writing the first work on Bruce to appear for many years, has tackled an exciting, yet at the same time most difficult subject. . . . [The narrative] cannot fail to hold the attention and send a number of readers back to Bruce's own quartos. . . . Curiously enough, it is the earlier parts of Mr. Reid's book, describing Bruce's bereavement and his first steps in travelling as a robust and insubordinate consul in Tunis, that are the best. Later there are signs of flagging as scene follows rapidly on scene, and strange, outlandish characters crowd into, and disappear from, the story. This is confirmed by the appearance of a small rash of minor inaccuracies in the course of the last few pages."

TLS p1010 S 12 '68 850w

REID, RANDALL. The fiction of Nathanael West; no redeemer, no promised land. 174p $4.50 Univ. of Chicago press 813 West, Nathanael 67-30949

A critical study in which the author argues that West was not "one to embrace systematic and simple views of popular culture; [but] rather, parodied what he saw without condescension and diagnosed the failures of society without becoming clinical." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by J. F. Light
Am Lit 40:421 N '68 450w

"This is distinguished by its thoroughness, its lack of cant, and its sensible appraisals, which are given to neither unwarranted enthusiasms nor denigrations. . . . Perhaps the most engrossing and valuable contribution of the book is the detailed tracing of West's borrowing from the decadents, particularly Huysman, Huxley, Joyce, and others. Less plausibly argued is the influence of Dostoevsky's Crime and Punishment. . . . [This study] will probably become the standard work on West's novels."

Choice 5:626 J1 '68 170w

Reviewed by C. A. Raines
Library J 93:554 F 1 '68 170w

"Although Reid is not inclined to make too much of literary influences, he does a thorough and illuminating job. He refuses to regard West as primarily a precursor of 'black humor' and other contemporary fashions. . . . The book is less stimulating than Stanley Edgar Hyman's pamphlet in the University of Minnesota series—with which Reid has various quarrels—but it is a good sound job." Granville Hicks

Sat R 51:25 Je 22 '68 250w

"This is the first good critical study of Nathanael West to appear since James F. Light's Nathanael West: An Interpretative Study [BRD 1962], and it moves beyond that earlier excellent study into West's use of parody to arrive at a richer and fuller understanding of that dark genius's vision. . . . Professor Reid finds real harmony in manner and matter in West; he has done a valuable job in showing us the nature of the enigma that perhaps cannot be solved."

Va Q R 44:cxiii summer '68 230w

REIDEL, MARLENE. Jacob and the robbers. unp il $4.50 Atheneum pubs. 67-19007

"Jacob is a moonwalker. . . . At night, by the light of the moon, Jacob can do wondrous things. He can walk on roofs and walls. He can stand on one foot in high places." On such a night, Jacob, from atop the weather-vane spinning above the church steeple, spies robbers in the village and by his warning foils their dastardly deed. [Originally published in 1965 in Germany.] Kindergarten to grade two." (Library J)

"[This book is a] vehicle to demonstrate artistic virtuosity and [is] almost entirely devoid of sustained narrative appeal. . . . [Moreover, it] attains, through its somber coloring and controlled prose, a folkish feel." Richard Kluger

Book World pt 2, p7 (children's issue) N 5 '67 40w

"The illustrations are appropriately blue and purple with touches of acid yellow suggesting all the romantic magic of darkness and of a boy who answers the call of the moon." Pamela Marsh

Christian Science Monitor pB3 N 2 '67 50w

Horn Bk 43:584 O '67 140w

"Strong woodcuts in deep, moonlit colors are the distinctive feature of this [book which] is well suited to readaloud sessions." G. B. Herman

Library J 92:3180 S 15 '67 110w

Reviewed by Eve Merriam

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p70 N 5 '67 50w

REIN, MARTIN, Jr. auth. Dilemmas of social reform. See Marris, P.

REINGOLD, NATHAN, ed. Science in nineteenth-century America; a documentary history. 339p il $5.95; pa $2.45 Hill & Wang

509.73 Science and state. Science—History. Scientists 64-24830

"Through personal letters and other biographical material [with connecting passages by the editor] the reader is introduced to the private lives, achievements, and scandals of a . . . scientific community, struggling for recognition in the world at large. The steady march of professionalism, the roles of the army and navy as patrons of American science, and the relationship of science to high finance are [described]." (TLS)

"For purposes of orderly presentation Reingold groups most of his materials under two broad headings, The Geophysical Tradition and The Natural History Tradition, both viewed as subheadings of 'geographical science.' . . . On the whole, the letters are well chosen. The reader catches glimpses of William Maclure mixing science and social reform, of Joseph Henry struggling to make a place for research at the Smithsonian Institution, of Gray and Dana corresponding with Darwin, of Newcomb and Michelson planning experiments on the speed of light. How much these glimpses will mean to readers unacquainted with the history of science is problematical, but they will almost certainly prove highly useful to students in history of science courses." J. C. Greene

Science 160:638 My 10 '68 1100w

"[This admirable book is characterized by the] typically American obsession with the relative advantages of applied over theoretical science. . . . But there are scores of subtler historical truths to be drawn from this collection, one of the most remarkable things about which is that few of its items have been previously published. . . . One might almost say that the book is necessary reading, if not sufficient, for anyone wishing to understand contemporary American science. This is, however, essentially a sourcebook of past American history. It is not in itself a history, although the editorial connecting passages, all attractively written, provide it with a unity which many historians might envy."

TLS p339 Ap 20 '67 240w

REINHOLD, H. A. H. A. R. the autobiography of Father Reinhold. 150p $4.50 Herder & Herder

B or 92

67-29678

"In the first part Fr. Reinhold writes of his youth, education, military service in World War I and apostolate in Germany until he fled the Hitler regime. In the second part he recounts his life in the United States, ending his narrative, except for a one-page epilogue, with his difficulties with the Bishop of Yakima in 1956. A foreword is contributed by W. H. Auden." (America)

"To many readers, this book can only appear unfortunate. Loosely organized, the text skips about, leaving too many people and events inadequately explained. More disturbing are ex parte attacks on individuals. . . . One regrets that battles fought long ago must now be so infelicitously revived. . . . A biographer of Fr. Reinhold's notable and historic contributions may find in this slim volume a clue to his personality, but he will find little else." Maurice Adelman

America 118:163 F 3 '68 220w

"One picks up [this autobiography] expecting to find a review of the liturgical developments to which [Father Reinhold] contributed so significantly and which culminated in the [Vatican] Council victory. And if one also found in this review a certain pride of accomplishment, it would be . . . justifiable. . . . But there is no note of gratification here. Nor, indeed, is there discussion about the Council. . . . [The book] is more a political than a liturgical narrative. But it is no less interesting as a result. . . . It is just as important that his witness against Nazism as a young priest in Germany be accorded the permanence of book form." John Deedy

REINHOLD, H. A.—Continued

Commonweal 87:598 F 16 '68 700w

Reviewed by Audrey Cahill
Library J 93:1471 Ap 1 '68 300w

REISCHAUER, EDWIN O. Beyond Vietnam: the United States and Asia. 242p $4.95 Knopf

327.73 U.S.—Foreign relations—Asia, Asia
—Foreign relations—U.S. 67-25614

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by G. G. Bauroth
Am Pol Sci R 62:685 Je '68 450w

Reviewed by R. H. Solomon
Bul Atomic Sci 24:39 Je '68 1250w
Choice 5:267 Ap '68 150w

Reviewed by F. J. Johnson
Nat R 20:146 F 13 '68 500w

REITER, ELMAR R. Jet streams; how do they affect our weather? 189p il $5.95; pa $1.25 Doubleday

551.5 Meteorology 67-12894

The "professor of atmospheric sciences at Colorado State University . . . provides a summary for the layman of those aspects of meteorology and meteorological instrumentation germane to a discussion of jet streams. Then he proceeds to an . . . explanation of the connections between weather at the earth's surface and these . . . powerful air currents of the upper atmosphere." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"A lively, lucid introduction to atmospheric motions intended for the nonspecialist. . . . Well illustrated with photographs and many clear line drawings. Detailed index; an appendix giving a little basic trigonometry; and a brief list of suggested reading."

Choice 5:372 My '68 110w

"Although all elementary facts needed by the intelligent novice are included, Mr. Reiter does not avoid or oversimplify the difficult parts of his subject. This is no book for lazy, armchair browsing; the reader must invest some serious mental effort to get full value from it. Mr. Reiter's occasional humorous asides add more zest to this well-written book. I recommend it highly for public, college, and university libraries." J. W. Weigel

Library J 93:198 Je 15 '68 150w

REITER, SEYMOUR. A study of Shelley's poetry. 335p $8.95 Univ. of N.Mex. press

821 Shelley, Percy Bysshe 67-22735

This combination of literary criticism and biographical detail attempts an "explication of Shelley's major poetry. . . . The central portion of the book is . . . [an] analysis of Prometheus Unbound. . . . [The author seeks to] show how many of Shelley's intellectual ideas and concerns are restated in the twentieth century." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"This explication . . . is intended for the undergraduate but seems to be the stepchild of a dissertation. Its approach is not novel, and its thesis is simply that Shelley is a good poet. . . . The treatment of certain poems is sketchy. . . . The occasional discussions of Shelley's versification are inadequate at best (there is a confusion of rhythm and meter throughout). Nevertheless, some of the explications, particularly that of Prometheus Unbound, would be useful to the undergraduate."

Choice 4:1245 Ja '68 200w

"Reiter's study of Shelley's poems has the ambivalence common to many works of its kind. The simple and seminal aim of disentangling the poet's meaning for the student reader is itself partly entangled with the eagerness to present a personal view or . . .

to pronounce on some other examiner's opinion. [The author] allows himself the . . . privilege of expounding only where he pleases, and letting off other poems with a brief announcement."

TLS p182 F 22 '68 800w

REMBAR, CHARLES. The end of obscenity; the trials of Lady Chatterley, Tropic of Cancer and Fanny Hill. 528p $8.95 Random house

343 Obscenity (Law). Trials 67-12743

"An attorney describes his experiences with obscenity cases. . . . [He recounts] his presentation of the court cases, analyses of the related problems, explanations of legal terms, and legal strategy. . . . [It is his belief] that the whole idea of literary obscenity will eventually disappear from our society." (Library J) Index.

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 221:122 Je '68 110w

Reviewed by J. B. Cullen

Best Sell 28:191 Ag 1 '68 700w

"If Charles Rembar wanted to prove that he is a vigorous, vain and able attorney, his brief has succeeded. However, he claims that he acted for freedom and literature. . . . It is not only his pretentiousness which disturbs me. The means Rembar used for his end are repulsive: he assigned, or permitted, reputable literary critics to testify that repression of the works he defended would be a loss to literature. Now, Lady Chatterley's Lover is a very bad novel—by a very good writer. . . . Though I can see no reason for suppressing it, neither do I see why literature should be made to look silly by the pretense that Lady Chatterley's Lover is a valuable part of it." Ernest van den Haag

Book World p16 Jl 28 '68 750w

Christian Century 85:789 Je 12 '68 50w

Reviewed by A. M. Bickel

Commentary 46:97 N '68 2300w

Reviewed by Wallace Mendelson

J Am Hist 55:690 D '68 500w

"This excellent work should be in public libraries, and should also be most important for library schools as required reading in book selection courses." H. I. Schotz

Library J 93:1495 Ap 1 '68 130w

Reviewed by Irving Younger

Nation 207:184 S 2 '68 850w

"[Rembar's] book deals not with the why of obscenity laws but with the how, and as a result often has a freshness that little recent writing on the subject can match. . . . The story of his oral argument before the Supreme Court in the Fanny Hill case is especially dramatic and enlightening, and many of his anecdotal digressions into history and law are sharp and amusing. Rembar, however, displays an uncomfortable lack of modesty in describing the victory of what he calls 'my theory' or 'our argument.' . . . Legal detail plays a large—and not always consistent—role in [this book]. Rembar engages in endless explanations of small points of law . . . as if he were writing for a junior-college audience. Yet the intricate discussions of the cases carried through all appellate levels could be of continuous interest only to lawyers and specialists. Further editing might have sharpened these sections. More important, Rembar's concluding optimism is questionable." Leon Friedman

New Repub 158:31 Je 22 '68 1400w

"[This] book is a downright delight, a tour de force to fascinate lawyers and laymen alike. It is wise. . . . It is witty. . . . Although Rembar writes more like an angel than a lawyer, he retains one terribly lawyerly, or perhaps pseudo-scholarly, trait. Page after page of his book is all barnaced up with footnotes. Furthermore, the footnotes contain some of his liveliest stuff, and all of it could easily have been elevated to the text. Way down there in its tiny type, I daresay it will go almost unread, more's the pity." Fred Rodell

N Y Times Bk R p1 Je 23 '68 1350w

New Yorker 44:95 Ag 10 '68 120w

Reviewed by J. D. Simpson

Sat R 51:30 Jl 13 '68 450w

REMISE, JAC. The golden age of toys [by] Jac Remise [and] Jean Fondin; English text by D. B. Tubbs. 252p il col il $27.50 N.Y. graphic

688.7 Toys—History 67-27009

The author used the "toy collection of Jac Remise, a Parisian, as the basis of this . . . album which presents a half century of factory-made toys. Devoted to the era from 1860 to 1914, when new materials, such as cast iron, and sheet tin, and new motive power of steam and electricity evoked new playthings, the book emphasizes masculine interests. Illustrations of railway stock, water vehicles, airplanes, toy theaters, mechanical marvels, magic paraphernalia offset the dolls." (Library J)

"[A] dazzling oversize album, . . . Utterly beguiling, the dolls appear and reappear, often in outdoor settings. Surprisingly, there is no bibliography, and inexcusably, no index. For public libraries the tipped-in plates constitute a hazard." S. C. Gross

Library J 93:1131 Mr 15 '68 200w

"It's paradise—like being locked all night in a toy store—looking through the more than 600 photographs many in full color. . . . [The authors] have assembled a sumptuous display of toys and models. . . . The emphasis is European. . . . America is represented by only a dozen articles. [An] informative text." G. A. Woods

N Y Times Bk R p99 N 19 '67 300w

RENARD, JULES. Poil de Carotte; with the original il. by Félix Vallotton; tr. by Ralph Manheim. 216p $4.95 Walker & co.

67-13224

A series of sketches which depict the wretchedness of "Carrot Top," the youngest child in a lower-middle-class provincial French family. He is so mistreated by Madame Lepic, his mother, that he longs to be an orphan.

"The book achieves its effect through a series of brief scenes and dialogues, each illustrating a misunderstanding, a rejection, or small catastrophe that an outsider might consider comic, but which drive Poil de Carotte to near-suicide. Well translated and appropriately illustrated by woodcuts from the 1902 edition, the book is recommended for academic and public libraries." Dorothy Curley

Library J 92:4159 N 15 '67 110w

Reviewed by Robert Phelps

N Y Times Bk R p4 O 1 '67 1350w

"[This] is a French classic that was first published in 1894 and is now available in English for the first time. It is a chilling account of the sufferings of a little boy at the hands of a mother who is presumably a typical nineteenth-century bourgeoisie. . . . The book is composed of brief vignettes, most of them illustrative of some mental or physical torment that the mother, who is entirely selfish, hypocritical, and cruel, has devised for her son. The book is extremely painful, and I would hesitate to give it to a child, but a parent who reads it, if he can bear to, is apt to find himself feeling less critical of today's indulgent methods of child rearing and to see that they spring from an impulse to temper the absolute power parents have over children and to do away with such abuses as 'Poil de Carotte' illustrates." Janet Malcolm

New Yorker 43:169 D 16 '67 100w

"[The boy] is in no way sentimentalized by Renard into a saintly little martyr. Incessant harassment has forced him to be ugly, vicious, and devious merely in order to survive in a household that never shows him any affection. . . . The book is a series of sketches, of sparse, bitterly ironic dialogues, of touches added one to another in pointillist fashion. Renard is primarily a great stylist. . . . The reader soon realizes that Jules Renard felt compelled to write this little masterpiece in order to settle an old account with life. We know from his Journal (BRD 1964), one of the most cynical but also one of the most entertaining in French, that Poil de Carotte was derived from experience." Henri Peyre

Sat R 50:32 D 2 '67 750w

RENNERT, VINCENT PAUL. Western outlaws. 152p il lib bdg $3.50 Crowell-Collier press 364.3 Robbers and outlaws—Juvenile literature. The West—History—Juvenile literature. Crime and criminals—The West—Juvenile literature 68-11268

Contents: John Wesley Hardin; The James-Younger gang; Sam Bass; Billy the Kid; Black Bart; Butch Cassidy and the Wild Bunch; Rube Burrows; Daltons vs. Coffeyville; Bill Carlisle, the lone train robber. "Grades seven to nine." (Library J)

"Here is a book that fills that perennial need for acceptable material on outlaws. . . . The information is accurate except for a few minor errors in dates, spellings, and geography. More important, it does not glamorize these outlaws, as television has done; rather the dreariness and hopelessness of outlaw life are emphasized. There are a number of photographs, many appropriately gruesome." Laurie Dudley

Library J 93:2549 Je 15 '68 80w

"Special difficulties were encountered while I was reviewing this book. Not in reading it (that was a delight) but in getting it away from my junior-high-school age sons, who first had to savor it in full, gory detail. This is a straightforward tale that requires, and gets, no romanticizing from the author. The bare-bone facts supply romance enough, [and are] illustrated with suitably morbid pictures." Dan Cushman

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p22 My 5 '68 180w

RENOUVIN, PIERRE. Introduction to the history of international relations [by] Pierre Renouvin and Jean-Baptiste Duroselle; tr. by Mary Ilford. 432p $8.50 Praeger

327.09 International relations 66-18918

"In Part I, 'The Underlying Forces,' Professor Renouvin, of the University of Paris, [examines] . . . geographic conditions, demographic movements, . . . economic and financial interests, . . . collective characteristics of people and nations, public opinion and the desire for peace. In Part II, 'The Statesman,' Professor Duroselle, of the Institute des Sciences Politiques, analyzes types of personality of political leaders, discusses the pressures brought to bear on statesmen, and emphasizes that statesmen have evolved subjective notions of what constitutes the national interest. The final pages are devoted to a discussion of the rise and fall of colonial expansion in the past century and to an analysis of the causes of the great wars." (Library J) Annotated chapter bibliographies. Index.

Choice 5:872 S '68 150w

"Avoiding a theoretical point of view and underscoring the impossibility of any attempt to establish laws of history, this brilliant book is valuable for its sound historical analysis of international relations and for the insights of historical scholarship applied to the subject. All academic and large public libraries should purchase this book; they will find its selected, annotated bibliography useful." E. P. Stickney

Library J 92:2790 Ag '67 270w

"The combination of political theory and historical analysis which is required for the study of international relations is well suited to the French tradition of scholarship. Renouvin and Duroselle are excellent examples of that tradition. Their approach to the subject is an orderly process of induction. A series of interconnected themes is examined in logical sequence, each illustrated with a thorough compilation of concrete examples. Each section ends with a clear and concise summary of conclusions. . . . M. Duroselle is even a little less cautious in speculation than his colleague. . . . Like the first part of the book, the second also is based on careful and exact scholarship."

TLS p827 Ag 1 '68 550w

RENSHAW, PATRICK. The wobblies: the story of syndicalism in the United States. 312p pl $5.95 Doubleday

331.8809 Industrial Workers of the World. Syndicalism 67-14123

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Choice 4:1314 Ja '68 200w

Reviewed by Gerd Korman

J Am Hist 54:903 Mr '68 500w

TLS p33 Ja 11 '68 270w

REPORT from Iron Mountain on the possibility and desirability of peace; with introd. material by Leonard C. Lewin. 109p $5 Dial press

172 Peace. Satire, American 67-27553

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by I. L. Horowitz

Bul Atomic Sci 24:22 Mr '68 7400w

Reviewed by H. J. Gans

Commentary 45:83 F '68 3200w

Economist 226:41 F 3 '68 300w

Reviewed by Emile Benoit

Science 160:60 Ap 5 '68 1200w

REPS, JOHN W. Monumental Washington; the planning and development of the Capital center. 221p il maps $12.50 Princeton Univ. press 711 City planning—Washington, D.C.

Washington, D.C.—History 66-17708

The author of The Making of Urban America (BRD 1965) has written "a history of the planning of the central, monumental area of Washington (Capitol, Mall, White House, and related spaces) from L'Enfant to the present day, though with primary emphasis on the Senate Park Commission plan of 1902." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"An account of L'Enfant's training and experience illuminates the discussion of the Frenchman's design of 1791. In tracing the violence done to the plan in the nineteenth century, Reps repeats the popular myth that Andrew Jackson was responsible for placing the Treasury building where it broke the sweep of Pennsylvania Avenue from the White House to the Capitol. An economy-minded Congress fixed the site. This and one or two other factual errors are, however, minor flaws in a book of compelling interest." C. M. Green
Am Hist R 73:905 F '68 550w

"Extensively documented and illustrated with an excellent collection of plans, engravings, and topographical views, this is a good study of the interrelationship of architecture, planning, politics, and human behavior in a very significant example of urban planning. While Reps perhaps overstates the significance of this example for urban planning and development in America in general and tends to judge the merit of plans with the 1902 scheme as his norm, he has produced a valuable account."

Choice 4:973 N '67 160w

Reviewed by C. N. Glaab

J Am Hist 55:382 S '68 420w

"This scholarly and valuable study is particularly timely. . . . [However] beautifully produced and illustrated as the book is, one does wish it were a vertical rather than a horizontal book; long books never fit comfortably on one's shelves."

Va Q R 44:xxxix winter '68 180w

RESCHER, NICHOLAS. Distributive justice; a constructive critique of the utilitarian theory of distribution. 166p il $6 Bobbs

330.1 Utilitarianism. Wealth 66-29532

The argument proffered "is that utilitarianism—distributing goods to achieve the greatest good for the greatest number, a principle classical economists believed could be met only within a competitive marketplace—is basically valid yet inadequate in several respects. To overcome these inadequacies and achieve a just distribution, Mr. Rescher develops a complementary theory of claims. To understand the philosophic basis of contemporary economic theory and socio-economic policies, a knowledge of both utility and claims becomes necessary." (Library J) Bibliography. Indexes of names and of subjects.

"In this too carefully reasoned little book, a philosopher-logician examines the theory of income distribution. Limiting his study to utilitarianism, he reviews the historical development and contributions of numerous authorities. Although all the questions and difficulties are raised, the conclusions are less satisfactory and informative. . . . Economists have given little attention to distributive justice in the 20th century so this work may stimulate economic theoreticians. . . . Worth reading by economists to show the weaknesses of the science in this important area."

Choice 4:1144 D '67 120w

"The author, professor of philosophy at Pittsburgh, now adds this brief, valuable study of the philosophy of the social sciences, especially economics, to his imposing list of publications. [He offers a] clearly written, carefully reasoned argument. . . . This study is recommended for both academic and special collections, with the wan hope that it will receive the time and attention it deserves from the economic technicians. It contains an excellent bibliography."

R. E. Will

Library J 92:1002 Mr 1 '67 130w

RESEARCH CONFERENCE ON BEHAVIOR IN ORGANIZATIONS, UNIVERSITY OF GEORGIA, 1962. Studies on behavior in organizations. See Bowers, R. V., ed.

RESSNER, PHILIP. At night; phot. by Charles Pratt. 31p il $3.95; lib bdg $3.91 Dutton

67-20137

The photographs and brief descriptive text in this book are intended to "evoke the sights, sounds and smells of the night in the house, the street, the empty playground and candy store, and on the lonely river. . . . Grades one to three." (Library J)

"[This] is a mood piece [with] lovely, shadowy photographs. . . . A deceptively simple book that might increase children's emotional understanding of how the mood of the night world differs from that of the daylight." Agnes Gregory

Library J 93:285 Ja 15 '68 80w

"Of the shadows, textures and unfamiliar shapes characteristic of the night scene there are only hints. Rather obvious and pedestrian. Charles Pratt's pictures here do little to advance the cause of black-and-white in children's books." Jacob Deschin

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p62 N 5 '67 80w

RESTIF DE LA BRETONNE, NICOLAS EDMÉ. Monsieur Nicolas; or, The human heart laid bare [by] Restif de la Bretonne; tr. ed. and with an introd. by Robert Baldick. 457p il $6 Potter, C.N.

B or 92

67-24603

This is the story of Restif's life from his birth in 1734 to 1797, nine years before his death. In preparing this abridgment, the translator has omitted the appendix telling the story of Sara, as well as "Restif's attempts at verse, most of his sentimental effusions, and many of the tediously repetitive accounts of his sexual prowess; but at no point have [the] omissions been dictated by considerations of prudery or 'good taste.'" (Translator's note)

"While Baldick has done an excellent job of translation and condensation of the 14-volume French original, the result is still a rather long 500 pages of first person narrative. . . . When one considers all that was transpiring in France in the 18th century, one might say that this autobiographical novel is about as representative of the period as the Police Gazette would be of the 20th century. On the other hand, it does give us a good idea of the style and content of Restif's literary production. Today, when everything is 'wide open,' it would probably be ridiculous to put any strictures on a work of this kind. However, this book can hardly be recommended for anything but a college or university library."

Choice 5:966 O '68 130w

Reviewed by Harold Lancour

Library J 93:543 F 1 '68 140w

"There are whole episodes missing from this abridgment, just as there are others reduced to dangling, barely comprehensible bits. Nor is Baldick's [translation] above howlers. . . . His English is sometimes independently inadequate. . . . On the other hand, we do now have some idea in English of this remarkable autobiography, . . . a work of greater outspokenness and zest than [Rousseau's] Confessions. . . . Monsieur Nicolas is somewhat of a problem because we cannot always tell what is fiction in it, what truth. . . . What makes [it] invaluable is . . . the sharpness of psychological insight into the author's and other souls; occasionally this is surrounded by self-delusion, but self-delusion so honestly narrated that what the writer failed to grasp, the reader can seize upon with pleasure and profit. . . . Here are anecdotes of voracious sexual appetite, a frank account of foot and shoe fetishism, a curious urge for pure, Platonic relationships in the midst of carnality. And other absorbing ambivalences." John Simon

New Repub 158:31 Ja 6 '68 1850w

"What really interested Restif was sexual experience among the lower classes. He managed to combine the writing and printing of 200 volumes with the non-stop culling of what he called 'the flower'. One notices here the bent for repetition and monotony that characterises the mad. Restif was not mad, but he was certainly a wild egotist, a paranoiac and an eccentric. . . . But what stay in the mind of the reader are the descriptions of country life, cottage life, markets, work in the fields, money troubles and family quarrels. . . . The striking thing about his descriptions of his peasant childhood is that they contain a carefully factual account of daily life; and the same can be said of his later years in the printing-house and among the street traders and dressmakers of Paris. . . . Like Deioe he comes close to ordinary talk, in his portraits of both men and women. . . . All the women are neatly and charmingly drawn and the language of modesty, mischief or simple self-interest and cunning makes them all the more real." V. S. Pritchett

New Statesman 71:614 Ap 29 '66 1350w

REUCK, ANTHONY DE. See De Reuck, A.

REUTER, FRANK T. Catholic influence on American colonial policies, 1898-1904. 189p $6 Univ. of Tex. press

322 Catholic Church in the U.S. Catholic Church—Relations (diplomatic). U.S.—Politics and government—1898-1919 66-15701

"There have been many individual problems of conflict since the Catholic Church was formally organized in the United States in 1790. But these difficulties were local or statewide in character. . . . Not until the end of the nineteenth century can the historian find a basic clash of interest between the policies of the Catholic Church in the United States and those of the federal government. War with Spain provided the cause for this first basic clash of interests. . . . [The second situation] resulted from the establishment of the American overseas colonial empire. . . . This study endeavors to examine some of the Church-state problems in the new American empire, to observe the Catholic reaction in the United States to these problems, and then to determine what influence, if any, the Catholic Church in the United States had on the formulation or direction of American colonial policies." (Introd) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"The influence of Catholics is outlined as an undefinable force of public opinion that in time led such men as Theodore Roosevelt and William Howard Taft to deal carefully with the Church in the settling of the financial and land problems resulting from the acceptance of [the] Spanish territories. One document Reuter does not cite that has bearing on the friars is the printed but suppressed Philippine Insurrection Records by John Rogers Meigs Taylor, which contradicts many of the grossest charges against the friars. Nevertheless, Reuter has digested in admirable form the other sources, printed and documentary, that pertain to his story." T. T. McAvoy
Am Hist R 73:248 O '67 440w

"The book hews closely to the line of the specific issues and the reaction of American Catholics to them. It has little to say about Catholic opinion outside of America and the Vatican, about the views of American Protestants, or about the reception of the solutions in the former Spanish possessions. Its virtues are that it is well written, that the research in the specific topics dealt with is thorough, and that it is written with objectivity and fairness. It should be of interest to Catholic and Protestant alike, to those interested in American history and political development, and particularly to students of the colonial era and its legacies." J. A. White
Ann Am Acad 374:206 N '67 500w

"A brief but adequate study. . . . Reuter explains that nebulous thing called 'Catholic opinion' as it bore upon the war with Spain and America's acquisition of a colonial empire in Cuba, Puerto Rico, Guam, and the Philippines. . . . Recommended for libraries with strong holdings in U.S. foreign policy." Choice 4:1174 D '67 100w

REVZIN, I. I. Models of language; tr. from the Russian by N. F. C. Owen and A. S. C. Ross, and rev. by the author. 188p $7.50 Barnes & Noble

410 Language and languages 66-71883

An "exposition of mathematical notations which simulate language. . . . Most of Revzin's paradigmatic and syntagmatic models are taken from Russian, although his translators have supplied English equivalents, as well as brief explanations of all symbolistic notations. . . . An appendix [contains] the proof of all theorems. . . . In the formulation of his theory the author has focused his attention . . . on the delineation of concepts underlying each model of language." (Choice)

"Soviet interests in machine translation stimulated research, in 1955, into the application of mathematical ideas to methods in linguistics. . . . This attempt to construct a linguistic instead of a mathematical theory of models is unique, but wholly exploratory, open to question and consequent modification. Although beyond the ken of most undergraduates, this provocative study should be of prime interest to all philologists."

Choice 4:417 Je '67 170w

"Revzin, a Russian linguist, is in the main stream of European and American thought; but he was brought to a study of general linguistics by work on machine translation, and his approach in [this book] is that of a mathematician and logician. It is interesting, but highly formal: one wonders whether it will lead anywhere far. Nor is he exempt from the linguist's bane of thinking too much in terms of his own language. His models, however abstract, tend to be those of a highly inflected language. The examples are in Russian. . . . but, in spite of careful translation some of them will puzzle those with no prior knowledge of the language."

TLS p1073 N 16 '67 330w

REX, JOHN. Race, community and conflict; a study of Sparkbrook [by] John Rex and Robert Moore; with the assistance of Alan Shuttleworth [and] Jennifer Williams; pub. for the Inst. of race relations. 304p pl maps $8 Oxford

309.142 Birmingham, England—Social conditions. Housing [67-78869]

This is a "study of Birmingham, England, area invaded by immigrants—Irish (1930's), West Indians (late 1950's), and Pakistanis (1960's). Methodological theory, social analysis, and concern with empirical problems are combined. . . . We see Englishmen pushed, against will and conscience, into racist attitudes by (1) the system of housing allocation and (2) differential access to employment. Race conflict is thus explained in terms of social structure, market competition, and the prevailing constellation of interests and roles. . . . The authors emphasize the role of the transition zone; . . . they conclude that the class struggle over housing use is the central process of the city as a social unit." (Choice)

Reviewed by R. H. Turner

Am J Soc 73:529 Ja '68 600w

"The most important finding of the study is that, while the overcrowding and deterioration of Sparkbrook was generally deplored, the housing policy of the Birmingham Council insured that no solution would be developed for the problem. The council felt that . . . the only 'solution' was to cordon off Sparkbrook to 'keep the cancer from spreading.' Thus public policy figured prominently in the creation and perpetuation of a ghetto. . . . [However,] we are not told how the policies evolved, what interests they serve or why council members are generally committed to them. We are told that the housing problem is a political problem at its roots, yet there is no analysis of political decision-making. This is especially regrettable in view of the number of chapters devoted to ancillary considerations. As it stands, the Rex and Moore study is a valuable contribution to the fields of race relations and urban sociology." John Walton

Am Soc R 32:1029 D '67 950w

Choice 4:1186 D '67 130w

"[This book] represents a vital, valuable addition to the newly expanding literature on the problems of immigration. The book is not confined to race relations. Perhaps its most refreshing aspect is its comprehensive approach to the problems of the area as a whole, and its rejection of racial remedies for social problems. . . . There is a chapter on religion, education, the multiracial associations and even a rather dull one on politics, but nothing (except some bald Ministry of Labour classifications) about the people of Sparkbrook at work. . . . The failure to trace any of their subjects to their place of work leaves a conspicuous gap in the authors' argument. . . . Where information is assessed for purposes of future policy proposals, as in the brilliant chapter on Policy Alternatives, the arguments are lively, readable and convincing. But the sociological explanations and analyses, as in the final chapter 'The Zone of Transition', are often dull and incomprehensible." Paul Foot

New Statesman 73:227 F 17 '67 750w

TLS p312 Ap 13 '67 1000w

REY, AGAPITO, jt. auth. The rediscovery of New Mexico, 1580-1594. See Hammond, G. P.

REYES BASUALTO, NEFTALI RICARDO. See Neruda, P.

REYNOLDS, D. J. Economics, town planning and traffic. 166p $7.50 Transatlantic

711 City planning—Great Britain 67-79374

"An economist's view of what can be and what cannot be done with town planning and traffic. The interpretation . . . emphasizes the use of market prices in simplifying problems of planning. At the same time Reynolds argues that town planning can be overly ambitious and lose its value in the bargain." (Choice)

"Although a substantial literature in urban economics has accumulated in recent years, very little has been done in an analysis of town planning. Reynolds' work is pathbreaking in many respects. It is well written with the sureness of one who knows his subject. Its technical level is moderate. Clear tables and graphs." Choice 5:533 Je '68 110w

"In a short space Mr Reynolds sums up the few main lines of research in which economists in Britain are now seeking to help the town planners, and calls, reasonably enough, for a greater awareness by planners of the economic implications of alternative proposals. . . . His critique does not, however, add up to the new system of town planning that he claims to put forward. The trouble really is that, apart from the very useful idea of road pricing—in which Mr Reynolds himself has played a part—economists have not yet presented the planners with any new tools."

Economist 221:577 N 5 '66 310w

REYNOLDS, ERNEST. Collecting Victorian porcelain. 128p pl $4.95 Praeger

738.2 Pottery. British. Pottery—Collectors and collecting 68-16721

This survey "offers not only sections on the work of such famous firms as Mintons, Copelands, Derby, Worcester, Rockingham, and Coalport, but also . . . information on the lesser firms . . . [and] on the exhibits at the Crystal Palace in 1851, together with . . . advice on building up a collection. There are explanations of marks of the period, an account of porcelain manufacture in the Victorian age, and a . . . glossary of technical terms." (Publisher's note) Index.

"Although he makes no attempt to be definitive, [Mr. Reynolds] gives the history of great and small firms, and describes the distinguishing characteristics and decoration of the products. [He] also supplies a list of artists with references to more complete lists. With the change in the United States customs law English Victorian items will become more common in shops here, and collectors will be searching for this often practical and decorative porcelain. Mr. Reynolds's book is recommended for larger public libraries." Paul von Khrum

Library J 93:1887 My 1 '68 80w

"Nearly everyone who writes with mingled enthusiasm and honesty about Victoriana necessarily becomes a trifle apologetic, dodging the horrors as best he can and finding words of praise where praise is possible. Reynolds makes few apologies, shows us some singularly nasty specimens as well as the best, and puts up a case for toleration. . . . The book is full of information of a kind not generally found except in specialist publications."

TLS p776 Ag 31 '67 90w

REYNOLDS, FRANK W. Adult health; services for the chronically ill and aged [by] Frank W. Reynolds [and] Paul C. Barsam. 242p il $7.95 Macmillan (N Y)

362.6 Aged—Medical care. Medical care. Sick 66-18772

The authors "discuss prevention and detection of disease and the care of the chronically ill at home and in institutions. They review contributions of many public health services (dentistry, nursing, nutrition, social work) in treating the chronically ill and also the programs for control of several diseases and methods of implementing them with state and federal funds and the assistance of agencies." (Library J) Chapter bibliographies. Index.

"Well illustrated and completely indexed. No other single volume covers so much material relative to preventive medicine, chronic diseases, and geriatrics. Both authors have had experience in these areas. Reynolds was director of the New England Institute of Gerontology until his recent death and Barsam is assistant director of the Adult Health Division of the Massachusetts Department of Public Health." Choice 5:83 Mr '68 110w

Reviewed by Gloria Weinrich
Library J 92:2593 J1 '67 220w

REYNOLDS, G. SCOTT. The mortality merchants. 242p $4.95 McKay

368.3 Insurance. Life 68-19022

"The subtitle of this book reads: 'The Legalized Racket of Life Insurance and What You Can Do About It.' The author holds that so-called 'permanent' life insurance, whether straight life or endowment, costs too much for the protection it actually affords. . . . [He] shows how you can calculate the true cost of insurance, including interest foregone and actual coverage. He suggests ways in which people can reduce the cost of their insurance while increasing their coverage. He also explains the various sales methods used to convince prospects that they should really have permanent insurance. The last part of the book contains . . . tables for calculating the cost of term insurance." (Best Sell) Glossary. Index.

"[The author] writes clearly and convincingly. Anyone who has ever been confused by a life insurance policy should invest in this book. It will save him a lot of money. Every library should purchase and display the book as a public service. This ought to be a best seller." T. M. Garrett

Best Sell 28:78 My 15 '68 350w

Reviewed by P. H. Douglas
Book World p6 My 12 '68 340w

"The book is generally well documented, although a number of examples are stretched to make a point. Except for some sections which are awkwardly written and inconclusive, the discussion is stimulating and well developed. Reynolds professes to know what motivates insurance men, but his lack of objectivity leaves some doubt as to his wisdom in all matters. Those inadequacies which do exist, however, are insignificant compared with the grand exposé of serious abuses which characterize the industry. . . . Highly recommended for business students."

Choice 5:1012 O '68 200w

"[In] this wonderfully well-written polemic, Mr. Reynolds, a securities broker and agent for several insurance companies proceeds to devastatingly 'expose the legalized racket of life insurance.' What is of even more importance is that he succinctly tells his readers precisely what they can do about it! This is a much-needed book, an important one for both young married couples and middle-aged citizens to study seriously. It belongs in libraries because it will do its readers a world of good where it counts—in the pocketbook." Paul Sarnoff

Library J 93:2482 Je 15 '68 120w

REYNOLDS, VERNON. The apes; the gorilla, chimpanzees, orangutan, and gibbon—their history and their world. 296p pl maps $10 Dutton

599 Apes 66-21302

Dr. Reynolds "traces the history of man's knowledge of the apes, from concepts grounded more in mythology than in fact, through the slow displacement of myth with truth. [The book provides a] resume of what is known about apes in captivity, particularly of their mental capabilities, and of the recent discoveries of the behavior and biology of apes in the wild." (Natur Hist) Bibliography. Index.

"The four kinds of living ape are clearly described and well illustrated in this book. It can be used as a source of information on structure, growth and reproduction, since the outlines of these subjects are supported by good bibliographies. But the accounts of behavior will attract the greatest interest. . . . Reynolds' descriptions of problem-solving by apes in captivity make absorbing reading. He includes the classical observations on 'insight' by chimpanzees, as well as the most striking examples from more recent work. [His] agreeable account of all this remarkable behavior is almost entirely colloquial. . . . A final chapter is on conservation, and makes a welcome addition to the literature on protecting species from extinction. The Apes deserves to be widely read and discussed." S. A. Barnett

Book World p3 D 31 '67 1450w

Choice 5:368 My '68 120w

"[Reynolds is] a competent writer able to transmit his interest and enthusiasm in a readable style. . . . Of considerable interest is his compilation of the various and previously published descriptions of experiences that various people have had who tried to raise great apes in their homes and occasionally with their own children." Joseph Bosson

Library J 93:1011 Mr 1 '68 200w

"The Apes is a fascinating compendium of much that is known about these creatures, put together, thank heaven, by a literate zoologist, who has leavened the body of observations made by others with his own field studies of chimpanzees. . . . If faults exist . . . they are comparatively minor. In some areas the book is up to date, while in others information is no newer than four or five years old. . . . This sort of nit-picking, however, is more appropriate to a chimpanzee than to a reviewer, and I can recommend The Apes as a readable, balanced treatment on our closest relatives." J. A. Davis
Natur Hist 77:68 F '68 350w

"[Reynolds] is not a very good writer . . . because he simply does not . . . [have] the ability to tell a story. The sentences follow each other like guardsmen, steady and firm, and grammatically correct, and easy to comprehend, and . . . dreary. [Reynolds] slips into the trap that threatens all amateurs who write about animals—of anthropomorphizing them in [a] peculiarly vulgar way. . . . [He] spoils some of his material by being too scholarly; and he spoils the rest of it by trying too hard to be appealing. . . . However, I should add that I do not believe it is possible to write an accurate book on apes that will interest a large audience; at least not yet, because not enough is known about their social behavior." Sarel Eimerl
Reporter 38:40 My 30 '68 1550w

TLS p953 S 5 '68 500w

RIBADEAU DUMAS, FRANÇOIS. See Dumas, F. R.

RIBBONS, IAN. Monday, 21 October 1805; the day of Trafalgar. 80p il col il $5.95; lib bdg $5.76 White

940.2 Trafalgar, Battle of, 1805 67-19303

The author alternates descriptions of the battle with accounts of other events of the day. "The book is arranged as an hour-by-hour, almost minute-by-minute accounting of what was taking place that day from 2 a.m. until night-fall, ranging from the far north of Britain to the south, across Europe to darkest Africa, then west to the United States, returning constantly to the fleet and H.M.S. Victory as they prepared for and underwent action." (TLS)

"It is not a children's book, and not a pretty book, which Ribbons has written and illustrated with strong, impressionistic pictures in both word and color. But older teens and young adults—and older adults—may find it engrossing. Its tone is calm, underlaid with an icy rage at the lunacies of the war and greed, at the terrible courage of children, at humanity's waste, despair, and glorying. Does anyone yearn for 'the good old days'? This book will cure him." N. M.

Christian Science Monitor pB12 N 7 '68 180w [YA]

Reviewed by Zulfikrov Ghose
New Statesman 76:599 N 1 '68 60w

"[This] is at once a vivid impression of the Battle of Trafalgar and a social history of the period. Both are wonderfully enhanced by the author's many delightful illustrations, maps and diagrams in black-and-white and rich satisfying colours. . . . Wherever possible the impression is in contemporary words, particularly from the Journal of Travels of Benjamin Silliman, an American teacher, and Will Howitt's account of his Yorkshire boyhood. The sea sections draw chiefly on the Navy Papers and newspapers. . . . Popular social histories tend to be glorious ragbags of interesting snippets. The unusual union here is certainly blessed."

TLS p1124 O 3 '68 270w

RICE, BERKELEY. Enter Gambia; the birth of an improbable nation; il. with phot. by the author. 389p $6.95 Houghton

916.6 Gambia

67-14656

"This introduction to Gambia specifically covers the year of independence (1965), although a brief history is also included. Mr. Rice's account . . . is [filled] with vignettes of his . . . stay in this small, riverain, and hopeful country. The problems of a one-crop economy (peanuts), education, and internal politics are surveyed. . . . Quotations in 'West African English' from local newspaper advertisements or from the author's many talks with Gambians create a . . . background upon which facts on history, economics, and politics are sprinkled." (Library J)

"Rice, free-lance writer and former journalist, spent six months in the Gambia as correspondent of Newsweek. His book is in the best tradition of the Evelyn Waugh 'entertainment'; a wry, droll, and delightfully told description of Gambia and its people. It should appeal to readers from 16 on up. Certainly every college and high school library ought to have a copy."

Choice 4:1160 D '67 70w [YA]

"Through constant interviews with Gambian politicians, Lebanese traders, and British civil servants and technical assistants, Mr. Rice has penetrated the social and political fabric of the nation. This infectiously humorous journalistic account is recommended for general and academic libraries." H. K. Flad
Library J 92:1831 My 1 '67 120w

TLS p925 Ag 29 '68 450w

RICE, TAMARA TALBOT. Czars and czarinas of Russia. 320p il maps $5.75; lib bdg $5.39 Lothrop

920 Russia—Kings and rulers 68-14066

From the reign of Ivan the Terrible to the assassination of Nicholas II, [the author] recounts . . . the life of each sovereign, explores his temperament, and evaluates his contribution to the . . . development of his nation. . . . The political career of each czar and czarina—and especially of Peter the Great, Catherine the Great, Alexander I, and Alexander II—is . . . evaluated in relationship to the questions of serfdom and industrialism, foreign policy and royal intermarriage, eastward expansion, popular uprisings, culture, and religion." (Horn Bk) Genealogy. Index.

"Besides dispensing historical facts, the author creates the atmosphere of excitement, suspense and glamor as she depicts the experiences of Elizabeth and Catherine usurping the throne. The contributions of Ivan and of Peter the Great, the latter of whom was endowed with a superabundance of strength, intelligence and loyalty, and the questionable efforts of Alexander II make informative and interesting reading and effect a better understanding of the Russian people."

Best Sell 28:155 J1 1 '68 110w

Reviewed by Paul Heins

Horn Bk 44:439 Ag '68 140w

"Though each account is brief (20-30 pages), the author does succeed in capturing both the spirit of each era and the diverse personalities of the royal leaders. The information seems accurate and objective, while the viewpoint is sympathetic but unbiased. Only one other book on this subject, Horizon Magazine's Russia Under the Czars [BRD 1963] has been published for approximately this age level, and it is less detailed, more dramatic, and more profusely illustrated. Because of their complementary strengths, both titles will be useful in most libraries." Bernice Levine

Library J 93:133261 S 15 '68 110w [YA]

RICH, JOSEPHINE. Women behind men of medicine. 190p $3.50 Messner

920 Medicine—Biography—Juvenile literature. Woman—Biography—Juvenile literature 67-21630

Brief biographies of Troctula di Ruggiero; Sara Woodson; Anne Morandi Manzolini; Anne Home Hunter; Otsugu; Jane Todd Crawford; Sarah Shelby McDowell; Marion Shaw Bell; Betsey. Lucy and Anarcha; Mary Moffatt Livingston; Grace Revere Osler; Jeannette Plamondon Murphy; Martha Bernays Freud. Bibliography. Index. "Grades eight to nine." (Library J)

"Troctula di Ruggiero, wife of Johannes Platearius the Elder, wrote medical works in the field of obstetrics and gynecology. These books, written in the twelfth century are still in use. . . . Sigmund [Freud] wrote Martha many love letters. Through these, with her encouragement was developed the technique of psychoanalysis for which Freud is so noted. . . . Content and style combine to make 'Women Behind Men of Medicine' truly fascinating for girls, grade 10 and up." Maureen Reiners

RICH, JOSEPHINE—Continued

Best Sell 27:395 Ja 1 '68 130w

"[These biographies] emphasize the dependence of great physicians (Manzolini, Hunter, Bell, Livingstone, Osler) on the women in their lives, who offered support, sympathy, and often assistance. One story, gracefully told, is of a Japanese mother whose only wish was to serve her son, even if it meant taking an experimental draught which might put her to sleep or to death. . . . For interested readers, these stories are well told and present the extra dimension of the family lives of these men." Louise Spain
Library J 92:3203 S 15 '67 90w

RICH, LOUISE DICKINSON. Star Island boy: il. by Elinor Jaeger. 154p $3.50 Watts, F.

68-10661

"Convinced no one will ever want to adopt him, 11-year-old Larry Scott stoically goes to his newest foster home on Star Island off the Maine coast. [The story tells] how he comes to terms with the strange new life, the kindly sturdy islanders, and himself. . . . Grades four to six." (Library J)

"The author's awareness of the distinctive qualities of island living, and her gift for precise, sensuous description of the very smells and sights and sounds of the sea give life to an eleven-year-old's experiences. In her easy picturing of Larry's development of character and of his feeling of belonging to a Maine island family, she also apprehends with clear insight the all-too-ready understanding in an intelligent boy of the reasons why his foster homes have been so many." V. H.
Horn Bk 44:422 Ag '68 190w

"Mrs. Rich is unusually deft at incorporating the characteristic island idiom in an unobtrusive way and makes effective contrast between island living and the city life Larry had always known. Any middle grade child will probably enjoy the book, but it could be especially useful for other 'state kids' or any child who is bucking heavy weather in the process of growing up." M. E. Sandahl
Library J 93:2115 My 15 '68 170w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland
Sat R 51:40 My 11 '68 130w
Time 91:10 Je 7 '68 30w

RICHARDS, GUY. Imperial agent; the Goleniewski-Romanov case. 284p $5.95 Devin-Adair

364.13 Nicholas II, Emperor of Russia. Goleniewski, Michal 66-26023

The author speculates upon the case of Colonel Michal Goleniewski of Polish Intelligence who "gave top-secret information to the United States for 28 months until the Russian KGB almost captured him. He defected and was flown to the U.S. by the CIA. . . . Plans were set in motion to grant him American citizenship. . . . sponsored by the CIA. . . . Several chapters in this book are devoted to claims Goleniewski makes that he is the actual son of Czar [Nicholas II]." (Best Sell)

"[Goleniewski's claim that he is the Czarevitch] is interesting indeed. . . . [However] what bothers me is that a competent newsman, such as Guy Richards, can mention the CIA, prominent Congressmen, can cite so many facts which can easily be checked on by competent authority—and the only answer is dead silence." D. F. Lawler
Best Sell 27:326 N 15 '67 650w

"[Richards has uncovered] the fascinating tale of a possibly quadruple agent. . . . Unfortunately [he] . . . barely mentions Goleniewski's work as a spy. . . . [Writing] in a self-conscious, excessively informal style . . . Richards obviously believes the claim, letting stand many unproven assumptions about and statements by Goleniewski. . . . The question remains, if Goleniewski is not Romanov, just who is this man whose record of service to the West warranted a special CIA-sponsored citizenship bill in Congress." D. B. Duval

Nat R 19:486 My 2 '67 200w

Reviewed by Sergeant Cuff
Sat R 50:40 Ja 28 '67 30w

RICHARDS, I. A. So much nearer; essays toward a world English. 274p $7.50 Harcourt 420 English language 67-20318

These essays "consider what man collectively could and should be doing to improve communications. . . . [sketching] some of the consequences of technological advances . . . [and examining] questions about language raised by the use of computers. . . . 'The Future of Poetry' explores how utterance can defend itself from misconception. The separation of mistakes from acceptable differences in interpretation is viewed in 'Variant Readings and Misreading.' Miscomprehension and distortion arising from antagonisms between Chinese and Western traditions are discussed. . . . [and] solutions to man's urgent problems in this area [are suggested]." (Publisher's note) Most of these essays have been previously published. Index.

Reviewed by Marvin Mudrick
Book World p21 S 15 '68 650w

"The essays collected here are too disparate in form and substance to be united into a book with genuine impact. The collection is, nonetheless, a valuable and stimulating one; it re-emphasizes and restates Mr. Richards's position on modern linguistics (it is too dogmatically theoretical); on teaching (new methods must be found to reach new masses of disadvantaged students); on Basic English (it needs a strong and concerted revival); and on poetry (most students consistently misread it)." J. A. Rycenga

Library J 93:753 F 15 '68 150w

"[This] is I. A. Richards' first book on language, teaching, and related problems since Speculative Instruments [BRD 1956] appeared. Richards is older, but he is unchanged. . . . He remains a tireless, tiresome teacher, brilliant but boring because he's so persistent. . . . The ten essays, accompanied by head and hind notes, examine once again the problems of meaning, especially as these are related to the needs of language instruction and machine teaching, here at home first, then worldwide. . . . The most important of these, the most characteristic, the most misleading, is called Some Glances at Current Linguistics, and it's largely a polemic against Chomsky. . . . It would be pointless and futile here to . . . try to demonstrate the justice or injustice of Richards' complaints. . . . [He] sees a great future in programmed teaching, especially of reading. . . . Although he mentions and accepts many of the standard objections to machines as teaching devices, and would restrict their use, he tends to be indulgent at this point (for the world's on fire)." W. H. Gass

New Repub 158:34 My 11 '68 1000w

RICHARDS, J. M. A guide to Finnish architecture. 112p il $10 Praeger

720.9471 Architecture, Finnish 67-25565

"Beginning with Finland's most ancient castles and churches and ending with the work of its contemporary architects, Richards [argues] that past and present architecture form part of a single tradition. The chapters, dealing with one kind of building or one period, conclude with . . . notes on . . . significant examples. These are illustrated by more than 170 photographs. Special attention is given to the stone and later wooden churches; to the Neoclassical or Empire period, dominated by the work of C. L. Engel; and to Eliel Saarinen and the period of National Romanticism." (Choice) Bibliography.

"Anyone interested in Finnish architecture, the student of architecture, and the practitioner may learn much from this book. The bibliography is a short list of books in English, wholly or with some of the text or captions translated into English. This field has a limited amount published in English, and Richards' books is a most welcome addition." Choice 5:617 J1 '68 250w

"No single existing book is so well suited as Mr. Richards's to the needs of travellers in Finland who are seriously interested in the archi-ecture of the past forty years. . . . Granted the clearly and intelligently limited scope of the book, there is little of which a reviewer need complain. It should be noted, however, that this is a guide to architecture in Finland only; it does not cover the important works by Finnish architects in other countries. . . . More than one-third of the plates are devoted, not improperly, to the work of Aalto and his contemporaries, from 1929 to 1965. . . . It would be splendid if similar architectural guide-books, with emphasis on twentieth-century work, existed for several other countries. But few would be so much worth the effort; there are not many writers on modern architecture so balanced in their approach to the subject as Mr. Richards."

TLS p480 Je 1 '67 850w

RICHARDS, NORMAN. Giants in the sky; artists: Robert and Corinne Borja. 141p $4.50 Childrens press

629.133 Airships—Juvenile literature 67-2112

The author unfolds the history of lighter-than-air craft "from the first balloons of the late 1700's to the death of the Hindenburg in 1937. [Index.] Ages nine to twelve." (N Y Times Bk R)

Reviewed by B. B. Lane

Library J 93:2124 My 15 '68 100w

"The book is studded with anecdotes—the airships that bombed London in World War I, the airship that stood on its nose, the airship that circled Eiffel Tower and the Graf Zeppelin, that happy airship that died peacefully of old age. It is a book well and lucidly written and generously illustrated; it whets the appetite for answers to a few unanswered questions. A little more on how these early airships worked might have been in order. . . . [This is] by and large a book that must stir the imagination of a generation of youngsters to whom the airship is as strange as the trolley car." Richard Shepard

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p43 My 7 '67 190w

"This book [is] handsomely decorated with block prints and photographs. . . . [It] is another fascinating history aimed at young readers, but to a good many parents it will bring the pungency of nostalgia." Philip and Phyllis Morrison

Sci Am 217:152 D '67 230w [YA]

RICHARDSON, ELIZABETH. The environment of learning; conflict and understanding in the secondary school. 247p $6 Weybright & Talley

373.1 Education, Secondary. Human relations 68-10528

The author "is concerned with the personal relations in a school. . . . She shows how teacher-student, student-student, teacher-teacher interactions can help or retard learning. . . . [and] suggests different ways of organization, scheduling, and reacting to classroom incidents." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"[It is a pity that the author] has not attempted a synthesis of the work of the Tavistock Institute of Human Relations, . . . and the work of social psychologists . . . on interpersonal behaviour. That she has not . . . will for some diminish the value of her book somewhat. . . . Many of her points are valid and evocative to teachers, particularly her discussions of the lonely child, the aggressive child, of groups and group leaders. . . . The feeling left by the book is one of irritation . . . aroused by long drawn-out over-dramatised examples. This work will be widely read and used as a basis for discussion in educational circles, but the residual impression is that struggling in [this volume] is a book desperate to get out."

Economist 224:579 Ag 12 '67 400w

"While many of [the author's] comments are directed towards situations in English secondary schools, some of her insights would be applicable anywhere. . . . The emphasis on English education will limit American interest because many situations in the United States are quite different. However, the book is recommended for subject collections in public or college libraries." C. E. Wadsworth

Library J 93:3131 S 15 '68 130w

RICHARDSON, JOAN ELIZABETH. See Richardson, E.

RICHARDSON, NICHOLAS. The French prefectural corps, 1814-1830. 263p $9.50 Cambridge

352.044 France—Politics and government—1799-1914. Local government [66-29739]

"This book deals with the French prefectural corps during the period 1814-1830 from the point of view of personnel administration. It describes how Restoration prefects were recruited, promoted, transferred, and dismissed and compares them in these respects with the Napoleonic prefects as well as with Restoration subprefects and other subordinate personnel." (Am Pol Sci R) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"This is a well-written, carefully and richly detailed monograph. . . . A chart of 'Ministries and Ministers of the Interior, April 1814-July 1830,' on page 207, will help to refresh the reader's recollection of Restoration cabinet crises and thus assist him in relating those broader events to the vicissitudes of prefectural personnel management of the period." R. C. Fried

Am Pol Sci R 61:1146 D '67 500w

"The Restoration Monarchy in France, 1814-30, has received less attention from modern historians than virtually any other segment of French history since 1789; Richardson's study signals a salutary renewal of interest. . . . This work is a refashioned doctoral dissertation of modest aspirations which presupposes a thorough familiarity with the history of the period by the reader. . . . Very important for specialists."

Choice 4:211 Ap '67 130w

"The author guides us patiently through the massive three-stage movement of personnel following the First Restoration, the Hundred Days . . . and the Second Restoration. There is an interesting section on appointments and on the working of the various lobbies. . . . As a study of local families, Dr. Richardson's book will serve as an essential introduction to any detailed analysis of provincial society and politics during the early nineteenth century. . . . It is consoling to be so pleasantly reminded that history, backed with all the guarantees of research, can be so elegant and so readable."

TLS p60 Ja 18 '68 2600w

RICHARDSON, ROBERT S. The star lovers. 310p il $7.50 Macmillan (N Y)

920 Astronomers, Astronomy—History 67-16714

A "collection of short biographical sketches of 16 astronomers from the year 1550 to the present." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

Choice 5:76 Mr '68 200w

"Mr. Richardson, a member of the Mt. Wilson and Palomar Observatory, and associate director of the Griffith Observatory and Planetarium, Los Angeles, has included incidents and anecdotes that tend to 'humanize' these men. . . . He manages to slip in a good bit of information about the universe and the mechanics of astronomy. Touches of humor and odd bits of information enliven the book, but the adult reader gets the feeling that it is aimed at a high school audience. Useful for science collections of school, college and public libraries." Robert Greene

Library J 92:2794 Ag '67 110w [YA]

"Sixteen biographies of astronomers, including the great pioneers Brahe, Newton and Halley, the less well-known Horrocks and Roemer, 19th-century heroes such as Encke, Janssen and Hall, and two personal acquaintances of the author, Seth Nicholson and Walter Baade. . . . These are lively and personal biographies, but the unflagging Indiana humor with which they are told may not suit everyone." Philip and Phyllis Morrison

Sci Am 217:140 D '67 150w

RICHARTZ, LEON E., jr. auth. Vertical market structures. See Baligh, H. H.

RICHLER, MORDECAI. Cocksure; a novel. 250p $4.95 Simon & Schuster

68-14845

The author of Stick Your Neck Out (BRD 1963) has written a satire about Canadian born Mortimer Griffin who "works for a conservative London publishing house that Star Maker, an American with a sinister ability to manipulate time and people, plans to take over. Griffin, in launching a biographical series, stumbles on the macabre secret of Star Maker's success. He also becomes involved in a series of phony Semitic anti-Semitic [events]." (Library J)

RICHLER, MOREDECAI—Continued

Reviewed by J. J. Murray

Best Sell 28:29 Ap 15 '68 330w

"The reader's sympathies for [Griffin] are engaged because he believes in something, if only 'in the possibilities within each of us for goodness.' But this deliciously funny book is not a novel of ideas (they are few and primitive) or of character development (there is only caricature). Its virtue rather is the wild, slapstick style with which Richler describes depravity and emptiness as the contemporary condition. . . . [He] has abandoned here the sentimental realism with which in his earlier novels he pictured the faded Jewish ghettos of Montreal. . . . But he has not given up his preoccupation with being Jewish. It is just that the plight of the Jews, though serious, is also fatal and therefore somewhat ridiculous. All that is human in humanity is a candidate for the ovens." Richard Lincoln

Book World p5 Mr 31 '68 700w

Canadian Forum 48:19 Ap '68 370w

Reviewed by David Rees

Encounter 31:76 O '68 240w

Reviewed by J. M. Carroll

Library J 93:1164 Mr 15 '68 200w

Reviewed by Robert Hatch

Nation 206:451 Ap 1 '68 900w

"Mordecai Richler's title tips you the wink: 'a serio-comic novel in 35 acts', and four-letter words and situations are not long upcoming. He sets them on a site next door to Terry Southern's Candy [BRD 1964]. . . . Mr Richler's bad taste is equally determined though he lifts two fingers at other targets besides goys and dolls. Anti-semitic Jews, racial prejudice and the film world are sent up and knocked down. . . . He avoids anything as portentous as a moral purpose (sometimes perceptible in Southern) though on occasion the blue-tinged, fantastical japes seem ardently put together."

Elsewhere the Paris Review prize for humour, which excerpts of this book have won, is well deserved." David Haworth

New Statesman 75:520 Ap 19 '68 390w

Reviewed by John Wain

N Y Rev of Books 11:34 Ag 22 '68 550w

Reviewed by Marian Engel

N Y Times BK R p37 My 5 '68 550w

"Richler's book is a scenario for a utopian film in a never-never land where there are no cops, censors or maiden aunts. . . . There are those who insist on believing that Mortimer Griffin, the quintessential WASP, is really a disguised Jew. . . . then there is Star Maker, the Hollywood mogul, who really makes stars—from the test tube. . . . But the story, in truth, is impossible to tell: there are too many narrative strands and they become inextricably entangled in high jinks and slapstick. And the story cannot convey the book's essential quality, which glistens most brightly in interspersed set pieces having little or nothing to do with the tale itself. Here and there, in these set pieces, Richler—it will come as no surprise to readers of his previous novels—can be outrageously funny. He is funniest, wildest, most inventive when he is dirtiest; and when [Richler] is dirty, he is truly dirty."

Newsweek 71:127A Ap 8 '68 200w

Time 91:98 Mr 8 '68 600w

TLS p497 My 16 '68 550w

RICHMOND, JAMES. Faith and philosophy. (Knowing Christianity ser) 224p $3.95 Lip-pincott

200 Religion—Philosophy

66-25411

"This book has been written with two fairly definite classes in mind. First, theological students in universities and colleges who require an introduction to some of the main tendencies, problems and movements in philosophical theology during the past couple of centuries. . . . Second, intelligent and enquiring laymen who wish to keep abreast of what philosophical theologians are saying, and to be informed of what the significant growing-points in the philosophy of religion are. . . . Technical philosophical and theological terminology has been kept to the . . . minimum. . . . It has seemed to the author not without value to select several types of theological tendency in the past couple of centuries, and concentrate upon them. The inevitable exclusion of other theologians and traditions does not at all mean that the author regards them as unimportant or irrelevant. Rather, the opposite is the truth." (Author's pref) Index.

"Richmond presents a splendid view of recent philosophical thought as it relates to the field of religion. Actually, it is almost a compendium of philosophical theology. . . . From the thinking of such figures as Hume, Kant, Schleiermacher, and others, he advances their ideas into the contemporary setting of such men as Ayer, Baillie, Heidegger, and Wittgenstein. Even though the aim of the series is to provide a library for 'thinking laymen,' this book is not for the novice."

Choice 4:426 Je '67 180w

"An illuminating and stimulating study. Dr. Richmond's thesis is that, while Hume achieved an effective and well-deserved demolition of the Cartesian God who served merely to explain the cosmos, he never came to grips with the Christian God. . . . [Kant rightly located] religion in the sphere of human response. But Kant left himself open to the jibe that his God was merely a nail used to hold together a morality that was falling to pieces and never successfully made the transition from man to the objective reality of God. Richmond, whose own theological position is apparently that of classical orthodoxy, argues (not altogether convincingly in my opinion) that this fundamental flaw has vitiated every later attempt . . . to arrive at a knowledge of God from the analysis of human consciousness. . . . He writes, 'We . . . want some assurance that our religious beliefs, attitudes and practices have foundations which transcend our inner consciousness.' . . . How or where Richmond hopes to find such assurances, or why they should be regarded as essential or even important for faith, he does not tell us." R. F. Hettlinger

J Religion 47:377 O '67 420w

RICHTER, CONRAD. The aristocrat. 180p $4.50 Knopf

68-23945

This novel "is set in Pennsylvania—in the mining town of Unionville. . . . The heroine, Miss Alexandria Morley, is an octogenarian spinster lady, the last member of the town's first family, living still in its great house, never forgetting her old-fashioned sense of noblesse oblige or losing her serene composure. This story of her struggle against an encroaching modern world in the last years of her life is told by the fifteen-year-old son of [her] handyman." (Harper)

Reviewed by Richard Conlin

Best Sell 28:291 O 15 '68 390w

Reviewed by Charles Horman

Christian Science Monitor p9 N 5 '68 700w

"I'm not sure [that the young] interposed narrator quite works. In any case something makes for a slight sense of artificiality which I have never felt in any other of Mr. Richter's novels. But it is not enough to spoil one's enjoyment of this character-sketch-novel about an extraordinarily firm but resilient old lady."

At the end of the book there is an 'addenda'—in her own words—of comments on her mother, her father, on maids, on relatives, on friends, and on herself, which show vividly how she came to be the old lady that she is when the book begins. A strange form for a novel, but it seems to work." K. G. Jackson

Harper 237:108 O '68 310w

Reviewed by S. L. Steen

Library J 93:2899 Ag '68 160w

"If Richter himself is something of an anachronism among contemporary novelists, he nevertheless writes so persuasively, appealing to our yearning for a world that can still include goodness as a determinant of destiny, that his books carry their own unique conviction. . . . Miss Morley is one of Richter's saltier characters. Yet 'The Aristocrat' is not one of his major works, and one might question whether it should be called a novel at all. I like to think of it as comparable, in a small way, to those evenings with Mark Twain or Oscar Wilde, in which the central character is delivered over to us as a theatrical tour de force. Miss Morley also overwhelms her milieu."

but because of this she gives the impression of existing in a rather one-dimensional world. We get a portrait rather than a novel, but it is an affectionate and entertaining one, for above all, Miss Morley knows how to pose." David Dempsey

N Y Times Bk R p4 O 6 '68 850w
Time 92:102 S 27 '68 360w

RICHTER, CONRAD. Over the blue mountain; il. by Herbert Danska. 81p $3.75 Knopf

67-18584

Abie Fidler and Henner Ney are two boys living in the Pennsylvania Dutch village of Unionshtetle. "According to a folk legend, rain would come after a drought if a woman named Mary went over the mountain, so Henner and Abie decide to watch the mountain path. And a woman does come along. Her name is Mary Heim, and she asks the boys to help her carry a heavy basket [containing a lamb]. She is a hex, a witch—the boys are sure of it. They go with her, more and more frightened, to a farmhouse, where they are caught in a violent storm. In a state of terror the boys run off during the night and struggle home; there they are scolded and comforted. Then one of the men reads from the [Book of Luke and it is apparent] that a parallel exists between the two Marys." (Sat R) "Ages nine to twelve." (N Y Times Bk R)

"There's a haunting quality to this beautifully told story of two very real boys caught up in an adventure whose mystical overtones they barely understood. The book has humor, too, and a strong regional flavor enhanced by Herbert Danska's delightful illustrations." P. G.

Book World pt 2, p32 (children's issue)
N 5 '67 200w

Reviewed by M. L. Birmingham
Commonweal 87:178 N 10 '67 40w

Horn Bk 44:59 F '68 350w

"[This book belongs] to that genre which is more about children than for them. . . . The child protagonists journey from a real and needy world into curious allegorical adventures, the true dimensions and significance of which are left to the reader to ponder. . . . The anxious adults to whom the wandering children return see the aura of a miracle in their adventures. The blurred transitions from the real world to fantasy and the ambiguous conclusions are not likely to attract or hold young readers." Janet French

Library J 92:4254 N 15 '67 210w

"Simply written, with just enough of the Pennsylvania Dutch dialect to give it flavor, Conrad Richter's story reminds us that the original meaning of the word folklore was 'the wisdom or knowledge of the people.' This is Richter's first book for children. And though it does not necessarily follow that because one is a distinguished novelist one can write successfully for young people, when a writer of stature does write a good children's book, it is apt to be—as this one is—very good indeed." Robert Newman

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p42 N 5 '67 260w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland
Sat R 50:45 N 11 '67 160w

RICHTER, G. M. A. Korai; archaic Greek maidens; a study of the development of the Kore type in Greek sculpture with 800 il., incl. 400 from phot. by Alison Frantz. 327p $35 Phaidon

733.38 Sculpture, Greek [68-18904]

The author "traces the evolution of the Standing Kore type . . . from about 660 to about 480 B.C. She has selected over 200 examples—not only single statues, but also parts of groups, statuettes and some reliefs—which illustrate the evolution in the rendering of drapery from stiff enveloping masses to sensitively modelled surfaces. . . . The author has divided the material into six groups and has assigned to each group tentative dates. . . . For each kore she gives a brief description with measurements, finding place, material, and a short bibliography. In a general introduction she discusses the kore type, its meaning, the garments and their decoration, the technique and the locations." (Publisher's note) Glossary of Greek words. Bibliography. Museum index. Index of persons and places.

"Here is another feather in the richly plumed, scholarly cap of Dr. Richter! . . . The volume is not intended to be a corpus of korai, but is rather a selection of . . . examples from various localities illustrating the different stages in evolution from primitive to more naturalistic representations. Dr. Richter . . . arrives at the dating through stylistic comparison with dated statues and vase paintings. Scrupulously documented and possessed of an inherent distinction of its own, Korai will become the standard work on the subject for classical scholars, archaeologists, and students." F. D. Lazenby

Library J 93:3124 S 15 '68 130w

"The term korai ('girls') is archaeologists' shorthand for standing draped female statues of the Archaic period. . . . Their male counterparts (kouroi), who were represented naked were first considered by Miss Richter . . . in [Kouroi: A study of the Development of the Greek Kouros, BRD 1943.] a fundamental work, of which a second edition appeared in 1960, [Kouroi: Archaic Greek Youth]. It is therefore high time that the ladies should have their turn; and this book is all that we hoped it would be and more. . . . [The author's] observation is acute and her presentation full and accurate. Her task has not been as easy as with the kouroi, where the complete anatomical development could be studied; here she has to rely on heads alone, and on the treatment of the drapery. . . . The photographs are superb; the whole book is a delight." TLS p1068 S 26 '68 330w

RICKARDS, COLIN. The man from Devil's Island. 160p il $4.95 Stein & Day

365 Iles du Salut. Artaud, Etienne 68-17315

"Rickards recounts the history of this . . . [prison] settlement and the stories of many of those who lived and died there and a few who successfully escaped. In much of the book he focuses on the experiences of his principal informant, Etienne Artaud, who served a total of 21 years in le bagne for killing his wife's lover. Mr Rickards . . . describes the brutality, killings, executions, graft, and homosexuality. He also describes the role of the Salvation Army in aiding the inmates and in eventually closing the colony." (Library J)

"This infamous island was only a small part of a huge penal colony operated in French Guiana by the French government between 1852 and 1952. . . . This book should be of particular interest to criminologists interested in the history of punishment, but it is written for and should appeal to a much broader audience." M. A. Forslund

Library J 93:2517 Je 15 '68 200w

"A press correspondent with twelve years' service in Latin America and the Caribbean here competently ghosts the life history of a French convict." Sergeant Cuff

Sat R 51:34 J1 27 '68 50w

RICKENBACKER, WILLIAM F. Death of the dollar; personal investment survival in monetary disaster. 189p $4.95 Arlington house

332.4 Currency question—U.S. Investments 68-28771

The author "surveys the historical background of the gold situation in a worldwide perspective. He discusses gold production and distribution, and suggests investment of capital in gold mining industries as 'the only medium that offers a believable antidote to the twin poisons of inflation and deflation.' . . . He also explains the functioning of the International Monetary Fund and the system of the Federal Reserve Banks, discusses injustices caused by continually imbalanced budgets, and foresees a future of stringent economic controls by the federal government in the United States." (Library J)

"There is no evidence anywhere in the book of how or why the dollar is dying. . . . The author rambles all over the economic landscape without any serious attempt to analyze the economic problems confronting the country. The first few chapters are nothing but a collection of sentences and paragraphs quoted from speeches and publications and selected in such a way as to present a picture of doom and collapse for the American economy. . . . The author inveighs against the activities of the 'money managers' without making any attempt to identify them. . . . If [he] has a message that he intended to put across through this book, he has certainly failed badly in such an attempt." A. J. Giunta

RICKENBACKER, W. F.—Continued

Best Sell 28:271 O 1 '68 320w

"Rickenbacker's book should appeal to economists of conservative persuasion, and the wider public should find in it some interesting points worth pondering. . . . For public and academic libraries." Victor Novak

Library J 93:2650 J1 '68 140w

"The background material for [the author's] gloomy forecast is marshalled with great care and occupies about two-thirds of the book. . . . The workings of the gold exchange standard and the nation's banking system are first explained, then subjected to some well-aimed criticism. The Federal Reserve System gets a particularly rough going-over. . . . Rickenbacker's exposés ought to produce some red faces in official circles. . . . [This is] concise, well-documented, readable, and provocative. . . . Only time will tell whether it is prophetic." K. O. Miller

Nat R 20:963 S 24 '68 1100w

RICKETT, FRANCES. A certain slant of light.
320p $5.95 Putnam

68-15520

This first person narrative is by Angel "a young girl growing up during the Depression in a small Indiana town which is caught up with a bank crisis, a local political campaign, and religious bigotry. Orphaned Angel and her sister are being raised by an aunt who did the unprecedented by running for and winning the position of county auditor. But Roseville is a hotbed of KKK activities, and their attacks are directed at Angel's aunt because of her Catholicism." (Library J)

Reviewed by Stephen McKenna

Best Sell 28:90 My 15 '68 500w

"One would like to be able to say nice things about a novel which the author feels 'is quite simply the book I have wanted to write all my life,' but, although the book is an honest attempt to record life in a small Indiana town during the Depression, as seen through a child's eyes, the author's sincerity of purpose is not enough to carry this novel with its loosely strung episodes that lack a strong focal point." A. C. Ringer

Library J 93:1919 My 1 '68 160w

"Strong reader sympathy is created as Angel tries to understand the bigotry and prejudice around her and recognizes the betrayal of people—by age, by ignorance, and by the times. The characterizations are excellent and believable in this realistic dramatic and moving novel which compares favorably in style, theme, and potential YA popularity." E. A. Morse

Library J 93:2740 J1 '68 200w [YA]

"The people Frances Rickett describes are all old friends. We have met many fictional Orm Fletchers, Grand-dad Crowleys, Dynamite Doms. Yet all of these characters live, almost because of their predictabilities rather than in spite of them. Even Aunt Maggie is more remembered than memorable. 'A Certain Slant of Light' is a comfortable, cozy re-creation of a past we will stubbornly continue to sentimentalize, as long as we can speak with affection of 'smalltown America.' Edwin Fadiman

N Y Times Bk R p47 My 26 '68 400w

RICKETT, HAROLD WILLIAM. Wild flowers of the United States; 5v; v2. The Southeastern states; general ed: William C. Steere; collaborators: Clair A. Brown [and others]. 2pts il col pl $44.50 McGraw

582 Wild flowers. Flowers—U.S. (66-17920)

This is the second volume in a series prepared under the direction of the senior botanist at the New York Botanical Garden. It is arranged according to the same plan as volume one (BRD 1967). Glossary.

"Volume two consists of two large, fat books, boxed, containing around 1900 good clear color photographs. . . . a simplified introduction to botany for the ignorant like myself, and everything indexed under both Latin and vernacular title. . . . It is a splendid resource for checking finds at leisure. It is also a pleasure to read. [The author] writes gracefully, avoids technical terms as far as possible, and does not hesitate to throw in odd and amusing bits of nonbotanical information." Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 220:150 D '67 200w

"In the text [the author] describes each flower in detail, citing both Latin and common names, time of flowering, geographic distribution, and identifying characteristics of each species of flower. . . . Dr. Rickett's style is concise and non-technical, but scientifically accurate. The colored illustrations, which accompany each flower description, are of the highest quality and represent a large number of competent photographers. This series of books will become a basic botany reference; in this particular book information is presented in a most attractive, informative manner. Dr. Rickett's volume will attract a large body of readers, not only professional botanists but also students and informed laymen. . . . Highly recommended for all pertinent library collections." D. S. Kalk

Library J 92:4013 N 1 '67 200w

"I cannot imagine what respectable purpose these volumes will serve. The serious plant-hunter already has his Britten and Brown's Flora and [A.] Gray's Manual [of Botany, 8th centennial edition, BRD 1951]; the casual plucker of blossoms will flee in horror from this forbidding taxonomic presentation. Nor can it be used as a field guide, since this year's addition to the program alone weighed out at some fifteen pounds. . . . The majority of the color photographs are unimaginative, unhelpful, and in several cases chromatically distorted. Most of them are smaller than the Indian-chief cards we used to get with our penny bubble gum, much too tiny to be of any real value in identification." Peter Farb

Sat R 50:44 N 25 '67 230w

Reviewed by D. M. Glixon

Sat R 51:48 My 18 '68 100w

Sci Am 218:148 Ja '68 70w

RICKEY, GEORGE. Constructivism; origins and evolution. 305p il $15 Braziller

709.04 Art, Abstract. Composition (Art)

67-24210

"The thesis of this book is that the pioneer work of the early Constructivists established a base from which many of the diverse and inventive non-objective tendencies of the decade 1957-67 have sprung." (Pref) This survey "begins in the early years of the 20th Century, . . . [and describes the work of] pioneer proponents such as Gabo, Pevsner, Kandinsky, and the De Stijl group . . . [and discusses] the work and the artists of the last two decades, and the heirs of earlier Constructivism." (Library J) Chronology. Bibliography. Index.

Choice 5:477 Je '68 230w

"[This is] an outstanding book on the history of Constructivism. It includes material on kinetic and optical art and on artists currently creating with light and motion. A well-researched survey, it . . . [includes] more than 150 short biographies and 350 clear black-and-white illustrations. Special mention must be made of the brilliant bibliography. . . . Enthusiastically recommended without reservation for art libraries and for general collections serving a public concerned with contemporary humanities." W. J. Dane

Library J 92:4142 N 15 '67 200w

"[Rickey's] book is sadly confused and more or less useless. The kernel of any book on Constructivism, evidently, will be its treatment of the historical Constructivist movement in the Soviet Union in the 1920s. This is the worst part of Rickey's book. In fact, it is not about Constructivism at all; it is almost entirely devoted to the work of Malevich and Gabo, two artists publicly hostile to Constructivism. The most important Constructivist artists—Rodchenko, Tatlin and Lissitzky—are dismissed in a few lines and the ideas and work of men who were among the key artists of this century treated with contempt." Peter Wollen

New Statesman 75:309 Mr 8 '68 900w

"[In spite of] shortcomings, Mr. Rickey's book is a valuable addition to the literature of contemporary art. His thesis is sufficiently original and challenging for us to pardon the inconsistencies which inevitably arise. There are a number of inaccuracies in the mass of chronological detail. . . . The bibliography, which has been prepared by Bernard Karpel, bears no direct relation to the text, but it is a useful appendage."

TLS p483 My 9 '68 400w

RICOEUR, PAUL. Husserl: an analysis of his phenomenology; tr. by Edward G. Ballard and Lester E. Embree. 238p $7.50 Northwest-ern univ. press

142 Husserl, Edmund. Phenomenology 67-12676

A French philosopher "covers Ideas II, Cartesian Meditations, and Husserl's reflections on history . . . [as well as] a comparison of Kant and Husserl, the transition to existential phenomenology, and the phenomenology of the will." (Choice) Index.

Choice 5:510 Je '68 210w

"What distinguishes Ricoeur from other French phenomenologists is the particular care he has taken to explicate Husserl's own texts and to situate them with respect to earlier German idealism and later phenomenological existentialism. He has been concerned not only with developing Husserl's theories in new ways but first of all with understanding them in their original import and limits. His works of translation and commentary have made him perhaps the foremost and most authoritative of all the French commentators on Husserl. The present translation is, therefore, a valuable contribution. It exhibits a Husserl seen through the analytical clarity of a French mind. . . . [It] is excellent." J. M. Edie

J Philos 65:403 Je 27 '68 2800w

"This [is a] superb collection of essays of interpretation and criticism. . . . Mr. Ricoeur takes the central issue to be the development of an 'egology' without ontology. . . . [However] it is a pity that the book is not what its title announces: an analysis, including the inner-time-consciousness lectures, 'Formal and Transcendental Logic,' and especially 'Logical Investigations.' . . . A bibliography is needed and the index is halfhearted at best." J. M. Perreault

Library J 92:3646 O 15 '67 200w

RIDEAU, EMILE. The thought of Teilhard de Chardin; tr. by René Hague. 672p $12.50 Harper

194 Teilhard de Chardin, Pierre 67-21558

The author, a French Jesuit, attempts to analyze all the thought of Teilhard de Chardin in chapters concerning various "subjects: phenomenology of history, cosmology, anthropology, theology, spirituality. In addition, in two chapters he discusses the formative influences on Teilhard's thought, and in an appendix he covers vocabulary and language." (Library J) Translated from La Pensée du Père Teilhard de Chardin.

Reviewed by D. A. Drennen
America 118:506 Ap 13 '68 600w

"In the admiration surrounding Teilhard de Chardin's writings, we are faced with the birth of a myth. . . . What can we then say of Father Emile Rideau, who wrote a 254-page book about Teilhard's thought, and added more than 400 pages of notes? . . . [The author] makes the mistake of not letting the phenomenon of Teilhard cool down so that we might study it with some scholarly detachment. [He] sees in him a prophet, or at least a seminal thinker; those who do not and those who want first a critical study, may fail to appreciate [this] vision." Thomas Molnar

Book World p3 Mr 10 '68 280w

"While Rideau falls short of Teilhard's challenge—a common failing—[his study] remains a unique and even priceless contribution to Teilhardian studies because it represents the first major step towards remedying an almost paralyzing lacuna in the Teilhard library. . . . Rideau has given us a massive sourcebook, at times pedantic and repetitious, but nevertheless invaluable. . . . A twenty page appendix on vocabulary brings together an almost unlimited list of terms Teilhard used to express the basic categories of the real as well as the mental and existential terms he used in over fifty years in dealing with these basic concepts. . . . [The] footnotes are classic, a book in themselves. . . . They can easily be read as a separate book. . . . [This book] should delight any serious student of Teilhard's vision." R. T. Francoeur Critic 26:76 F '68 1150w

"[The author uses] technical but clear and concise language. He devotes half the book to notes on the text. These lead the reader through Teilhard's development and introduce the text of unpublished works. . . . Recommended because of its depth of scholarship for all serious philosophical and theological collections." Richard Walz

Library J 92:4507 D 15 '67 230w

Reviewed by J. B. Pritchard
Sat R 51:38 Ap 20 '68 550w

"The latest elucidation of Teilhard's thoughts by Père Rideau has many merits, and in particular it identifies the French sources of his thinking and the reasons why he was placed under a ban better than any other work. . . . Perhaps the book should be regarded as an encyclopedia to be dipped into as occasion demands rather than as a work to be digested at one gulp. But in that case, even with a tolerably good index, it may not be easy for a reader to find what he seeks. . . . M. René Hague's translation—no easy task where so many technical terms and unusual flights of thought are concerned—is impeccable."

TLS p851 Ag 8 '68 600w

RIDER, ANNE. A hilltop in hazard [Eng title: A light affliction]. 191p $4.50 Harcourt

68-12596

"In this novel a Chinese border attack on India cuts off a small British medical mission in the foothills of the Himalayas. The author . . . explores the reactions of the few people trapped inside to their isolation, their constant fear of further attack (and of probable death), and to each other. The central theme is the conflict between Dr. Bone, the fiercely evangelical Scot who leads the mission, and Mrs. Calverley, the eccentric and strong-willed old lady who is infuriated by Dr. Bone's devotion to duty at the expense of personal feelings." (Library J)

Reviewed by Anne Keehan
Best Sell 27:455 Mr 1 '68 280w

"The characters are strongly drawn, if oversimplified, and the drama of their situation, combined with the essential inappropriateness of many of their attitudes, makes for a highly entertaining and well-written book." T. J. Pedley

Library J 93:772 F 15 '68 90w

Reviewed by Gillian Freeman
New Statesman 74:233 Ag 25 '67 250w

"[This is] a small jewel that sparkles with a wit and lucidity reminiscent of Jane Austen. . . . The author's talent lies in being able to stand outside her characters and define them beautifully in terms of their conduct. The most memorable of the refugees is a Margaret Ruthenford type named Mrs. Calverly, a 70-year-old gynecologist and mystic who takes the long view of sudden death. Dr. Bone, the mission's head, is a Scottish Schweitzer too abstracted with his colony of imported lepers to think of his own safety. But he does consider the safety of his young son, Magnus, and of the nurses and civilians in his vulnerable refuge. What he does about conflicting moral duties causes the novel's cool detachment to take fire." Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p40 F 11 '68 120w
New Yorker 44:186 My 4 '68 80w

RIDGEWAY, JAMES. The closed corporation: American universities in crisis. 273p $5.95 Random house

378.73 Colleges and universities—U.S. 68-28551

The author is an associate editor of The New Republic. With the assistance of several reporters, he conducted "an inquiry into the relationships between universities, industry and government and the way in which the universities—our country's biggest corporation—and the professor-entrepreneurs use public moneys for private gain." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Mr. Ridgeway is not concerned with teaching, good or bad. . . . The question [he] pokes at with his rake is whether [the] reliance [of the government upon the universities and their leading scientists] has gone too far, whether it has contaminated the universities and become in effect a closed and corrupt system. In muckraking everyone gets spattered. . . . One must usually take Ridgeway's inferences and conclusions with a pinch of salt. He recommends, for instance, that in the future universities 'should be run by students, teachers and administrators and free to all.' Yes, but who pays for it? . . . What Mr. Ridgeway projects is a state and federal bureaucracy the size and wastefulness of which would make the present setup seem as innocent as 'September Morn.'" Edward Weeks

Atlantic 222:134 N '68 950w

RIDGEWAY, JAMES—Continued

Reviewed by T. M. Garrett
Best Sell 28:347 N 15 '68 270w

"Much of the book sounds like an updated rewrite of C. Wright Mills' 'The Power Elite' [BRD 1956], without, however, the Millsian intellectual stimulus. Mr. Ridgeway's book is conspiratorial, demonological, and overloaded with innuendo and invective. . . . His case against the American university is so overstated that it is difficult to accept. . . . Some of Mr. Ridgeway's charges are not substantiated. . . . All this is unfortunate, because Mr. Ridgeway offers trenchant criticism of our universities." Arnold Beichman

Christian Science Monitor p5 D 26 '68 390w

"Considering the university, public or private, a secret organization, [the author] describes in arduous detail negotiations between the university and business, industry, government, and foundations. Illustrations of these negotiations are very recent, including those with tobacco and aeronautics industries, insurance, real estate, CIA, and so on. Mr. Ridgeway exhorts and provokes with clever disparagement and journalistic finesse as he conveys his timely messages. . . . For collections in higher education." J. W. Stein

Library J 93:3542 O 1 '68 150w

Reviewed by H. L. Nieburg
N Y Times Bk R p6 O 27 '68 1800w

"Ridgeway is a good reporter. . . . If he sometimes sounds like a puritan, it is nonetheless true that his chronicle of institutional iniquities includes about every vice known to man, including lust. . . . The real issue is . . . power. What is the proper function of the university? . . . What Ridgeway's book touches is the problem of disestablishing American higher education. There is no effective political way of doing that from the outside, for any controls merely drag the universities that much deeper into some establishment or some political arena. The only method of doing it is to persuade the academic professionals to do it themselves, to have them enforce standards and ethics and restraint on their own members and institutions. . . . Ridgeway should have written a more thoughtful book, but for the late arrival it is not a bad place to start." Peter Schrag

Sat R 51:74 O 19 '68 1600w

RIDGWAY, MATTHEW B. The Korean War: how we met the challenge; how all-out Asian war was averted; why MacArthur was dismissed; why today's war objectives must be limited [Eng title: War in Korea]. 291p pl $6.95 Doubleday

951.9 Korean War, 1950-1953 67-11172

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by W. V. Kennedy
America 118:42 Ja 13 '68 500w
Choice 5:246 Ap '68 300w

Reviewed by G. T. Brown
J Am Hist 55:182 Je '68 470w

Reviewed by F. J. Johnson
Nat R 20:146 F 13 '68 500w

Reviewed by David Rees
New Statesman 76:543 O 25 '68 1000w

Reviewed by F. C. Jones
Pacific Affairs 41:440 fall '68 270w

RIDKER, RONALD G. Economic costs of air pollution: studies in measurement. 214p maps $13.50 Praeger

333.9 Air—Pollution 66-26571

"This book is the result of a three-year study made for the United States Public Health Service. [The author] suggests the possibilities for measuring the economic costs of air pollution. He presents information on the economic costs with regard to health and disease, soiling and deterioration of materials, and property values. He documents this information with several case studies which include cost estimates, and suggests that 'while it provides estimates wherever possible, this study is essentially exploratory; it is meant to determine what can be done and what needs to be done to measure the economic costs of air pollution.'" (Library J) Annotated bibliography.

Reviewed by C. R. Plott
Am Econ R 58:629 Je '68 550w

"Examples are relevant, analyses rigorous. Style is excellent. Intermediate readers will benefit from Ridker's remarks on the valid use of interviews, selection of appropriate variables, correct use of partial economic analysis, analysis of cross-sectional and time-series observations, and use of several statistical techniques. The book is well illustrated with tables and figures. Appendices include definitions of terms and more detailed discussions of methods. Adequate bibliography is shown in footnotes—an additional collated list would have been useful. Strongly recommended for senior undergraduates and graduate students in economics, and for interested research workers. Probably the best book available in this relatively new field."

Choice 5:385 My '68 160w

"So far as I know, this is one of the first major published studies on the subject, and is an authoritative work. This book is largely for specialists although it will be useful in large economics collections, and for anyone interested in the cost of air pollution. However, the book's price seems much too high." D. E. Thompson

Library J 92:4149 N 15 '67 120w

RIDLEY, JASPER. John Knox. 596p $9.50 Oxford

B or 92 Knox, John 68-55648

"Against the background of sixteenth-century life, and the foreign policy of the great powers, [the author] follows Knox's activities from St. Andrews and Edinburgh to Berwick and London, Frankfurt and Geneva, Dieppe and La Rochelle. He traces the gradual development of Knox's thought, especially his doctrine of resistance to evil rulers, in the light of recently discovered material and original sources." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

Economist 229:xii N 9 '68 600w

"[This] brings up to date our factual knowledge of Knox's life, positions him precisely within the main political forces of his time, and discusses his place in modern history dispassionately and thoroughly. . . . Mr. Ridley presents Knox as a successful strategist and a skillful propagandist, whose undoubted faith in God took chiefly a political turn. Certainly there is much to be said for that interpretation. . . . If one hesitates to accept Ridley's view entirely, it is because Knox thought of himself and carried on his work so plainly in Christian terms as he saw them." Roger Hazelton

New Repub 159:25 N 30 '68 1250w

"The man and his time, both furiously active and violent, come very much to life. The book's quality derives from the fact that it sits squarely on the sources. The enormous bibliography includes many secondaries, but they have left very little mark in the footnotes. Occasionally this can be unfortunate. . . . Altogether, anyone in search of the higher flights and the deeper comprehension would find the book disappointing; when Mr. Ridley leaves description for reflection, he tends to fall flat. This is a thoroughly workmanlike job which gives the reader every chance to understand and evaluate Knox, but forces him to do some of the thinking himself. . . . The book's political concentration possibly over-emphasises the repulsive Knox." G. R. Elton

New Statesman 76:399 S 27 '68 650w

RIDOLFI, ROBERTO. The life of Francesco Guicciardini; tr. from the Italian by Cecil Grayson. 336p $10 Knopf

B or 92 Guicciardini, Francesco 66-10033

In his biography of the Florentine historian-statesman whose contemporary was Machiavelli, Ridolfi attempts to portray Guicciardini, "the man, the politician, and the historian as an integrated whole and discuss him in terms of the total context of the period in which he functioned." (Library J) Index.

Choice 5:858 S '68 130w

"The study is definitive . . . [and] it is based in considerable part upon hitherto unknown materials. . . . It scrupulously and copiously documents the author's researches and conclusions, thus making it possible for the scholar both to verify Mr. Ridolfi's findings and to explore them further; last, it is written in a clear, concise, detached style, which in many ways reflects the personality of its subject. Grayson's translation reflects well the spirit and style of the original work. This is not a popular biography, for Mr. Ridolfi demands from his readers a considerable knowledge of Renaissance history; but scholars will find it extremely useful." W. J. Roscelli

Library J 93:2475 Je 15 '68 480w

"This book lacks some of the human warmth that pleased readers of [the author's Life of Niccolò Machiavelli. BRD 1963]. But how could it be otherwise when one is dealing with so arrogant a seeker after power and so remorseless a wielder of it? . . . Ridolfi is at his best in the chapters that carefully trace Guicciardini's intellectual processes in preparing revision after revision of his greatest book [La Storia d'Italia]. . . . Every student of the Renaissance and of historical writing owes a debt of gratitude to Ridolfi." C. F. Delzell

Sat R 51:49 Je 8 '68 900w

TLS p752 J1 18 '68 2350w

RIENCOURT, AMAURY DE. The American empire. 366p $7.50 Dial press

327.73 U.S.—Foreign relations. World politics—1945- 68-9458

In this book the author of The Coming Caesars (BRD 1957) compares the U.S. today with the Roman Empire, and predicts the expansion of American influence in the future. Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by Edwin Tetlow

Christian Science Monitor p9 O 22 '68 300w

"[The author] is neither an optimist nor pessimist, rather he appears fatalistic about our future. He seems at times to try at being a successor to Tocqueville, but his range of interest is not as wide. . . . This is a most valuable book which would have had even greater importance if greater depth had been given in certain areas. A necessary acquisition for libraries." John Lustig

Library J 93:4151 N 1 '68 190w

Reviewed by Francis Pierce

New Repub 159:31 N 2 '68 900w

"[Riencourt] has no special training in politics, economics, history or sociology. He has not sifted original material. He has not tested his views in study over the years. He is a poor man's Toynbee. For sources he relies on textbooks. . . . The writing is hackneyed. . . . A poor grasp of the details is further expressed by a tiresome habit of ascribing complicated transactions to supposed national traits. . . . Riencourt fails to describe, or even to sense, the way the American empire really works." Joseph Kraft

N Y Times Bk R p10 S 22 '68 850w

"The author seeks to validate his case with a varied array of facts. His impressive erudition is matched by the aptness of his analogies. In quick order Riencourt traces the roots of the American empire and the new type of human being produced by the American environment. . . . According to Riencourt's crystal ball the division of Europe is permanent, and the technological and economic domination of Western Europe by the United States is assured. . . . This book is an exciting intellectual tour de force reminiscent of the works of Tocqueville or Spengler. . . . [But] it ignores the view that the Roman strain seems more evident in Moscow than in Washington." W. R. Kintner

Sat R 51:44 Ag 24 '68 1050w

"[The author's] assumption that history is mostly a mystical matter of 'preordained' patterns rather than men's decisions seems unpardonably pat and serene. One of history's mechanics, rather than poets, he suffers a narrowness of heart. His methodical calm before the ultimate nightmare of excessive political power suggests his dangerous limitations. He is simply not scared enough and, because of his arrogance, his very insights become his blinders. . . . His talk of empire may easily mislead. America is clearly trying to be an influence for order in the world, and its culture almost inevitably spreads—but that is not necessarily empire building. Still, as an agent of provocation and a brilliant exaggerator, De Riencourt is useful: he forces readers to face up to life's own exaggerations."

Time 92:100 S 13 '68 950w

RIESMAN, DAVID, jt. auth. The academic revolution. See Jencks, C.

RIESMAN, DAVID. Conversations in Japan; modernization, politics, and culture [by] David Riesman [and] Evelyn Thompson Riesman. 371p $7.50 Basic bks.

915.2 Japan—Civilization 67-17861

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by Hans Gerth

Am Soc R 33:658 Ag '68 800w

Choice 4:1303 Ja '68 190w

Reviewed by R. P. Dore

Pacific Affairs 41:284 summer '68 650w

TLS p496 My 16 '68 850w

Reviewed by R. A. Miller

Yale R 58:273 D '68 1300w

RIESMAN, EVELYN THOMPSON, jt. auth. Conversations in Japan. See Riesman, D.

RIGA, PETER J. The church made relevant; a commentary on the pastoral constitution of Vatican II. 337p $5.95 Fides

261 Vatican Council, 2d. Constitutio pastoralis de ecclesia in mundo huius temporis. Sociology, Christian 66-30587

An examination of the decree of the Second Vatican Council known as the Pastoral Constitution on the Church in the Modern World. The author traces "its ancestry through the social teachings of the Church from Leo XIII to Pius IX, and [relates] it especially to the two major encyclicals of John XXIII, Mater et Magistra and Pacem in Terris." (Publisher's note) Indexes.

"A welcome feature of the book is the author's treatment of topics in their total setting. Subjects such as the nature of man, marriage, culture, work, capitalism, the state and world peace are discussed in the light of the Church's evolving social doctrine from Leo XIII to John XXIII. At the same time, concrete, practical applications to current issues will be extremely helpful to readers of this long and comprehensive conciliar document. . . . There is no artificial dualism here, no pitting of Church against world in an assumed inherent antagonism. Rather, the reciprocity of their true relationship is stressed. An example of this approach is the author's insistence that liturgical worship should not be separated from social action." Patricia Barrett

America 117:118 J1 29 '67 600w

"Riga aims at practical implementation of this 'unique, pastoral' document, but he does not bring it off, at least for the ordinary layman. Technical theological and philosophical jargon, involved sentence structure, along with a useless index, hardly qualify the book as a clarification of the document."

Choice 5:514 Je '68 120w

"[In his commentary the author] methodically follows the plan of the document. His general analysis contributes greatly to understanding since he puts the document in economic, social and cultural perspective, treating it as a statement stressing the fact that the Christian faith is no 'blueprint of ready-made solutions to the many problems of the modern world.' It is the objective of the Church, he points out, to enter into the problems and agonies of modern man in order to understand and aid in the search for solutions. . . . Father Riga's book can definitely be given priority by the discriminating."

Critic 26:84 F '68 120w

RIGBY, T. H., ed. Stalin. (Great lives observed) 182p $4.95; pa $1.95 Prentice-Hall

B or 92 Stalin, Iosif. Russia—History—1925-1953 66-16348

This book aims to contribute to a reappraisal of Stalin and the Stalin era "by presenting the reader with an immediate impression of Stalin, both through his own words uttered or written in various moods and circumstances, and through the first-hand evaluations of men who spoke and dealt with him, and then by introducing the reader to major interpretations of his character, achievements, and place in history. . . . Material is included illustrative of the Stalin cult as well as of the nature and extent of its subsequent repudiation." (Introductory Chronology. Annotated bibliography.

RIGBY, T. M.—Continued

"The selection is nonpartisan, and well organized; the style generally lucid and concise. However, there is not enough novel or thought-provoking material here to make this anything more than a standard introductory text. What seemed to this reviewer the most unfortunate, almost inexcusable, omission is that Stalin's pathological love of sycophantic adulation is never explored in depth. . . . Authors of the selections collected here never attempted to come to grips with the phenomenon, which some European observers have presented as a clear case of atavism (a throwback to the ancient Middle East). Otherwise, the book is recommended for most libraries." O. Ivsy

Library J 91:2840 Je 1 '66 320w

Library J 91:6222 D 15 '66 70w [YA]

"It is difficult to take very seriously the editor's stated aim of making a contribution, with this book, to the 'major reappraisal of Stalin and the Stalin era' which he expects will be forthcoming in the next few years. Scholars will find nothing new here. Much more meaningful is the objective of sharpening the reader's critical sense. . . . An unfortunate weakness of the book is the great number and variety of excerpts used, some fifty-eight in all. The five longest items range from seven to twelve pages, but quite a few others are only a paragraph or two in length. There is, however, much to commend in the work of the editor. He has made a responsible, balanced selection of materials and provided impressive editorial scaffolding, both for the book as a whole and for each document in particular. He does not allow his own interpretation to circumscribe unfairly the range of views presented. He is quick to testify to the 'enormous gaps in our knowledge.' Instructors whose minds are not unalterably set against the use of 'snippets' may find this a useful teaching resource." Nathan Smith

Social Studies 59:33 Ja '68 310w

RIGGAN, GEORGE A. Messianic theology and Christian faith. 208p $6 Westminster press

232 Jesus Christ—Messiahship 67-19298

Chapters include: Messianic Kingship in Ancient Israel; Hebrew Prophecy and Messianic Kingship; The Beginnings of Ecclesiastic Messianism; Apocalyptic Messianism and New Testament Messianism. Index.

"The book substantiates many of the claims made these days by advocates of 'the theology of hope,' for it deals with clues to and cues from the future involved in the biblical promise."

Christian Century 84:1466 N 15 '67 60w

"Writing 'chiefly for informed and questioning laymen and for college students,' Professor Riggan of Hartford Seminary Foundation addresses himself to the questions, 'What has it meant historically that a man was called the Messiah? and by implication, What does it mean to be a Christian?' He thus makes more widely available the fruit of scholarly research which is current coin in professional theological circles. Professor Riggan handles his subject with insight and competence, scholarly discipline, and openness." S. W. Wojtowicz

Library J 92:4507 D 15 '67 70w

RIGONI STERN, MARIO. The sergeant in the snow. See Lost Legions

RILEY, OLIVE L., jt. auth. Portraits and personalities. See Kainz, L. C.

RIMA, I. H. Development of economic analysis. 422p $10.35; college ed $7.75 Irwin

330 Economics—History 66-28629

This volume "traces the development of the analytical tools and concepts which comprise the body of economic theory. . . . The approach of this book is chronological." (Pref) Chapter bibliographies. Index of names. Index of subjects.

"The coverage is excellent and the exposition is very good. . . . There is some overlapping with more traditional treatments of the history of economic thought. . . . [The] chapters deal primarily with the work of the Classical, Neoclassical, and Keynesian schools. The only exception is Karl Marx. . . . Rima appears to be on firmer ground when he is dealing with the nature of analytical tools and concepts than when he moves over into the area of economics and its philosophical and historical setting. . . . For those instructors who wish to give their students in intermediate economic theory an historical orientation for the concepts and tools that they are analyzing, Rima's book will be found very useful." A. G. Gruchy

Am Econ R 58:208 Mr '68 700w

"An excellent supplementary text for use with [P.] Samuelson's Economics: An Introductory Analysis [BRD 1948]. . . . The approach is principally one of carefully selecting outstanding economic theoretical formulations of the past three centuries against their times and developmental background. Various formulations are summarized in a clear and understandable manner, particularly for the beginning student to [whom] the book is geared."

Choice 5:1185 N '68 90w

RINGER, BENJAMIN B. The edge of friendliness; a study of Jewish-Gentile relations. 272p $8.25 Basic bks.

301.45 Jews in the U.S. Suburban life 67-17393

This is volume two of the Lakeville studies. "Continuing the analysis of an anonymous middle-western community, this study, sponsored by the American Jewish Committee, is based on interviews with 432 Jewish and 250 Gentile inhabitants. Professor Ringer, chairman of the sociology department at Hunter College, shows how surface tranquility in the elite town of 1959 masks some anxiety, discontent, and 'fairly strained' intergroup orientation." (Library J) Index. For volume one, Jewish Identity on the Suburban Frontier, by M. Sklare and J. Greenblum see BRD 1968.

Reviewed by Andrew Effrat

Am J Soc 74:104 Jl '68 500w

"This is a thought provoking book. . . . [It] makes a contribution to the field of intergroup relations that goes beyond the Jewish-Gentile context. One need only replace Jew with Negro and substitute Northern white for Gentile to extend the processes portrayed to other social contexts. . . . But despite an admirable writing style and a valuable effort to weave theory out of research findings, the book has several major failings as a research presentation to social scientists. First, a fairly small sample is pushed too hard. . . . Then, too, one might well chafe at the exclusive use of percentages and indices as analysis tools. . . . If one reads very carefully the brief description of the sample design, it is possible to surmise that the sampling process may have hued fairly close to the simple random technique. But why is there no technical appendix with a table of sampling errors? For that matter, why is there no presentation of the interview schedules used for Jews and Gentiles? In summary, this book is not really written with the full needs of the social science research community in mind. Instead it is aimed at a more general college-educated audience." Bernard Lazerwitz

Am Soc 33:310 Ap '68 800w

Choice 5:565 Je '68 240w

"There are some impolite queries not posed (for example, on extra-marital relations), but the work, written with ease and clarity, is most important and is essential for many libraries." H. M. Kapenstein

Library J 92:1846 My 1 '67 120w

RINGOLD, MAY SPENCER. The role of the state legislatures in the Confederacy. 141p $5 Univ. of Ga. press

973.71 Confederate States of America—Politics and government. Legislative bodies 66-27607

"This study of state legislatures in the Confederacy concentrates on the programs by which governors and general assemblies sought to relieve crises at home and to protect and maintain as nearly as possible normal economic, social, and political institutions. Secession conventions are a part of the investigation insofar as their ordinances initiated or supplemented policies of the legislatures. . . . The book deals with practical rather than theoretical aspects of state rights in action. . . . It describes in the light of deteriorating local and national conditions the ultimate failure of the states to meet the physical needs and maintain the morale of the Southern people." (Pref) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"[The author] concedes that the states failed, in the end, to cope with the situation thrust upon them, but she contends that the failure was related not to constitutional principles but to the economic inferiority of the South. Within this framework, Ringold describes the efforts of the states to cope with the following problems or subjects: local defense, relations with the central government, economic ills, social institutions, morale, and revenue. She does this in a hundred pages of text and in a compressed and severe style. This may seem to be too scanty a treatment of the theme, but a longer account would merely have piled up additional examples of legislation. The author cites enough examples to make her point. . . . The book does not relate much that is new, but it brings many scattered bits of information into a new and sensible focus. A work for the specialists, it will be welcomed by them as a minor but solid contribution to Confederate literature." T. H. Williams

Am Hist R 73:605 D '67 550w

"The only general study of Southern state legislative activity during the Civil War. As such it offers much useful information and a basis for comparison among the respective states. Originally a doctoral dissertation, it is soundly based on official documents and archival and manuscript materials. But Ringold ventures almost no generalization or interpretation of her material. . . . There is little either to sustain reader interest or provide an understanding of motivations, controversies, consequences, or the relationship of details to any broader geographical, chronological, or topical context."

Choice 4:748 S '67 110w

RINHART, FLOYD. American daguerreian art [by] Floyd and Marian Rinhart. 135p il col il $10 Potter, C.N.; for sale by Crown

772 Daguerreotype. Photography—History 67-16521

This book traces and illustrates the history of the daguerrean art, a photographic process which made use of the camera obscura to throw an exact image on a silvered sheet of copper. Biographical notes. Bibliography. Index.

"The Rinharts rely heavily on earlier research by [B.] Newhall, The Daguerreotype in America [BRD 1962] and Taft, Photography and the American Scene. The main attractions of the Rinharts' book are . . . reproductions of early photographs, mostly daguerreotypes, and a chapter on cases and casemakers, of interest largely to the specialist. There is no working description of the American daguerrotype process or advice to other collectors for cleaning and preserving specimens. As a general reference on the daguerreotype, Newhall remains unsurpassed."

Choice 5:337 My '68 100w

"The art of daguerreotype portraiture flourished from the 1840's to 1860, and some excellent examples, including 12 in color, are reproduced in this book. The Rinharts, who have one of the largest private collections of Daguerreian art in the United States, have researched their subject and documented their sources. . . . They are at their best describing how daguerreians added color. . . . [However] the arrangement of text and illustrations is disjointed; the text is not keyed to the pictures. The Rinharts surely had more pertinent information on the daguerrotypes included. . . . Recommended with reservations to public libraries with a demand." T. W. Wright

Library J 93:541 F 1 '68 130w

"With few but occasionally notable exceptions . . . the daguerreotypes reproduced in this informative book are not art but merely documents of a historical period and of the birth pangs of photography. . . . Of particular interest are the color daguerreotypes of Levi Hill. Along with numerous portrait photographs there are landscapes and a sampling of decorative daguerreotype cases." John Perreault

Nation 205:698 D 25 '67 90w

RINHART, MARION, jt. auth. American daguerreian art. See Rinhart, F.

RINK, PAUL. In defense of freedom; the story of the Monroe doctrine; maps and drawings by Barry Martin. 191p $3.95 Messner

327.73 Monroe doctrine—Juvenile literature. U.S.—Foreign relations—Juvenile literature 68-14935

"This book traces the implementation of the Monroe Doctrine from its proclamation in 1823 to the present and shows how its many interpretations have resulted from the politics and public convictions of each period. . . . Rink discusses each application of the doctrine, with emphasis on the basic freedom involved, and includes the historical background necessary for understanding the incident. [Bibliography. Index.] Grades seven to ten." (Library J)

Best Sell 28:66 My 1 '68 80w

"[Written] in clear, readable terms. . . . [Rink] presents a good picture of the growth of isolationism. Although more current and for a younger audience, this factual account covers essentially the same material as Frank Donovan's Mr. Monroe's Message." Frances Fleming

Library J 93:1329 Mr 15 '68 140w

RINKOFF, BARBARA. Member of the gang; il. by Harold James. 127p $3.50 Crown

68-26650

"A story about a 13-year-old black boy with a terrible self-image. His small failures gnaw at him and he sees no future for himself. He swears he will not depend on getting tips from the good-natured 'whitey.' Desperately wanting to 'be someone' he joins a street gang, is picked up by the police after a knife fight, [and] taken in hand by a Negro social worker. . . . Ages nine to thirteen." (Commonweal)

Reviewed by Robin Gottlieb

Book World p20 N 24 '68 110w

"The book's ending is a little too pat and the picture presented here of life on the ghetto streets seems understated to the point of timidity. But there are many truths in Woodie's story. The picture of the school where failure is nurtured is vivid and real. Finally, Woodie himself is a thoroughly believable boy, going through the same identity search that young boys of all races, urban and rural, will recognize. The story is well written and tightly constructed." L. P. Scanlon

Commonweal 89:236 N 22 '68 130w

"The average plot is enlivened by better-than-average dialogue, the good characterization of Woodie, and the well-established, realistic setting." Priscilla Moxom

Library J 93:3973 O 15 '68 130w

"Woodie's story seems all the more convincing because it's in such a low key: the boys aren't vicious criminals, the social worker is neither a hero nor a stereotype, the Jacksons are just an ordinary urban family. The story is economically constructed, smoothly written, and effective." Zena Sutherland

Sat R 51:37 O 19 '68 150w

RIPLEY, ELIZABETH. Copley; a biography. 72p il $3.75 Lippincott

759.13 Copley, John Singleton—Juvenile literature 67-19262

This biography offers an "introduction to the 18th-century artist who left Boston during the Revolution and took up permanent residence in London. . . . Mrs. Ripley discusses both the artistic attributes of each painting and its historical background. Also highlighted in this title is the status of 18th-century American art and the reception it was given by the established, conservative Royal Academy. [Bibliography. Index.] Grades five to eight." (Library J)

"Easy to read, . . . this will provide informative reading for early teens."

Best Sell 27:363 D 1 '67 80w [YA]

"Alternating pages of text and pictures. . . . The book depicts well, without stressing the conflict, the dilemma of American artists caught between the country of their birth and Europe." P. H.

Horn Bk 44:75 F '68 130w

Reviewed by M. J. Shapiro

Library J 92:4626 D 15 '67 70w

RIPLEY, ELIZABETH. Hokusai; a biography. 71p il $3.75; lib bdg-$3.59 Lippincott
B or 92 Hokusai—Juvenile literature 68-24410

The author describes the style and career of the Japanese painter and printmaker. Bibliography. Index. "Grades six to eight." (Library J)

"The range and variety of skill shown by these illustrations—which are explained on facing pages—is remarkable, even staggering. This volume surely deserves a place in every high school, junior and senior, library."
Best Sell 23:278 O 1 '68 130w

Reviewed by S. G. Lanes
Book World p6 (children's issue) N 3 '68 70w

Horn Bk 44:705 D '68 210w

"A sketchy biography of the . . . artist in the style and format of the author's other books. . . . Attractive examples of Hokusai's best-known drawings and wood-block prints are included; the selection of illustrations is more informative of the artist's varied styles than is the text . . . [which] generally fails to place Hokusai within the context of contemporary Japanese art, save for passing references to Utamaro and 'the vulgar school' called Kano' (the style of which is not explained). Because the format should attract browsers, it is doubly unfortunate that Mrs. Ripley chose not to give more information about an artistic tradition which will be unfamiliar to most American students." M. A. Dorsey

Library J 93:4423 N 15 '68 80w

"This is a handsome book, one of the best of Elizabeth Ripley's biographies of the masters, with a spare, simple text appropriate to the art. Hokusai's prints are more effective in black and white than many of the Western paintings which have appeared in the author's earlier books. . . . As always, such biographies involve the author in doubtful historical embroidery, but allowing her this, it is a good introduction to Hokusai."

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p53 N 3 '68 90w

RIPLEY, RANDALL B. Party leaders in the House of Representatives. 221p $6.75 Brookings

328.73 U.S. Congress. House 67-30601

The author "analyzes the legislative role of party leaders, investigating the degree and nature of their influence on the legislative behavior of members of the House of Representatives. He examines congressional personalities and institutions from 1861 to the present to show the effectiveness of party leaders, and uses historical material and statistical data based on interviews to support his conclusions." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"[Ripley] does a first-rate job of using roll calls, personal observations, formal interviews, and a broad range of historical materials to develop a sophisticated analysis. Not only does he lay out the pattern of leadership structures, but he tries to measure the effects of these patterns on members' decision making. While students might question . . . his hypotheses and conclusions, he sets out a structure which fortunately is susceptible to future testing. An appendix gives the thrust of previous scholarly writing on party leadership, which contains only 'fragmentary information.'"
Choice 5:1224 N '68 220w

"[Ripley] argues that much can be learned about the legislative process by using the methods of political science in a 'broad historical perspective.' . . . [He] brings together from other studies a considerable array of very useful information. . . . [He] devotes the final one third of his book to . . . contemporary leadership practices. . . . Some historians will surely quarrel with at least a few of Ripley's classifications and with some of his historical generalizations. . . . He fails to make explicit his method of selecting 'key' roll-call votes and he provides no information to indicate the number, descriptions, and specific source citations of the selected votes. Despite these reservations [this] is a stimulating and suggestive book which should command the attention of both historians and political scientists." H. W. Allen

J Am Hist 55:408 S '68 370w

"[Ripley finds] four patterns of majority party control: leadership by the Speaker, the Majority leader, a collegial group, or the President. . . . The minority party [he says] has used three patterns of leadership: that of the Minority leader, a collegial group, or a lack of purposeful leadership. . . . [He] examines the problems of party loyalty and competition for leadership. This volume is not only informative but is also suggestive of areas for further study. Recommended for the college library." S. D. Nerbo

Library J 93:2508 Je 15 '68 180w

Reviewed by F. J. Donner
Nation 208:23 Ja 6 '69 370w

RIST, J. M. Plotinus: the road to reality. 279p $9.50 Cambridge

186 Plotinus [67-17009]

An associate professor of Greek at the University of Toronto discusses 'Plotinus' concept of the One, the Logos, and Free Will and . . . Faith in Plotinus and in later Neoplatonism." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index of passages. General index.

"A unified study of the philosophy of Plotinus, carried out in a series of detailed studies of problems. . . . The arguments are wide ranging, from painstaking work with texts and textual variations up to the observation (about the One's Knowledge) 'he who has seen it knows what I mean.' On balance, it is a careful piece of scholarship, infused with the conviction that Plotinus has more than historical interest. Many of the arguments rely on Greek readings, but the main ones are understandable to the Greekless."

Choice 5:972 O '68 170w

Reviewed by L. G. Westerink
Class World 61:18 S '68 310w

RITSCHL, DIETRICH. Memory and hope; an inquiry concerning the presence of Christ. 237p $5.95 Macmillan (N Y)

232 Jesus Christ 67-22732

A professor "at Pittsburgh Theological Seminary presents his Christological views in two parts—historical and systematic. He believes that the ultimate essential problem which underlies Christianity's weakness is to be found in the separation of Jesus Christ and the Church. Thus, in the first part of the book, he discusses the modified Augustinianism which reveals the cause of the problem. . . . In the second part of his book, he attempts to proceed toward an answer. . . . The second part contains three chapters, giving the extreme Western answer, the dogmatic 'Atheistic Christology,' and the ethical aspects of these. In the last chapter, he discusses the questions raised earlier and uses the conclusions of earlier portions to outline his 'Christological Thesis.'" (Library J) Index of names. Index of subjects.

Reviewed by Norman Perrin
Christian Century 85:456 Ap 10 '68 320w

"An interesting, provocative work which should be of profit even to those with different views." Shildes Johnson

Library J 92:3044 S 15 '67 150w

RIVET, A. L. F., ed. The Iron age in Northern Britain. 155p il pl maps $8.50 Aldine pub.

913.341 Scotland—Antiquities. Great Britain —Antiquities. Iron age [67-17617]

"Selected papers presented at a Conference in 1961 on 'Problems in North Britain's Iron Age Archaeology.' . . . [Stewart Piggott] synthesizes the general, known picture of the Scottish Iron Age archaeology, relating it to England and the Continent. Subsequent chapters, by different authorities, then treat a few selected problems: the metalwork, the pottery of the Hebrides, North British hill-forts, settlement-remains of Northumberland, and the development of the Broch-structures in light of excavations in the 1940's and 1950's." (Choice) Chapter bibliographies. Index.

"As [this] is the only recent general work on the topic at all, its value to anyone interested in European archaeology can hardly be overestimated. . . . One only regrets that so few topics could be covered, and that the general chronological terminology and framework, due to delays in the final publications, is already obsolescent for an appearance in 1967. . . . An extensive bibliography at the end of each chapter [enhances] its value for further study."

Choice 4:734 S '67 180w

Reviewed by J. N. L. Myres
Engl Hist R 83:143 Ja '68 1100w

ROAZEN, PAUL. Freud: political and social thought. 322p $6.95 Knopf

150.19 Freud, Sigmund. Psychoanalysis 68-12670

"In an endeavor to develop the relationship between psychoanalysis and political science [the author] focuses upon the work of Sigmund Freud and upon the major lines of Freudian doctrines. Mr. Roazen, a political scientist himself, believes that 'by using psychoanalytic concepts to understand the origin of Freud's ideas, it may prove possible not only to give depth to our knowledge of Freud's thought, but also to establish more securely the relevance of psychoanalysis to political and social thought.'" (Library J) Index.

Reviewed by R. W. Noland

Am Scholar 37:692 autumn '68 1150w

"The author's handicap is obvious here—his lack of sophistication in the treacherous fields of psychiatry and psychoanalysis. The work is semi-biographical and adds little new to Freudiana that has not been stated by more qualified writers. The result is another book trying to explain 'What Freud Meant.' Readers will do better to consult the founder of psychoanalysis in the original. More stimulating secondary works on psychoanalysis and politics are Erich Fromm's Beyond the Chains of Illusion—a study of Marx and Freud; political philosopher Herbert Marcuse's Eros and Civilization [BRD 1956]; and Elsworth Baker's Man in the Trap [BRD 1968]."

Choice 5:877 S '68 140w

Christian Century 85:204 F 14 '68 50w

Reviewed by Dan Sullivan

Commonweal 89:224 N 8 '68 1300w

"Of particular interest is the discussion in the epilogue of the recently published Freud-Bullitt study of Woodrow Wilson [Thomas Woodrow Wilson, BRD 1967] and the motivating forces which stimulated Freud's interest in the American President. Mr. Roazen makes a contribution to a greater understanding of Freud's work and character, and expands the psychoanalytic dimension for the study of political science." Helen Burns

Library J 93:1001 Mr 1 '68 200w

"Freud's work on clinical psychology had great objective coherence, but his thinking about political and social subjects was usually casual and ad hoc in character. Paul Roazen has drawn out the social implications of Freudianism at greater length than the master ever attempted. Roazen relies not only on Freud's own writings but on those of latter day Freudians like Melanie Klein, Erich Fromm, Heinz Hartmann, and Erik Erikson. The result is a somewhat disconnected but informative book, ranging over Freudian thought on religion, government, war, and crime. Perhaps the most penetrating aspect of the book is Roazen's discussion of Freud's ambiguity about the value of repression."

Va Q R 44:cxxx summer '68 200w

ROBBINS ANN ROE. The seven-ingredients cookbook. 204p pl $4.95 Chilton co.

641.5 Cookery 68-31701

The author, a cooking school proprietor, presents directions for preparing canapes, soups, fish, meat, poultry, vegetables, salads, breads and desserts. There is also a chapter on lunch and supper dishes. Index.

Best Sell 28:298 O 15 '68 70w

"Robbins really doesn't contribute new ideas or methods. For the most part, readers will be attracted to this book because they are liable to have most of the ingredients and equipment on hand, and this is important to many. Obviously, the number of recipes is limited because of the restrictions imposed; however, one can still pick up a number of tips. This is not a 'quickie' book. Mrs. Robbins hastens to tell the reader this and it is true—you do the work, only the ingredients are limited. Certainly not a first, basic, or only cookbook, but one that readers will want to see; it should be in pertinent collections." Barbara Marconi

Library J 93:3004 S 1 '68 120w

ROBBINS, GENE A., jr. auth. Guide to American graduate schools. See Livesey, H. B.

ROBBINS, JOHN E., ed. Encyclopedia Canadiana. See Encyclopedia Canadiana

ROBERTS, ADAM, ed. Civilian resistance as national defense; non-violent action against aggression [Eng title: The strategy of civilian defense]. 320p $7.95 Stackpole co.

323 Civil defense. Passive resistance to government 68-15441

These essays review "techniques—chiefly non-violent, such as protest, non-cooperation, and economic boycott—which have been used against opposing forces. The various contributors . . . study the effectiveness of certain resistance movements of the past . . . and suggest the adoption of policies for the use and control of civilian resistance groups. . . . [The volume is an] effort to consider civilian non-violent resistance as part of official government defense policy. Among the contributors are . . . Sir B. H. Liddell Hart, D. J. Goodspeed, Ernest K. Bramsted, and A. Gwynne Jones." (Library J)

"In an era of escalating violence theorists will welcome this useful work that successfully demonstrates that nonviolence constitutes a viable action against aggression. Roberts has selected papers from a 1964 Civilian Defense Study Conference held at Oxford. Revised and rewritten, they all are of remarkably high quality and content. . . . Students of political science, history, and sociology will welcome this useful and informative collection. . . . A valuable adjunct to other works in this vein, e.g. The Quiet Battle by M. Sibley [BRD 1964]; . . . students will appreciate the broadened scope of application apparent for nonviolent investigation."

Choice 5:835 S '68 170w

Economist 224:418 J1 29 '67 460w

Reviewed by John Buechler

Library J 93:2252 Je 1 '68 190w

"The message of the symposium . . . is that [non-violent] defence is possible, and instances are given where it has been thought to work. . . . It had some small success in northern Europe during World War II; so much can be admitted, though its effect has been exaggerated by . . . this book. It may be thought to have little relevance to the experience of the Russians and the Poles; . . . in any case the book is strangely silent on these matters. . . . One would have welcomed a little more discussion of events in Africa, Asia and South America, and . . . the Negro struggle in the US. . . . That non-violent strategies may have been widely tried and abandoned as a failure is a question unexamined in Mr. Roberts' undistinguished volume." Douglas Gill

New Statesman 74:91 J1 21 '67 500w

"It is no hostile criticism of the book to say that it raises more questions than it settles, for that is precisely what it ought to do. . . . Most of [the contributors] try hard to counter their own biases—though not always to overcome their wishful thinking. But . . . they do not always ask the right questions. Little difficulty arises if civilian defence is regarded . . . as a supplement to military defence; but . . . as a substitute for it, the problem has to be considered at a much deeper level. . . . The examples given of successful non-violent resistance must be subjected to far more rigorous examination before they can be accepted as illustrations of a widely applicable method."

TLS p1080 N 16 '67 750w

ROBERTS, B. C. Collective bargaining in African countries, by B. C. Roberts and L. Greyfié de Bellecombe [pub. for Int. inst. for labour studies. 158p $7.25 St Martins

331.1 Collective bargaining 67-14192

"In this volume, which deals with the English- and French-speaking countries of Africa south of the Sahara, the authors examine the extent to which the employed labor force is covered by collective agreements; the pattern of trade unionism; the role and organization of employers; the legal framework within which agreements are negotiated and administered; and the scope, content, and application of collective agreements." (Publisher's note) Index.

"Roberts well-known British industrial relations economist deeply committed to the Anglo-Saxon model, provides a partially convincing defense of the existing metropolitan-sponsored system; this is a healthy counterweight to . . . [works] denying the applicability of voluntary collective bargaining in contemporary Africa. The main weaknesses of the book are its failure to systematically incorporate economic and political factors into the analysis, and its excessively diplomatic avoidance of any critical evaluations of African governments' policies. . . . Recommended for libraries with special African labor or industrial relation and economic development collections."

ROBERTS, B. C.—Continued

Choice 5:839 S '68 100w

"[The authors] are ready to admit that the success of collective bargaining is bound up with the 'political and social factors that lie outside the collective bargaining process itself'. The focus of the research precludes asking the significant questions, and most of the work on industrial organizations seems insufficiently conscious of anthropological studies of changing economic activities, of the sociology of urban societies, or of economic and social history. Besides which it has little theoretical discipline. African researchers may instructively look elsewhere for examples."

TLS p699 Ag 3 '67 150w

ROBERTS, BRIAN, ed. Edward Wilson's Birds of the Antarctic. See Wilson, E.

ROBERTS, DAVID. The mountain of my fear. 157p il $5.95 Vanguard

796.5 Mountaineering. Mount Huntington, Alaska 68-20393

The author "and three companions, all members of the Harvard Mountaineering Club, in 1965 made the first ascent of the west face of Mt. Huntington." (Library J)

"The book is compact, well written, and exceptional for the young author's subtle, unsentimental attempt to define the motives that drive men to climb mountains." Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 221:134 Mr '68 60w

Reviewed by Jane Manthorne
Horn Bk 44:448 Ag '68 160w

"Suspense, frustration, fatigue, accidents, and the cold all build up in this book—you are there and are glad you are not! . . . [The author] climbs well and writes very well, and most movingly at times, of this climb and how climbing affects him. Highly recommended for public libraries and Young Adult collections."

Stanley Swanson

Library J 93:769 F 15 '68 160w [YA]

"[The author] writes with a fine literary hand. This is both the strength and the weakness of his book. . . . It is risky to combine an adventure story with a baroque literary experiment and I don't think Mr. Roberts quite brings it off. In the end, as is so often the case with such books, the tremendously difficult and dangerous climb (it killed one member of the team) speaks for itself, with the eloquence of simplicity. Mr. Roberts's first book is more than merely promising." Jeremy Bernstein

N Y Times Bk R p42 Jl 14 '68 310w

ROBERTS, ESMÉ CRAMER. Born in Tibet. See Chögyam Trungpa

ROBERTS, JOAN I., ed. School children in the urban slum; readings in social science research. 626p $7.50 Free press

370.19 Education—U.S. Social psychology 67-12519

This collection of papers selected from books, scholarly journals and previously unpublished material concerned with "the environmental factors which affect the child's intellectual potential, learning capacities, motivation, self-concept, and personality characteristics in an urban slum . . . [includes descriptions of] the effects on the child of the family organization, child-rearing patterns, school organization, and teacher-pupil relationships as they relate to environmental variations. . . . [The book is the result of work undertaken by] Project True (Teacher Resources for Urban Education at Hunter College)." (Choice) Some chapter bibliographies. Index.

"This volume is essentially the reading list for a course on 'school children in the urban slum.' Looked at in this light, Roberts has given us a good selection of materials. It should be useful to college juniors and seniors; the Bibliographies at the end of several selections are of considerable value for those rare students who want to do some additional reading on their own responsibility. . . . The reader will find some stimulating, scholarly selections embedded in the collection; Torrance on 'The Development of Originality,' Miller and Swanson on 'Social Class and Motoric Orientation,' Caudill and DeVos on the 'Achievement . . . of the Japanese Americans,' Bronfenbrenner on 'Socialization and Social Class Through Time and Space,' and Charters on the 'Consequences of Educations' Social Position on the Teaching-Learning Process.'" Leonard Blumberg

Ann Am Acad 375:236 Ja '68 450w

"Roberts skillfully introduces each part to unify the writings of many of the nation's outstanding authorities in anthropology, psychology, and sociology. The contents help to fill a void in much of the current literature relating to the understanding of children in urban slums. This new edition should be of interest to all concerned about meeting the needs of these children, particularly the classroom teacher and/or teacher-in-training in our urban centers."

Choice 4:1425 F '68 150w

ROBERTS, JOHN S. A land full of people; life in Kenya today. 240p pl maps $6.50 Praeger

916.76 Kenya 67-27673

An English journalist who has lived in Africa "considers the breakdown of racial prejudice, the effects of tribalism, industrialization, and education, and of Kenya's place in the Cold War, the development of Swahili-language pop music, the social involvement of Kenyan artists, and many other aspects of the changing society of [the country]." (Publisher's note) Index.

"A rather uncritical portrait of post-independence Kenya. In a chatty, overly journalistic manner, Roberts tries to convey the essence of the urban and rural environment, and the people who inhabit the diverse parts of the country. He is reasonably evocative on the taste of roast goat and the habits of small-town politicians, but he seems largely to have failed to understand the major issues that now concern that developing country. To be sure, there are photographs, but they are of a low standard and have been reproduced poorly. . . . Since there are innumerable historical, geographical, journalistic, and personal books which express the idiom of Kenya more fully than does this, there is no reason why it should usurp the place of more important items."

Choice 5:667 Jl '68 190w

"A straightforward account of life in Kenya without footnotes or documentation, but Mr. Roberts' facts are valid and his interpretations are intelligent and based upon experience with the people and their lives. For these reasons I think both general readers and scholars will wish to read [this book]. One especially interesting section is Mr. Roberts' discussion of the Asians in Kenya, primarily East Indians, their situation and the reasons for present discrimination against them. He shows how the African middle class is likely to emerge with all the common attributes of petty bourgeoisie. . . . The photographs included in this book are good." M. D. Herrick

Library J 93:1154 Mr 15 '68 300w

"[The author] is both sympathetic and shrewd, and he has obviously been at pains to look beneath the surface of Kenya life to discover the realities of that life as they affect the ordinary Kenyan. Mr. Roberts is critical of the former colonial rulers in many respects, and of the traditional settler attitudes. In general, however, he takes an optimistic view of developments in Kenya, including developments in the field of race relations. On this subject he writes with considerable good sense . . . The author emphasizes, rightly, that the key to Kenya's continuing success and stability is to be found in economic development . . . [and he] recognizes, in his consideration of economic developments, that economics must be the tool, not the master, of politics."

TLS p656 Jl 27 '67 400w

ROBERTS, MICHAEL. The early Vasas; a history of Sweden, 1523-1611. 509p pl maps $16 Cambridge

948.5 Sweden—History. Vasa, House of [68-10332]

This sixteenth century history of Sweden provides an account of the achievements of the founder of the House of Vasa and "of the course of the Swedish Reformation; [Roberts analyses] trans-Baltic entanglements . . . [and describes] the constitutional controversies which reached their climax . . . with the deposition of King Sigismund and the 'Bloodbath of Linköping.'" (Publisher's note) Glossary. Bibliography. Index.

"Professor Roberts's two authoritative volumes [Gustavus Adolphus: A History of Sweden, 1611-1632; v 1, 1611-1626, BRD 1953; v2, 1626-1632, BRD 1959] . . . made him the undisputed interpreter of Swedish history for English readers. This new volume, which will further enhance his reputation, now forms the first part of a trilogy but is also an independent and illuminating study of the emergence of a European power. . . . The early Vasas provide Mr Roberts with splendid opportunities for his masterly brushwork and delicate chiaroscuro. . . . [He] never forgets that he is writing a history of Swedish society as well as of the Vasas, and he is especially effective in showing how the strains and conflicts of sixteenth century Europe were revealed and resolved in Sweden. . . . Familiarity with [his] three magisterial volumes . . . is essential to anyone seriously interested in the history of Europe in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries."

Economist 228:51 J1 27 '68 600w

"That the history of Sweden during this period is exciting and worth reading goes without saying; that Mr. Roberts has done a masterful piece of work is worth stressing. He has written history in the grand style and as such it can be appreciated by all serious students by laymen who enjoy a tale well told, and even by the casual reader who can appreciate felicities of superb style. Highly recommended for academic libraries and for libraries with patrons interested in first-rate history."

E. K. Welsch
Library J 93:3135 S 15 '68 210w

ROBERTS, SUSAN, jt. auth. The Yogi cook book. See Vithaldas, Y.

ROBERTS, WARREN, ed. Phoenix II. See Lawrence, D. H.

ROBERTSON, ALEC. Requiem; music of mourning and consolation. 309p $8.95 Praeger

783.2 Church music. Music—Analysis, appreciation 68-19860

In part one Robertson discusses "the Requiem Mass, with emphasis on the period from Mozart to Faure. He then considers other types of consolatory music—the music of Holy Week, Lutheran and Anglican funeral music, memorial music and laments, and elegiac works of the 20th Century such as Elgar's The Dream of Gerontius and Britten's War Requiem. There are numerous musical examples and . . . historical and biographical comment." (Library J) Index.

"[Robertson] has written what might be termed a listener's guide to the music about death. . . . It is a descriptive rather than an analytical study, very readable, and at times eloquently expressive of Mr. Robertson's personal feelings. [It] will prove to be a useful work, for there is no similar one available. However . . . it is regrettable that the presentation was not a more scholarly one, even though Mr. Robertson has admirably accomplished the task which he set himself. Recommended for larger music collections." Barbara Henry

Library J 93:1902 My 1 '68 170w

"Not all his readers will fully appreciate the relevance of the finer points of liturgical practice in the music for Holy Week which is discussed in the second section of the book before it proceeds to Protestant forms, to memorial music in general and to oratorios. But since the need for some rite in which to formulate our feelings about mortality is universal Mr. Robertson's knowledge of ritual and what is behind it confers on him both the authority and the sympathy to expound the music that over the centuries has ministered to that need. The theme is universal. Mr. Robertson's approach is personal, and he has no hesitations about speaking out of his own wide musical experience . . . nor about exercising his critical judgment."

TLS p1042 N 1 '67 400w

ROBERTSON, D. B., ed. Voluntary associations; a study of groups in free societies; essays in honor of James Luther Adams. 448p $9.75 John Knox press

261 Sociology, Christian. Church. Associations. Adams, James Luther 66-21648

"These essays in honor of James Luther Adams (Harvard Divinity School) are . . . [contributed by his] friends and former students . . . [including] George H. Williams, W. Alvin Pitcher, Franklin Littell, D. B. Robertson, James Gustafson, [and] Robert T. Handy. . . . The historical articles in Part One trace the interaction of religious and political thought: in early Calvinism, Anabaptism, and Roman Catholicism, early 19th-century Germany; in Hobbes, Rauschenbusch, and Berdyaev; the idea of loyal opposition in England; and the principle of religious freedom in America. Part Two deals with contemporary religious and political forms: experiments in India and France; the structure and influence of the church in America; SANE. Part Three, a tribute to Adams, includes a biography, [and] an interpretive essay." (Choice) Bibliography.

"A superb contribution to the sociology of religion. . . . The book will appeal outside theological disciplines to historians, political philosophers, and sociologists."

Choice 4:973 N '67 160w

"[This] is a fitting tribute to one of the finest seminary mentors of our day. . . . [Adams] former students here make a genuine contribution to the literature of group life in a democratic, pluralistic context. Weighted toward historical analysis, the essays are generally of high quality and probing reflectiveness." Robert Lee

Christian Century 84:1602 D 13 '67 190w

ROBERTSON, GILES. Giovanni Bellini. 171p 120pl $16 Oxford

795.5 Bellini, Giovanni. Painting, Italian

The author has attempted to establish "the authenticity and chronology of a series of major works and by estimating the importance of certain works which have not survived, to illuminate [Giovanni Bellini's] artistic personality and trace his development in the context of the cultural and artistic situation in North Italy in his time." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Topographical index of works discussed. General index.

"A major contribution to art appreciation (and to biography). . . . The major interest in this work is the careful study of the extant paintings that can be surely attributed to Giovanni. . . . [It is illustrated with] paintings or drawings (all in black and white). . . . A handsome and valuable book, beautifully printed and bound, this not only will be an excellent addition to collegiate libraries but also may make a fine gift book."

Best Sell 28:350 N 15 '68 220w

Christian Century 85:1437 N 13 '68 30w

Reviewed by Lawrence Alloway
Nation 207:664 D 16 '68 20w

ROBINS, R. H. A short history of linguistics. (Ind. univ. Studies in the hist. and theory of linguistics) 248p $6.75 Ind. univ. press

410.9 Language and languages—History 68-10276

"Chapters treat of the Greek and Roman writers, the Middle Ages, and the Renaissance. The year 1786 (Sir William Jones and the kinship of Sanskrit and European languages) marks 'the start of the contemporary world of linguistic science'; almost half of the book contains long chapters on the eve of modern times (including a survey of the work of Indian grammarians). . . . These last chapters describe the historical and comparative studies and the trends and schools of the present." (Choice) Chapter bibliographies. Index.

"This book is welcome, for it [provides] a first brief survey in English of the history of linguistic studies from the days of the Greeks down to the present, by a scholar competent to deal with such a broad panorama. . . . The book is clear, objective, and concise. . . . Quotations are translated with the original language in the notes. For teacher and student alike."

Choice 5:479 Je '68 200w

"Robins's section on modern linguistics . . . [compressed but] highly organized. Robins brings out the decisive influence that work on phonology exerted on the development of linguistic methods in general. He also duly emphasizes the solid achievements of the American Bloomfieldian school, as well as the revolutionary impact of Chomsky. [This] is in fact an excellent book."

ROBINS, R. H.—Continued

TLS p728 J1 11 '68 440w

ROBINSON, BARRY. On the beat; policemen at work, by Barry Robinson and Martin J. Dain. unp il $2.95 Harcourt

363.2 Police—Juvenile literature 68-13816

This book "presents the responsibilities, problems, and satisfactions of being a big-city policeman. A team of patrolmen, one Negro and one white, are seen as they go about their daily duties—helping people, directing traffic, apprehending those who have broken the law . . . and coping with the many routine matters that arise." (Publisher's note) "Ages five to eight." (N Y Times Bk R)

"Well-chosen photographs are effectively combined with a concise easy-to-read text. . . . Scenes of police in training and of the two patrolmen with their families complete a sympathetic, yet credible portrayal of the police that should prove a valuable addition to collections in both school and public libraries." B. S. Miller

Library J 93:3958 O 15 '68 100w

"Emphasizing the positive side of police work, [this book] will help the young citizen appreciate and respect 'the cop on the corner.'" N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p51 My 5 '68 100w

ROBINSON, DONALD, ed. Under fire; Israel's 20-year struggle for survival. 381p $5.95 Norton

956.94 Israel—History 68-15755

The editor has "selected 49 official documents, speeches, articles, and chapters of books in an effort to chronicle Israel's struggle for survival between 1948 and 1967. . . . The majority of these deal with the three wars fought by Israel—the War of Independence, the Sinai campaign, and the war of June 1967." (Library J)

"The selections are as varied as speeches by David Ben Gurion and Abba Eban and the report of the interrogation of an Arab infiltrator; they include some written by John F. Kennedy, Moshe Dyan, Arthur Koestler, S. L. A. Marshall, Yitzhak Rabin, Edward R. Murrow, Bill Mauldin, and Leo Rosten. This anthology is intended for the general reader since most of the articles were originally published in the popular and the news magazines, but it is a well-selected, interesting anthology and is recommended for public libraries." David Shavit

Library J 93:1626 Ap 15 '68 140w

"Robinson has chosen his material with an eye to high drama. . . . The selections have been judiciously chosen and are for the most part quite insightful. They help us understand still more of the context in which the June war was fought and won by Israel." Chaim Potok

N Y Times Bk R p3 Je 9 '68 280w

ROBINSON, FRANK. My life is baseball, by Frank Robinson with Al Silverman. 225p il $4.95 Doubleday

796.357 Baseball 67-22442

This is the "life story of [a] well-known professional baseball player [Baltimore's triple crown winner in 1966]. . . . After a brief resumé of his early childhood, he explains why baseball has indeed been his life from high school days to the present." (Library J)

"Robinson feels baseball's owners are victims of social lag in their unwillingness to invite Negroes into the front office and into such non-playing posts as managers and coaches. But he insists there is 'a lot less self-consciousness about race now' than when he first broke into the minors in 1953. A fiercely combative man, Robinson probably would be a carbon copy of Leo Durocher as a manager, if given the chance he doesn't think he will ever get. But he thinks and feels like Durocher. . . . There are many rewarding and constructive 'inside' tips for youngsters in [this] autobiography." Ray Robinson

Book World p12 My 12 '68 300w

"Robinson is certainly frank, and he gives an account of his success in both major leagues in terms of his admitted hardnosed but sincere approach to the game. . . . Now, at 32 years of age, he relates in a spirited conversational manner his bright moments as well as his shortcomings with the same clear purpose—to show that professional baseball is a tough business when played properly and that nothing means more to Frank Robinson than baseball and his family. Baseball buffs and general readers will enjoy these memoirs of one of the highest paid men in baseball today." M. H. Dygert

Library J 93:1999 My 15 '68 110w

ROBINSON, H. RUSSELL. Oriental armour. 257p il $12.50 Walker & co.

399 Arms and armor

67-13231

"This book presents a general picture of the development of military equipment in the principal countries of the Orient with particular emphasis on the origins of their fashions and their influence over the armour of other cultures. . . . The evolution of armour is traced in each country from ancient times to the period when it was finally discarded, in some instances this being less than a century ago." (Publisher's note) Glossary of technical terms used in the text. Bibliography. Index.

"[The] assistant to the keeper of the armor at the Tower of London points to the need for additional research in several specialized areas, and his book . . . provides a readable introduction to this broad subject. Profusely illustrated with drawings and photographs, this book covers the armor of Persia, Turkey, the Middle East, India, Ceylon, the Philippine Islands, China, Korea, Tibet, Bhutan, and Japan. Libraries with inclusive collections on the history of costume will consider this." W. C. Rossell

Library J 92:2772 Ag '67 130w

"[The author] is well aware of the difficulties of explaining to the reader not so much the exterior form and decoration of oriental armour but its intricate mechanical construction. He is fortunate in being a gifted artist, combining in his drawings the authoritative line of a draughtsman with the sculptural appreciation of a modeller. . . . In Mr. Robinson's drawings every rivet, hinge and lamella is not only shown, but is shown to have a purpose. In an introductory chapter the author traces the origins of oriental armour, with its characteristic use of mail, scales and small plates, back to the armour worn by the warriors of the ancient world. . . . His authority is derived from a wide range of archaeological evidence. . . . [A] fascinating study of a little-known subject."

TLS p463 My 2 '68 340w

ROBINSON, HARRY. Monsoon Asia: a geographical survey. rev ed 561p il maps $8.50 Praeger

915 Asia—Description and travel 67-24687

The area covered "includes that portion of the Asian continent lying east of the Pakistan-Afghanistan border and south of the Soviet Union. The volume is planned in two main parts: 'an introductory section dealing with the general geographical framework, the physical and cultural background, the resources, agriculture, industry, and transportation network, and some aspects of political geography; followed by a second larger section in which each country is described in terms of its physical, human, and economic geography, and then each major region of that country is similarly described in detail.'" (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"This text has over 160 maps, photographs, and tables. Probably the standard work to which [it] could be compared is L. Dudley Stamp's Asia: A Regional and Economic Geography [BRD 1930]. Robinson's work compares favorably and does provide us another viewpoint on this extremely important area in world affairs."

Choice 5:1204 N '68 140w

"As a generalized text . . . this work is solid, if somewhat pedestrian. There have been a number of similar compilations of the human, physical, and economical geography of this vast, diverse, and vitally important area. Mr. Robinson, a British geographer, teacher, and author of a previous compendium on Latin America, has attempted to bring these studies by Spencer, Dobby, and Fisher among others up to date. [He] has written a very readable book and has integrated a great number of published studies to which he gives reference. . . . The reproduction of maps and photographs is reasonably good, and some data has been added through 1966. . . . The excellent bibliography is a major contribution to works of this kind. Useful as an introductory college text and for most libraries." H. K. Flad

Library J 93:549 F 1 '68 180w

"The bibliography for the American edition of this English work has been rounded out by a careful selection of books and articles dealing with all kinds of subject matter. The outline is competently put together, the coverage is rather complete, the data are quite recent, there are lots of maps and a scattering of tables, but the paper utilized in the book is such that the photographs, though well chosen, reproduce quite poorly. . . . [The] survey is an effective piece of workmanship. . . . [There is an imbalance] in that the Indian sub-continent is allocated six chapters, whereas China is allotted but three. . . . The reader must supply his own charge of enthusiasm to carry him through the volume, for the impersonally calm tone never excites a reader to keep at it. Although the survey . . . gets most of the elements into its pages, far too many complex situations are oversimplified." J. E. Spencer
Pacific Affairs 41:416 fall '68 800w

ROBINSON, JOAN. Economics: an awkward corner; with an introd. to the American ed. by Robert Lekachman. 86p $3.95; pa $1.95 Pantheon bks.

330 Great Britain—Economic conditions. Economics—History 67-25427

The author attempts "to show logically and with elementary analysis that the economic system has changed along with the world situation . . . [and that] although economic growth has itself brought change to the institutions and structure of the system, the ideas of people and governments still operate on the ideas connected with archaic forms of the past. . . . [She analyzes] the ideas Keynes promoted in the 1930's . . . [and asserts that] they must be modified, expanded, and some of them replaced if growth is to continue." (Library J)

"[A] terse but only half-brilliant little book on Britain's current (or rather July, 1966) economic crisis. . . . There are three layers to Mrs Robinson's thinking. The first layer is old fashioned radicalism from the 1920s. . . . The second . . . comes from the Keynesian revolution of the thirties, in which [she] carried ■ leading banner. Here a whole generation and a half of Cambridge-trained economists can join with her. . . . The third layer of her thinking comes from postwar economics; the chapters on this layer sound rather more superficial than the other two. . . . Mrs Robinson's main recommendation is that Britain should settle down to being a small country devoted to neutrality and peace'; in particular, she would like Britain to dissociate itself from 'the American crusade against communism, which threatens worse horrors than it is already perpetrating.' This seems an oddly irrelevant flourish with which to end an otherwise often-stimulating book."

Economist 221:1032 D 3 '66 800w

"Even though this is a small book, it is a difficult book to read in a short time. This is not because Mrs. Robinson is writing in the jargon of the economist, for she is not. She writes clearly and succinctly, laying out the backgrounds of her argument neatly and in everyday language. The problem is that there are so many ideas on every page. . . . This important book is highly recommended not only for the economist but for every thinking individual." R. W. Haseltine

Library J 93:987 Mr 1 '68 420w

"This little book develops, with less wit and conviction but more immediate relevance to Britain's problems, the Galbraithian notion that the economic ideas inherited from the 19th century are no longer consistent with the world of abundance now made possible by capital accumulation and the application of science to technology. Consequently, our economic system cannot be interpreted as a rational scheme, but must be seen as a transitional system at 'an awkward corner'. . . . The [author's arguments] range, characteristically, from shrewd and perceptive debunking of commonly accepted beliefs . . . to the dismissal ■ sheer muddle of complex problems that other economists have been successfully working out, or the presentation as established fact of unfounded assertions about economic behavior." Harry Johnson

New Statesman 73:15 Ja 6 '67 800w
TLS p802 S 7 '67 1300w

ROBINSON, LLOYD. The stolen election; Hayes versus Tilden—1876. 240p $3.95; lib bdg $4.70 Doubleday

329 Presidents—U.S.—Election—Juvenile literature. U.S.—Politics and government—1865-1898—Juvenile literature. Hayes, Rutherford B.—Juvenile literature. Tilden, Samuel Jones—Juvenile literature. 68-14210

"The author traces the history of Reconstruction as a prelude to his account of the political settlement between Northern Republicans and Southern Democrats which gave the Presidency to Hayes. [Bibliography. Index.] Grades eight to twelve." (Library J)

"In great detail the author gives the background of the election, the campaigning of the two protagonists, and the bitter struggle for electoral votes in Congress. The author seems to have made every attempt to assess the claims of both candidates and through research offers an informative book for young readers."

Best Sell 28:114 Je 1 '68 90w

"This timely history . . . can help readers to understand race relations today. . . . The book also offers interesting insights into the differences between campaign techniques in 1876 and those practiced now. This is the only book on the Hayes-Tilden election addressed to young people; it has been carefully researched and is well written." M. S. Bart

Library J 93:[3326] S 15 '68 100w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland
Sat R 51:37 O 19 '68 120w

ROBINSON, W. R. Edwin Arlington Robinson; a poetry of the act. 183p $5.95 Western Reserve univ. press

811 Robinson, Edwin Arlington 67-11484

"The purpose of this book is to locate Edwin Arlington Robinson properly, 'to associate [him] with his proper contemporaries.' The most important contemporaries for him, in [the author's] treatment, are Whitehead, Santayana, and Dewey—all heirs of William James. Robinson's poetry is best explained as an expression of the pragmatic philosophy, 'an aesthetic companion to its philosophical doctrines.'" (Va Q R) Index.

"[A] painstaking analysis. . . . [The author's] insights, though not unchallengeable, are ■ genuine contribution to Robinson criticism. But the book as a whole is open to serious criticism. For one thing, the author asserts that all previous critics 'have been unable to unravel the Gordian knot of [Robinson's] art because they have mistakenly approached a "both-and" vision of life with "either-or" logic.' Many of the writers thus consigned to limbo may judge this view to be oversimplified. They may also be disturbed by seeming errors in chronology and interpretation. . . . Readers will certainly be shocked by the author's carelessness in regard to names and quotations. . . . A final defect damaging to the author's real achievement lies in the style. Often annoyingly abstract and polysyllabic, the writing is at times . . . absolutely unintelligible." Ellsworth Barnard
Am Lit 40:244 My '68 600w

"Unlike Wallace Anderson's Edwin Arlington Robinson: A Critical Introduction [BRD 1968], this 'reconsideration' is intended for the advanced student or scholar. . . . Despite some confusions of terminology and a tendency to repeat and to overstate the argument, this is a challenging new look at the philosophic implications of Robinson's poetry."

Choice 5:779 S '68 120w

"The discussion of Robinson seeking out the true and the believable, and recording that search in his poetry, is the substance of the work. What is most affecting is that Robinson's work embodies this search, and is, in fact, the demonstration in itself that answers could be found. While Mr. Robinson finds the final fruits of the search in the late long poems, we may continue to avoid them by observing his earlier efforts. But Mr. Robinson's treatment makes a reading of the poems in itself an adventure."

Va Q R 44:xxiii winter '68 140w

ROBINSON, W. R., ed. Man and the movies; ed. by W. R. Robinson with assistance from George Garrett. 371p il $7.95 La. state univ. press

791.43 Moving picture plays—History and criticism. Moving pictures—Production and direction 67-24549

"A literary view of the movies; the 20 contributors are either English teachers or novelists. . . . Specific types of movies from westerns to horror epics are discussed, as esthetic productions and as a reflection of our current culture. The second section is devoted to directors, and the third, to writers and the great movie audience." (Choice) Annotated bibliography. Indexes of names and of films.

Reviewed by A. R. Fulton

Am Lit 40:427 N '68 400w

"The style is brisk, the ideas usually new and provocative, and the whole a superb introduction for the literary oriented student. . . . Biographical sketches of the authors, extremely valuable annotated bibliography of basic works in the field. Unfortunately, the periodical section is neither annotated or selective, but the nine-page book and screenplay list will serve as a worthwhile checklist for any library remotely interested in movies. As the technical and photographic qualities of films are not considered, [H. M.] Geduld's recent anthology will make a worthwhile companion volume; Film Makers on Film Making [BRD 1968]."

Choice 4:1404 F '68 180w

Reviewed by L. A. Rachow

Library J 93:568 F 1 '68 180w

Reviewed by John Coleman

New Statesman 75:46 Ja 12 '68 40w

"The collection itself is rather more sophisticated than the introduction. Curiously, by far the brightest piece in the anthology—Leslie Fiedler's 'What Shining Phantom: Writers and the Movies'—serves to demolish the premise of the anthology. Fiedler is too astute a literary critic to be taken in by literary humbug about movies, even the eloquent humbug of such eminent cinephobes as Edmund Wilson and Malcolm Cowley. . . . Other interesting pieces are Joseph Blotner's fair-minded 'Faulkner in Hollywood,' R. V. Cassill's 'In the Central Blue,' an autobiographical recollection of adolescent frustration in the context of Jean Harlow's sensual complicity in 'Hell's Angels,' Fred Chappell's 'Twenty-Six Propositions about Skin Flicks,' Larry ('Hud') McMurty's 'Cowboys, Movies, Myths, and Cadillacs: Realism in the Western,' . . . The book ends in a whimper with David Slavitt's nasty recollections of the period in which he was enslaved ■ a film critic at Newsweek." Andrew Sarris

N Y Times Bk R p28 D 17 '67 300w

"The 'fine minds' type of book is represented [here, and it] . . . demonstrates on the whole that fine minds can produce just as silly comments on arts about which they do not necessarily know anything as can the rest of us. All too many of its contributors labour the obvious or produce with cries of wild delight new discoveries which have been the small change of critical orthodoxy for a quarter of a century. There are exceptions. . . . But these are very much in the minority."

TLS p16 Ja 4 '68 190w

ROBOTTI, FRANCES D. French cooking in the new world [by] Frances D. and Peter J. Robotti; introd. by Raymond L. Vaudard. 510p il $7.50 Doubleday

641.5 Cookery, Creole. Cookery, Canadian 67-19085

This book contains nearly 800 recipes in the cuisines of Louisiana, Creoles and of French Canada. They include: Appetizers, Soups, Fish and Shellfish, Poultry, Meat, Game and Stuffings, Hot and Cold Sauces and Butters, Salads, Dressings, Fritters and Breads, Fruits, Desserts, Pies, Cakes, Cookies, Candies and Beverages. Glossary. Index.

"The Creole recipes are not nearly so good as Miss [D.] Stanforth's [The New Orleans Restuarant Cookbook, BRD 1968]. Nevertheless, there is much to be said for the French-Canadian portion: recipes for Tourtière de Noël, a Christmas pork pie, and for a succulent walnut-baked ham exemplify the hearty, free-wheeling attitude of French-Canadians toward their food." Gloria Levitas

Book World p6 D 17 '67 60w

"With the cooperation of my colleagues, about 20 of these recipes were tested. Results ranged from excellent to delicious—including chicken with maple syrup. . . . This is a very interesting and useful book. . . . Recipes appear somewhat simplified to fit current cooking procedures, but the number of portions which may be served varies greatly." M. S. Minnick

Library J 92:3421 O 1 '67 200w

ROBOTTI, PETER J., jt. auth. French cooking in the new world. See Robotti F. D.

ROBSON, ROBERT, ed. Ideas and institutions of Victorian Britain. See Ideas and institutions of Victorian Britain

ROBSON, W. W. The signs among us, and other poems. 86p $3 Barnes & Noble

821

[68-99226]

A collection of poems concerned with "linked opposites—soul and body, good and evil, knowledge and appearance, true god and false god." (TLS)

"[The author's] Critical Essays [BRD 1967] was best described as 'polite, undistinguished essays.' This criticism of his prose seems eminently suitable to this first book of poems which is quiet, reflective, and full of praise for order and clarity. . . . Some of his work is reminiscent of T. S. Eliot but no other influence is strongly marked. Recommended only for university library collections and inclusive modern poetry sections." E. W. Frazer

Library J 93:4147 N 1 '68 120w

"If one recognizes echoes of Eliot, Yeats, and Stevens, these do not submerge the new poet. Neither is the extraordinary difficulty of [Robson's] meditative, inward-turning style the result of caprice; for under it lies a whole system of symbols. . . . His preoccupation with the unique tendency of his own vision narrows his attention to objects so abstract and remote from the quotidian that few readers will be impelled to go on after studying some of these poems."

TLS p867 Ag 15 '68 160w

ROCHE, DOUGLAS J. The Catholic revolution. 325p $6.50 McKay

282 Catholic Church

68-31283

A Canadian journalist "describes what he sees going on in the Catholic Church today: the Synod in Rome; the advent of Bishop Sheen and his impact on the Rochester diocese; experimental liturgies; new movements among the laity, nuns, and clergy; the disenchantment of youth with the institutional church; and problems in education and race relations." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by J. F. Cotter

America 119:417 N 2 '68 500w

"For Douglas Roche the word 'revolution' means the radical changes within the Catholic Church. . . . He gets to the point, hits hard, and sometimes below the belt. He expresses himself strongly against the traditional Church. Some adjectives are prejudicially strong. . . . The author's postscript on 'Of Human Life' is a last-minute attempt to make the book as current as possible. But two pages make a very feeble attempt to cover such a delicate matter. And this is typical of the book. Too little is said about entirely too much in too few pages. Readers may well raise an eyebrow more than once when reading this book. Whether they agree or disagree, they must recognize that the views of Mr. Roche are expressions of those persons who want the light of Christ to serve as a beacon for a frightened world. And there everyone would have to agree." Bernard Hrico

Best Sell 28:295 O 15 '68 550w

"The sad truth . . . is that revolutions are notoriously hard to keep up with. . . . It is the unrelenting stirring up and unsettling of these days that so quickly date a book like [this]. . . . Much of [it] is simply old hat, or even old red hat. . . . The youth chapter is almost unbelievably bleak; the one on education the dulllest—and most dated. There is a penultimate chapter on 'the new theology' which has some remarks about birth control that make Mr. Roche's afterword all the more poignant." Philip Deasy

Commonweal 89:411 D 20 '68 900w

"[The author] has a lively, journalistic style, and is good at describing what he observes. He tends to present the revolutionary side of questions and to ignore those more pedestrian, but in many ways just as significant, changes. . . . He does not treat the very important revolutions taking place in theology, though he occasionally makes bold pronouncements on complex theological questions such as intercommunion and the theology of Teilhard de Chardin, and here one wishes he would leave theology to informed theologians. . . . This is an important book because it gives a good overall picture of what 'revolutionary' Catholics are doing and thinking. It is recommended for libraries, and should claim the serious attention of traditionally minded Catholics." W. C. Heiser

Library J 93:2993 S 1 '68 230w

ROCHE, PAUL. All things considered, and other poems. 205p $7.50 Weybright & Talley 821 68-12868

This volume was first published in England in 1966. The poems' "subjects range from metaphysics to the . . . minutiae of love and family affection." (Publisher's note)

"In [Roche's] acceptance of the world ■ it is, with its beauty, its ruthlessness, its sudden tenderness; in his good humor and his freedom from strain; in the authority with which he uses the language, his complete freedom from fear of the polysyllabic word—I find no one his superior today. . . . One of the finest poems in the volume is the long 'Te Deum for J. Alfred Prufrock,' a passionate affirmation of the possibilities latent. In frustrated 20th century man. . . . One very minor quibble: Roche has a habit of adding explanatory introductions to his sections; . . . despite their clarity, they give the book a faintly didactic, even preachy, tone. The poems really speak for themselves." John Moffitt

America 119:18 Je 6 '68 650w

"[The author] does try harder, but the energy and rhetoric are insufficient. A 'major' poem involving Prufrock is an unintended parody. An erotic poem becomes a ponderous obscenity. There are a few successes . . . but the volume lacks what we find in any collection by a great or good poet: a unifying sensibility or persona, a language that shocks the reader into awareness, at least one poem that is alive, contemporary, unforgettable. This book is for comprehensive collections only." Herman Elstein

Library J 93:2882 Ag '68 150w

ROCKEFELLER, MICHAEL CLARK. The Asmat of New Guinea; the journal of Michael Clark Rockefeller; ed. with an introd. by Adrian A. Gerbrands. 349p il col il pl col pl $30 Mus. of primitive art

919.5 Asmat. Art. Primitive. West Irian, Indonesia—Description and travel 67-28143

The "23-year-old son of the New York State governor paid two visits to this area in 1961, and lost his life there on November 18, when his catamaran was caught in swift currents. Before his death he had succeeded in assembling a large collection of native art objects which subsequently found their home in the Museum of Primitive Art in New York City. . . . The present work is in part a catalog of this collection." (Library J) There are also on the spot photographs and field notes by the young explorer.

"The art of southwest New Guinea is less well known to Americans than that of the north-east (Sepik River) area, giving this work a certain freshness. . . . Rockefeller's travel account links superb pictures of the people and their setting to their art. Collecting for the Museum of Primitive Art, he emphasized finished objects. Nowhere does one see the artist-craftsmen at work. . . . Uniquely, the same objects are shown in situ as well as in the museum, enhancing understanding of the materials. This splendid book, a 'coffee table monument,' may be too rich for a college library which must guard it from student use and abuse. Its value is undoubtedly more artistic than anthropological. Yet the notability of the author-photographer, and his tragic demise, may still make it widely attractive."

Choice 5:691 J1 '68 170w

"With the publication of [this volume] the reading public has been given an opportunity to look into one of the few remaining primitive societies and to become acquainted with its gifted artists and their imaginative creations. . . . [The book's] more valuable elements are represented by the magnificent photographs, many in color, and the very sensitive field notes. . . . This work belongs in good collections on primitive art. It should also be singled out for its high typographic quality." Joseph Bram

Library J 93:2473 Je 15 '68 340w

"The material culture, which first attracted Michael to the Asmat, is beautifully presented and organized in this invaluable picture of one facet of life on the largest tropical island in the world. Adrian Gerbrands, his friend and field associate, has written an admirable essay on the history, the habitat, the art forms, and more importantly, the inner drives that lead to their production. Michael's sensitive photography brings a sense of reality to the words of his diary and meaning to the artifacts of the Asmat, the People of the Tree." H. M. Van Deusen

Natur Hist 77:67 Je '68 850w

ROCKEFELLER, NELSON A. Unity, freedom & peace; a blueprint for tomorrow. 170p $4.95 Random house

973.92 U.S.—Politics and government—1961- . U.S.—Social policy. U.S.—Economic policy 68-31535

The governor of New York State "advances specific solutions for dealing with major problems confronting American society today. He gives . . . attention to the troubled cities, crime, health, financial responsibility, the underdeveloped nations, and the role of the President as leader. . . . [There are] references to his own achievements in New York and as a foreign policy official under Presidents Roosevelt, Truman, and Eisenhower." (Library J)

"It would be refreshing if all Presidential candidates were to present their political philosophy in as compact a form as Nelson Rockefeller does here. Although he devotes the two introductory chapters principally to clichés seemingly designed to disarm his critics, in the remaining eight chapters the Governor advances specific solutions. . . . A book for libraries in this election year." R. W. Schwarz

Library J 93:3568 O 1 '68 130w

"Rockefeller shares . . . a desire that the 'federal idea' be made to work. . . . [He] need not deal with issues in a theoretical framework. For ten years he has struggled with the problems of health, education, housing, and crime, and his emphasis here is not so much on what he would do as President, but on what he has already done. Tidily organized, optimistic but not effusive, his recitation of achievements reads like a report to stockholders. . . . Many of his carefully balanced statements aim at evoking clucks of approval from readers of differing political persuasion." Donald Young

Sat R 51:32 Ag 6 '68 800w

ROCKWELL, ANNE. Glass, stones & crown; the Abbé Suger and the building of St Denis. 80p il $3.75 Atheneum pubs.

726 Saint-Denis, France. Eglise abbatiale de Saint-Denis—Juvenile literature. Suger, abbot of Saint-Denis—Juvenile literature

68-12241

The author-illustrator tells the story of the "abbot of the monastery of St. Denis near Paris . . . [who] was able to realize the building of [the first great Gothic Cathedral of France]. . . . Against the historical background of 12th Century France, the author introduces some of the rich symbolism of the period, and explains, with diagrams, such characteristics of the Gothic style as stained-glass windows, the pointed arch and rib vaulting. . . . Grades four to six." (Library J)

"Mrs. Rockwell writes at textbook distance from her subject matter. All the juice of life is squeezed out. . . . The characters (and drawings as well) are like wooden figures in a school pageant, moving on cue but possessing no inner life. A perfect reader will certainly learn much. . . . There are names, events and architectural principles enough to make a less than ideal reader's head spin. The book has everything to commend it in the way of earnest factuality. What it lacks is immediacy: a sense of life that could make it a pleasure as well as a duty to read." S. G. Lanes

ROCKWELL, ANNE—Continued

Book World p16 Ag 18 '68 240w

Reviewed by M. L. Birmingham
Commonweal 88:309 My 24 '68 30w

Reviewed by E. L. Heins
Horn Bk 44:440 Ag '68 160w

"As with her first book, Filippo's Dome [BRD 1967], this author-illustrator combines the talents of a gifted storyteller and art historian in her presentation of basic architectural principles in a manner that is understandable and enjoyable for young readers. . . . The black-and-white illustrations are suggestive of those found on medieval parchments, and they elucidate the text." J. C. Ullom

Library J 93:1803 Ap 15 '68 90w

"Tourists may slight St. Denis in favor of Chartres, but they do so at their own risk, for as all art historians are well aware Suger's church was of phenomenal importance in the evolution of the Gothic style. The 12th century is remote from children entering their teens. This has not discouraged Mrs. Rockwell from sketching the career of Suger, the adviser to both Louis the Fat and his son Louis VII."

Wayne Andrews

N Y Times Bk R p28 Je ■ '68 300w

ROCKWELL, ANNE. The good llama; written and il. by Anne Rockwell. unp $3.95; lib bdg $3.86 World pub.

398.2 Folklore, Inca—Juvenile literature.
Llamas—Stories 68-26969

In this "adaptation of an Inca legend, a llama warns his master that a deluge threatens and leads him, his wife, and pairs of animals to safety on a mountain peak. . . . [The flood comes because the sun] has shone on the earth day and night until the parched earth cries tears of anger to drown the sun. . . . Ages four to seven." (N Y Times Bk R)

Reviewed by M. B. King

Book World p28 (children's issue) N 9 '68 100w

Reviewed by S. B. Kupper

Christian Science Monitor pB3 N 7 '68 140w

Horn Bk 44:685 D '68 130w

"This myth-like story draws upon the ancient Inca legend, parallel to the story of Noah . . . and weaves in other threads of Inca mythology. . . . The illustrations pose stylized two-dimensional line drawings of humans and animals, based on figures from Inca textiles and pottery, against flat expanses of deep color. While the story lacks the simple strength and validity of authentic myth, this is an interesting creative effort probably best suited to those children just beginning to dip into mythology." N. Y. Orr

Library J 93:4398 N 15 '68 110w

"Children should respond to everything in this tale: the urgency of the narrative, the strong emotions that erupt in the quarrel between the earth and sun, the final explanation of why the sun shares the sky with the moon, and the bold stylized-Peruvian illustrations, hot and colorful in keeping with the story." Alice Low

N Y Times Bk R p42 O 27 '68 180w

ROCKWELL, ANNE. The stolen necklace; a picture story from India; based on a tale from the Jataka; written and il. by Anne Rockwell. unp $3.95; lib bdg $3.86 World pub.

393.2 Monkeys—Stories. Folklore—India—Juvenile literature 68-14681

This is a retelling of one of the "Jataka," which were parables told by Buddhist teachers to show how the wise Buddha would handle a sticky situation. In each story the wisest character, be he man or animal, represents the Buddha. In this book he is the gardener who, by his wit and understanding, restores a stolen necklace to its rightful owner." (Book World)

"Grades one to four." (Library J)

Reviewed by Elinore Standard

Book World p16 (children's issue) My 5 '68 40w

"[This tale] teaches that a vain thief is never a successful one—a rather dubious moral. However, the tale . . . is told with a sense of humor that warns one not to take the story seriously. . . . [The] delightful pictures in clean bright pastels reflect the style of traditional Indian painting. Hiding in the pattern of the tropical foliage that borders each page are decorative bugs and butterflies, peacocks and parrots, prettily striped and sinuous snakes. The light-face print is attractive but impractical for struggling literates." K. G. Burt

Christian Science Monitor pB2 My 2 '68 80w

"Clear, stylized, pastel illustrations are in harmony with the telling, and the book is a pleasant visual and verbal experience. Unlike much folklore, the simple plot makes this usable with lower primary grades." Dorothy Gunzenhauser

Library J 93:2108 My 15 '68 30w

Reviewed by S. G. Lanes

N Y Times Bk R p30 Mr 17 '68 50w

RODMAN, SELDEN. The Guatemala traveler; a concise history and guide. 127p pl maps $5.95 Meredith

972.81 Guatemala—History. Guatemala—Description and travel 67-11028

The author of The Peru Traveler (BRD 1967) here writes about the Pre-Columbian past; the Spanish Conquest; Independence: before and after; Revolution and counterrevolution; and Guatemala today. The book also includes a section of illustrations and a travelogue. Index.

"This volume is unique. . . . Part I is a history of Guatemala from pre-Mayan Indian times to the latest presidential election. No such history has been done before, even in Spanish. It is necessarily sketchy because it is brief, but it presents a continuous picture that the reader cannot get in any other single volume. . . . The travelogue section [describes] many out-of-the-way places. . . . It is also the first guidebook that assumes that the traveler will be driving his own car. Road directions are clear, and hotel information is up-to-date. Mr. Rodman's enthusiasm for the country and his great gift for writing make this book not only informative but a delight to read. He has one further purpose: he tries to show that necessary economic reforms in Guatemala must not be allowed to sacrifice democracy or the rich Indian heritage. Recommended for public, high-school, and college libraries." M. C. Kennleyside

Library J 92:1158 Mr 15 '67 220w

"The latest work of Selden Rodman, former nemesis of nonrepresentational art and now an author of nonrepresentational history [contains] factual errors . . . [and is a] blend of liberal cant about the need for reform and [an] attack on any authentic reform in a book suffused with the anti-Communist mentality." Warren Sloat

Nation 206:26 J1 8 '68 2000w

ROEDELBERGER, FRANZ A. Wildlife of the South Seas; 250 phot. illustrating the animal life of the Indo-Pacific, Indonesia, Australia, Oceania and Galapagos [by] Franz A. Roedelberger and Vera I. Groschoff; with 60 wildlife photographers; English version by Peter J. Whitehead. 216p $10 Viking

591.918 Zoology—Islands of the Pacific. Coral reefs and islands

Pictures with accompanying text of wildlife of this area. Originally published in German under the title Fauna Ferner Inseln.

"An unusual book on wildlife, with an exceptional collection of pictures and color plates that capture rare glimpses of wildlife in remote areas of the South Pacific."

Library J 92:4278 N 15 '67 30w [YA]

Reviewed by Elizabeth Thalman

Library J 92:4515 D 15 '67 120w

"[This] descends to depths that will challenge other publishers for years to come. The text is free association: no sections, no chapters, no lead sentences, no transitions between subjects to guide the reader. Wherever a photograph happens to fall, something remotely related to it is mentioned somewhere on the page. Most of the pictures are of unbelievably poor quality—retouched, silhouetted, faked—and the printing is simply awful." Peter Farb

Sat R 50:46 N 25 '67 100w

ROETHKE, THEODORE. Selected letters of Theodore Roethke; ed. with an introd. by Ralph J. Mills, Jr. 273p il $6.95 Univ. of Wash. press

816

68-11045

Most of these letters "have been selected . . . from the collection in the University of Washington Library to illustrate particularly [Roethke's] career as poet. . . . [Included are] unpublished poems and early versions of poems which later appeared in magazines or books." (Introd) Chronology. Index.

Am Lit 40:436 N '68 50w

"The full-bodied portrait of Roethke limned by . . . Mills includes the wide range of his attributes. . . . Admirers and students of Roethke will find . . . rich nuggets of theory and criticism interspersed with unblushing praise of his own work. . . . [This] will appeal to those who appreciate modern poetry and to scholars and specialists in the field. Larger libraries will find [it] essential." B. W. Fuson

Library J 93:3006 S 1 '68 240w

Reviewed by Sherman Paul

Nation 208:27 Ja 6 '69 450w

"Whereas the reader will find, scattered through these letters, many hints as to Roethke's craft . . . the main impression that the book makes will probably be of a different sort. His imaginative, idealistic strivings in the poetic dimension find a materialistic counterpart in the most frankly careerist correspondence conceivable. . . . If his letters to me are any test, some of his most entertaining moments (in epithets he applies to one or another of his colleagues) are omitted. . . . Among the omissions, there is a reference to a speech by Edward Teller, 'who "fathered" the hydrogen bomb.' The lacunae occur both before and after the name. . . . The editor was more squeamish as regards these matters than I . . . wish he had been, particularly since such omissions obscure somewhat the unconscious self-portrait that Roethke's letters so appealingly present." Kenneth Burke

New Repub 159:25 ■ 21 '68 1800w

"The most interesting thing about the [letters] solemnly enshrined in this book is that this raucous artist of psychic solitude has nothing whatsoever to say. Nor does he say it well. Sometimes he does talk rather interestingly about his art . . . and sometimes the letters are fun. . . . But by and large Roethke's letters are business letters, filled with boring and rather smarmy gossip. . . . The Roethke of the letters. . . . seems like just another busy, unhappy, not very smart guy who writes. But the book is an occasion to send people to . . . the 'Collected Poems' [BRD 1966], that exclusively poetic achievement, which, dealing as it does with love and solitude demonstrates—what these boring letters also show in their opposite way—that besetting incapacity to speak which made him write." Stephen Koch

N Y Times Bk R p34 S 29 '68 900w

"This is a handsomely printed and judiciously edited selection. . . . Other Roethke letters will, no doubt, see print; these . . . serve admirably to illustrate Roethke's career as poet and teacher. . . . [The selection will remain] an invaluable sourcebook for the serious student of modern poetry and, for the general reader, a revealing portrait of the material and spiritual struggles of one of the finest poets of our time. . . . Roethke did not write these letters for publication; they are not elegant or polished. For the most part informal, and always honest, they endear us to the man. . . . The image . . . that comes through here is that of a man making a strenuous and concerted effort throughout his life to move from loss and despair to happiness." William Heyen

Sat R 51:78 Je 22 '68 750w

Va Q R 44:clx autumn '68 180w

ROFF, WILLIAM R. The origins of Malay nationalism. (Yale univ. Graduate school. Yale Southeast Asia study, 2) 297p il $8.50 Yale univ. press

320.1 Nationalism. Malaya—Politics and government 67-13447

An "analysis of the interaction of British rule and the indigenous people in an Asian setting. . . . The work is based on primary sources, published and unpublished, in English and in Malay, official and private." (Choice) Glossary. Bibliography.

"Among the many recent studies of the history of Malaya and Malaysia, it is a pleasant indeed to find one that explores new terrain, opens areas for future research, and seeks to use fresh methodological concepts. . . . While Mr Roff's book is not immediately concerned with the years since 1940, there is no doubt but that it establishes the essential framework within which later events occurred. Although these events were enacted on a national stage, it is quite evident that they must be explained and understood in more local and particularistic terms. Roff's study admirably provides this context through the use of a Malay-centered orientation blended with judicious and sympathetic evaluation of the Malay-language record. Both his factual narrative and his methodology advance the study of Southeast Asian history." Robert Van Niel

Am Hist R 73:575 D '67 380w

"[This book] deals with materials central to the concerns of political science but it is not a work of political science. It would have been too much to expect an explicit analytical framework, or a grounding in theory, new or used. However, one might have expected a more a comparative form of analysis in which Malaysian developments are related to coordinate events in Indonesia, Burma, Ceylon, or, failing all else, India. . . . Despite Dr. Roff's disinclination to compare or speculate, his firm and fulsome job of historiography helps make the Malaysian case a fertile field for analysis of the twin processes of nationalism and decolonization. Any true understanding of Britain's relatively successful application of a 'go slow' colonial policy will gain much by building upon Roff's careful tracing of the not so radical roots of Malay nationalism." J. F. Guyot

Am Pol Sci R 62:648 Je '68 700w

"Historians and political scientists have so far placed an undue emphasis on the British ruling élite, Chinese and Indian immigrants and neglected the Malays in the writing of Malay history. Roff's study will help to provide a balance. . . . The analysis is reinforced by extensive interviews with the most important individuals in Malay society. . . . An essential addition to any college or university library with an Asian sector."

Choice 4:1162 D '67 130w

Economist 226:50 Ja 20 '68 750w

TLS p611 J1 13 '67 90w

ROGERS, ANN. A Basque story cook book; il. by Marian Ebert. 222p il $6.95 Scribner

641.5 Cookery, Basque

68-17347

The recipes "are interspersed in the family story of Martin and Angelita Abaurra who immigrated to San Francisco from northern Spain to become owners and proprietors of a Basque hotel." (Christian Science Monitor) Index.

Best Sell 28:352 N 15 '68 100w

"A recipe for Natilla—a soft, cinnamon-scented custard—is one of a few interesting recipes in [this otherwise pedestrian cook-book]." Gloria Levitas

Book World p4 D 15 '68 20w

Reviewed by Yvonne Horton

Christian Science Monitor p8 N 29 '68 40w

"This is a most charming and unusual cook-book. . . . Simple, but with enough differences to intrigue, these recipes will delight the cook who likes to vary his menu with a new flavor. . . . Recommended for specialized cookery collections." M. K. Badger

Library J 93:3004 S 1 '68 160w

ROGERS, DAVID. 110 Livingston Street; politics and bureaucracy in the New York City schools. 584p $6.95 Random house

379.747 New York (City)—Public schools. New York (City). Board of Education. Educational sociology. Negroes—Education

68-14499

An associate professor of sociology at New York University argues that New York City's public school system has failed. He examines the City's educational administration, its relations to other city institutions, civic groups, teachers and administrators; and the forces within it which have kept the schools from changing to meet the needs of the times. Bibliography. Index.

"If you can wade through the wealth of details about the failure of desegregation in the New York schools, they should give you the necessary Kafkaesque feeling of futility and exhaustion to empathize with the problems of urban education. Mr. Rogers' book, named after the address of the New York Board of Education, is a thorough and important study of the immovable bureaucratic system which is threatening to destroy New York's children. . . . It is compulsory reading for those who want to understand the recent controversy over decentralization in the New York schools. . . . Mr. Rogers does not minimize the difficulties of changing a system run wild, and he emphasizes the need to educate the community to handle decentralization properly. . . . The author suggests several strategies for change." Trudy Rubin

ROGERS, DAVID—Continued

Christian Science Monitor p13 N 21 '68
750W

"Rogers presents a depressing case study of the failure of the public school system in New York City in this book [which is] the result of a study done for the Center for Urban Education. . . . The chief hope of the city, Mr. Rogers believes, will be to move toward decentralization, both of the schools and of other aspects of government, and to engage in long-range planning. His book is well documented, with numerous accounts of the efforts of organizations and groups; it is specific in naming names. . . . While [it] is not easy or pleasant reading, it should be required reading for government officials, professors of administration courses, and citizens concerned about the problems of our schools and cities." Marian Wozen-craft

Library J 93:3554 O 1 '68 500W

"Against [the] background of current claims Mr. Rogers's account of the past becomes relevant and poignant. For at the heart of the narrative is the system's unwillingness to bring about changes that might have aided integration. . . . Perhaps the most damaging chapter is the account of alleged sabotage of the Open Enrollment program by many of the system's insiders. . . . This case history so persuasively documents the system's lumbering disregard for social and economic realities that one wishes Mr. Rogers had curbed his own prejudices. His account is often weakened by his . . . re-writing of history. . . . Mr. Rogers is clearly forgetful when he denies that civil-rights spokesmen in the early 1960's demanded immediate city wide integration. . . . Serious misinterpretations of facts are contained in [his] description of the role of the press. . . . These flaws, though unfortunate, do not impair the book's central thesis." F. M. Hechinger

N Y Times Bk R p7 O 27 '68 1900W

ROGERS, THOMAS. The pursuit of happiness.
237p $5.50 New Am. lib.

68-20113

A "novel about the love affair between two University of Chicago students [William Popper and Jane Kauffman] and their battle with the Establishment. . . . William is a WASP, alienated from his rich family. [Jane is] Jewish, emancipated, the daughter of a one-time Marxist. . . . The story takes a serious turn when William skids on an icy street and kills a pedestrian and by doing everything wrong lands a year's imprisonment. He escapes and he and Jane head for Mexico, now alienated from the U.S., too." (Publishers' Weekly)

Reviewed by Richard Rhodes
Book World p5 Je 9 '68 700W

"[This book seems to be] a pure fable of alienation and distrust. . . . It seems so thoroughly to express the sentiments of a certain brand of campus radicalism—innocent, egocentric middle-class, and apolitical—that younger readers will feel that here is a book which really speaks for them. . . . [It] stays in one's memory, perhaps because it contains a structured action, something like a plot, intended to reveal a cluster of meanings. . . . One can't be entirely sure that Mr. Rogers fails to see through the amiable young prig he has created in William. Exiled in Mexico, William soon makes certain that the family trust fund will keep him in groceries and luxuries. . . . This too seems emblematic of a certain strand of New Leftism, and surely Mr. Rogers is too shrewd a writer not to realize that this final and very amusing touch calls into question his novel as a paradigm or defense of youthful estrangement." Irving Howe

Harper 236:83 My '68 1600W

Reviewed by Earl Tannenbaum

Library J 93:1503 Ap 1 '68 150W

"Mr. Rogers' absorbing and surprising novel is about an attractive young couple for whom America grows impossible. . . . Its success lies in the author's ability to make us believe that his couple who possess the most admired American attributes—he is rich, she is beautiful, and both are remarkably honest and un-hung-up—behave in the admirable way they do because of the fact that they grew up in this country, not in spite of it. The general air of humor and warm-heartedness, plus his characters' complete lack of bitterness, and the film of irony that lies over the total presentation make this a most engaging novel." Sara Blackburn

Nation 207:59 J1 22 '68 150W

Reviewed by Guy Davenport

Nat R 20:701 J1 16 '68 320W

Reviewed by Richard Gilman

New Repub 159:34 Ag 17 '68 350W

Reviewed by Jack Richardson

N Y Rev of Books 11:12 Ag 1 '68 1700W

Reviewed by Marian Engel

N Y Times Bk R p29 J1 28 '68 800W

New Yorker 44:80 Ag 31 '68 330W

"Rogers, at 41, is technically too old for this group, and it shows. Though this, his first novel, has been touted as the find of the year by many a literary gerontocrat it does not, as its gray-locked fans imagine, bridge the storied gap of generations, but records some features of the campus milieu of the '50s here masquerading as Today's Youth. . . . There is not a word about the draft (a far likelier thing to have fled than that contrived car crash, which is a sort of machina ex deo anyway) or drugs (these kids drink) or radical politics. Rogers has written a thoroughly conventional book that tries to make the young comprehensible to the old. The dropout couple he invents are indeed infinitely prepossessing and comprehensible, the kind there used to be before the Tonkin Bay resolution." R. A. Sokolov

Newsweek 72:80 J1 22 '68 170W

Reviewed by H. S. Resnik

Sat R 51:33 J1 27 '68 800W

Reviewed by D. J. Gordon

Yale R 58:112 O '68 850W

ROGERS, W. G. Ladies bountiful. 236p $6.95 Harcourt
920

67-20319

The author of Wise Men Fish Here (BRD 1965) has assembled a "gallery of women whose flair for detecting talent and whose generosity in supporting it played a vital role in the modern movement in the arts. The women—Lady Ottoline Morrell, Harriet Monroe, Annie Horniman, Sylvia Beach, Harriet Weaver, Mabel Dodge, Lady Maud Cunard and her daughter Nancy, Caresse Crosby, Margaret Anderson and Jane Heap, Natalie Clifford Barney, and others—were as various as the artists they befriended." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"A 'colorful gallery of patrons of the arts', this is a fascinating account of the 'inner-inner' circle. . . . What makes the book so interesting is the variety of types who at one time or another played the part of 'angel'. . . . The personal interactions and antagonisms between the artist and the Lady Bountiful often entered into the creative works. Lady Ottoline Morrell was the victim of D. H. Lawrence's calumny and is portrayed as Hermione in 'Women in Love'. But nothing daunted the ladies. . . . The reader will find [this] to be an enjoyable and well-done book." Anne Keehan

Best Sell 28:15 Ap 1 '68 420W

"Mr. Rogers maintains that the ladies who support indigent genius in art or creative literature are more truly angels than the so-called 'angels' who risk money backing theatrical productions. He supports his notion with entertaining and informative accounts of the ladies who did much for D. H. Lawrence, Picasso, Ezra Pound, James Joyce, and others over the last half-century. [He] tells the story with spirit, humor, details from letters, conversations, and reminiscences. For many years arts editor of the Associated Press, he knew many of those he writes about, but he does more than record gossip. A book of considerable interest for serious students or light readers of modern literature." F. N. Jones

Library J 93:543 F 1 '68 130W

Reviewed by David Dempsey

Sat R 51:29 Mr 9 '68 1350W

"[This book] was written, one suspects, for the sophisticated American visitor to Europe, interested maybe in the works of D. H. Lawrence and James Joyce, but still more interested in those selfless women, mainly American, who made their masterpieces possible. This would account for the rather strange geographical information strewn through the book. . . . [Mr. Rogers] is out to argue a case in which the Ladies Bountiful, with whom his readers will find it easier to identify, appear superior to the men they helped and encouraged. . . . [This] is not always a just book, even though Mr. Rogers admits that his ladies usually got value for their money."

TLS p1275 N 14 '68 1200w

ROGERS, WILLIAM D. The twilight struggle; the Alliance for Progress and the politics of development in Latin America; introd. by Robert F. Kennedy. 301p $6.95 Random house 309.2 Alliance for Progress. U.S.—Relations (general) with Latin America. Latin America—Relations (general) with the U.S.

67-12750

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Choice 5:409 My '68 180w

Reviewed by J. C. Carey
J Am Hist 55:186 Je '68 340w

Reviewed by Joseph Page
New Repub 158:28 F 10 '68 1350w

ROGIN, MICHAEL PAUL. The intellectuals and McCarthy: the radical specter. 366p $12.50 Mass. inst. of technology

320.973 McCarthy, Joseph Raymond. U.S.—Politics and government—20th century

67-16489

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by B. J. Bernstein
Am Hist R 73:1262 Ap '68 600w

Reviewed by W. A. Gamson
Am J Soc 73:636 Mr '68 750w

Reviewed by H. M. Levy
Ann Am Acad 378:166 Jl '68 600w

Reviewed by P. W. Glad
J Am Hist 54:930 Mr '68 800w

Reviewed by Isidore Silver
New Repub 159:36 Jl 6 '68 700w

RÖHL, J. C. G. Germany without Bismarck; the crisis of government in the Second reich, 1890-1900. 304p $9 Univ. of Calif. press

943.08 Germany—History—1866- . Germany—Politics and government—1866- 67-26960

The study investigates "the labyrinthian intrigues at the higher levels of the German government. The struggle is between the responsible officials—Caprivi, Hohenlohe, and the other ministers—on the one hand, and the Kaiser and his personal advisors—Holstein, Philipp Eulenburg, and Bülow—on the other." (Choice) Annotated bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by T. S. Hamerow
Am Hist R 73:1554 Je '68 370w

Reviewed by B. S. Viault
Ann Am Acad 337:171 My '68 430w

"The subtitle rather than the title best describes the subject of this excellent piece of scholarship. . . . Röhl's work is based on unpublished documents from East and West German archives. These sources provide fascinating new material, e.g. the harsh words passed between the Kaiser and his ministers, and the schemes which led to the fall of one or the rise of another. The book probes much more deeply than J. A. Nichol's Germany after Bismarck [BRD 1959] or even than Norman Rich's works on Holstein. Though specialized, its manageable length and clarity of style make it useful to undergraduates as well as to professional scholars. Strongly recommended."

Choice 5:115 Mr '68 170w

"[The author] who deals with the fatal results of the dislocation that came to a head during the few years between 1890 and 1900 . . . [emphasizes] the intimate connection between the dislocation and the federal form of rule, however inescapable that form was. . . . Mr Röhl revels in facts; but they are so very fresh, the result of genuinely pioneering work among German manuscripts, and they are made to serve a theme so interesting and important, that . . . [his book] may be pronounced essential reading. The theme is that by 1890 when Bismarck fell Germany was beset by two problems—the unstable relationship between government and society and the unsettled distribution of power within the government—and that the first heavily contributed to the results of the struggle that now broke out about the second, which is Mr Röhl's chief concern."

Economist 226:51 Ja 13 '68 300w

"The theme of [this] book, originally a dissertation, is that after an uneasy pause following Bismarck's fall in 1890, William emerged in 1897 as 'the decisive figure,' and that it was he who determined the direction of German policy. I shall be surprised if many historians endorse this view. As is common with writers of dissertations, Dr. Röhl reads too much into his evidence." Geoffrey Barraclough

N Y Rev of Books 10:35 Mr 14 '68 600w

"Dr. Röhl has made a fair-minded contribution to an extremely controversial subject."

TLS p291 Mr 21 '68 600w

ROHRBACH, ELIZABETH C., ed. Jung's contribution to our time. See Bertine, E.

ROJO, RICARDO. My friend Ché; tr. from the Spanish by Julian Casart. 220p il $4.95 Dial press

B or 92 Guevara. Ernesto 68-9461

The Argentine lawyer, who was one of Ché Guevara's closest friends from 1953 to the revolutionary leader's death last year, writes of Ché's activities in those years.

Reviewed by Maurice Adelman

America 119:572 N 30 '68 100w

"[Ché's] story is appealing to young people because of his accomplishments at such an early age, and, although Mr. Rojo is definitely anti-American, his treatment of Ché is surprisingly objective. Latin American specialists, general readers, and young people, especially leaders of student rebellions will be interested in this book." J. L. Buelna

Library J 93:3552 O 1 '68 180w [YA]

"Rojo may not always grasp what Che was trying to do. . . . he speculates with insufficient evidence, makes assertions without naming sources, writes hurriedly, gets some facts wrong. All that, but he never patronizes Che, he can never be a gringo and, consequently, never tasteless. Rojo, an old friend of Che's, tells best the story of those years of their relationship before Che set off on the Granma to invade Cuba, and Rojo returned to Argentina after the fall of Perón. It's the story of a whole Latin American generation wandering throughout the continent in exile or in search of adventure. . . . [Rojo] knows a great deal about the actions of the guerrillas in Bolivia, but the publication of Che's diary [The Complete Bolivian Diaries of Ché Guevara, by E. Guevara, BRD 1968] has rubbed off the novelty of these revelations. Nevertheless, his book is always interesting, always compassionate, and the portrait he achieves of Che is fullbodied and convincing. There's an especially fine sheaf of snapshots in the book, some taken by Rojo in Cuba in 1961." Jose Yglesias

Nation 207:317 S 30 '68 210w

Reviewed by Jose Yglesias

N Y Times Bk R p22 O 20 '68 1250w

New Yorker 44:83 Ja 4 '69 260w

ROKKAN, STEIN, jt. ed. Party systems and voter alignments: cross-national perspectives. See Lipset, S. M.

ROLAND, NICHOLAS. The Great One; a novel. 254p $3.95 Houghton

68-11925

"Neighboring African states, Paragon and the Republic of Nigroun (both imaginary) are the subject of this satiric fantasy set in the 1980's. The British ambassador, Sir Percival, represents H.M.G. in both countries. Paragon is an ancient kingdom little touched by progress. Prince Lucifer, its head of state, confesses to Sir Percival that change must come and proposes the highly unorthodox solution of vol-

ROLAND, NICHOLAS—Continued

untarilly attaching Paragon to Britain. Nigroun, a republic, is ruled by [President] Joshua Davidson, known as 'The Great One,' who is suspicious of both Paragon and Sir Percival. Things get . . . complicated with liquidations, postitutes, secret loves—Prince Lucifer has a yen for a lady diplomat and she, in turn, yearns for Father Vincent, a missionary." (Publishers' Weekly)

"The book will offend. African reviews should be scathing. Roland, whom the blurb cites as holding 'an official position,' is using a pen name. His views reflect personal experience. . . . No profound message is given, beyond a hope that forces of progress and government as Europeans understand them are going on below the bizarre surface. Roland's satire is deft. Through subtly minimizing his own exaggerations, he evokes humor directly from the abundant local color which constitutes the core of the novel. While there is condescension toward the African, there is also an ironic view of the European diplomats. The phrasing is (forgive me) very British: cerebral, abrupt, understated, and subtle. Roland uses care to comment obliquely letting a rain of detail create the total impact. At times the story is soggy with detail and momentum is lost." C. M. Light

Best Sell 27:425 F 1 '68 550w

Critic 26:94 Ap '68 90w

Reviewed by Norman Horrocks

Library J 93:1503 Ap 1 '68 170w

Reviewed by Francis Hope

New Statesman 73:410 Mr 24 '67 280w

Reviewed by Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p40 Ja 14 '68 180w

"Roland . . . stands as virtually unique in that he can laugh without sneering. . . . While he is brazenly and hilariously irreverent toward the cockeyed and sometimes brutal ideas that influence much of present-day African political behavior, [he] always remains respectful. Not infrequently he is admiring. . . . This delightful book . . . is just plain uproarious. (The conclusion, in fact, belongs among the funniest sick jokes of fiction; it all but out-Waugh Waugh.) And no less to the point, beneath the unending barrage of urbane belly-laughs, there is a thoughtful, conspicuously well-informed examination of Black Africa's present and future. Roland pokes no fun here. Not only does he recognize fully the intensity of the continent's political, social, and economic migraine; he also shows singular wisdom in acknowledging that unorthodox therapies may sometimes be in order. His empathy and respect remove all the venom from his humor." Charles Miller

Sat 11 51:30 F 10 '68 700w

"Mr. Roland's blackly mischievous tragi-farce is buoyantly conveyed on an interplay between the mores peculiar to each of two lightly fictional Congolese states, and the mellowed eccentricities of the British diplomatic service. . . . There is a devoted English priest who is virtually the only positive norm in the book, devoid of breezy caricature or roguishness. But if these details raise fears of a kind of crusty 'satire' endearing only to a White Rhodesian Catholic, they mislead greatly. [This] is an intelligent, sensitive and funny extravaganza which also contrives to be true rather than dogmatic."

TLS p373 My 4 '67 250w

ROLL, ERIC. The world after Keynes: an examination of the economic order. 193p $5.50 Praeger

330.9 Economics. Economic conditions 67-22295

"This book is a Britannica Perspective prepared to commemorate the 200th anniversary of the Encyclopaedia Britannica. . . . [The author] compares present economic theory and thinking, which is largely Keynesian, with that of earlier periods. He then projects possible future economic trends which deal largely with the international economy." (Library J) Index.

"The world Roll surveys has its problems: undue inflation; balance-of-payments deficits; the need for planning to promote growth, ameliorate inequality, and meet . . . public-sector problems. . . . On each of those issues, Roll speaks with good sense. . . . [Yet] there is a certain blandness about this present survey; . . . the author would apparently rather be bland than wrong. And who is to fault him for this? . . . [The task of encyclopedias] is to sift out the wisdom of the day and stamp it conventional—a mission here well accomplished." P. A. Samuelson

Book World p15 Je 9 '68 750w

"This is an important book which will go largely unrecognized, partly because of the modesty of Roll and his unspectacular, reasoned style. Printed on poor paper in small type."

Choice 5:1185 N '68 160w

"[Roll] believes that 'Keynes' supreme achievement was in demonstrating that standards which apply to the conduct of an individual differ from those that apply to the aggregate actions of a large number of individuals, such as the state. . . . This is an excellent analysis and should be in every library with collections of general economic theory."

D. E. Thompson

Library J 93:2484 Je 15 '68 220w

TLS p1066 S 26 '68 950w

ROLLAND, ROMAIN, jt. auth. Richard Strauss & Romain Rolland: correspondence. See Strauss, R.

ROLO, CHARLES J., ed. The anatomy of Wall Street; a guide for the serious investor; ed. by Charles J. Rolo and George J. Nelson. 307p $7.50 Lippincott

332.67 Securities. Stock exchange. Wall Street. Investments 67-25899

Written by various authors including journalists, brokers and security analysts, "the book begins with a section on general market operations, followed by a section on investment vehicles: bonds, mutual funds, growth stocks, foreign securities; this leads to a section on analytical approaches—fundamental, technical, and contrary opinion—and the outside pressures of economics and politics on the market." (Library J) Some of the material appeared previously in the Financial Analysts Journal. Glossary. Annotated bibliography. Index.

"Without quite the dash of style and humour that delights the readers of A. Smith's 'The Money Game' [BRD 1968], this, too, is an inside story the the Street. . . . The subtitle is justified; this is a book for the serious investor who is looking for neither a primer nor slide-rule formulae, but, instead, wants to learn something about the operations of the New York Stock Exchange. . . . Interesting contributions include a chapter on the valuation of common stocks, . . . and a critical reappraisal of the price/earnings ratio. . . . The abundance of financial data for the country as a whole and for individual companies in the United States must make any British analyst's mouth water."

Economist 228:51 S 28 '68 280w

"Some of the best minds in Wall Street are represented in this substantial book of fact and opinion on investing and investing philosophy. . . . Readers will not find a single formula for getting rich quick. But [they] will come away from the book with a greater understanding of the intricacies of the investment business gleaned from some of Wall Street's most prominent thinkers." M. R. Brown

Library J 93:988 Mr 1 '68 180w

ROMILLY, JOSEPH. Romilly's Cambridge diary, 1832-42; selected passages from the diary of the Rev. Joseph Romilly, fellow of Trinity college and registry of the University of Cambridge; chosen, introduced and annot. by J. P. T. Bury. 259p pl $12.50 Cambridge

B or 92

[67-10055]

Joseph Romilly, 1791-1864, the nephew of Sir Samuel Romilly, the Whig law reformer "was a bachelor clergyman of the Church of England, a Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge and from 1832 to 1861 Registry of the University. He kept a regular diary from 1829 to the year of his death." (Publisher's note) Index of persons. General index.

"[The] present volume, well edited and well printed . . . is a readable and lively source rather than a basic document in university history. Most of the entries are too brief to explore critical issues or to illuminate controversial personalities. Thus, for example, though there is information about the election of William Whewell to the mastership of Trinity in 1841, there is virtually nothing about his ways of arguing or working. . . . The most incisive comments in the Diary relate not to politics but to religion. Romilly was an exacting critic of the hundreds of sermons that he heard, not all of them in the course of his formal duties. It is not easy, however, to generalize about his religious attitudes. As a bachelor clergyman he was urbane, not eccentric, and tolerant, not profound. . . . This is a Diary without revelations, more valuable for its flavor than its content." Asa Briggs

Am Hist R 73:819 F '68 480w

Reviewed by Norman Gash

Engl Hist R 83:860 O '68 180w

TLS p741 Ag 17 '67 950w

ROMNEY, GEORGE. The concerns of a citizen. 288p $5.95 Putnam

300.8 U.S.—Politics and government—1961-67-29774

The present governor of the State of Michigan says "this book is a collection of speeches and segments of speeches or articles, which essentially chronicle the development of my thinking from my earliest public statements to the present." (Intro)

"In this collection of speeches covering a variety of topics—agriculture, labor, the Republican Party, foreign affairs, civil rights, the national economy, and others—Mr. Romney proves that he does not have a stable of ghost writers. The speeches are bland, sincere, lacking in originality, and all too often repetitious. . . . Too many of [them] are filled with platitudes that have been handed out in too many speeches at past Fourth-of-July picnics. . . . Unfortunately [Romney] has little to say on Vietnam, and not much on solving our present-day racial crisis." Keith Eubank

Library J 93:560 F 1 '68 200w

Reviewed by M. L. Coit

Sat R 51:37 Ap 6 '68 450w

ROMUALDI, SERAFINO. Presidents and peons; recollections of a labor ambassador in Latin America. 524p il $8.95 Funk

331.88 Labor unions, Labor and laboring classes, Latin America—Politics 67-28154

"The main purpose of this book is to highlight the activities . . . of the United States labor movement in combating the attempts of Communists and other totalitarian forces to gain control of organized labor in Latin America since 1946. . . . It is a personal and firsthand account of the objectives and accomplishments over a twenty-year period." (Pref) Index.

"For more than fifteen years, Romualdi was the Latin-American Representative of the American Federation of Labor and after 1955 of the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations. . . . [All aspects of his] career are dealt with in the fascinating book under review, [which] is both an autobiographical recounting of Romualdi's own activities and a study of the trade-union and political situations in most of the countries to which his activities extended. Aside from chapters of organized labor in various parts of the hemisphere, Romualdi has special sections devoted to some of the leading political figures with whom he dealt during his twenty years of Latin-American activity, notably Victor Raul Haya de la Torre and Romulo Betancourt. This volume is undoubtedly destined to become a major source book for those interested in the political and economic evolution of Latin America in the post-World War II decades." R. J. Alexander

Ann Am Acad 337:200 My '68 800w

"Mr. Romualdi is one of the most courageous and outspoken labor representatives of our time. . . . In this candid, revealing and controversial book he records his activities and contacts with heads of state and Latin Americans from every walk of life. . . . General reader, informed layman, and specialist will all find something in this book." F. E. Kidder

Library J 92:3422 O 1 '67 130w

RONAN, COLIN A. The meaning of sound; with drawings by the author. 121p $3.95 Hart

534 Sound—Juvenile literature 67-25211

This is a "discussion of the characteristics of sound waves, including simple sound sources, music, noise, hearing and speech, sound broadcasting and ultrasonics. [Index.] Grades seven to nine." (Library J)

"Simplified, although generally accurate, explanations are presented, with emphasis on those aspects of acoustics which relate to audible sounds and the human listener. The level of this book would seem to be for the secondary school student; recent basic texts at this level . . . have tended to omit most of the material discussed here. . . . The appropriateness of Ronan's approach for the collection of a college library . . . is questionable."

Choice 5:661 J1 '68 180w [YA]

"Written for a younger age group than Irwin Stambler's The Worlds of Sound [BRD 1968, this] is, understandably, less thorough. However, although the facts are accurate, the wordy text and rather ineffective diagrams are not likely to appeal to or inform the junior high audience at which the book is aimed." Simon Kellman

Library J 93:887 F 15 '68 90w

RONAY ISTVAN CSICSERY. See Csicsery-Rónay, I.

RONSLY, JOSEPH. Yeats's Autobiography; life as symbolic pattern. 172p $5 Harvard univ. press

828 Yeats, William Butler—Autobiography 68-15642

A critical evaluation of the poet's accounts of his life. "Ronsley attempts to discover the design underlying Yeats's presentation of events, people, and ideas and to display the craftsmanship of The Autobiography [BRD 1938 and 1954]. Yeats wrote his autobiography over a twenty-year period, originally publishing each of its six sections separately. Mr. Ronsley demonstrates, through an examination of the work internally and in relation to other published and unpublished works of Yeats, that in spite of its fragmentary genesis it is a . . . unified book." (Publisher's note) Index.

"With facility and thoroughness [the author] documents the development of Yeats's final version of his multifarious autobiography out of shorter pieces such as the Reveries, The Trembling of the Veil, Hodos Chameliontos, and Dramatis Personae. We come to see how the poet's wide-flung interests . . . and his eminent contemporaries . . . all became grist for his mill. This is a useful book in that Mr. Ronsley demonstrates how Yeats was influenced by various thinkers of the past to affirm a latterday romantic faith in the importance of the supernatural and of the poet as seer, and ultimately in the need for a unified philosophy that would allow him access through the 'invisible gates' of life into the Anima Mundi. This book is recommended for literature collections and for specialists." R. J. Thompson

Library J 93:1900 My 1 '68 150w

"If the autobiographies are really one autobiography, it is not structurally, but because they embody successive aspects of a heroically single-minded quest. It might be thought that they speak for themselves, and hardly need an expository commentary. But Mr. Ronsley's clear and well-arranged little book does bring out a pattern which the reader of Yeats's own story, distracted and delighted by the detail . . . and the digression might easily miss."

TLS p1249 N 7 '68 550w

ROOSEVELT, FRANKLIN DELANO. Roosevelt and Frankfurter; their correspondence, 1928-1945; annotated by Max Freedman. (An Atlantic monthly press bk) 772p pl $17.50 Little B or 92 U.S.—Politics and government—1933-1945. Frankfurter, Felix 67-11228

"Very few letters are given here relating to the period 1928-1932, for Roosevelt as Governor of New York had of necessity to concentrate on state problems. Even during these years, however, Frankfurter and Roosevelt kept their friendship in repair, with Frankfurter often offering advice both on men and on policies. But these years, though important formed only the prelude to their cooperation during the Presidential years, the substance of this book." (Intro) Index.

Reviewed by Oscar Handlin

Atlantic 221:138 F '68 1200w

ROOSEVELT, F. D.—Continued

Reviewed by J. P. Roche
Book World p3 Ja 7 '68 900w
Choice 5:260 Ap '68 200w

Reviewed by S. R. Davis
Christian Science Monitor p11 F 21 '68 900w

"This correspondence is probably a more vivid guide [to the New Deal years] than any even of the diaries, memoirs and letters that have showered down from other hands. This being so it is a matter for regret that the editing hardly comes up to the contents. Mr. Freedman . . . here appears as only too patently a journalistic scholar. His introduction does not set forth as precisely as the reader deserves to know what are the exact criteria according to which this selection—for it is only a selection, however generous—has been compiled. His own editorial comments are inserted, sometimes briefly, sometimes lavishly . . . and the reader can never be sure whether he is going to find his elucidations before or after the document to which they refer. Much remains entirely unelucidated. . . . Mr. Freedman provides no clues [to the identity of many figures] and [his] index will seldom help."

Economist 227:49 My 11 '68 1000w

"Mr. Freedman was selected by Justice Frankfurter to edit his correspondence which was sealed until the judge's death. . . . In this reviewer's opinion, Mr. Freedman has magnificently carried out Justice Frankfurter's wish, 'Let the full story be told. . . .' This is an important book and libraries of all types which take their collections of 20th-Century history seriously should buy it." F. W. Summers
Library J 93:72 Ja 1 '68 240w

"[This] was a friendship significant in American history. . . . It placed Frankfurter on the Supreme Court . . . there to exert a major influence on the law of the American Constitution for well over two decades. Yet it is difficult to sense in this correspondence just what kind of a relationship it was. . . . There are men, of course, who can render their own quality and the quality of their relationship on paper. Neither FDR, nor Frankfurter . . . was such a man. . . . And so this correspondence is not the friendship. One aspect of it, however, may be thought to emerge. Frankfurter heaped praise on Roosevelt. . . . These letters of praise . . . are scarcely the most pleasant part of the book. . . . Nor does this correspondence demonstrate the full measure of Roosevelt's reliance on Frankfurter, or of Frankfurter's impact on the New Deal. . . . One need but read some of the crisp, lucid, meticulously well-informed, incisive and wise memoranda of Frankfurter . . . to know his value. In the end, the correspondence carries one message. Frankfurter was a rare person, and FDR knew it." A. M. Bickel
New Repub 158:27 F 3 '68 2850w

Reviewed by Hugh Brogan
New Statesman 75:657 My 17 '68 1100w

"The exchange over so long a period must be without a counterpart in American history. It reveals things about both men not heretofore known. . . . The topics seem endless—public power and other state struggles in the governorship years, New Deal battles, the third term and the fourth, tax loopholes for millionaires, Munich, isolationism, neutrality, [and] the war itself. . . . [Later editions] should correct slips in copy-reading. . . . Freedman has been working . . . on a biography of [Frankfurter]. The character of this volume of letters suggests the historical richness of what is still to come."

N Y Times Bk R p1 Ja 14 '68 2900w

"This authorized edition of the long correspondence, edited by [the] former Washington correspondent for the Manchester Guardian is an invaluable document in American history, and a key to some important aspects of the New Deal period, as well as an intimate record of one of those friendships which lie at the heart of power. . . . Of the book's 'revelations' the principal one, expectedly, has to do with one of the decade's celebrated episodes—the Supreme Court-packing struggle, FDR's unsuccessful attempt to out-number the majority of the 'nine old men' who were blocking his New Deal program. Frankfurter always insisted that he had maintained a scrupulous neutrality. In fact he was dissembling. [Freedman] puts it diplomatically in saying . . . 'There is nothing wrong with what Frankfurter did; there is a good deal wrong, however, with being a secret partisan while wearing the disguise of public neutrality.' . . . The 'discrepancy' between [Frankfurter's] active role and public pose, Freedman demonstrates, 'weighed on [his] conscience.' That [is] one of the faces of power, and this indispensable correspondence affords us a close-up of its lineaments." Saul Maloff

Newsweek 71:73 Ja 15 '68 700w
TLS p741 J1 18 '68 2400w

ROOSEVELT, PATRICIA PEABODY. I love ■

Roosevelt. 387p pl $6.95 Doubleday

920 Roosevelt family 67-15348

"Elliott Roosevelt's wife, Patty, tells what she knows about the Roosevelts she knows. And that means Eleanor, Anna, Franklin Jr., Elliott, James, and assorted aunts, uncles, cousins, and in-laws. [The book contains] anecdotes about the friendships and differences that influenced the relationships between the Roosevelt brothers, sister, and mother [and is] . . . spiced with gossip about other famous families." (Publisher's note)

"It's just too much, even for a loyal Roosevelt fan. A combination of Drew Pearson, Dorothy Kilgallen and Betty Beale, perhaps the kindest description is 'poor taste.'" M. F. O'C. Moriarty

Best Sell 27:235 S 15 '67 750w

"This is a curious book that will be added to the Rooseveltiana with some reservations, for it is not well written. But the sincerity of Patricia Peabody is so real that the book is not dull. If the budget for books is low, read this one before purchasing." K. T. Willis
Library J 92:2396 Je 15 '67 130w

ROOTS, IVAN. Commonwealth and protectorate; the English Civil War and its aftermath [Eng title: The Great rebellion: 1642-1660].

326p il $8.50 Schocken
942.06 Great Britain—History—Civil War and Commonwealth, 1642-1660 66-26727

"The book begins with the problems and events that led to resistance against Charles I and the consequent civil wars, and concludes with the problems and maneuvers that made the Restoration possible. More than half deals with developments before and after the Commonwealth and Protectorate. [It is an] historical summary with emphasis on political and military history, especially on the complex relations among executive, parliament, and army and on the role of personalities." (Choice) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"Roots, an historian at the University College of South Wales and Monmouthshire, Cardiff, does not strain for novel interpretations, but gives judicious assessments of conflicting familiar interpretations. General themes are somewhat obscured by the amount of detail. Roots draws from standard writers, standard collections of documents, and uncollected 17th-century sources. Sparse but adequate footnotes; good annotated bibliography; good index. In general, a useful introduction that will not supersede more specialized studies."

Choice 4:899 O '67 160w

Reviewed by Christopher Hill
New Statesman 73:154 F 3 '67 700w

"Most modern interpretations of the Great Rebellion and the Civil Wars are still based on the standard [History of the Commonwealth and Protectorate] written by Samuel Rawson Gardiner at the end of the last century and completed by his pupil Sir Charles Firth [The Last Years of the Protectorate, BRD 1910]. . . . For some years there has been a need for a new analysis of this period of intense political and social turmoil, which led to the execution of an anointed king and the imposition of the only republican government in English history. . . . [Roots] answers this need. The lucidity of his narrative is unwavering, and his judgments are astringent and uncommitted. On Oliver Cromwell . . . he is particularly sensible." J. P. Kenyon

N Y Rev of Books 9:27 Ja 4 '68 950w

"[The author who] has taught the subject of the rebellion for a long time has now embodied his experience of it in a sensible book. In his preface he promises a fresh narrative and an attempt to see events through the eyes of the actors in them. A study of his bibliography shows that he has not missed anything in recent research on the subject. . . . Roots [occasionally] protrudes his own views, though they are always cautiously worded. For example, he says of Strafford that he was 'possibly' a bad man; of Cromwell that 'it is difficult to say what were his permanent contributions to the modern world.' [His account] is full and, on the whole, fair in the light of modern research."

TLS p1125 D 1 '66 500w

ROPS, H. DANIEL-. See Daniel-Rops, H.

RORDORF, WILLY. Sunday; the history of the day of rest and worship in the earliest centuries of the Christian church [tr. by A. A. K. Graham]. 335p $8.50 Westminster press

263 Sabbath 68-98331

"Why do most Christians keep Sunday? Professor Rordorf maintains that the way in which the earliest Christians set aside this day, and the reasons why they turned from the Jewish Sabbath to the first day of the week, must be normative. The answer must therefore be sought in history—the history both of the day of rest in Judaism, its transference to Sunday in the Church, and of later developments up to Constantine." (TLS) Originally published in German in 1962.

"In this new contribution to a centuries-old discussion, [the] professor of patristics and early church history, University of Neuchâtel, exhaustively reviews the scholarship of the last decades. His topics include the pre-Christian development of the Sabbath, and the character of early Sunday observances. He then pushes on for some more extreme results of his own. He concludes that in the Old Testament the Sabbath was originally a social rather than a religious institution . . . and that the assimilation of Sabbath rest to Sunday worship did not in fact become common until Constantine's toleration of Christianity. The English translation includes some corrections of detail . . . and references to literature appearing since the original 1962 publication of the work . . . [whose] detailed character . . . fits it primarily for scholarly use. In the serious study of worship, however, it should become standard." Genevieve Kelly

Library J 93:3012 S 1 '68 170w

"The book is a magnificent treatise and is extremely well documented. In a work which has drawn on such a wide area of continental material it will be possibly surprising to some that the figure of Bultmann does not loom larger. Even so, there is the implication that one of the better-known Sabbath texts in Mark came to be read back by the early Church to Jesus. More obviously, however, Professor Rordorf's work stands as a monument in the line of more conservative scholars—Cullmann, Jeremias, Goppelt, and Reicke among them." TLS p402 Ap 18 '68 650w

ROREM, NED. Music and people. 250p $5.95 Braziller

780.07 Music—Analysis, appreciation 68-29939

An examination of "the artistic (mostly musical) tone of the fairly recent past and of the present . . . in a series of articles and reviews dealing with personalities or trends. These are interspersed with . . . [material] derived from my diary: random notes, sometimes forming postscripts to the essays." (Pref) Some of the material in the articles and reviews appeared previously in such periodicals as The New York Review, The Village Voice and Musical America. Index of people.

"A reasonably well-knit mix of reviews, occasional pieces, reminiscences and diary entries. Its opinions seem to its author and to me mild and well-informed and about right, sometimes too kind to friends who are merely liked, a touch nasty to friends who are both liked and envied. Rorem occasionally coins a lovely phrase. . . . Sometimes, on the other hand, he lobs an attempted aperçu with all the grace of a giggly stenographer throwing a baseball at a pyramid of milk bottles. . . . He doesn't write so well as his hero and original sponsor Virgil Thomson. But there is something appealing about Rorem's uncertainties, his need to express his fear of death and to judge each person he meets 'through his vulnerability . . . his susceptibility to hurt.' In the pages of [this book he] is pleasant if not very memorable company." Martin Mayer

Book World p6 O 6 '68 330w

Christian Century 85:1306 O 16 '68 30w

Reviewed by B. L. Glatz

Christian Science Monitor p14 N 14 '68 190w

"Rorem is scraping the bottom of a barrel that contained sour-grapes vintage. . . . His constant praise for his friends is suspect. . . . One of the best things about his final essay 'Where Is Our Music Heading?'—it also has perception, wit, and charm to recommend it—is its being laced with pity for something other than Ned Rorem. . . . Anyone would adore [his] differences if these were of genius, independence and accomplishment. They aren't." Harris Green

Commonweal 89:445 D 27 '68 750w

"[If the author] does not have the original profundity of Hector Berlioz in discussing the contemporary scene, generally he is entertaining. Some of the essays reveal information as well as opinion, and his discussion of his own opera Miss Julie is full of insight. However, Mr. Rorem 'bites the hand that feeds him' in predicting the end of formal concerts. An appendix is devoted to a list of his published compositions." Baird Hastings

Library J 93:3564 O 1 '68 80w

Reviewed by Richard Freedman

Nation 207:636 D 9 '68 900w

Reviewed by Robert Jacobson

Sat R 51:42 D 21 '68 170w

RÖRIG, FRITZ. The medieval town. 208p il $6.95 Univ. of Calif. press

301.3 Cities and towns—Europe. Civilization, Medieval 67-26961

This is a survey of the rôle of the urban center in medieval civilization. Heavy emphasis is given the towns of medieval Germany, particularly Hanseatic Lübeck and Nuremberg, but those of Flanders, Italy, France, and England receive some attention. The author is primarily interested in governmental and class structure within the town and in the difficulties encountered by townsmen in their relations with the monarchical state." (Va Q R) "The essence of The Medieval Town first appeared in volume IV of the Propyläen World History (edited by W. Goetz) in 1932. The complete version, which was prepared from the original manuscript by A. v. Brandt and W. Koppe, was first published in 1955 [as Die Europäische Stadt und die Kultur des Bürgertums im Mittelalter]. (Foreword) Bibliography. Index.

Choice 5:673 J1 '68 170w

"The late Professor Rörig was one of the best-known students of medieval urbanization. This volume contains the finest summary of his view of the course of urban history throughout Europe in the period from the 12th Century to the early 16th Century. . . . [It] will remain very useful for scholars and advanced students. For college and university libraries." H. L. Adelson

Library J 93:186 Ja 15 '68 150w

"There is no denying the erudition which Rörig brought to the work; nor the vividness which the piling of detail upon detail frequently produces. . . . Undoubtedly the greatest merit of the book is its dynamism. Throughout Rörig conveys the sense of development and change which is the stuff of good history. . . . The book's greatest defect is a pervading fuzziness, which is not improved by an ungainly, and occasionally ungrammatical, translation. On the one hand, whole centuries are spanned in a single paragraph so that their meaning becomes either confusing or dubious. On the other hand, there is often such a welter of information that it causes the writing to become shapeless. The consequence is an overall lack of delineation. . . . What we have is a crowded and colourful canvas but little sense of coherence."

TLS p573 Je 6 '68 400w

"A compact, rather dry, distinctly old-fashioned, but in its way competent enough, survey. [Professor Rörig] discusses [his topics] sensibly but without much originality or insight. There is no footnote citation of authorities but a useful up-to-date bibliography is provided."

Va Q R 44:lxvli spring '68 130w

ROSA, JOÃO GUIMARÃES. The third bank of the river, and other stories; tr. from the Portuguese, with an introd. by Barbara Shelby. 238p $5.95 Knopf

68-12682

A collection of twenty-two short stories by the late Brazilian writer/doctor/diplomat. First published in Portuguese under the title Primeiras Estórias.

"These [stories] exhibit the hard actualities and the ineffable wonder of life as it is lived by the very young, the grown man and woman, the aged; by the deprived, the affluent; by the gentle, the savage; by the frivolous, by the rare big souls. And yet this book . . . has the unity of a single work because all are infused with the personality of the writer. Here is a man with extraordinary empathy, insight, wit, along with the feeling for language that allows a piercing expressiveness. . . . Rosa was singularly fortunate in having Barbara Shelby as his translator. Her sensitivity to both Portuguese and English allows her to produce the sometimes rollicking, sometimes weirdly magical, effects that must belong to the originals." Babette Deutsch

ROSA, J. G.—Continued

Christian Science Monitor p9 O 7 '68 800w

Reviewed by L. S. Thompson
Library J 93:3023 S 1 '68 130w

"This well-translated collection of stories takes on even more poignance than it already possesses with the death last November of the author . . . who was, quite simply, Brazil's most distinguished contemporary writer. . . . This is a book of stories by a dying man. Guimarães Rosa suffered a near fatal heart attack in 1958. He emerged from this encounter another man and another writer. [The collection] points up a newly attained distance from local realities; the stories are much closer to the self, so much more 'essential.' There is in them a sense of leave-taking, elegiac in tone, along with an even more scrupulous reading of Nature's signs. Guimarães Rosa was always something of a contemplative Taoist, but here he wrenches the last possible significance out of every pebble. . . . [This] is a magnificent collection of stories that is already a landmark in modern Latin American letters." Alexander Coleman

N Y Times Bk R p4 S 29 '68 600w

"In searching further for the significance of the original Portuguese title of Rosa's last book, we find some help in a comparison between the Primeiras Estórias and the collection of prose tales that immediately preceded it—Corpo de Baile. The latter is composed of seven very long narratives which may properly be termed novelettes. The stories of this final volume, however, are short. . . . Reversing the Latin American inclination toward prolixity, Rosa had abruptly altered his style and undertaken to accomplish the opposite. For while the stories [here] are on the surface modest, unplotted sketches, they are infused with a tone of mysticism which suggests insights and meanings that project far beyond their immediate scope. . . . The English rendering has been accomplished with a degree of devotion and care that will surely make evident to a new audience the stature of this genius of Brazilian literature." D. A. Yates

Sat R 51:31 O 19 '68 1550w
Time 92:102 O 4 '68 650w

ROSE, AL. New Orleans jazz; a family album [by] Al Rose and Edmond Souchon. 304p il $17.50 La. state univ. press 781.5 Jazz music. Musicians, American 66-25975

"New Orleans jazz is depicted here in a panorama of photographs collected by two jazz buffs. They begin with a jazz 'Who's Who' with pictures and brief descriptions of New Orleans jazzmen from Armstrong and Ory to sidemen currently performing in Preservation Hall. . . . Sections feature shots of New Orleans jazz bands, brass bands, historical jazz sites, and jazz steamboats." (Library J) Index.

"Similar in size and format to [O.] Keepnews and [B.] Grauer's Pictorial History of Jazz [BRD 1968], whose errors it occasionally corrects, but is concerned exclusively with musicians either from or active in New Orleans. New Orleans jazz men form a close-knit clan and this is a correspondingly clannish book. . . . Along with terse notes about world-famous musicians, it also lists an incredible number you have never heard of. . . . There are many pictures, biographic sketches, and personnel of bands which will please aficionados and leave most people (even in the jazz public) cold. It is lovingly and carefully wrought, tendentiously scholarly, and probably of interest only to very specialized collectors."

Choice 5:495 Je '68 140w

"Each entry is brief and the book is important for its breadth rather than its depth. . . . The editors describe the book as a 'deluxe family album of pictures.' This is its strength and weakness. For the jazz and extensive music collection, it will be a valuable addition, because of the many previously unpublished photographs. The lack of written historical background limits the volume's usefulness for the general reader." R. G. Swartz

Library J 93:755 F 15 '68 100w

"Because musicologists have only recently turned their attention to jazz, almost everything remains to be done. Although biographical monographs of individual jazz stars abound, some more fiction than fact, few authors have attempted the systematic collection of biographical information in this field. To date, the most complete art and reliable work has been Leonard Feather's New [Edition of the] Encyclopedia of Jazz [BRD 1961]. Indispensable though this work is, it is necessarily incomplete, because it attempts to span the entire field in a very limited space. . . . Rose and Souchon, in restricting themselves to the musicians who have played 'traditional jazz' professionally in New Orleans, have made a valuable contribution toward establishing order among the many pioneer jazzmen who flourished on the fertile delta soil of New Orleans." Frank Tirro

Music Lib Assn Notes 25:33 S '68 800w

ROSE, ALEXANDER. Memoirs of a heterosexual. 286p $5.95 Simon & Schuster

B or 92 68-11016

In this autobiography the author "tells of the strong family life, the drive for self improvement, and the resourcefulness that freed most Jewish immigrants from the slums in a generation. After finishing eighth grade, he taught himself typing and shorthand, by which he was able to earn a living in the harum-scarum wanderings and adventures of his youth. Combined with physical dangers and hard knocks were the skillfully exploited lucky breaks that led him to survive to become a film player, TV writer, unsuccessful inventor, and author of six earlier books based on his past." (Library J)

"The drive and ingenuity of this lad, eager for a richer existence crammed with triumphs, thrills and accomplishment, makes the story glow, a part of which emanates from the humor which saturates both character and event, humor depending more on situation than on wise-crack. . . . This boy's goals, along with his drives, seem so credible, so inevitable, in fact, that we are swept along with him, having too good a time to cavil at scrambled syntax. How he acquired [an impressive array of skills] and used them fills chapters both humorous and touching. . . . [But] with permanent success 'in the bag,' the book loses much of the charm which sets it so apart, and ends abruptly if not a trifle weakly. . . . The few sex exploits here offered seem wholesome, for [Mr. Rose] knows how to handle sex with finesse." W. H. Archer

Best Sell 27:436 F 15 '68 850w

"Unlike many others whose careers paralleled his, [Mr. Rose] does not seem to have ever lain on a psychiatrist's couch. Although this is not a book for the inspirational reading shelf, it does show how one man raised himself by his own bootstraps, and it will be of use in performing arts collections." W. H. Matthews

Library J 93:69 Ja 1 '68 150w

ROSE, ARNOLD M. Libel and academic freedom; a lawsuit against political extremists; foreword by Paul A. Freund. 287p $7.95 Univ. of Minn. press

347.9 Libel and slander. Trials 68-19743

The "story of a lawsuit in which the [author] professor of sociology at the University of Minnesota . . . at the time an elected member of the Minnesota legislature, sought by a libel action to expose a group of right-wing extremists and to vindicate his reputable standing in the community. . . . Rose equates the right-wing extremists with Communists, in that both are primarily revolutionaries and subversives seeking to destroy the established political order in the United States. . . . [He] concludes that his victory, although local in nature, and unfortunately reversed on appeal . . . did contribute to academic freedom and civic sanity." (Library J) Index.

"One of the difficulties [the author] encountered in holding the defendants accountable for their defamatory statements was the ruling in the recent Supreme Court New York Times decision that denies damages to a 'public official' for libel unless malice can be proved. His discussion of the frustrating effect of this decision on public officials who seek to maintain their public image for honesty and responsibility particularly deserves the attention of lawyers and jurists. A moving and cogent foreword has been contributed by Paul A. Freund of the Harvard Law School. Recommended for law libraries, university libraries and large public libraries." J. J. Marke

Library J 93:1913 My 1 '68 370w

"This is a lucid and absorbing account [of Dr. Rose's suit for libel]. . . . More instructive than the defendant's futile attempts to use the courtroom as a propaganda forum [for right-wing extremists] is the genealogy of the demonstration that Dr. Rose was subversive. . . . As far I know, Dr. Rose's is the first resort to a political libel suit as a means of vindicating academic freedom. Apart from the action's impact on free speech, its soundness and utility are highly debatable." F. J. Donner
Nation 207:150 Ag 26 '68 2300w

ROSE, ARNOLD M. The power structure; political process in American society. 506p $8.50; pa $2.95 Oxford

320 Power (Social sciences). Politics, Practical. U.S.—Politics and government. National characteristics, American 67-15133

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by Robert Bierstedt
Am J Soc 73:635 Mr '68 650w

Reviewed by John Porter
Am Soc R 33:301 Ap '68 1200w

Reviewed by Leonard Reissman
Ann Am Acad 375:233 Ja '68 650w

ROSE, BARBARA. American art since 1900; a critical history. 320p il $7.50 Praeger

709.73 Art, American—History 67-20743

"Beginning with the first decade of the century and the revolt of The Eight against the strictures of the Academy, Miss Rose traces the evolution of American art within the context of social, historical, and intellectual events, discussing the 1913 Armory Show; . . . the 1920's, a period of retrenchment, of compromise solutions, of provincial Cubism; and the 1930's of the American Scene painters, the Regionalists, the WPA projects. [Miss Rose examines] the stylistic development of the first-generation Abstract Expressionists—including Gorky, Pollock, and de Kooning. . . . the painters of the New York School, the second-generation Abstract Expressionists, and the newest American painting. . . . [There are] separate chapters on American sculpture and architecture." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index of names.

"It is disappointing that so contemporary and obviously alert a critic as Barbara Rose should not have realized that to write yet another predictable textbook on art is simply too boring. But she has done just that—informed and scholarly though it is. . . . All major events, artists and styles are faithfully and accurately recorded. The famed Armory Show of 1913 is gone into in detail, and the creative forces that shaped this country's first encounter with a movement that it could finally call its own—Abstract Expressionism—are described and documented without slight or prejudice. . . . Being a working critic and part of the contemporary scene, the author loses little time in making clear her tastes and preferences. She is decidedly of the nonfigurative persuasion, has little use for optical art, and barely mentions the vast number of current American figurative painters. . . . Two brief chapters on sculpture and architecture compress these enormous and vital areas to the point of distortion. . . . As for the illustrations—the book jacket with its dazzling Jasper Johns 'Three Flags' promises well, until one turns to the book itself only to find dead and coloristically distorted color plates." John Gruen
Book World p14 D 10 '67 700w

Choice 5:477 Je '68 200w

"This critical history of American art sweeps along with a lively text and abundant illustrations to give the reader a clear understanding of the growth and development of art in our century. . . . [and] neatly describes the background and results of historic exhibitions. . . . The illustrations, many in color, are clear and nicely placed to accompany the related text. The book is recommended for general and art collections as it is a readable survey attractively presented and priced." W. J. Dane

Library J 93:178 Ja 15 '68 190w

Reviewed by Janet Strothman

Library J 93:2136 My 15 '68 90w [YA]

TLS p332 Ap 4 '68 500w

ROSE, RICHARD. Influencing voters; a study of campaign rationality. 288p pl $5.95 St Martins

329.942 Politics, Practical. Elections—Great Britain 67-12244

The subject of this study "is the attempt by politicians and public relations men to influence voters by the paid distribution of campaign material through the mass media. . . . [Mr. Rose] finds that different public relations experts hold different assumptions about the public, campaigners frequently are not rational in their calculations, the obstacles to public relations influence are many, and influence of propaganda probably slight." (Library J) Index.

"[A] detailed and well organized study of British political party and professional advertising campaign methods, resulting in a discussion of difficulties inherent in the use of these methods in selling a party and/or a leader, as compared to selling some inanimate product. . . . The work goes into comparative discussion of differences between U.K. and U.S. systems: multiple campaigns and loosely organized party structure in the latter, and the problem of timing so important in the British. It would seem that both produce a high level of campaign advertising. The work is specialized but should be read by the general student."

Choice 5:1224 N '68 130w

"In a close, impartial, and scientific study of this question, Mr. Rose breaks new ground and demolishes many old myths. . . . Laymen may well wish to survey this volume merely to learn how to think about the question." H. J. Steck

Library J 92:2790 Ag '67 200w

ROSECRANCE, R. N. Defense of the realm; British strategy in the nuclear epoch. 308p $7.50 Columbia univ. press

355.03 Great Britain—Defenses. Great Britain —Military policy. Strategy 67-26368

"Rosecrance, head of the National Security Studies Program at the University of California, Los Angeles, . . . analyzes the British strategic posture from 1945 through the mid-1960's, showing how with each trimming of her defense forces, Great Britain steadily lessened her world influence. While she trimmed down her conventional military forces, she built up a nuclear deterrent force." (Library J) Index.

"[The author] here contributes a useful analysis of British defense policy-making in the first two decades after World War II. He argues that the British had a world role until 1955, but that their power dropped off sharply. . . . The book's usefulness is limited by the lack of a bibliography and thin footnotes. Nevertheless, it must be bought."

Choice 5:858 S '68 140w

Economist 227:53 Ap 6 '68 290w

"Although by itself the British deterrent was not all-powerful, Mr. Rosecrance states it is one that can give the Western Alliance greater flexibility in meeting possible Communist challenges. Since the end of World War II British defense spending has tended to fluctuate with the trends in economic cycles. This has resulted in greater British dependence upon American assistance and firm commitment. However, as Mr. Rosecrance shows, United States policies might not always meet British requirements. This well-written and authoritative book will interest informed readers and specialists in the field." A. S. Birkos

Library J 92:4513 D 15 '67 140w

"[Rosecrance] devotes much attention to the efforts since 1945 to define a military role congruent with the policymakers' images of what is needed and at the same time feasible within the limitations imposed by the British economy. Plans, projects, and strategic arguments are reviewed skillfully and in as much detail as available sources permit. Anyone who reads this book will learn a good deal about the public debate over military objectives and strategies that has continued in Britain during the past twenty years. Despite these unquestionable merits, the book suffers, in our judgment, from deficiencies of style and taste and, more important, of substantive fact and the interpretation thereof. . . . [Nevertheless, it] contributes to better understanding of historical events." Harold and Margaret Sprout

ROSECRANCE, R. N.—Continued

World Pol 20:661 J1 '68 2000w

ROSEN, GEORGE. Madness in society; chapters in the historical sociology of mental illness. 337p $5.95 Univ. of Chicago press 301.47 Mental illness 68-13112

These studies are concerned with "the place of the mentally ill, however defined, in societies at different historical periods and the factors (social, psychological, cultural) that have determined it. Dr Rosen begins by showing the attitude of the Ancient World to the mentally disturbed. . . . Attitudes towards mental disorder in Western and Central Europe during the late Middle Ages and the Renaissance period are examined, and the author shows the development of social psychiatry from the eighteenth century to the present day. He gives examples of psychic epidemics which occurred in Europe and the United States. . . . Some contemporary problems are considered, including the psychopathology of ageing. [In conclusion, the author describes trends and] issues in public health and mental health." (Publisher's note) Index.

"[A] scholarly volume on psychopathology in the social process. . . . Readers will appreciate the author's erudition in explicating complex and worrisome social aberrations." F. B. Rogers

Am J Pub Health 58:1567 Ag '68 330w

"One of the virtues of [this book is the author's] demonstration of how precarious a concept mental illness is. . . . The subtitle of [his] tirelessly documented book—'Chapters in the Historical Sociology of Mental Illness'—identifies his approach. . . . Nonetheless, there are inadequacies in [his] multiconceptual approach to the definition of mental illness. Conceptual breadth frequently leads to random lapses in particularization. For example, to associate, as [he] does at one point, Janet, Freud and Meyer is to gain perspective on the relatively recent notion of the ontogenetic factor in mental illness and the looming significance of childhood in individual development. But in ignoring the radical differences among these three figures, one loses significant pieces of truth." D. M. Kaplan

N Y Times Bk R p28 J1 21 '68 500w

ROSENBAUM, ELISABETH, jt. auth. Roman and early Byzantine portrait sculpture in Asia minor. See Inan, J.

ROSENBAUM, ROBERT A., ed. Best book of true aviation stories; II, by Kiyoaki Komoda. 284p $3.95; lib bdg $4.70 Doubleday

629.13 Aeronautics—History—Juvenile literature 67-15372

"Here are seventeen true stories of aviation told in their own words by the men who lived them. . . . The book also includes selections dealing with such other aspects of aviation as early mail flights, polar flights, endurance tests, air racing, World War II air combat, and test piloting." (Publisher's note) "Grade nine and up." (Library J)

"The anthology of great airmen-authors brings together excerpts from their memorable lives in the company of eagles. Chronologically the inclusions move from the gallant airborne conflicts of World War I to the American astronauts' first orbital trip. Purposefully they move from flights dedicated to combat and exploration, to flights devoted to transportation and racing, to endurance trials and testing, to search and rescue. . . . The acknowledged aviation buff may have flown these skies; but for the novice these moments aloft provide a take-off to the full-length books of Bach, Gann, Lindbergh, and Stiles." Jane Manthorne
Horn Bk 44:208 Ap '68 190w [YA]

"[These] excerpts from famous fliers' autobiographies will appeal chiefly to boys. Aeronauts and astronauts record their incredible experiences in all kinds of aircraft all over the world. The courage, faith, and humor of the fliers in the face of loneliness, danger, and death are vivid in these action-filled first-person accounts. The realistic pictorial sketches are a definite asset, but the inclusion of maps and a glossary would have been helpful." F. T. Latell

Library J 93:888 F 15 '68 90w

ROSENBERG, CHARLES E. The trial of the assassin Guiteau; psychiatry and law in the gilded age. 289p pl $5.95 Univ. of Chicago press

343 Guiteau, Charles Julius. Medical jurisprudence. Insanity 68-16713

The details of the court trial of President Garfield's assassin are set forth here by the "associate professor of history at the University of Pennsylvania. The only possible defense was . . . insanity, specifically the application of the M'Naghten rule, which held that 'a defendant was to be considered responsible if he was aware of the nature and consequences of his act and knew it to be forbidden by law.'" (Sat R) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"[Rosenberg] has written more than a simple historical account of the tragedy. His real subject is the nature of madness and the faces it wears for the law, for medicine and for society. His book has something to say to all of us. . . . After 86 years, in an era of violence and madness, the trial of Guiteau still raises tangled questions—of crime, punishment, delusion and responsibility. . . . This small volume is full of . . . implied paradoxes. It is neither lively in prose nor emphatic in its opinions. But in connecting the poles of medical and social thought in history, it generates some powerful speculative currents." B. A. Weisberger

Book World p3 J1 14 '68 700w

Reviewed by H. F. Graff

N Y Times Bk R p46 S 8 '68 550w

"Professor Rosenberg examines the testimony in detail without resorting to lengthy citations. His findings will not be disclosed here, but for what it is worth this reviewer a non-psychiatrist agrees with them. . . . [The 'Note on Sources'] should by no means be skipped. The contemporary illustrations are thoroughly representative of the last days of the woodcut as a journalistic must." J. R. Winterich

Sat R 51:30 Je 29 '68 270w

"The trial offered a public forum for two opposing views within medicine concerning the nature of mental illness and the responsibility of a person for his actions. . . . Each of the several experts called was not only a principal in a drama but, as it turned out, unpredictably individual in his views in one way or another. The exploration of these views permits Rosenberg to show vividly what the expert opinions meant in practice. Whatever one's occasional quibble with the author, the book is both sound history—in unusual depth—and good theater. The story is a true one, and the issues are still very much alive." J. C. Burnham
Science 161:453 Ag 2 '68 750w

TLS p1231 O 31 '68 1050w

Va Q R 44:clxviii autumn '68 110w

ROSENBERG, ELLIOT, jt. auth. A stripe of Tammany's tiger. See Eisenstein, L.

ROSENBERG, JAKOB. On quality in art; criteria of excellence, past and present. (Bollingen ser. v35; U.S. Nat gallery of art. The A. W. Mellon lectures in fine arts, 1964) 264p il col il $10 Princeton univ. press

701 Art criticism. Drawings 67-22342

Based on the 1964 A. W. Mellon Lectures in the Fine Arts, this book is divided "into two halves, the first a study of quality judgments in the past, the second a comparative analysis of similar works of art. For the first [the author] chooses one critic from each century, sixteenth to twentieth [and] quotes extensively from his writings. . . . To establish criteria for quality judgments today, Mr. Rosenberg selects pairs of drawings of similar technique, subject, and date, one by an acknowledged master, the other by a pupil or contemporary follower. He chooses examples from the fifteenth to the twentieth centuries and analyzes each, pointing out those characteristics which make the work of the master superior to that of the pupil." (Yale R) Index.

Reviewed by D. M. Davis

Am Scholar 38:166 winter '68 500w

"[The author] freely admits the inability of critics to approach absolute standards and yet the criteria which he has evolved [do] not permit him to find much quality in contemporary art; this leads the reviewer to believe that his standards may be more rigid than they seem. The jacket blurb says that Mr. Rosenberg describes criteria that 'remain valid throughout the centuries in spite of differences of period and style,' but this reviewer cannot accept such a sweeping endorsement; this is a good book about one man's criteria for quality in drawing, but there it ends." R. A. Beale
Library J 93:1468 Ap 1 '68 150w

"The type of problem exemplified in this book: whether a given drawing is by the hand of van Gogh or by that of a forger . . . raises the question of 'quality' in a severely practical way. . . . In reading [Rosenberg] we learn how a sensitive and experienced connoisseur argues cases of this kind; no teacher of art history will neglect this lucid demonstration. . . . Professor Rosenberg is confident that in his attempts to show up the difference between the excellent and the mediocre he will gradually arrive at a set of criteria of more general validity. Modestly not staking his claims too high, he has phrased his descriptions in an impressionistic language from which he yet hopes to extract a series of uniform concepts of excellence. . . . Not surprisingly, perhaps, he is most convincing where he is least theoretical." E. M. Gombrich
N Y Rev of Books 10:5 F 1 '68 2900w
TLS p650 Je 20 '68 900w
Va Q R 44:lxxx spring '68 130w

"Like the lectures on which it is based, this book is intended for the intelligent, educated layman who wants help in answering the perennial question: How does one judge a work of art? Limiting himself to drawings (because they reproduce well) Mr. Rosenberg establishes helpful criteria for judgment which provide at least part of the answer. . . . [His] language is clear and untechnical, the reproductions are superb, but the reproductions [being compared] are not always opposite each other, and the relevant text is often on another page. But with patience, the thoughtful reader can follow the analysis of line, form, space, composition, and design in each of the examples given and can grasp the variations among artists and periods. He cannot help but be rewarded by a sharpening of his eye and a deepened capacity for judgment, at least in the field of drawing and prints. Shortest and weakest is Mr. Rosenberg's chapter on 'Master Drawings and Prints of the Twentieth Century.'"
Yale R 57:XXX Mr '68 500w

ROSENBERG, JESSIE. Sudina. 236p $4.95
Dutton

67-20532

The author, in this first novel, "depicts a young Southern girl's battle with the private demons that have brought her, one summer, to a small sanitarium and a kindly psychiatrist. Age 13 as the novel opens (although she seems younger), Sudina Howell is overwhelmed with guilt over the death of her mother a year earlier. The author alternates between Sudina's past and present, as Dr. Bridges, the aptly named therapist, tries to see beyond his patient's immediate symptoms." (N Y Times Bk R)

"[Sudina's] conflict determines the structural technique of the novel: a series of skillfully managed flashbacks which alternate with the present. The technique is well chosen, for it provides the book with a constant, anticipated source of fresh suspense. Sudina feels responsible for the deaths of her mother and father; the flashbacks show us how her guilt developed. . . . Of the various characters in the novel, Sudina is easily the most interesting. The other characters are not drawn fully enough to absorb the reader. At times they are engaging, the doctor, for example, or the handyman; but their promise fades as the book progresses. What remains with the reader is the impression that he has experienced the heart-warming struggle of a lively, interesting girl . . . as she tries to maintain her balance in a precarious world." Peter Corodimas

Best Sell 27:231 S 15 '67 330w

"This beautifully written novel is a distinct pleasure to read; it never loses its charm and humor, despite its grim encounters with death and mental instability. Miss Rosenberg's evocation of a troubled child's world is excellent; the reader shares in Sudie's formation of simple, direct friendships; her complex relationship with her grandmother; her sense of guilt and evil; and her bleak isolation from self, family, and the real world. The reader feels cheated, however, when he is excluded from Sudie's first reaffirmation of herself; the novel loses some dramatic impact when Sudie's 'regeneration' is merely reported and thus leaves the reader poorly prepared for the climax. . . . This book should be considered only by libraries with large fiction budgets." Elizabeth Nelson
Library J 92:2607 J1 '67 130w

Reviewed by Carol Tefft
Library J 92:3871 O 15 '67 110w [YA]

Reviewed by Martin Levin
N Y Times Bk R p14 Ag 1 '67 260w

ROSENBLUM, ROBERT. Transformations in late eighteenth century art. 203p 215il $10
Princeton univ. press

709.03 Art—History. Classicism (Art)

66-21841

This study "is conceived as a set of four related essays. Part I reviews the problem of defining Neoclassicism. Part II discusses the widespread interest in moral paradigm to be observed throughout the movement. . . . The historicism inherent in the figurative arts also had meaning for the architecture of the period. Those problems of form and symbol are treated in Part III. The concluding discussion 'Toward a Tabula Rasa,' considers the search for redefinition that motivated the movement." (Choice) Index.

"With a few exceptions, contributions of Neoclassical artists have long been unduly neglected. This informative and well written study is more than a gesture of redress. . . . [The] look into Neoclassical iconography is especially rewarding. . . . Rosenblum proposes that by 1800 a purism had evolved that long anticipated the challenges of later, 19th-century movements to the artistic concepts of the Baroque tradition. In this he sees a more direct link between Neoclassic and 'modern' points of view than has generally been recognized. Not everyone will be persuaded by all his arguments or conclusions; but they do call for serious reflection on the part of any student of the period. . . . Highly recommended."

Choice 4:1372 F '68 180w

"Exceptional in the acuity of its perceptions and the lucidity of its style, Rosenblum's volume of essays is a signal contribution to the understanding and enjoyment of late eighteenth-century art. The complexity and the fecundity of this epoch of transformation in the styles and aims of the visual arts are made clear without reductive simplification, are appreciated without pejorative condescension. The illustrations, moreover, are numerous, skillfully coordinated with the text—and comprise a host of works not accessible elsewhere." W. J. Hipple

J Aesthetics 26:560 summer '68 1100w

Reviewed by Francis Haskell

N Y Rev of Books 11:7 J1 11 '68 550w

"It is a pity that in many places [in his] new, suggestive and erudite book [Rosenblum] expresses himself in Americanese. . . . At the end of this immensely stimulating book we seem to be left with tabula rasa as the central attitude of the art about 1800, an interpretation which cannot be fully accepted. . . . If Professor Rosenblum never succeeds in pulling together all the strands of which he is so fully aware and in making us see the manifestations of the arts about 1800 or between 1760 and 1830 as belonging to one style, however generalized in its characteristics, this may be due to personal propensity or else to a surfeit of knowledge. The bibliographical references in his footnotes are prodigious. This reviewer would challenge any fellow student of the period not to have found plenty of articles registered and plenty of works illustrated which were new to him. As matériau pour servir the book is superb. A synthesis it is not."

TLS p1100 N 23 '67 750w

ROSENFELD, ANDRÉE, jt. auth. Palaeolithic cave art. See Ucko, P. J.

ROSENFELD, SAM. The story of coins; il. by James E. Barry; checked for accuracy by Henry Grunthal. 126p $3.95; lib bdg $3.79
Harvey house

737.4 Coins—Juvenile literature 67-16903

"An introduction to the hobby of coin collecting with an explanation of the historical development of the ancient systems of exchange which led to the earliest coins, as well as . . . advice on their care and collection, their classification, cleaning, display, storage, and value. A chapter on how money is coined includes both past and present methods with step-by-step illustrations. [Glossary. Bibliography. Photo index of coins and odd money and general index.] Grades four to six." (Library J)

ROSENFELD, SAM—Continued

"[This] is one of those rare books that Dad can buy for his youngsters and find equal enjoyment for himself. It . . . includes some of the more unusual moneys used through the ages—elephant-tail bristles, woodpecker scalps, tea, soap, fishhooks, and dog's teeth." R. C. Bergenheim

Christian Science Monitor pB7 (children's issue) My 2 '68 60w

"Especially helpful for new collectors will be the list of mint marks and their location on 17 of the most common United States coins. . . . A thorough and authoritative survey, this will be a useful addition to the literature on an increasingly popular subject." Jeroline Nerney

Library J 93:2116 My 15 '68 120w

ROSENFELD, SEMYON. The first song; tr. and ed. by Miriam Morton. 253p $3.95 Doubleday

68-22472

This "novel is set in pre-Revolutionary Odessa. . . . The hero, Kolya, longs to be a musician but is forced to leave school and seek work because his father is unemployed. His jobs take him about the city, giving him the opportunity to observe the misery of the people, their growing unrest and the restrictive measures of the Czar's government. Inevitably, Kolya is drawn into some of the revolutionary activity. His story ends with his departure from Odessa, where he is wanted by the police for distributing subversive literature. [Originally published in Leningrad in 1959. Glossary.] Grades seven to ten." (Library J)

Reviewed by D. B. Whitman.

Book World p30 (children's issue) N 3 '68 150w

"[This] novel speaks with an authentic Russian voice. . . . In reading [it] we live and feel as its hero did. An old, still passion of compassion lies behind the book, an urchin insouciance, a fierce frustrated boyhood yearning for music-making. Every child born to the arts and temporarily kept from them may find himself shadowed forth here. . . . The book is unconventional in style and subject; but truth walks through it whistling or in tears." N. M.

Christian Science Monitor pB10 N 7 '68 190w

"A nonpolemical treatment which should be a good social studies supplement. . . . Although plotting is slight and characterization—except for Kolya himself—little more than suggested, many of the book's incidents are told with all the vividness and authority of good eyewitness history." Elva Harmon

Library J 93:4423 N 15 '68 140w

"A great deal of Russian teen-age fiction tends to be heavily dosed with a kind of Socialist Realism, and [this book] is no exception. . . . The story itself is of small importance. It presents the struggle of a penniless lad to become a professional cellist—and is superseded by the greater struggle of the Revolution. The characters are pretty much cardboard—but Odessa's arrogant affluence and abject poverty are vividly evoked. Some of the translator's Russianisms, however, are hard to take. 'Floating bacon,' of course, is plavuchiy mayak ('lightship' or 'lighted buoy'). But when Chekhov is made to 'gush'—what on earth do you suppose that verb could have been?" Guy Daniels

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p18 N 3 '68 170w [YA]

ROSENFELD, CLAIRE. Paradise of snakes; an archetypal analysis of Conrad's political novels. 187p $6.50 Univ. of Chicago press

823 Conrad, Joseph 67-25522

"The title of this book is taken from Nostromo [BRD 1905] and describes the fictional country Costaguana. Conrad's . . . 'paradise of snakes'. . . . [In this] analysis of Nostromo, The Secret Agent, [BRD 1907] and Under Western Eyes, Claire Rosenfield attempts to show how Joseph Conrad's use of traditional motifs intensifies the irony of his particular vision. The book opens with an . . . essay on the nature of myth. . . . [The study argues] that Conrad's nightmare vision of the phenomenal world is not anchored to a particular moment in history. Rather, within his novels clusters of traditional motifs function to provide the isolated, fragmentary lives with some value." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"The virtue of Claire Rosenfield's study is that she attempts to see Conrad whole, to show how his work 'is related to the rest of literature and the culture in which it participates.' But before we are far into Paradise of Snakes, we discover that the critic is more interested in poetry than politics, more concerned with images than ideas. . . . Three political novels that Conrad labored to make credible as historical fact . . . are shown to be timeless fictions that wear the disguises of history. . . . With [The Secret Agent] Miss Rosenfield is at her best. Irony is again shown to be the author's chief device. . . . Miss Rosenfield's analysis of archetypes is singularly appropriate to a novel that seems preoccupied with the irrational, what Conrad called 'perverse unreasoning'. . . . This [is a] very perceptive and illuminating study." Edward Kessler

Am Scholar 37:696 autumn '68 750w

"[Miss Rosenfield's discussion of the three novels] is a remorseless reinterpretation of them in terms of the theories of Jung, Rank, Campbell, et alia. Nothing is easier. You have only to call the central character 'the hero', any journeys he makes 'quests', any water 'the symbol of rebirth', any awakening from sleep 'a rebirth', any physical injury 'a symbolic sparagmos', and the job is done. The most significant effect of this reinterpretation is to devalue what Conrad was writing about."

TLS p335 Ap 4 '68 330w

ROSENFELD, JOHN. Japanese arts of the Heian period, 794-1185. 135p 74il 6col il $9 Asia soc; for sale by N.Y. graphic

709.52 Art, Japanese 67-22187

This is a catalog of an exhibition held during late 1967 and early 1968 "at the Asia House Gallery and the Fogg Museum. Sculpture, painting, metalwork, illustrations, calligraphy, and ceramics were included." (Choice) Bibliography.

"Rosenfield (Harvard) selected the pieces from Japanese 'national treasures' and from American museums and private collections. Seventy plates of the exhibition, of good quality and including some fine color reproductions, serve to illustrate the author's statement that 'we cannot detect a single unifying spirit during the Heian period.' Extensive and excellent historical, religious, social, and aesthetic commentary make this book much more than the usual catalog. Recommended with enthusiasm for scholar and general reader."

Choice 5:617 Jl '68 100w

Reviewed by Paul von Khrum

Library J 93:1468 Ap 1 '68 70w

ROSENKRANTZ, LINDA. Talk. 223p $4.95 Putnam

68-17002

This book is made up of a series of tape recorded conversations arranged as fiction. There are "three characters, all about 30 and all spending the summer together at the beach, each taking a hiatus from his analyst. Marsha is a writer, Emily is an actress, and Vincent is an artist. . . . They talk about their hangups: sex, art, drugs." (Library J)

"Talk is a valid, highly readable product, made up of the funniest and surely the most authentic hip dialogue yet to come out of the 1960s. . . . It is [the] all-out, no-holds-barred honesty, in the absence of a story line, that provides the book's tension. . . . The rawest of materials is hashed over in detail, but with such clinical openness and enthusiasm that one is far more often delighted and stimulated than embarrassed or shocked. . . . The really important thing . . . [is] an urgent questing after the reality of experience. . . . That the terrain is a clutter of art and nonsense, sex and drugs, sunny beaches and self-analysis, does not render it less real or less treacherous." J. L. Herlihy

Book World p5 Je 2 '68 550w

Reviewed by R. F. Cayton

Library J 93:2022 My 15 '68 200w

"[This book], according to your taste, is either totally fascinating, funny, boring, annoying, or pathetic, but no combination of these. . . . The trouble is that [the characters] are so dedicated to the frank and open expression of their feelings—mostly about sex and their relationships to one another—that they don't seem to have very many. The possibilities of the genre, however, seem endless." Sara Blackburn

Nation 207:59 J1 22 '68 100w

Reviewed by Richard Gilman

New Repub 159:30 Ag 17 '68 470w

"'Talk' needs actors badly—for even skin-thin characterization has been omitted. . . . It's difficult to catch a particular flavor from any of [the characters], since they sound flaccidly alike even while seeking their 'identities.' . . . The themes—symbiosis, role-playing, games of humiliation, plus contemporary fatigue—could be engrossing. But the unpassionate book that filters them has the repetitive whine of a reducing-belt. . . . The dialogue wheels swiftly from recipes for clam sauce to seizures of sexual distress; meanwhile, the choice of a lover is almost equivalent to the selection of weekend underwear. . . . The moral of 'Talk' is that insensitivity can be even more boring than a catalogue of throbbing little sensations. . . . Perhaps this kind of novel has a function as canapé sociology—but not as fiction." Nora Sayre

N Y Times Bk R p50 N 3 '68 650w

ROSENTHAL, ALBERT H. The social programs of Sweden; a search for security in a free society. 193p $6 Univ. of Minn. press

368.4 Insurance, Social. Sweden—Social policy 67-27098

"The author traces the development of the Swedish programs and provides . . . descriptions of the social security, health insurance, public health, and welfare programs, with case examples. He . . . considers the effects of the Swedish programs and provides . . . descriptions is based on . . . research done in Sweden." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by O. W. Anderson

Am J Pub Health 58:1566 Ag '68 500w

Reviewed by A. J. Stokke

Am Pol Sci R 62:1005 S '68 750w

"Professor Rosenthal has elected to lay out in a cold and dreary manner the legislative blueprints and the numerical elements of diverse kinds of welfare programs in Sweden. There is no sense of the controversy and the ideological debates and implications of Sweden's official commitment to things such as free hospitalization, maternity benefits, and local control over welfare. Not only is the present volume hardgoing and tedious . . . but it also falls short of its goal in a concluding attempt to extract from Swedish experience those lessons which might have relevance for the United States. At best, the analysis here is cursory and one-sided." Gilbert Geis

Ann Am Acad 378:163 J1 '68 550w

"A valuable resource for students studying income security and related topics. While this is not an exhaustive treatment of Swedish programs, it does present an excellent introduction and summary. The material is handled in an interesting manner and provides good stimulus to further study. The bibliography is excellent. . . . The index is complete and thorough."

Choice 5:835 S '68 130w

"[A] professor of political science at the University of New Mexico, and a former regional director of the U.S. Department of Health, Education, and Welfare . . . provides readers with a solidly grounded reference work that gives a clear understanding of the operations and procedures of the system. Mr. Rosenthal omits no agency . . . [and] covers administration, the political philosophy, local government and management of these programs, public participation and allied subjects. This book is complete in its analysis, encyclopedic in its information, and worth studying for facts about Sweden." R. E. Lindgren

Library J 92:2933 S 1 '67 130w

"Among [this book's] assets is a foreword by Marquis Childs, author of the classic account Sweden: The Middle Way [BRD 1936]. . . .

Childs stresses that the exaggerated accounts of Swedish alcoholism, sexuality, and suicide have led Americans 'to ignore the real contribution that Sweden has made in a half dozen fields, and particularly in the fields of social security and public health.' . . . [Rosenthal's] purpose is comparative to all and specific to Americans: 'This book was undertaken on the premise that a description of the major Swedish social programs would be of value to Americans and others seeking to improve the social programs in their own countries.' The book is exemplary in its coverage. . . . It even includes a chapter which should grip every American reader concerned with the search for security in a free society, entitled 'Program comparisons: Sweden and the United States.' . . . [It is] well written: . . . the exciting message [it] conveys is that Sweden does have something to teach Americans as well as other developed nations." Daniel Lerner

Science 160:648 My 10 '68 600w

ROSENTHAL, HAROLD. Playing pro football to win. See Unitas, J.

ROSENTHAL, IRVING. Sheep; "the poet! the crooked! the extra-fingered!" 304p $5.95 Grove

67-20342

This book is "a self-heard confession in which the narrator, changing from sensitive boy to homosexual old lecher with skin disease to young poet to narcotized philosopher, forgives himself everything. The only continuous line of action concerns . . . homosexual acts and . . . [drug] consumption. . . . Various writers move in and out of the text: Alexander Trocchi, Allen Ginsberg, Paul Bowles, When not stoned, in jail, or sexually occupied, a colony of vagabond artists may be creating in the background." (N Y Times Bk R)

Best Sell 27:477 Mr 15 '68 30w

"The whole account is held together by nervous enthusiasm, quick intelligence, and a good many drawings of insects, presumably by the author. Irving Rosenthal was editor of Chicago Review and Big Table and has a considerable underground reputation; Sheep does not live up to the reputation, but it is not negligible. For most college and public library collections." Dorothy Curley

Library J 93:1022 Mr 1 '68 170w

"No effect in this 'memoir' is uncalculated. The novel is a record of Sheep's thoughts as he grows up as an American writer and homosexual whose sense of perfection as an artist and whose pride as a lover make his life in both roles agonizingly difficult and lonely. It is also a brilliant lecture on style by a crotchety and demanding teacher who loves his eccentricities. Sheep is a novel to be delighted, moved or maddened by, and even readers who fall squarely into the last bag will have to agree that its cumulative effect is weirdly beautiful. So is the book's physical appearance; the design, by Dave Haselwood, and the paper and binding are rare phenomena indeed in the current American publishing scene." Sara Blackburn

Nation 206:315 Mr 4 '68 360w

Reviewed by Webster Schott

N Y Times Bk R p5 Ja 14 '68 300w

"[Rosenthal] is a devout homosexual, and sodomy is his passion. Yet through sheer repetition buggery becomes humdrum, even boring. . . . While the book is likely to be considered shocking by many, the tone is so open and honest that it would be unfair to overlook what Rosenthal . . . is actually writing about. His basic subject is unrequited love. . . . When Rosenthal focuses on the people in his life, he writes with brilliant economy. . . . Too frequently, however, [he] indulges his contempt for conventional literary forms in tedious demonstrations of his freedom to write whatever strikes his fancy. The accounts of his reactions to various drugs—marijuana, peyote, LSD—become monotonous. . . . This lack of discipline is, in fact, a crippling flaw. Moreover, anyone who attempts to write honestly about his own life must have a good idea of who he is; Rosenthal obviously thinks he does, but because he doesn't too much of the book is lost in murky self-pity and aimlessness. If Sheep were a work of fiction, it would be a masterpiece of irony. Unfortunately, the narrator is thoroughly real." H. S. Resnik

Sat R 51:29 F 3 '68 700w

ROSENTHAL, RAYMOND, ed. McLuhan: pro & con; ed. and with an introd. by Raymond Rosenthal. 308p $5.95 Funk

001.5 McLuhan, Herbert Marshall 68-21725

A collection of articles, most of which were originally published in various journals, which discuss the work of Marshall McLuhan, author of The Medium is the Massage (BRD 1967), Understanding Media (BRD 1964) and other books.

"Although somewhat similar in basic format and in contributors to Gerald Stearn's recent symposium, McLuhan: Hot & Cold [BRD 1967], this book should still be worth reading by students of modern communications media. The . . . contributions range in length from a few pages to long chapters: the contributors are American, Canadian, British, French, and Italian; the judgments, mainly bitterly critical, are extraordinary in their vehemence and variety. To be neutral or unrhethorical about the statement that 'the medium is the message' is an explanation of all the world's ills today is clearly difficult, if not impossible. The truly illuminating work on McLuhan remains to be written, but this book is worth adding to any sociological collection, especially if Stearn's book is not already there." E. M. Oboler

Library J 93:2498 Je 15 '68 120w

Reviewed by D. W. Harding

N Y Rev of Books 11:15 Ja 2 '69 1300w

"It is most satisfying to report that of the two dozen contributions . . . the majority (and these include the best) are more or less con; for it suggests that the days of McLuhanacy are numbered, and that perspective, at least in the embattled community of bookmen, is being restored. . . . Neil Compton's intellectual biography of McLuhan will be particularly welcomed by those still wondering where this enfant terrible of modernism came from. . . . In this volume the genius has to look after himself, for none of the attempts to identify him are very distinguished. . . . McLuhan the charlatan . . . is relentlessly pummeled in several essays, the best of which to my mind are by . . . those critics (notably Roszak, Compton, Ricks, and Simon) who urgently insist on McLuhan's criminal negligence of the radical gap between object and image, reality and fantasy." Dudley Young

N Y Times Bk R p3 S 8 '68 1250w

Reviewed by P. D. Zimmerman

Newsweek 72:102 S 23 '68 300w

ROSENTHAL, ROBERT. Pygmalion in the classroom; teacher expectation and pupils' intellectual development [by] Robert Rosenthal [and] Lenore Jacobson. 240p $4.95; pa $3.95 Holt

372.1 Mental tests. Success 68-19667

This book describes an experiment conducted at a South San Francisco school with pupils from kindergarten through the fifth grade. It "Focuses on self-fulfilling prophecy and its effect on child learning. Hypothesizing that children progress in direct relationship with teachers' assumptions that they can and will do so, the authors present supportive anecdotal and statistical research from daily life, medicine, and the behavioral sciences." (Sat R) Bibliography. Indexes of names and subjects.

"Implications . . . regarding teacher reaction to the disadvantaged, and suggestions for further research are discussed. Though of special interest to educators and psychologists, this book is recommended generally for public, and academic libraries." H. O. Marcy

Library J 93:4291 N 15 '68 140w

"The study is ingenious and the results obtained highly significant. . . . [However] there is one aspect of Rosenthal and Jacobson's work which they themselves didn't explore: the effect of Rosenthal's Harvard credentials and the false credentials of the test upon the teachers' expectations. The teachers were fooled into believing that the test of 'infected acquisition' was actually measuring something. Presumably they were persuaded by the weight of authority . . . that a simple paper and pencil test could tell them more about crucial characteristics of their pupils than they were able to perceive in their daily contacts with the children. . . . The results of Rosenthal's work are, of course, gratifying. They confirm what many critics of the schools have been saying. Yet an approach which is itself so totalitarian makes one question the value of acquiring knowledge by treating people as objects of an experiment." Herbert Kohl

N Y Rev of Books 11:30 S 12 '68 1500w

"First-rate tables, appendix references . . . help bolster the major speculation—that teacher who expects pupil improvement gets it. This is a college-level book, scholarly without being stuffy." John Calam

Sat R 51:56 J1 20 '68 90w

ROSKE, RALPH J. Everyman's Eden; a history of California. 624p pl maps $12.50 Macmillan (N Y)

979.4 California—History 68-23642

The chairman of the division of social sciences, Humboldt State College "traces the geography, history, and mystique of the Golden State and analyzes the . . . changes that have overtaken it since the advent of the first settlers. . . . [He] explores the present political and social climate of the state, with its thrusting population." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"[This is a] definitive single-volume history of the Golden State. . . . [The author] traces the history of California through the periods of Spanish and Mexican influence down to, and including, the exceptionally important years of the 1950's and 1960's. . . . This book is recommended for public and academic library collections." H. R. Downey

Library J 93:2653 J1 '68 190w

"One more history of California. . . . Perhaps this book fulfills a need but its complete lack of passion or point of view, its routine assumptions based on the expansionist ideology . . . keep it from rising above the college textbook level. Maybe that is all it was meant to be; I advise students to dodge this course if they can." Edward Abbey

N Y Times Bk R p38 O 27 '68 80w

ROSKOLENKO, HARRY. The terrorized. 230p $5.95 Prentice-Hall

B or 92 67-23506

"The subject of this autobiography is a sometime poet, book reviewer, writer of magazine articles, journalist, Marxist, socialist, and political theorist. The son of Russian-Jewish parents who migrated to New York to escape the pogroms, he became, after World War II, dissatisfied with American life and tried to migrate to Australia in search of a better world. . . . Becoming dissatisfied with Australia, he traveled throughout the Far East writing articles about . . . the American occupation of Japan, and about China and Vietnam. Back in the United States, he married a Chinese-American girl, and they went to Paris to live for several years." (Library J)

Choice 5:960 O '68 90w

"In this book [the author] indulges in considerable literary name-dropping, but offers little of substance about the writers mentioned. His message is one of discontent and protests against the contemporary mass culture of gadgetry, superficiality and man's inhumanity as expressed in Hitler's Germany, Hiroshima, and Vietnam. His language may offend some readers. Not considered an essential purchase for libraries with limited budgets." S. L. Hopkinson

Library J 92:3412 O 1 '67 190w

"The most interesting thing about Roskolenko's autobiography is that it is historical. . . . When I Was Last on Cherry Street [BRD 1965] and its sequel, The Terrorized, form a chronicle which begins in the immigrant world of the Lower East Side of New York and moves several times around the world. . . . The rough intellectual, the Leftist battler, the Jewish questor in America, the avant gardist—all these . . . themes may be old property by now, but they are refurbished with verbal exuberance and humor. . . . [However the] sense of historical direction which was in Cherry Street is now gone, and where earlier the author had always been a provoking agent in his adventures, he now is acted upon and responds only as an observer." Jack Richardson

N Y Rev of Books 11:29 O 10 '68 850w

ROSS, ALAN S. C., ed. Arts v. science; a collection of essays. 158p $5 Barnes & Noble

370.1 Education—Curricula. Education—

Aims and objectives. Education—Great Britain

[68-72123]

A "collection of seven essays by leading educators and academics, who wish to discover the causes of the breach [separating the man of Arts from the man of Science] and possible educational means of closing it. Six of the contributors are British, so the discussion is conducted in terms of the British educational system." (Library J)

"That there must be some lack of understanding between [arts and the sciences] is inevitable, since no one can be a specialist in all fields, but that this should be accompanied by a contemptuous lack of interest is deplorable. Such, at least, is the opinion of T. R. Henn, writing the first in this collection. . . . Only one essay by R. G. Lunt, on specialization in high schools is irrelevant to the United States. The book is, on the whole, well written and well thought out, and makes a significant contribution." T. J. Pedley

Library J 93:2486 Je 15 '68 170w

"[Most of the authors] are professors at Birmingham or have recently worked there. P. J. Hilton is determined to show that mathematics is as much an arts subject as a science subject and that many of the so-called scientific attributes are applicable to any discipline which is engaged in thorough research and study. He makes heavy weather of this point, but he also gets in some shrewd hits at what he calls pseudo-science. D. V. Hubble points out that medicine is also a subject which unites many of the techniques shared both by the humanities and by the physical sciences. . . . [R. G. Lunt] argues in favour of specialization in the sixth form. . . . [Despite some errors, many of his] observations are extremely pertinent and raise profound questions of what the curriculum should be."

TLS p1066 N 9 '67 1200w

ROSS, EDWARD S. The ants; adapted from text by Edward S. Ross; phot. by Edward S. Ross; il. by Robert Borja. new ed 63p $3.95 Childrens press

595.7 Ants—Juvenile literature 67-20109

This book is adapted from the text of a Colorslide Nature and Science Program first published in 1961. Bibliography. Index. "Grades five to seven." (Library J)

"Although the colored photographic illustrations are very fine, the paucity of text accompanying each picture and the jumbled arrangement of chapter headings severely limit the book's usefulness. [D. E.] Shuttlesworth's Story of Ants [BRD 1965] and Ross Hutchins' The Ant Realm [BRD 1967] contain much more material arranged in a much more logical way. A. D. Schweibish

Library J 93:295 Ja 15 '68 80w

"Microphotographs, many of them in color, are the feature of [this book]. . . . Many filling an entire page, [they] are arranged under more than 30 headings covering, with their detailed texts, everything from 'Ant Anatomy,' 'A Queen Is Born' and 'The Young Brood' to 'Driver Ants on the March,' 'Leaf Sewing' and 'Slave Ant Raid.'" Paul Walker

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p57 N 5 '67 90w

ROSS, FRANK. Transportation of tomorrow, by Frank Ross, Jr; il. with drawings by the author and photographs. 160p $4.50; lib bdg $4.14 Lothrop

380.5 Transportation—Juvenile literature 68-14067

This book "introduces a world of electronically-controlled highways, moving sidewalks and super-express trains. [It] discusses the developments being made in travel on the land and sea and in the air, developments that include rapid transit systems run by a computer, and jet airliners that can carry 1,000 passengers. Many of the innovations . . . are still on the drawing boards, but some are planned for use in the near future." (Publisher's note) Index. "Grades seven to ten" (Library J)

Reviewed by Ethna Sheehan

America 119:657 D 21 '68 70w

Best Sell 28:114 Je 1 '68 70w

"Although this slim book tackles a giant subject, it is thorough, well-written, and has a reasonable number of drawings and photographs. No other book for this age group covers this variety of transportation forms, and Mr. Ross presents his report in a stimulating manner calculated to make his readers think about the many problems and concepts involved." Paul Sarnoff

Library J 93:[3326] S 15 '68 80w

ROSS, IRWIN. The loneliest campaign; the Truman victory of 1948. 304p il $6.95 New Am. lib.

329 Truman, Harry S. Presidents—U.S.—Election 68-18257

An account of the 1948 presidential campaign. The author, a journalist, describes the strategy, campaign tactics, political personalities and issues which, despite contrary predictions, resulted in victory for the Democratic party's candidate. Bibliography. Index.

"Ross has captured the flavor of 1948 politics and Truman's upset victory while weaving together a very readable, enjoyable, and informative narrative. He has researched widely, engaged the assistance of opinion survey specialists, and effectively employed the personal interview technique with many individuals active in the campaign. His judgments are stimulating even if not always acceptable. . . . Ross portrays the men of 1948, some of them still active, and tempts us to compare 1968 to 1948." G. C. Roberts

Best Sell 28:109 Je 1 '68 1000w

Reviewed by B. D. Moyers

Book World p5 Ap 14 '68 1250w

Choice 5:1034 O '68 70w

Reviewed by Marcus Cunliffe

Commentary 46:94 J1 '68 1550w

"[Following the 1948 election] Dewey fans and pollsters immediately, and political pundits since, asked themselves the rhetorical question 'What happened?' As . . . Ross, a well-known magazine writer, shows in this clear analysis, the answer, in retrospect, should have been more apparent in 1948. To Mr. Truman's advantage he had in Clark Clifford an extremely adroit and shrewd strategist whose campaign plan was followed almost to the letter. . . . Other assets that Mr. Truman exploited were: an underdog image; an ability to identify himself with the masses of farmers and middle classes who jostled his campaign train; his development of an extemporaneous speaking style to replace the monotonous drone; and above all, he managed to hold on to the power base of the New Deal." G. M. Gressley

Library J 93:1001 Mr 1 '68 250w

Reviewed by Cabell Phillips

N Y Times Bk R p7 Ag 18 '68 900w

"Ross has filled in the grand outlines with data and statements culled from private and public records and from interviews he had with many of the participants. . . . The result of all Ross's hard work is not a handbook for campaign managers in 1968. Times have significantly changed. Modern polls are much improved, television eliminates the need for tireless whistle-stop tours of the boondocks, and, most important, no candidate in 1968 is likely to suffer from an overdose of confidence. What the polls and everybody else can get from Ross is a genuine taste of how it was twenty years ago. . . . [The author] tells the story with a minimum of editorializing. . . . [His private leanings] obtrude on the reader only in the waspish sections on Henry Wallace. Ross's anti-Communist zeal is a relic of the times he writes about. . . . Perhaps only a writer himself so enmeshed in the mood of the past era could evoke those swiftly vanished times so well." R. A. Sokolov

Newsweek 71:104 Ap 15 '68 700w

ROSS, ISHBEL. Taste in America; an illustrated history of the evolution of architecture, furnishings, fashions, and customs of the American people. 343p $12.50 Crowell

917.3 U.S.—Civilization. U.S.—Social life and customs 67-23677

This book covers the period from 1630 to 1967. It includes facts about education, the arts, eating habits, merchandising and distribution, industry, sports, transportation, morals, etiquette, and status of women. Bibliography. Index.

"The author, with journalistic eye on the present, has produced a remarkable compilation of descriptive information on the history of American material culture, always skillfully spiced with the bizarre detail and the colorful anecdote. Some interesting but quite marginal attention is given in this altogether breathless account to the relation of the artifacts to social customs. Regrettably, the study lacks the analytical sensitivity to underlying cultural attitudes which alone could give some thematic focus to such widely disparate materials. . . . It is unique in its attempted purview and consequently of considerable value as a preliminary reference survey."

Choice 5:404 My '68 170w

ROSS, ISHBEL—Continued

Reviewed by Regina Minudri

Library J 92:4639 D 15 '67 40w [YA]

"[The author] hooks our attention with curious information about (and fresh arrangements of) things we thought we knew. By skillfully linking what was with what is (colonial jiggling and today's watusi), she startles the reader into awareness of things such as the telephone as a civilizing force. Readers not from New York or Boston may wonder if their region had no part in forming American taste; here is good intellectual exercise for them. The index is full of holes, the notes are repetitious waste, but the photographs are excellent, educative, and pertinent." S. C. Gross

Library J 93:74 Ja 1 '68 90w

ROSS, JEROME, jt. auth. God speed the night. See Davis, D. S.

ROSS, MARVIN C. The West of Alfred Jacob Miller (1837). See Miller, A. J.

ROSS, SAM. Hang-up; a novel. 222p $4.95 Coward-McCann

68-13243

"The area of 'hippies,' psychedelic drugs, the problems of young people are subjects of [this novel]. . . . Martha Carson, a 15-year-old, is brutally beaten and murdered. She had wandered, wide-eyed and entranced, into the land of the Big Beat, the drugs, the Flower People and death resulted. Her mother, a divorcee, is alarmed by her daughter's disappearance and seeks police aid. Detective Ben Riker, who has fallen in love with the mother, is assigned to the case." (Best Sell)

"We are given a tour of hippie-land, flowerland in California, and are made uncomfortably aware of the generation-gap which exists before the murder is finally solved. Informative and pertinent to our day and age."

Best Sell 27:446 F 15 '68 110w

"Read as straight psychological suspense, as the author must have intended, [this novel] is passable, but don't look for profundity. It is not aided by some pure soap-opera dialogue nor by a scene depicting the initial sexual experience of a young couple that is so contrived as to be laughable. . . . Lots of sex, and in the background the inevitable LSD and marijuana, although at no time do any of the central characters appear to be on either. Ross is at his best when describing the hippie scene as it appears on the surface, but more than superficial treatment is needed. Marginal, this book is not an essential purchase for even the largest collections." D. H. Cloudsley

Library J 92:4525 D 15 '67 210w

"When a wealthy young psychopath, with psychedelic leanings, becomes hooked on teenyboppers, the result can be a spectacularly evil ['hang-up' as in Ross's] latest, and probably best, novel. Nicely constructed blend of shock and sympathetic realism." Anthony Boucher

N Y Times Bk R p26 Ap 21 '68 70w

Reviewed by Sergeant Cuff

Sat R 51:43 Mr 30 '68 30w

ROSS, THOMAS B., jt. auth. The espionage establishment. See Wise, D.

ROSS, WALTER S. The last hero: Charles A. Lindbergh. 402p pl $7.95 Harper

B or 92 Lindbergh, Charles Augustus

67-28813

The author discusses Lindbergh's "formative years, education, air force training, barnstorming adventures, the New York to Paris flight, his passion for advancing aviation, the kidnapping episode, his research with Carrel and Goddard, controversial political activities, World War II participation and family life." (Library J) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"This well documented biography has the value of setting straight some of Lindbergh's activities following his self-imposed exile in Europe after the famous Hauptmann Case in 1935. . . . His boyhood in Minnesota . . . is dealt with in detail. . . . The account of the historic flight . . . is excitingly told, although many readers may prefer Lindbergh's own account in 'The Spirit of St. Louis' [BRD 1953]. But the aftermath of the flight may provide the reader with details he may have never known about. . . . [Mr. Ross] deals with [the kidnapping of Lindbergh's son] firmly from the standpoint of the family's personal tragedy and does not attempt to quibble with theories. . . . In the closing chapter, Lindbergh emerges as a pallid figure by comparison to his former days. . . . Mr. Ross's book has been faulted for its adulation of Lindbergh. . . . [But] this is an honest (albeit undistinguished) attempt at charting the hero's complicated career, and, as such, deserves to be read." T. L. Vince

Best Sell 27:463 Mr 1 '68 950w

Reviewed by Pamela Marsh

Christian Science Monitor p9 Mr 12 '68

700w

"It is difficult to prepare a biography when the uncooperative subject refuses interviews, access to his papers, quotations from copyrighted letters and speeches, and specifically states he prefers his biography not be written. Under these handicaps Walter Ross gives a lengthy and creditable mosaic of Lindbergh. . . . At the end we know more about Lindbergh's action-packed, useful, and enigmatic career, but not too much more about the basic man. . . . [Mr. Ross's] style is pedestrian and his presentation uninspiring. However, until an authorized version appears, this biography will undoubtedly be the recognized source." W. C. Kiessel

Library J 93:69 Ja 1 '68 180w

"Ross is no social historian. . . . Nevertheless, [he] has constructed a fair and thoughtful biography of a grossly misunderstood, pursued, idolized, and abused man. . . . One thing that impresses me about this book is that . . . Ross has immersed himself in Lindbergh's life, going to old records and recent books and articles, to memoirs by friends and acquaintances, and to people willing to be interviewed. . . . What he has learned is presented to us in that direct, old-fashioned way which allows the reader to comprehend a child's struggles, a man's achievements and failures, without being made to feel that any life is only an excuse for the elaboration of this or that 'larger' historical or psychological or economic theory." Robert Coles

New Repub 158:22 Mr 16 '68 3200w

Newsweek 71:90 F 26 '68 750w

ROSS, WILLIAM B., jt. auth. Politics battle plan. See Baus, H. M.

ROSSETT, BARNEY, ed. Evergreen review reader, 1957-1967. See Evergreen review reader

ROSSI, JEAN BAPTISTE. See Japrisot, S.

ROSSI, PETER H., ed. The new media and education; their impact on society; ed. by Peter H. Rossi and Bruce J. Biddle. (National opinion research center. Monographs in social research) 417p $8.95 Aldine pub.

371.3 Teaching—Aids and devices 66-19580

"This collection of essays discusses the present and possible effects on education and society of a third media revolution, the electronic revolution, which is now upon us." (Am J Soc)

"The chapters by Balanoff on electronic devices, by Robinson on simulation, and by Stolurow on programed instruction and teaching machines will be welcomed by those who feel uncomfortably hazy about the specifics and potentialities of these new developments. . . . Social scientists will want to examine the chapters which discuss the new media from the point of view of the economics and social organization of education. . . . This is a useful book but not an exciting one. The editors declare their aim to be 'reasoned and reasonable social science fiction.' But the reader should not therefore expect high adventure. The analyses are indeed reasoned, the predictions reasonable. But the collection includes no particularly brilliant or provocative papers. There is little diversity of style and pace, and, of course, no humor. This is a pity, for essays on such a subject could be not only sound social science but also fun to read." Nancy St. John

Am J Soc 73:255 S '67 600w

Reviewed by D. A. Goslin

Am Soc R 33:663 Ag '68 600w

"The unbelievable speed and confusion of the communications revolution is well exemplified by the fact that its transient demigod, Marshall McLuhan, is mentioned only once in this substantial book. . . . True, many of the points made by the writers not only are similar to McLuhan's, but are at times more cogently presented. Occasionally, indeed, as in the concluding chapter by Nelson Foote of the General Electric Company, the case for the new media is actually stated with considerable style. . . . Nevertheless, as is so often the case with polyglot and pioneering ventures, the New Media and Education leaves questions not only unanswered but not even asked. Most of these cluster at the philosophic level, for most of the fourteen authors are behavioral scientists who tend characteristically to take their own philosophies for granted. . . . More seriously still, the authors seldom examine critically their metapsychological assumptions about the nature of learning and teaching. With rare exceptions . . . they assume rather a highly traditional conception." Theodore Brameld

Ann Am Acad 374:222 N '67 600w

ROSTEN, LEO. The joys of Yiddish . . . 533p $10 McGraw

492.49 Yiddish language 68-29915

"A relaxed lexicon of Yiddish, Hebrew and Yingsh words often encountered in English, plus dozens that ought to be, with serendipitous excursions into Jewish humor, habits, holidays, history, religion, ceremonies, folklore, and cuisine; the whole . . . garnished with stories, anecdotes, epigrams, Talmudic quotations, folk sayings and jokes—from the days of the Bible to those of the beatnik." (Title page)

"The jokes, wisecracks, folklore, and historical oddments tucked in among the definitions would justify a stranger project than this Yiddish-English dictionary, which the world may not need quite as desperately as Mr. Rosten thinks. There is, incidentally, no provision for looking up the Yiddish equivalent of an English word, which suggests that linguistic instruction is not really what the author has in mind." Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 222:144 N '68 60w

Best Sell 28:361 D 1 '68 210w

"Yiddish aficionados will undoubtedly cry bravo. [This book] is most entertaining, obviously a labor of love. Alas, I felt it suffers some from an uneasy mixture of illuminating scholarship and broad humor, insight and treacle, Rosten's definitions being illustrated by jokes of uneven quality, jokes often undermined by an even funnier rhyming guide to Yiddish. . . . If some of Rosten's jokes land with a dull wet thud, if he is too schmaltzy on occasion, then it should be added that he has admirably succeeded in knitting painlessly erudite folk history, as well as informed comment on Jewish traditions and customs, into his lexicon." Mordecai Richler

Book World p6 N 3 '68 550w

Reviewed by Andrea Grant

Christian Science Monitor p13 D 14 '68 750w

"Rosten (who as Leonard Q. Ross wrote The Education of Hyman Kaplan [BRD 1937]) is a regular genius at definition, explication, and such funny stories you could kvell. It should only happen to your library to buy this; public and academic libraries will find it a real metsiah and mechiyah, a bargain and a pleasure." E. M. Oboler

Library J 93:3561 O 1 '68 100w

Reviewed by Irving Howe

N Y Times Bk R p29 D 15 '68 300w

New Yorker 44:248 N 30 '68 110w

"This is a joy of a book—witty, intelligent, scholarly, with a tone that is uniquely Rosten's and with an abundance of stories and anecdotes that serve to illustrate the subtle shades of meaning embedded in the words dealt with by the author. It deserves a wide audience, and will certainly have a permanent one; for it makes available to the reader a language that, in dying, is undergoing a strange and at least partial resurrection by transferring its tonalities into one of the major tongues of our time. But Leo Rosten's book is also resonant with implications, for its very existence tells us a great deal about the position of the Jew in American life today." Chaim Potok

Sat R 51:37 D 7 '68 550w

ROSZAK, THEODORE, ed. The dissenting academy. 304p $6.95 Pantheon bks.

378 Education, Higher

68-10254

"An attempt to assess the success with which the university is currently discharging its educational obligations to society and, more particularly, how effectively it is serving as an independent source of knowledge, value, and criticism. Mr. Roszak asked representatives of the standard disciplines in the social sciences and humanities to state the case for their areas." (Library J)

Reviewed by Dell Hymes

Bul Atomic Sci 24:29 N '68 6500w

Choice 5:1016 O '68 180w

Reviewed by George Kateb

Commentary 45:75 My '68 2900w

Reviewed by Jeffry Kaplow

Commonweal 88:78 Ap 5 '68 1100w

"Although a few of the contributors allow their disgust for the Vietnam war to distort their contributions, most present well-argued statements of the current ills in higher education. One point emerges clearly: American higher education today is severely and alarmingly constricted by the deep penetration of the federal government, especially the military, and by some industrial interests in our society. Recommended reading for all seriously concerned with higher education in the United States today." Jim Ranz

Library J 93:749 F 15 '68 150w

"The book's eleven essays are devoted to critiques of the way in which the major humanistic subjects are taught at American universities. Their cumulative indictment of the profession of scholarship, as it is now practiced, is a heavy and dispiriting one. . . . The essays on politically useful social sciences provide the greatest fund of horror stories. . . . Noam Chomsky, whose celebrated essay on 'The Responsibility of Intellectuals' is the last and best thing in the book, also wins the prize for the most hair-raising example of academic frightfulness. . . . I must confess that the cumulative effect of many (not all) of the essays was to arouse fears that disillusion with orthodox scholarly methods is driving some academics close to a dangerous irrationalism." Neil Compton

Nation 206:246 F 19 '68 650w

"A few of these [essays] criticizing the state of the humanities—including the social sciences—are very good. . . . T. Roszak's evocation of the spirit of the Enlightenment is an eloquent rebuke to the multiversity, and two other essays, one on economics by S. M. Rosen and the other on social science by R. Engler are informative documentations of some of the phenomena contributing to today's queasy academic atmosphere. Yet the essays seldom go beyond registering dissatisfaction. Part of the trouble is the book's design: by conceiving the problems of the university in terms of discreet disciplines, you make it less likely that any analysis of the university as a whole will emerge. . . . [And] few essays show any awareness of the vast social transformations universities have wrought." Joseph Featherstone

New Repub 158:29 My 18 '68 1700w

"The editor sums up the volume's double indictment of university practices as 'mindless collaboration on the one hand and irrelevant research on the other.' Both parts of this indictment are cogently, at times even brilliantly made. Both parts seem to me irrefutable, though each raises questions that the volume does not fully explore. The first charge, that of indiscriminate collaboration by the academy with the American military-industrial establishment, is well documented. . . . The second half of the indictment is no less valid than the first—and no less troublesome. The 11 essayists agree that all their disciplines are rife with what Roszak calls 'mindless specialization and irrelevant pedantry.' . . . The chief shortcoming of [the book is] . . . its inability to elucidate an alternate model." Martin Duberman

N Y Times Bk R p3 Mr 17 '68 2100w

"Many of the authors protest the fragmentation and abstracted empiricism of present-day social science in the United States. They argue that emphasis on system maintenance and on accommodation plays down or obscures moral issues and other basic sources of conflict. . . . The tone of most of the essays will endear the authors more to student activists than to scholars. Even when they deal with widely recognized faults of the academic community and the society, many of the utterances are so sullied over with diatribe as to court summary rejection. Roszak sees the multiversity as having come 'to resemble nothing so much as the highly refined all-purpose brothel' of [J.] Genet's The Balcony [BRD 1959]. . . . Despite the diatribe and the ideological commitment of many of the authors . . . they [do] pose questions that are too seldom faced up to." J. A. Clausen

ROSZAK, THEODORE—Continued

Science 160:1211 Je 14 '68 1300w

Time 91:69 Ap ■ '68 650w

ROTH, CECIL. Gleanings; essays in Jewish history, letters, and art; pub. for Bloch. 321p $7.95 Hermon press

914 Jews in Europe. Jews—History 67-27770

This is a collection of fifteen articles written by the Anglo-Jewish historian over a period of about forty years which were first published in the Jewish Quarterly Review and other periodicals. Most of the articles are concerned with Jewish history in a European context.

"This is not a book to be recommended as an introduction to Roth's work: its range is too limited and its material often too scrappy. We are given here little more than the shavings from the carpenter's bench, or, as the title puts it 'gleanings' from fields already harvested. And though I hate to end on a sour note, especially as this review is intended as a tribute to a great Jewish historian, I must say that as a piece of physical bookmaking it is shocking. Apparently each article has been reproduced photographically from the periodical in which it first appeared. . . . The publishers have not even bothered to straighten out some of the footnotes . . . [which refer] to the pagination of the periodical in which the essay first appeared." David Daiches

Commentary 45:93 Je '68 2000w

"[This volume] is easy to read except for some included Hebrew documents. It also contains material likely to be unfamiliar as yet to many students of religious history. In the last section of the book Mr. Roth discusses the Kennicott Bible, considered by some to be the finest illuminated Hebrew manuscript in existence. The 22 pages of black-and-white illustrations show the beauty of the Spanish codex." John Neufeld

Library J 92:4006 N 1 '67 200w

TLS p1203 O 24 '68 470w

ROTH, JULIUS A. Rehabilitation for the unwanted [by] Julius A. Roth [and] Elizabeth M. Eddy. 232p $7.50 Atherton

362.4 Physically handicapped—Rehabilitation 67-18275

"Two sociologists report on the fate of society's rejects in a large-scale physical rehabilitation hospital. From their . . . study of the patients, the rehabilitation team (doctors, physical therapists, and supporting professionals), and the institutional setting, [they] draw largely somber conclusions regarding the effectiveness of the existing rehabilitation projects, which in theory aim at preparing the disabled for an acceptable existence outside the hospital." (Publisher's note) Annotated bibliography.

"Roth and Eddy have opened up an interesting new perspective in rehabilitation medicine. Descriptive analysis of the assumptions and procedures of the institutional therapy team is well handled, . . . but one is left wondering about concepts, criteria, and objectives of the study. This research . . . appears vague, speculative, and poorly documented. Interview and observation schedules are only hinted at. Research design must be guessed from scattered fragments. Conclusions tend to be arbitrary. . . . Bibliography is sketchy and there is no index. The book's greatest value is to demonstrate wide-open opportunities for carefully planned research on the social psychology of rehabilitation. It will serve a small audience, chiefly in social work and occupational therapy."

Choice 5:1055 O '68 160w

"In a readable style in contrast to the somberness of the subject, the authors present a detailed study of 60 patients and the rehabilitation team at Farewell Hospital (a fictitious name suggested by a patient with a realistic point of view). The conclusion they draw is fairly grim: the program failed to alter the lives of the people who make Farewell Hospital their home. . . . This book will interest sociologists, administrators of long-term care facilities, and social workers." Marie Ponzio

Library J 93:766 F 15 '68 150w

ROTHBERG, ABRAHAM. The song of David Freed; a novel. 252p $4.95 Putnam

68-12110

"At the outset, the world of David Freed is a small one, limited emotionally by the love he holds for his Orthodox parents and spiritually by the faith he has in their righteous God. Physically it is bounded by the Jewish-Italian-Irish neighborhood in which he lives. It is through the Italians that he first realizes that his attitudes cannot be the parochial ones of right and wrong, Jew and Gentile, to which his parents cling. . . . [A] boy soprano, his voice is the symbol of his basic innocence, and fittingly enough, it begins to change at the same time when the values he believed unalterable begin to crumble." (Publisher's note). Parts of this novel appeared, in slightly different form, in the Antioch Review and the Pacific Spectator.

"[This] is a serious novel with an obscure message. . . . During the High Holy Days, David's career as a singer builds to his climax. Correspondingly the crisis comes in his disillusionment. He realizes the power and sweetness of his voice derives, to a significant degree, from the fervor of his belief. Those he is singing with, by their own admission, view their appearances as theatrical performances. . . . The power of faith should be clear to David. He has seen for himself that he possesses something that the non-believer has lost. But Rothberg comes to just the opposite conclusion. David's faith is dead. . . . In walls of despair he tears his voice to shreds so that it will never again peel forth in joy to a mocking universe. Whatever happened to positive thinking?" J. J. McAleer

Best Sell 27:404 Ja 15 '68 600w

Reviewed by S. L. Simon

Library J 93:97 Ja 1 '68 230w

Reviewed by Helen Jacob

Library J 93:894 F 15 '68 130w [YA]

"The title character in Mr. Rothberg's novel is a boy cantor in Brooklyn in the Depression. Writing from his own youthful experiences . . . [Rothberg] has composed a blue-and-rose tinted portrait of the period. . . . Yet [the] incidents have a contemporary echo. Italian girls do get seduced at 14 in our folklore. Jewish boys (who do not become business vultures) do sing or play the fiddle. Rothberg, through a scrim of nostalgia, imparts a certain style to such matters without going camp. . . . For many readers, wearied by the shredding of the Jewish ego in the hands of such ultrasophisticates as Bruce Friedman and Philip Roth, this novel will come as balm. . . . It sings (with the pure voice of the boy cantor) of a touching and trying time in Jewish life in America." Meyer Levin

N Y Times Bk R p41 Ja 14 '68 1000w

"The title of Abraham Rothberg's new novel has both literal and metaphorical significance. [The novel is] a tale of initiation—of transition from childhood into manhood. The 'golden' voice coarsens, and innocence gives way before the brutal impact of experience. . . . The novel is suffused with nostalgia—the attempt of a novelist to re-immersing himself in the springs of his beginnings. Perhaps David is sometimes too good to be always entirely believable; and in the book's changed emotional atmosphere, there is sometimes a tendency to melodrama. But in the main, this is a sweet, unabashedly sentimental, memory-washed 'song' of a boy's journey from green to blasted fields." Saul Maloff

Newsweek 71:100B F 12 '68 230w

ROTHBLATT, SHELDON. The revolution of the dons; Cambridge and society in Victorian England. 319p $7.50 Basic bks.

378.425 Cambridge, England. University. Education—Great Britain. Great Britain—Social conditions 68-18957

This book discusses "several Victorian educational themes: how Cambridge dons professionalized themselves; . . . how poverty, social class, and higher education were interrelated; . . . how social and educational values conflicted, as seen in the works of J. S. Mill, Matthew Arnold, Henry Sidgwick, and John Robert Seeley; and, how Cambridge related to the business community." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

Choice 5:1190 N '68 80w

"[Rothblatt] has given us a stimulating and very welcome book, if flawed in construction. The short first part, 'A Problem in Social Change,' dealing with closed scholarships, the grammar schools, educational costs and social mobility, is not articulated in any very useful or illuminating way with the much longer second part, 'The Problem Resolved.' But this does not compromise seriously the value of what is here offered to us. [This book] is far and away the best thing we have on the making of the Victorian Oxbridge idea. Especially valuable is the chapter on Seeley as the major public voice of the new dons."

Economist 226:52 Mr 9 '68 800w

Reviewed by A. J. P. Taylor

New Statesman 75:206 F 16 '68 950w

"[This] comes as a splendidly written and profusely documented volume on the reaction of college men to the social, intellectual, and industrial pressures of their times. . . . [It] is a timely book, dealing as it does with university social structure, academic freedom, student-teacher relationships, community of scholarship, and university response to change. Highly recommended." John Calam

Sat R 51:112 N 16 '68 80w

"[The author] is interesting on the financial troubles of the university, . . . on the battle so late as 1904-05 to retain compulsory Greek. . . . on the formation of the Cambridge Appointments Association in 1899. . . . Rothblatt makes some interesting points regarding the long-standing reluctance of businessmen to take on university graduates and the corresponding reluctance of graduates to enter business. . . . But his discussion of [the] vocational revolution is disappointingly chancy. . . . One would have liked too a better discussion of the liberating effect of the abolition of religious tests in the university in 1871. The importance of this in the process of nineteenth-century reform requires much more emphasis."

TLS p286 Mr 21 '68 1150w

ROTHENBERG, JEROME. Economic evaluation of urban renewal; conceptual foundation of benefit-cost analysis. (Nat. com. on gov. finance. Studies of gov. finance) 277p $6.75; pa $2.50 Brookings

309.2 Urban renewal

67-19190

In this study the professor of economics at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology "sets up a conceptual framework for evaluating the [federal urban renewal] program, with particular emphasis on residential redevelopment. . . . [He analyzes the] economic relations involved. . . . in order to place the consequences of the program in the context of benefit-cost analysis. Thus, the study represents both an economic analysis of the urban renewal process and a special formulation of the benefit-cost technique." (Publisher's note) Bibliographies. Index.

"[The author] confines attention primarily to one form of renewal, residential redevelopment. Although this limited focus captures significant generic aspects and has considerable analytic advantages, it results in a distorted impression of urban renewal as a whole. . . . There were several parts of the book I found particularly valuable. . . . I also admit to some major reservations. The precise audience to which this book is addressed is unclear. Treatment of institutional aspects is too brief—and in places inaccurate—making it an unsatisfactory introduction for the economist unfamiliar with renewal. Rothenberg admits that the theoretical approach may be of little use to day-to-day administrators. There is, however, a suggestion that 'it is intended to be relevant to the role of the broad policy maker.' But I wonder what a Congressman will make of an often impenetrable style. . . . This is a book worth selective reading for approaches to a conceptual framework, but it is not, in my opinion, a full economic evaluation of the complex dimensions of urban renewal." J. D. Heinberg

Am Econ R 58:1029 S '68 900w

Reviewed by D. J. Olson

Am Pol Sci R 62:993 S '68 800w

Reviewed by W. L. Baldwin

Ann Am Acad 337:218 My '68 600w

"Rothenberg has conducted a very thorough nonquantitative analysis of real effects and pseudo effects of urban renewal, and he has cast the real effects into such a form that a reasonably comprehensive benefit-cost analysis of an urban renewal project can now be carried out. Students of public finance, microeconomics, and public administration will find much of interest in this book. Rothenberg has shown in detail how economic theory is useful in appraising a particular public policy, although he has neither carried out the specific appraisal nor extended the theory. As an illustration of benefit-cost analysis or applied welfare economics, this study suggests potentialities and limitations of a technique which is used increasingly in conducting as well as evaluating public policy."

Choice 5:100 Mr '68 150w

"[Rothenberg] applies his analysis to five projects completed in the city of Chicago. His final contribution offers preliminary guidelines relevant to future federal policy in this field."

. . . This book, another in the notable Brookings Institution 'Studies of Government Finance Series,' will be an essential acquisition for serious collections in economics and public affairs." Paul Wasserman

Library J 92:4499 D 15 '67 180w

Va Q R 44:lxix spring '68 500w

ROTHKOPF, CAROL Z. Leo Tolstoy. (Immortals of literature) 146p $2.95 Watts, F.

B or 92 Tolstoy, Leo—Juvenile literature 68-10665

A biography covering "Tolstoy's long life, the development of his genius, and the many facets of his work. . . . A family tree [and] chronology [are included. Bibliography. Index.] Grades eight to twelve." (Library J)

"A well-written and well-documented biography. . . . [Tolstoy's] personal life, inner struggles, and complex character, are vividly portrayed. . . . Although the book is intended for readers somewhat younger than those who will turn to Tolstoy's masterpieces, it may sharpen their interests and make more meaningful the future study of his works. Since only one comparable book, The Count Who Wished He Were a Peasant by M. Philipson [BRD 1967] is available on this level, this new work should be a welcome addition to most libraries serving young people." Bernice Levine

Library J 93:1329 Mr 15 '68 130w

"[The author's reverence] makes her story of Tolstoy's life somewhat uncertain and strained when she is dealing with the more dubious aspects of his life and thought. She is defensive about Tolstoy's youthful self-indulgence and confusion, uncritical of his 'playing' at poverty in the center of a luxurious household, silent about the foolishness of some of his theories. Although there is much useful information here about Tolstoy, Russian life and history, exactly what makes him an immortal is not quite clear. The power of Tolstoy's novels is not communicated and the writer's life itself seems remote and puzzling." Richard Horchler

N Y Times ■■ R p30 My 12 '68 180w

ROTHSCHILD, PAULINE DE. The irrational journey. 118p $3.95 Harcourt

914.7 Russia—Description and travel

67-20320

A travel diary which describes a two-month visit to Russia.

Reviewed by K. T. Willis

Library J 92:4156 N 15 '67 90w

"Pauline de Rothschild and her husband recently spent a winter in Russia. This small book of impressions . . . is most welcome since it is very little concerned with politics and almost entirely concerned with Russia on a personal level. Because of this, many myths about Russia are corrected, many personalities emerge, and much good is found, especially in the fields of music and theater. Since Leningrad, that wonderful, Peterine city on the Neva, is caught exactly, one suspects that the rest of the book is equally evocative."

Va ■ R 44:cxx summer '68 90w

ROUCEK, JOSEPH S., ed. The teaching of history. 282p $10 Philosophical lib.

907 History—Study and teaching 67-11573

"The basic aim of this volume . . . is to survey the recent trends in history teaching in the United States and elsewhere, and to indicate the problems and possibilities involved in this area of national and international education. . . . By the 'teaching of history' is meant history for use rather than history for its own sake." (Publisher's note) Chapter bibliographies.

"[Sixteen essays] consider all levels of instruction in most areas of modern history: philosophies of history, non-Western (Russian, African, Asian, Middle East), American, the European survey, history of science, art history, history tests, civics. The stress is on the difficulties and/or prevailing misconceptions in teaching these fields. The variety of topics covered in brief essays, ranging from 5 to 20 pages, lends a tone of superficiality to the volume, . . . [which] appears to be aimed primarily at teachers of world history and social studies courses on the secondary level. . . . Libraries of teachers' colleges and high schools should consider acquisition of the volume, but there is no urgency for other college libraries to acquire this costly book."

ROUCEK, J. S.—Continued

Choice 4:1298 Ja '68 180w

"[These] interesting essays (some brilliantly written) by as many different specialists in their respective fields . . . cover ideas relative not only to content but also to methods or techniques of presentation. Suggestions are offered for the elementary school level on through Ph.D. programs. . . . Also included are topics as disparate as historical philosophies and the problems encountered in presenting scientific history. . . . This is an unusually good book of its type and should be required reading for anyone who teaches history." T. J. Cole

Library J 92:2563 J1 '67 180w

ROUD, RICHARD. Jean-Luc Godard. 176p il $4.95; pa $2.95 Doubleday

791.43 Moving pictures—Production and direction. Godard, Jean Luc 68-12994

This critical study is the first volume in the Cinema World series published in association with Sight and Sound and the Education department of the British Film Institute. The author, who was programme director of The National Film Theatre in London from 1959 to 1967 "describes Godard's main themes and principles, and illustrates them by reference to the whole range of his work, from his critical writing, the early shorts and sketches, his many features, to his most recent films." (Publisher's note) Filmography.

"Handsomely bound, richly illustrated, neatly printed, . . . [this] explorative investigation into the director's philosophies and techniques . . . should enrich and enlarge interested film audiences everywhere." J. J. Quinn

Best Sell 27:422 F 1 '68 100w

"[This] is a book so frilly, pretentious, ill-written and foolish that I can see no reason for taking up any . . . time with it. At best, one can laugh at it as at a C-grade Hollywood horror movie laying claims to metaphysical significance; if you light upon it at a bookstore, open it at random and get a few chuckles. And an idea of what, nowadays, passes for film criticism." John Simon

Book World p7 My 26 '68 470w

Christian Century 85:114 Ja 24 '68 50w

Reviewed by G. D. McDonald

Library J 93:1650 Ap 15 '68 100w

"Roud's devoted little monograph makes tremendous early play with the French philosophie tradition: 'Godard is not "the perfect Hegelian" but rather an artist who has been influenced, directly or indirectly, by Hegelian notions.' From here, we can go anywhere and Mr Roud does, at speed. The concept of contradictions as the source of all movement 'and indeed of all life' is pressed into the service of justifying Godard's wilful inconsistencies. Already, we are operating at the sort of frolicsome verbal level familiar to anyone who has hung around left-bank cafés." John Coleman

New Statesman 75:46 Ja 12 '68 80w

"[Roud] attempts what has rarely been attempted in British writing on the cinema, a level of discourse comparable with that one would expect in a book of literary criticism. The films are not taken as a special case, a sort of elementary form for which special allowances have to be made, but as complex expressions of ideas and a way of seeing things, and as the work above all of a major artist. . . . [The book] is a series of interlinked dissertations on such subjects as Godard's management of film narrative, the role of political ideas in his films, the romantically antiromantic use of America (and especially popular American cinema) as a refractor for Godard's view of France today. . . . Naturally, there is plenty of ground for argument in this book . . . but . . . it is hard to imagine one which could do its job better than Mr. Roud's."

TLS p16 Ja 4 '68 250w

Va Q R 44:lxixiv spring '68 60w

ROUNDS, GLEN. The boll weevil. See The boll weevil (folk song)

ROUSE, PARKE. Planters and pioneers; life in colonial Virginia; the story in pictures and text of the people who settled England's first successful colony from its planting in 1607 to the birth of the United States in 1789, by Parke Rouse, Jr. 216p maps $8.95 Hastings house

917.55 Virginia—Social life and customs. Virginia—History. U.S.—History—Colonial period 68-17650

"Mr. Rouse shows how [the] colonials built their houses and cooked their meals; how they attempted to make glass, and failed; grew the sweet tobacco from Trinidad, and succeeded. . . . He shows how the Anglicans, Presbyterians, Methodists and Baptists served their constituents; how the settled communities coped with the challenge of the Quakers. [There are also sections on the Negroes, the arts, outdoor life and education.]" (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"[This beautifully produced volume describes] . . . various aspects of life in late 17th-century Virginia—'Houses, Roads, Ferries, and Inns'; 'Food, Drink, Merriment,' etc. Well written and informative but aimed strictly at popular and juvenile audiences. Most suited for public and school libraries with pre-high school level patrons (and possibly for some arts-and-crafts museums). Otherwise, not recommended for general purchase."

Choice 5:1216 N '68 70w

"[In Virginia: the English Heritage in America, to which this is the companion volume, the author] traced the effect of the English legacy on American political and military life from the home country's successful challenge to Spanish leadership up to the Civil War. . . . [In that book] Mr. Rouse showed us [the] public faces [of Virginia's people] and commemorated their public acts. In this one he brings us intimately into their private lives, . . . [exploiting] his rich accumulation of personal knowledge, his unique familiarity with document, art, and artifact, and his long immersion in Virginia's life to impressive—and delightful—effect. . . . Together [these] make a handsome, fascinating, and enlightening pair. The present book is recommended for general libraries, school collections, and the private shelves of those with an interest in our nation's early settlers." E. V. Sutherland

Library J 93:2861 Ag '68 220w

ROUSE, W. H. D., tr. Great dialogues of Plato. See Plato

ROUSSEAS, STEPHEN. The death of a democracy: Greece and the American conscience, by Stephen Rousseas, with the collaboration of Herman Starobin and Gertrud Lenzer. 268p $6.50 Grove

949.5 Greece, Modern—Politics and government 67-30846

A professor of economics at New York University who is "a personal and political friend of imprisoned Deputy Andreas Papandreu discloses in this book the . . . facts behind the April 21, 1967 military coup. . . . [He] bases his account on information from private contacts in Greece and on smuggled documents . . . [and] places responsibility for the coup on Greek King Constantine, the United States State Department and the CIA, describing the events as the logical consequence of our cold-war stance beginning with the Truman Doctrine in 1947." (Publisher's note) Parts of this book appeared in The Nation and in Ramparts.

Choice 5:409 My '68 200w

"Stressing political developments in Greece during the period from 1963 to 1967, Mr. Rousseas chronicles crisis after crisis in Athens prior to the coup. He strikes out at C. L. Sulzberger of the New York Times for what he terms 'creating national policy' on Greece through a series of Times columns. Appendixes carry full texts of Papandreu's foreign and domestic policy positions, and resistance manifestos of the Greek underground. Recommended only for large international relations collections." Stan Oliner

Library J 93:560 F 1 '68 120w

"The deeper causes of the crisis are not discussed at all in Rousseas's book, which is concerned only with the immediate circumstances of the downfall of Greek democracy. Yet this does not make his analysis negligible. . . . The book is a rather disjointed collection, plainly compiled in haste, of four narrative chapters and four essays by separate hands, in which personal recollection and political analysis are almost haphazardly mingled; there are also four documentary appendices occupying 100 pages. The authors make no pretense of impartiality. . . . But though it states an avowedly partisan case, the book is honest in its approach and generally reasonable in tone; and it raises, although in disconnected form, most of the crucial issues arising from the immediate situation." Philip Williams

N Y Rev of Books 10:26 Mr 14 '68
3950w

"[This] book is necessarily a document of importance. The substance of what Mr. Rousseas charges is that Greece is a country under American tutelage, a semi-colony whose political life—whether democratic, monarchical, or military in form—operates within limits determined by United States agencies. Democratic forms are acceptable, and even desirable, so long as they result in governments willing and able to act in conformity with the requirements of American foreign policy. . . . Those who deride what they call 'the conspiracy theory of history' are likely to be very skeptical about Mr. Rousseas's theory of two conspiracies. But there is not much room for doubt about the existence of two sets of plans to suspend the operation of democracy. . . . [Papandreou] would, it is generally agreed, probably now be Prime Minister of Greece had the democratic process been suffered to continue in that country. . . . In actuality [what happened] was not so much the death of a democracy as the prevention of genuine democracy from emerging out of nominal democracy." C. C. O'Brien

Sat R 51:31 F 17 '68 1250w

ROVERE, RICHARD H. Waist deep in the big muddy; personal reflections on 1968. 116p $4.50 Little

327.73 U.S.—Foreign relations 68-22900

The New Yorker's Washington correspondent reflects on American foreign policy since World War II, and our involvement in Korea and Vietnam. He discusses the present world situation and its effect on conditions at home. Portions of this book appeared originally in somewhat different form in the New Yorker. The title was suggested by a song written by Pete Seeger.

"[The author] has all the glib answers to the most serious questions of our time. . . . [The contents] might be appropriate to the ephemera of periodical publication but seem scarcely to warrant the permanence of a bound book." Elbridge Colby

Best Sell 28:53 My 1 '68 200w

Reviewed by Michael Novak

Book World p6 Ag 11 '68 500w

Canadian Forum 48:84 Jl '68 650w

"Rovere [is] one of the most sensitive political observers among us. . . . It is evidence of how time now passes that these 'personal reflections on 1968' already seem dated; what was intensely significant in February is now a slightly passé analysis. But it is, as Rovere always is, literate, articulate, and to be highly recommended to all colleges with extensive collections in politics."

Choice 5:1043 O '68 120w

Reviewed by Murray Polner

Christian Century 85:899 Jl 10 '68 460w

Reviewed by D. T. Bazelon

Commentary 46:106 D '68 1900w

Reviewed by Irving Howe

Harper 237:98 Jl '68 1300w

"This slender volume. . . provides sound basis for much thought not only on our present predicament in Vietnam and Southeast Asia but also on the whole trend of our foreign policy during the last several administrations in Washington. . . . This is not a comfortable book to read. . . . Rovere writes with succinct clarity and his arguments are a biting commentary on us as a people and as a nation. Some will find his comments repugnant to their own beliefs while others will only see in them a mirror of the thoughts that find expression in their daily observations. I recommend this book as good homework for all interested citizens." Eugene Holtman

Library J 93:2247 Je 1 '68 240w

"Rovere's analysis of how we got mired in Vietnam, and why we should acknowledge now the awful error, is intensely personal. The approach does not throw his judgments off balance; on the contrary, Rovere's sober, somber sense of history focuses the indictment more closely. . . . Rovere is tough on the policy that has led us into this 'endless and hopeless' war; he is equally hard on members of what he calls the 'American Empire' school, who believe that Vietnam is only the early manifestation of an imperialist urge to conquer our weakest great adversary, China. . . . Looking beyond a Vietnam settlement that denies the United States its announced objectives, Rovere foresees a black domestic scene. He foregoes his usual awareness of the unpredictability of political movements and envisions wholesale reprisals against today's dissenters." Mitchel LeVitas

N Y Times Bk ■ p28 Je 23 '68 280w
Va Q R 44:cxiv summer '68 240w

ROWAN, HELEN, ed. No easy victories. See Gardner, J. W.

ROWAN, RICHARD WILMER. Secret service; thirty-three centuries of espionage, by Richard Wilmer Rowan and R. G. Deindorfer. new & rev ed 786p il $10 Hawthorn bks.

327 Spies

66-15344

This is the updated, revised version of a book first published in 1937 entitled, The Story of Secret Service (BRD 1937). It "begins with the spies Moses sent into the land of Canaan and the spies the harlot Rahab helped against the Philistines and . . . surveys secret service work through dynasty after dynasty up to the present, with accounts of such notorious spies as Klaus Fuchs, Harry Gold and the Rosenbergs, Colonel Abel and Gordon Lonsdale, and with attention to the many devices, electronic and other, which have been developed during and after World War II." (Best Sell)

"The account is most readable and yet is thoroughly scholarly in its documentation. . . . A valuable source of reference and as such is recommended to libraries; but the average reader will also find it engrossing."

Best Sell 27:375 D 15 '67 250w

Reviewed by O. A. Hagen

Library J 93:1886 My 1 '68 100w

Reviewed by Sergeant Cuff

Sat R 51:36 Ja 27 '68 30w

ROWE, JAMES W. New Zealand, by James W. Rowe and Margaret A. Rowe. 192p pl $6.50 Praeger

919.31 New Zealand—Civilization [68-71026]

Two native New Zealanders "tell the story of New Zealand's development around three themes—the geography, multiracial character of the people, and the emergence of the welfare state. They cover political, economic, and cultural aspects of New Zealand, and provide an evaluation of this nation's direction in the 20th century." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"A recommended purchase for libraries whose patrons are interested in this industrious country. . . . [The authors] are especially lucid in their treatment of the Maoris and their contribution to the national character. [They] identify many points in discussing governmental agencies that provide services for the general population; this will certainly stimulate new thinking in ■ controversial area." Thomas Welch

Library J 93:1476 Ap 1 '68 190w

"This is as good an introduction to New Zealand as could be written in such short compass. It is a little compressed and elliptical at times and inevitably overtaken by events. The preface is dated July 1967 but currency devaluation in November and the change in the liquor licensing laws came later. One might quibble on small points of interpretation here and there; but the book is thoroughly competent and workmanlike." J. B. Condliffe

Pacific Affairs 41:332 summer '68 170w

ROWE, MARGARET A., Jr. auth. New Zealand. See Rowe, J. W.

ROWELL, KENNETH. Stage design [ed. by John Lewis]. 95p il col il $5.50; pa $2.75 Reinhold

792 Theaters—Stage setting and scenery

67-30535

The writer gives "a brief historical outline of stage design in this century and [surveys]

ROWELL, KENNETH—Continued

the contemporary scene. . . . If this book is aimed more at the budding student/designer than the established and experienced theatre artist, it is hoped the layman may also be helped to a greater understanding of the place the designer occupies in the modern theatre, and . . . the designer's rôle in making the play come alive." (Intro) Glossary. Bibliography.

"Rowell has attempted to cover too many subjects. . . . There are [over] 65 set and costume illustrations from more than 10 nations. A number of these photographs and drawings have never been reproduced elsewhere. Although the choice of some pictures seems arbitrary. . . [they] are more representative of the subject than the text, and should help the aspiring theatrical designer or the theatre buff." Terence Tobin

Library J 93:2018 My 15 '68 190w

"Rowell provides a concise and well-illustrated summary of the changes of fashion in stage design. . . . [He] comments with understanding and common sense on a practical and highly technical craft which too often excites a good deal of pseudo-aesthetic flap-doodle. He clarifies the evolution of stage practice, stresses the obligations of the designer to his colleagues in production, and warns his fellow artists that today . . . the career of a stage designer may be transient."

TLS p800 J1 25 '68 290w

ROWLAND, HOWARD S. Federal aid for schools, 1967-1968 guide; the complete handbook for the local school district [by] Howard S. Rowland [and] Richard L. Wing. 396p $15 Macmillan (N Y)

379 Federal aid to education 67-19680

Part One contains "16 chapters analyzing all grant programs which have been regrouped, for the most part, under curriculum and school activity headings. . . . Appropriate chapter headings include Titles I, II, and III of ESEA. Other major chapters are headed Curriculum, Adult Education, Deprived Children, Equipment, Food Service, Guidance and Counseling, Handicapped Children, The Library, Research and Demonstration, Teacher Training, and finally Vocational and Technical Education. . . . [Part Two] includes establishing educational policy, assessing needs, studying federal grants available, meeting with the school board, working with the staff, and evaluating proposals. . . . [Part Three examines] timing strategies, identification of critical persons to plan and write the project, need for gaining local support, meeting the cost of planning and obtaining expert advice. . . . The Appendix (Part IV) is nearly 100 pages of . . . dated tables, directories and studies." (Library J) Index.

"Federal aid buffs, local school district administrators, teachers, librarians, and school board members will want to study this comprehensive guide closely. . . . [The authors] weight the book with unrelated and outdated tables. . . . Readers may also wonder on what basis a sampling of private foundations offering aid to education was made. . . . [However, school] personnel will find the book of value in their attempts to understand and explore the existing programs that will allow for effective educational programs. . . . [The guide] offers solid ideas on project planning and writing. . . . A readable and useful reference guide. . . . It is not complete, it is not official, but it will give those who study it carefully the proper direction to sources of information and interpretation for effective ways to bring about quality education." R. N. Case

Library J 92:4232 N 15 '67 1050w

"[An] excellent, up-to-date, and comprehensive guide. . . . Of special interest to the reader of The Social Studies are pages 61-63 where the authors describe a number of federal aid programs that are available in the fields of history, geography, civics, and economics. Not only does this book describe numerous opportunities for federal support, but it also stresses such matters as current priorities, criteria for awards, deadlines and allocations. Particularly helpful is the accompanying chart which gives the reader an overview of the federal programs as well as references to them in the book."

Social Studies 59:234 O '68 120w

ROWLAND, JOHN. A history of Sino-Indian relations; hostile co-existence. 248p il $6.75 Van Nostrand

327.51 China (People's Republic of China)—Foreign relations—India, India—Foreign relations—China (People's Republic of China) 66-29857

Concerned with China's intentions in Asia, "an officer of the United States Foreign Service in Asia. . . focusing his attention on the Himalayan boundary regions separating India from Communist China [examines] . . . the origins, nature, and significance of the tensions there between these two Asian [nations]." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"[Rowland] traces the relationship from the days of British control to almost the present. With some bias and some detachment, [he] demonstrates effectively the Chinese desire to secure her borders, the Indian desire to get what she wants peacefully, and the involvement of other international issues and powers in the matter. This reviewer would not have painted such a dark picture of the relationship between the Lamas and the rest of China, but that pressures were put on them to become more 'Chinese' could not be denied. There is reason to believe that Mr. Nehru was not as politically naive as he was made to look. Overall, the book is a good one. . . . [and] should be purchased by all academic and most medium to large-sized public libraries." Wen Chao Chen

Library J 91:5611 N 15 '66 140w

"Rowland finds in the recent history of Sino-Indian relations strong evidence in support of the contention that China's attitude towards her neighbours is essentially 'aggressive.' His book is a tract for the times, a Catonian warning on the Chinese menace. It is somewhat marred by minor errors of fact and by a rather uncritical use of sources. The sustained note of anti-Chinese polemic detracts seriously from the value of the work as an objective study of one of the major problems of Asian foreign relations." Alastair Lamb

Pacific Affairs 40:435 fall-winter '67-'68 90w

ROWLING, MARJORIE. Everyday life in medieval times; drawings by John Mansbridge. 227p $3.75 Putnam

914 Civilization, Medieval—Juvenile literature. Europe—Social life and customs—Juvenile literature 68-24546

"Explaining the basic structure of medieval society, the book describes the variety of relationships between lords and vassals, the position of women and wives, the lives of townsmen, traders, pilgrims, crusaders, monks, and friars. The author goes on to highlight the growth of schools and scholarship, the abilities of church builders, artists, doctors, scientists, and technologists. The illustrations are, mainly, . . . black-and-white line drawings in the medieval style, with some reproductions of contemporary works. [Chronology. Bibliography. Index.] Grades seven to twelve." (Library J)

Best Sell 28:19 Ap 1 '68 80w

"[Here are] well-researched accounts of how people lived in Europe from the Age of Charlemagne to the Renaissance. All types are included. . . . Quotations from countless contemporary writings include not only such items as recipes, games and songs, but clinical descriptions of disease and its treatment. The book is chiefly useful for reference." M. W. S.

Christian Science Monitor pB9 My 2 '68 140w

"A readable, objective, and sensitive survey of the Middle Ages . . . that not only supplements textbook coverage, but is capable of stimulating subject interests." Lee Ash

Library J 93:1815 Ap 15 '68 120w

ROWSE, A. L. The English spirit; essays in literature and history. rev ed 276p $5.95 Funk

914.2 Great Britain—History. English literature—History and criticism 67-25599

"This is a new version of a book originally published in Britain in 1944, and now so completely revised as to be more than half a new book. . . . In place of the topical essays there are several new . . . studies: those on Shakespeare have enabled me to sum up what I have to contribute to the vexed questions of Shakespeare's personal history and the Sonnets. . . . The longest essay, 'The Problem of Shakespeare's Sonnets Solved,' was given in its original form as the Giff Edmunds Memorial Lecture to the Royal Society of Literature in London, and at the Pierpont Morgan Library in New York. 'The Personality of Shakespeare' and 'Sir Winston Churchill as an Historian' were delivered as Founder's Day addresses at the Huntington Library at San Marino, California." (Pref) Index. For the original edition see BRD 1945.

"To imagine the existence of an English Spirit as Rowse does is to imagine history as the defense of a cause, in this case the superiority of everything British to everything else. History for Rowse is there and always has been, a matter of fact and record. The 'newness' of almost half the material of this revised edition is therefore merely nominal. The British continue to be stood for by an Elizabeth I, Churchill, and Shakespeare attired in Old School Colors as Aristocratic, Anglican, Conservative. The enemy is still Industrialization, Puritanism, and Democracy. . . . Rowse does not so much bring the past to life as, like Trevelyan and Miniver Cheevy, he takes up residence there, though with arrogance and resentment, as if thwarted in a claim to exclusive appropriation. . . . Not recommended."

Choice 5:626 J1 '68 180w

"A high-spirited and sensible collection. The author's specialty (as most readers know) is Tudor England, but (as most readers also know) Mr. Rowse has picked up considerable expertness in other fields, including Cornwall, poetry, the English Civil War, and literary and historical criticism. This book displays his attainments in all these subjects and shows, too, his characteristic bluntness at its most entertaining."

New Yorker 44:177 Ap 6 '68 60w

ROY, JULES. The trial of Marshal Pétain; tr. from the French by Robert Baldick. 263p $6.95 Harper

944.081 Pétain, Henri Philippe Bénoni Omer 67-28814

The "author of The Battle of Dienbienphu [BRD 1965] has written a day-by-day account of the [court proceedings] . . . from July 23 to August 15, 1945. He bases it on the official record, contemporary newspaper accounts, and on the many books written about the trial. [The charge was treason.] (Library J) Index. Originally published in France under the title Le Grand naufrage.

Reviewed by Leonard Mahoney
America 118:446 Ap 6 '68 600w

"Roy is a skilled journalist and a forceful writer, and his day-to-day account of the trial conveys the excitement of the courtroom drama, the suspense of which is not diminished by the fact that the verdict is known in advance. Brilliantly drawn character sketches bring the pages alive. . . . There is more to the book than a story, however. Before he was a writer, Roy was an officer and himself a supporter of Pétain; and as he reviews the judgment of the court and the testimony of the witnesses, he searches his own conscience. Given the circumstances of 1940, was the armistice in the interest of France? What were the demands of loyalty at the moment? . . . It is evidence of Roy's subtlety as a writer that these questions are not put in the abstract, but emerge from the unfolding story." Oscar Handlin

Atlantic 221:131 Mr '68 470w

Reviewed by B. D. Williams
Best Sell 27:463 Mr 1 '68 330w

Reviewed by Sanche de Gramont
Book World p4 F 25 '68 1050w

Choice 5:674 J1 '68 100w

"The proceedings in the Palais de Justice were a combination of spectacle and 'agonizing drama.' . . . [The author] served Pétain loyally for two years. He represents those Frenchmen who looked to Pétain for salvation after the 1940 defeat, but he gave them only 'gall and wormwood.' Mr Roy finds the Marshal not guilty of treason, but guilty of sacrificing the honor of those who served him. This is not a scholarly study of the trial but rather one man's reexamination of the agony of France 20 years later when much of the passion had died down.

The story of an old soldier and his disgrace is well told. Recommended for public and academic libraries." Keith Eubank

Library J 93:74 Ja 1 '68 200w

Reviewed by R. O. Paxton
N Y Rev of Books p14 My 5 '68 800w

ROYAL INSTITUTE OF INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS. The impact of the Russian Revolution, 1917-1967. See The impact of the Russian Revolution, 1917-1967

RUBENS, ALFRED. A history of Jewish costume; foreword by James Laver. 220p il $10 Funk

391 Costume 67-23303

This volume is divided into "four main categories: the Biblical and Talmudic Periods, the Eastern World, the Western World, and Rabbinic Dress. . . . [A] commentary connects and explains each group of pictures [to show] the costume of Jews at work, at home, at prayer and study, at weddings, in all periods and climes." (Library J) Glossary. Bibliography. Index.

"A most fascinating, authoritative, and instructive work on how the numerous Jewish communities the world over have dressed during the past 3,000 years. More than 300 illustrations are employed—most of them for the first time—in company with a clear and informative text, to tell the story. An appendix consisting of 'Extracts from Jewish Sumptuary Laws and Dress Regulations,' an extensive bibliography, and a glossarial index add much to the book's value. For reference and for interesting reading this work is highly recommended."

Choice 5:1193 N '68 100w

Reviewed by H. M. Orlinsky
Library J 92:4170 N 15 '67 120w

RUBENSTEIN, RICHARD L. The religious imagination; a study in psychoanalysis and Jewish theology. 246p $5.95 Bobbs

296.3 Judaism. Psychoanalysis 67-24905

"Rubenstein, lecturer in the humanities at the University of Pittsburgh . . . [presents this] study of Hebraic Aggadah—the oral traditions of the rabbis that were embodied in commentaries and explanations of the Torah. After reviewing Freudian theory on the origin of religion he treats the anecdotal subject matter of these tales and legends as though they represented a kind of projective test of centuries of rabbinic thought. He devotes individual chapters to the meaning of sin and anxiety, the primal crime, the tenth plague, and the omnipotence of God in rabbinic Judaism." (Library J)

"Two demands are imposed on the reader of this book: either he must have profound sense of the failure of conventional religious symbols and theologizing, or he must be engaged in an intense search for new modes of theologizing—or both. As I see it, the genius of The Religious Imagination is that the author meets both of his own demands. In the present volume, Rabbi Rubenstein carries on the quest he began in After Auschwitz [BRD 1967]. 'In both books,' he says, 'I have attempted to understand the meaning of Jewish existence in our times.' . . . I would say that, for 'Jewish existence,' we may read 'religious existence.' It is a challenging and exciting book." R. A. Underwood

Christian Century 85:758 Je 5 '68 800w

"Freud saw Judaism to be a particularly clear example of a religion rooted in the Oedipal conflict of father and son. . . . Rubenstein does not repudiate Freud's theory, but simply amplifies it. . . . Rubenstein's version of Judaism . . . is not a Judaism which exercises a claim of its own upon the imagination and interpretation of man in the present. He is too committed to the Freudian schema of interpretation to allow the materials of the legends to offer their own meaning. . . . While I am dubious of Rubenstein's interpretation of Judaism, there is a powerful passion and wealth of insight which fills [this book]. To read Rubenstein is to share in the blessing he has won." R. A. Johnson

Commonweal 88:271 My 17 '68 1400w

"[This] excellent and provocative . . . book is undoubtedly the product of careful analysis and penetrating understanding and is recommended for students, theologians, psychologists and anthropologists. A working knowledge of the Bible is desirable but not essential as a prerequisite to appreciating this book." Harold Blau

RUBENSTEIN, R. L.—Continued

Library J 92:3646 O 15 '67 140w

RUBIA BARCIA, JOSÉ, ed. Unamuno: creator and creation; ed. by José Rubia Barcia and M. A. Zeitlin. 253p $6.50 Univ. of Calif. press
868 Unamuno y Jugo, Miguel de 67-22249

A collection of thirteen lectures and articles from a symposium held at the University of California in Los Angeles to celebrate the centenary of Unamuno's birth. The contributors "have approached the man and his work from various aspects—his philosophy, literary merit, theology, and so on. . . . The book includes an epilogue by Walter Starkie. . . . [and] a list of Unamuno's major works." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"This volume covers a good deal of the same ground as Spanish Thought and Letters in the XXth Century, edited by Germán Bleiberg and E. Inman Fox. The latter volume, also a collection of essays from the [same] symposium. . . . is perhaps more extensive in its coverage; but the former one has the advantage that all the lectures are in English. . . . Essential for all but the smallest college libraries."

Choice 5:350 My '68 120w

"These scholars [are] all competent to write about Unamuno. . . . Especially interesting are the portions in which they deal with Unamuno's work on Cervantes, and on his position as a proto-existentialist; in other sections they deal with his writing technique, his relationships with other authors, his life, and his political activity. . . . An excellent scholarly book. For subject collections in academic libraries or for large public libraries." L. R. Huish

Library J 92:4416 D 1 '67 110w

"[This] is undoubtedly the best book-length introduction available in English. It begins as it should, with an essay on 'Unamuno the Man' by José Rubia Barcia. Even its approach is pertinent. . . . The essays that follow do not all maintain such a solid grip on flesh and blood. For one thing, some of the commentators are more rarified than Rubia Barcia, or more pedantic; and there is nothing like pedantry for creating cadavers. When these critics are dealing with Unamuno's active life . . . or with his purely literary works, humanity asserts itself almost willy-nilly. It is then that this collection is richest and most valuable. When, however, the twin dead weights of scholarship and abstract thought press too heavily on their subject, the result is neat and lifeless." Robert Maurer

Sat R 51:32 F 10 '68 550w

"The general standard is high, though the contributors clearly do not all have the same audience in mind—readers with enough knowledge of Unamuno to follow Leon Livingstone's argument, for instance, will scarcely learn much from the essays on Unamuno's politics or his existentialism, good as these are in their way. Respect for Unamuno's seriousness is tempered by intelligent criticism throughout, but any reader who nevertheless feels oppressed by the solemnity of it all will be delighted by C. P. Otero's splendidly pugnacious, witty and at times unfair attack on the nonsensical side of Unamuno."

TLS p1004 S 12 '68 500w

RUBIN, ELEANOR. The doctor's wife's thinking thin cookbook. (Trident press bk) 108p $3.95 Simon & Schuster

641.5 Diet. Cookery 67-23592

The author's guiding principle is that "every meal should have one dish of which the dieter can eat an ample amount without gaining weight. She tells how to cook with gourmet touches meals designed to help the dieter 'get thin and stay thin.' . . . For each recipe, she gives the number of calories per portion." (Library J)

"[This] is another diet cookbook with the difference that author Eleanor Rubin has used her imagination and experience to improve the lot of the dieter with some tasty, if not fat-producing recipes. They follow, in the main, the usual course. Adequate, but not outstanding."

Best Sell 27:118 Je 15 '67 40w

"[Mrs. Rubin] has spent 20 years perfecting means that will appeal to the dieter and help him to eat less. . . . Her method of making sandwiches, her cold cucumber soup, her sherbet, and strawberry cheese-cake are interesting. . . . This cookbook is highly recommended for public library collections where it should be much used by patrons who want to keep their weight under control." G. F. Doie

Library J 92:3421 O 1 '67 130w

RUBIN, ISADORE, ed. Sex in the adolescent years: new directions in guiding and teaching youth; ed. by Isadore Rubin and Lester A. Kirkendall. 223p $4.95 Assn. press

612.6 Sex instruction. Adolescence 68-11492

"In addition to articles dealing with the usual problems of adolescent fears and actions, the collection includes discussions of the neglected subjects of education for the handicapped, the legal aspects of sex behavior, the problems of the unwed father, and the effects of pornography." (Library J) Most of the articles appeared originally in the Parent-Guidance section of Sexology magazine.

Christian Century 85:302 Mr 6 '68 30w

"All the writers are respected authorities in the study of sex psychology, education, and behavior. . . . Teachers and counselors can use the book to introduce the subjects here covered and parents will welcome it as an 'ice breaker' in approaching the difficult but necessary discussions they sometimes must initiate with their children. The editors emphasize the need for honesty in dealing with the adolescent and, also, the need for reading their book as a guide without having to accept every point of view expressed. Most public libraries will find the book useful." J. B. Lopez

Library J 93:2235 Je 1 '68 200w

Reviewed by John Calem

Sat R 51:75 Je 15 '68 100w

RUBIN, LARRY. Lanced in light. 53p $4.50
Harcourt
811 67-20329

A second book of poems by the author of The World's Old Way (BRD 1964). Some of these poems previously appeared in The Antioch Review, Harper's Magazine, Sewanee Review, and other publications.

"These 48 collected pieces reveal the wide range of an unusual poetic talent in which sensibility and craftsmanship are happily mated. Mr. Rubin is a reflective, even philosophical, poet who creates form with his precise imagery and familiar syntax. No other modern American poet depends less upon heavy allusiveness or achieves greater control of tone and tension. . . . His themes range through the basic experiences of modern man—his sense of loss, the flux of experience, the impact of death, communication failure between generations, and the possibilities of love in an ambiguous world. . . . Strongly recommended for academic and large public collections of distinguished contemporary verse." J. R. Willingham

Library J 92:2786 Ag '67 130w

Reviewed by Daryl Hine

Poetry 113:58 O '68 50w

"[This book's] virtues are those of a writer who is unintimidated by conventional structures; its weaknesses can be summed up in the monotony of its solemnity, in the exaggerated respect for the proprieties that identify the writing as serious. Rubin is a poet more impressive in individual poems than in a volume." S. F. Morse

Va Q R 44:507 summer '68 170w

RUBIN, LOUIS D. The curious death of the novel; essays in American literature [by] Louis D. Rubin, Jr. 302p $6.95 La. state univ. press

813 American literature 67-26970

These essays by the professor of English at the University of California have appeared previously in such publications as The Southern Review, American Quarterly and The Hollins Critic. They are largely focused on "the business of the writer's relationship with and alienation from his society." (Pref) Index.

Choice 5:486 Je '68 180w

"In the title essay [Rubin] . . . takes up a now somewhat tiresome debate, suggesting that a novel need not have been written by Joyce, Faulkner, Hemingway, Fitzgerald, or any other of the favorites of the early 20th Century to be taken seriously as a novel. But he does not let just anything go in the place of these novelistic giants. He is perceptive, discriminating, and incisive in his review of literary figures. . . . This is a valuable collection of Professor Rubin's writings . . . and should be in any collection on American literature." C. A. Raines

Library J 93:554 F 1 '68 150w

"[Rubin's] best moments come when he feels most intensely that criticism operates with 'techniques of discovery' and when it embodies a 'rage for order' . . . when, in short, he is not merely going through the motions. At such moments he is discriminating and lively, knowledgeable about current literary trends, receptive to and hardheaded about them. His prose [is] completely free of fashionable jargon and the urge to create an abstruse one of his own. . . . Unfortunately, however, his book is uneven. . . . A number of these pieces exhibit the enervating weight of duty." Robert Maurer

Sat R 51:35 Je 22 '68 800w

RUBIN, LOUIS D. The teller in the tale, by Louis D. Rubin, Jr. 228p $5.95 Univ. of Wash. press

809.3 Fiction—History and criticism

67-21197

"The teller in the tale, according to [the author's] thesis, is 'the author as storyteller—the authorial personality revealed in the novel,' who acts as a mask for the actual author and as an organizing presence in the work, operating above or behind the fictional characters. . . . The thesis develops in discussions of [seven] authors whose relations to their materials and their audiences are . . . various in substantive as well as technical ways: [Cervantes,] Stendhal, Twain, James, Proust, Joyce, and Mauriac. Mr. Rubin undertakes to show that in every instance, in spite of the differences, the 'authorized personality' governs the tone and helps to justify the content of the work." (Am Lit) Index.

"[This is] an important idea, which . . . has not received as much critical study as it deserves. . . . The ground seems firmest with Stendhal and Twain. . . . The argument is necessarily more subtle and not quite so compelling—with James, Proust, and Joyce, whose masks are more nearly like what we know of their actual selves. With Mauriac it falters amid the toils of dogma in relation to art and of imagination in relation to belief. But, even with Mauriac, the reader is persuaded to feel that there is something in it. . . . [There are] a number of small errors of typography, diction, grammar, and quotation, together with at least one flat misreading." R. P. Adams

Am Lit 40:261 My '68 470w

"A very good book. Stimulating, really new slants on [the authors covered] by penetrating, enthusiastic professor-critic author of The Faraway Country [BRD 1964]. . . . The book offers any level of student (or faculty) a healthy shift from old-fashioned literary criticism as biographical determination to a more satisfying, truer focus on the great fictional narrator-role inside the novel, guide of the story, creator of suspense, and entertainer."

Choice 5:479 Je '68 180w

Va Q R 44:xxiv winter '68 110w

RUBLOWSKY, JOHN. Music in America. 185p il $3.50 Crowell-Collier press

780.973 Music, American—History and criticism—Juvenile literature 67-25225

The author discusses American composers and "traces the origins of different kinds of American music. . . . Beginning with the music of the first European settlers, he brings history up to the present and includes a discussion of the works of experimental composers, such as John Cage. [Bibliography. Index.] Grade seven and up." (Library J)

Best Sell 27:395 Ja 1 '68 130w

Reviewed by B. L. Glatz

Christian Science Monitor pB10 My 2 '68 130w [YA]

"This brief, wide-ranging survey . . . covers a difficult, diffuse subject in a most readable and informative manner. . . . The chapters dealing with the music of the American Indian are especially well handled as are the important contributions of the Negro to American musical development." L. L. Widdoes

Library J 92:4626 D 15 '67 100w

"Viewing musical change sociologically, the author takes advantage of contemporary scholarship. There are a few errors, but they are small blemishes in this vivid account."

N Y Times Bk R p28 Ja 21 '68 50w

RUBLOWSKY, JOHN. Popular music. 164p il $4.95 Basic bks.

784 Music, Popular (Songs, etc.) 67-28387

The author of Pop Art (BRD 1965) "discusses the relationship between the recording industry and serious music, jazz, and popular music; aspects of jazz development; the origins of country and Western music; rock-and-roll; the music arranger's function; problems of the record and radio industries; the process of performers cutting discs; contributions and inequality of Negroes in the entertainment industry." (Choice) Index.

"Not a particularly sophisticated work. Filled with its share of errors, occasional distortions, sweeping generalizations, glib statements, yet with sufficient fresh information about the popular music field and music industry to warrant its inclusion in college collections. Other works cover certain areas more thoroughly, but none are as wide-sweeping. A rather informative book which publicly washes the music industry's laundry—some clean, some dirty."

Choice 5:634 J1 '68 110w

Reviewed by Collin Clark

Library J 92:3214 S 15 '67 80w [YA]

"At first glance this book seems to be just another of the many on the nature and history of popular music. . . . [However] in his chapters on 'Making the Lists,' 'Big Business,' 'The Arranger,' and 'Cutting the Record,' [Mr. Rublowsky] describes aspects of popular music in terms that the layman can grasp and with a comprehensiveness that many more formidable writers would do well to emulate. . . . Today the performer, the arranger, and the recording are what makes a song popular. Mr. Rublowsky gives the reader a penetrating look into the arcane world of the pop arranger and the recording session. Recommended for Adult and Young Adult collections." J. M. Boonin

Library J 92:4002 N 1 '67 110w

RUCHLIS, HY. Bathtub physics; general ed: Donald Barr; il. by Ray Skibinski. 122p $3.25 Harcourt

530 Physics—Juvenile literature 67-18545

The author "shows how some everyday laws of physics can be discovered in the . . . bathtub. . . . [He discusses] magnetism, . . . waves, . . . sound waves, . . . surface tension, aspects of volume and weight, air and water pressure, the action of pumps, and many more phenomena." (Publisher's note) "Grades six to nine." (Library J)

Reviewed by M. L. Birmingham

Commonweal 87:185 N 10 '67 50w

"Complex physical concepts [are successfully explained] in a simple, clear-cut manner. Each topic is illustrated with examples and experiments that can be duplicated with materials found about the home and each chapter is followed by suggestions for further investigation and 'brain teaser' questions related to the material just covered. Too simple for a student of physics. . . . this is a good introduction for young people with little scientific background." C. G. Wood

Library J 93:310 Ja 15 '68 100w

Reviewed by Philip Morrison

Sci Am 219:126 D '68 170w

RUCKER, BRYCE W. The first freedom; foreword by Howard Rusk Long; introd. by Morris L. Ernst. 322p $12.50 Southern Ill. univ. press

301.16 Communication. Newspapers

68-11651

The original version of this book was written by Morris Ernst in 1946 (BRD 1946). In this volume the author, "with Ernst's approval, has published under the same title an updated inventory of the organizational state of American mass communications." (Nation)

"[In the first version] the book called attention, in documented detail, to widespread monopolistic developments in the American press, radio and motion picture industries. Still, Ernst was not without hope. . . . Expectations for remedial change, along with confidence in the essential health of the media, are barely visible this second time around. . . . The latest evidence, painstakingly and impressively accumulated by Rucker, demonstrates that the trends uncovered by Ernst have become dominant and seemingly institutionalized national patterns. In a word, the movement to monopolization in the mass media has accelerated. . . . Obligated to be as constructive as possible in an increasingly desperate situation, Rucker proposes some legislative reforms to stymie further concentration in the mass media." H. I. Schiller

RUCKER, B. W.—Continued

Nation 206:835 Je 24 '68 1400w

"There is a need for thorough study of the new kinds of monopoly in journalism. . . . [This] does not meet the specifications. . . . [Rucker] offers 229 pages of text (little enough for the high purchase price) that contain lumps of facts and statistics scarcely elevated beyond the form of raw notes. Rucker . . . appears to feel that the mere rote recital of facts about monopoly will lead the reader to share his fitfully expressed indignation. . . . He has uncovered and used substantial unpublished documentary materials. But he does not use them to explain why there is homogenization in American journalism. . . . So ineptly does Rucker present the antimonopoly case that he almost succeeds in convincing the reader that the monopolists must be the ones on the side of the angels." James Boylan
N Y Times Bk R p90 N 17 '68 360w

RUDENSTINE, NEIL L. Sidney's poetic development. 313p $6.95 Harvard univ. press

821 Sidney, Sir Philip 67-17318

The author argues "for the rhetorical and stylistic maturity of Sidney's entire poetic career, from the early verse in the Arcadia to Astrophel and Stella. The ornate poems in the Arcadia are seen not as experimental exercises, but rather as deliberate renderings appropriate to their rhetorical context." (Choice) Index.

"Earlier critics have admired Sidney's characteristic speaker in Astrophel and Stella—a vigorously dramatic, witty, and audacious lover—as a rejection of faded Petrarchan conventions, but Rudenstine points rather to Sidney's emergent concern for the rhetorical term energia and its stylistic possibilities. Moreover, Sidney's portrayal of his speaker reflects his continual thematic interest in the tension and interplay between an active duty and the alternatives of love or leisure. Rudenstine is particularly valuable in bringing together Sidney's entire corpus, including especially his correspondence with Languet, to demonstrate the unity of the poet's work. . . . Written with clarity and scholarly care, this is an essential book for Renaissance collections." (Choice) Index.

Choice 5:51 Mr '68 190w

"The real advance over earlier studies in this book is that a much fuller view is taken of Sidney's work, comprehending not only The Lady of May and Certain Sonnets, but Sidney's own ideas as shown in his correspondence with Languet. This provides the chief theme which Mr. Rudenstine observes in all the poetry, which is that of the debate between age and youth. . . . But the parallel is pressed a little hard. . . . And the comparison forces Mr. Rudenstine to place Sidney and Languet too squarely in opposition. . . . Though the themes in Sidney's poetry are seen as constant, the developments in his technique, especially in mastery of the devices which produce 'energia', there carefully defined, are exhaustively explored. Individual passages are, indeed, so closely analysed that one begins to question the ultimate value of such searchlight/microscope modes of interpretation. . . . [However] this is a learned and intelligent book, which broadens and deepens, the context in which Sidney's poetry is seen."

TLS p1206 D 14 '67 900w

RUDLOE, JACK. The sea brings forth: II. by Ingrid Niccoll. 261p $6.95 Knopf

591.92 Marine animals—Collection and preservation. Natural history—Atlantic States 67-18603

The twenty-three-year old author describes how he became a professional collector of marine biological specimens and built up a successful business supplying research laboratories and academic biology departments.

"[Rudloe] gives much interesting information about the marine animals of the Gulf of Mexico, and tells good stories about the hectic experiences of collecting and shipping a live shark and a live octopus. . . . Anyone who feels the fascination of the sea should find this account engrossing." J. S. Robotham
Library J 93:1011 Mr 1 '68 110w

"This is a simply beautiful nature book. It is brimming with interesting information about marine creatures, their fantastic shapes and adaptations, so expressive of the fierce poignancy of the struggle to survive that informs all life. Beyond this Mr. Rudloe is remarkably evocative of the Florida Gulf Coast fishermen with whom he worked, their working life, closeness to nature, racy speech and solid presence. [The author] has the writer's gift, that magical ability to reveal the wonder in all things." E. B. Garside
N Y Times Bk R p26 Je 9 '68 550w

RUDOLPH, LLOYD I. The modernity of tradition: political development in India [by] Lloyd I. Rudolph [and] Susanne Hoeber Rudolph. 306p $8.75 Univ. of Chicago press

301.2954 India—Politics and government. Social change 67-25527

The authors, "teachers of political science at the University of Chicago, discuss the relationship of . . . [mid-twentieth century innovations to established practices] in three facets of contemporary Indian life. In Part I they give a detailed account of the politics and parties of caste in modern India. In Part II they discuss the meaning Gandhi had for Indian political life and his remaining influence. In Part III they outline the dichotomy created in the administration of law and justice with the imposition of British systems and courts on a native and traditional legal system." (Library J) Index.

"A brilliant, controversial analysis . . . [whose] thesis is that India's traditional social structure, with certain modifications, is serving effectively the needs of a modernizing polity. . . . [The book] stands out because of the range of literature consulted, the clarity and forcefulness of the presentation, and the depth and sophistication of the analysis. [It] also provides a timely and provocative, although unintended, contrast to certain assumptions in G. Myrdal's important new book, Asian Drama [BRD 1968]. . . . Warmly recommended for all college libraries." (Choice) Index.

Choice 5:1043 O '68 190w

"The Rudolphs are respected contributors to the literature of this field and their book is authoritative and informative. Their scholarly tone and presentation tends to limit readers of the book to specialists, although the portion on Gandhi in Part II would be of interest to a more general audience in view of the current wide interest in nonviolent philosophies." Muriel Weins
Library J 92:4425 D 1 '67 160w

RUDOLPH, MARGUERITA. The magic sack; a Lithuanian folktale retold; il. by Ralph Pinto. unnp $3.25 McGraw

398.2 Folklore—Lithuania—Juvenile literature 67-22965

"The Lithuanian folk tale about the lad who gives away his earnings to three beggars and receives three magic objects in return is retold [here]. . . . Kindergarten to grade three." (Library J)

"The illustrator has enhanced the story's Slavic flavor with detailed ink sketches of rustic scenes. The reteller herself grew up in a Ukrainian village and has retold in equally good storytelling fashion other classic Slavic tales." V. H.
Horn Bk 44:174 Ap '68 90w

"[The retelling is] in true folk-tale style, with . . . good print. Useful for third-graders to read on their own and for reading aloud to the younger children." M. H. Scott
Library J 93:285 Ja 15 '68 60w

RUDOLPH, SUSANNE HOEBER, jt. auth. The modernity of tradition. See Rudolph, L. I.

RUE, LEONARD LEE. Pictorial guide to the mammals of North America; text and phot. by Leonard Lee Rue, III. 299p $7.95 Crowell
599 Mammals 67-12408

This volume describes sixty-five different species belonging to nine of the eleven mammalian orders found in North America. Bibliography. Index.

"[This book] is more concerned with the mammal as a mammal rather than with identification. It belongs in libraries used by the 7th grade through high school. A few students will read it from cover to cover, but it is useful as a reference. Each mammal is treated as to size, food, habitat, habits, breeding, enemies, tracks and range. . . . It is obvious that Rue is familiar with some of the larger animals because some original observations are included. The other accounts are not original, and some contain statements no longer appearing in scientific literature. The original black-and-white photos are good but do not constitute a 'pictorial guide.' The appendices list where to see mammals, source of information by states and agencies, and the orders, families, genera, and species of many of the common mammals."

Choice 4:1228 Ja '68 190w [YA]

"With the help of more than 100 photographs of animals in their natural habitats, and 65 maps of their geographical range, Mr. Rue describes the characteristics . . . of various species. . . . Animal lore and legend are combined with tales of the author's experiences with moles, raccoons, foxes, sheep, antelopes, and others. . . . Public libraries will find this especially welcome." Marian Trahan

Library J 92:4639 D 15 '67 90w [YA]

Reviewed by W. C. Roselle
Library J 93:1012 Mr 1 '68 220w

Reviewed by D. M. Glixon
Sat R 51:48 My 18 '68 100w

RUETHER, ROSEMARY RADFORD. The Church against itself; an inquiry into the conditions of historical existence for the eschatological community. 245p $5.50 Herder & Herder

260 Church 68-12019

"In the nature of Christianity [there is] a tension between the Church as historical institution and the Church as eschatological community. . . . [In a collection of essays, a] young American Catholic theologian explores this tension between the institutional and the eschatological. . . . She [attempts to] construct a viable synthesis of these divergent principles . . . for the Church of the future." (Publisher's note) Bibliography.

"This may be one of those books—like The Secular City [by H. Cox] and Honest to God [by J. Robinson]—that generate a body of literature. There is sure to be a Church-against-itself debate. For in this book Rosemary Ruether asserts a startlingly (for Catholic circles anyway) radical thesis: the Church must demythologize itself. . . . Any talk of 'realized' eschatology she considers inauthentic. To speak of the kingdom as having already come implies that the Church's task is chiefly to retain continuity with the past. . . . For Dr. Ruether, the Church is a happening, occurring whenever people allow themselves to be transformed by the coming God and are converted to a community of service. . . . In an age when most of the insights in theology are coming by way of recovering the historical dimensions of our religion, it might strike some as perverse that the author should seem to denigrate the Church's roots in the past. In fact she is doing no such thing." Dennis Hamm

America 118:326 Mr 9 '68 750w

"[This book] is written in the conviction that to be for the church one must be against it, because the true church—the creation of the Holy Spirit—is constantly at war with the historical, institutional church that emerges from it. Drawing on an impressive array of biblical, historical and theological scholarship, the author argues that the Apostolic church was an eschatological community which was transformed into a historical institution concerned with its own preservation and destiny in the world. . . . [However,] one should not conclude that Dr. Ruether advocates the abandonment of historical forms of the faith; she sees them as providing temporal structures which make possible the 'happenings' in which God encounters man. Therefore she remains a Catholic." R. M. Pope

Christian Century 85:298 Mr 6 '68 250w

Reviewed by Rosemary Haughton
Critic 26:84 Ap '68 1800w

"Dr. Ruether is writing what she calls, legitimately enough, 'post-ecumenical theology.' In other words, theology about the collapse of theology. Her style is unfortunate, and sometimes barely comprehensible. . . . This is a pity. Dr. Ruether has something to say. She is a realist. . . . She understands well enough the urgent need for a theology of the secular. What she has given us is secular theology. . . . 'The Freedom Movement,' she writes in a revealing passage, 'is in reality the present equivalent of the Gospel.' Herein lies her fundamental mistake. What she has done is to identify the Christian faith entirely with its social application. . . . When her book is stripped of its religious vocabulary we get the impression she is teaching a noble materialism. In the name of the Spirit the Spirit is denied." Magdalen Goffin

N Y Rev of Books 11:30 Ag 22 '68 850w

Time 91:70 Ap 19 '68 200w

RUIZ, RAMON EDUARDO. Cuba; the making of a revolution. 190p $6 Univ. of Mass. press

972.91 Cuba—History. Cuba—Social conditions. Cuba—Politics and government

68-19675

The author attempts "to explain historical factors which made a revolution possible. He argues . . . that Cuba's internal economic and social situation supported by the United States perhaps made upheaval inevitable. . . . He examines anti-Americanism, the sugar economy, political and intellectual trends, leftist activities, and analyzes the lack of cohesion within Cuban society to show how all these contributed to events after 1959." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by Ronald Steel
Book World p7 Ag 18 '68 270w

"Some who read this book will feel cheated . . . [since the bibliography lacks] titles by Fidel Castro or Che Guevara. Yet the book may be one of the best of its kind to appear. . . . This well-researched and scholarly study is recommended for libraries collecting Latin American materials." H. A. Spalding

Library J 93:2652 Jl '68 170w

"A history professor who has taught at United States and Latin American universities wrote [this book] with scholarly detachment but with a most unscholarly simplicity. [It] is a splendid short account of the revolutionary movements in Cuba from the struggle for independence from Spain in the 1890s to Castro's victory in 1959. . . . [Ruiz] makes the essential point that the Cuban Revolution was against the United States fully as much as against Batista. . . . [He] also illuminates an aspect of the Cuban Revolution that has long troubled many American liberals, even those sympathetic to Castro: his relationship with the Soviet Union and the Cuban Communists. . . . Here Ruiz gives a particularly useful history of the Communist movement in Cuba, citing their many achievements for the workers—and their compromises as well." R. J. Walton

Nation 207:55 Jl 22 '68 410w

"Ruiz does an excellent job of untangling the various strands of Cuban thought and history which led to the 1959 revolution. One of these strands was the philosophy of José Martí, whose ideas are traced extensively. . . . Yet while he more than adequately indicates how the revolution could have occurred in 1959, Ruiz doesn't explain why it did occur then. . . . What were the roles in Castro's victory of machismo Cuban psychology and the myth of the guerrilla? What part did Herbert Matthews's columns in the New York Times play in stopping a possible military intervention by the United States? . . . In other words, what made the 1959 revolution unique in time and character? Ruiz's account of the abortive 1933 revolution gives some idea of what would have happened in Cuba in 1959 if the United States had had its way." D. J. Morris

New Repub 159:25 Jl 20 '68 700w

TLS p1280 N 14 '68 280w

RUKEYSER, MURIEL. The speed of darkness.
113p $4 Random house
811 68-14523

In this collection of her newer poems, Rukeyser tells of the "knowledge of what binds us together, the physical strength and splendor of the bonds, rhythms of the sense of death and madness." (Publisher's note) Some of these poems were previously published in such periodicals as The Kenyon Review, The Nation and Evergreen Review.

"[These] poems are experimental. Compared to 'Waterlily Fire' [BRD 1963], a selection of her poems from 1935-1962, the latest poems look as if they had exploded onto the page. Short lines, short phrases, stairways of lines across the page. Not quite as bold as e.e. cummings, but almost. Along with typographical experiment there is the experiment to link up diverse experiences, to find similarities between the wreck of the Tiger, one of Sir Walter Raleigh's vessels, and 'the blood clam's ark, the tern's acute eye.' . . . Even if it doesn't work, it is an experiment worth risking." Victor Howes

Christian Science Monitor p9 J1 23 '68
350w

"'The Poem as Mask,' 'The Conjugation of the Paramedium,' and 'Cannibal Bratuscha' work within the bounds of short length to advance a high organizational capacity and the poet's will to teach. The longer sections . . . are generally more freely composed; in these Miss Rukeyser deploys story and poetic sense with equal skill. The varied effects of organization and intensity make [this collection] worth repeated reading." Robert Baker
Library J 93:2664 J1 '68 80w

Reviewed by Janet Strothman

Library J 93:3340 S 15 '68 70w [YA]

Reviewed by Richard Eberhart

N Y Times BK R p24 Je 23 '68 490w

RULAND, RICHARD. The rediscovery of American literature: premises of critical taste, 1900-1940. 329p $6.95 Harvard univ. press

810.9 American literature—History and criticism 67-20880

This study "attempts to chart the main features of this century's critical 'rediscovery' or re-evaluation of 'classic' American writers from Franklin to James. On the other hand, it attempts by examining . . . the writings of a few critics—notably Irving Babbitt, Paul Elmer More, Stuart Sherman, H. L. Mencken, and F. O. Matthiessen—to emphasize the 'extraliterary premises' upon which much of this rediscovery was based." (Yale R) Bibliography, Index.

"[Ruland] has understandably chosen 'to sacrifice comprehensiveness for depth' by concentrating on five critics, and in so doing he has given a cogent assessment of the now-neglected early twentieth-century debate over the American identity and its literary implications. . . . Much of the value of this critical study lies in its careful delineation of schisms as well as alignments within a point of view—e.g. the anti-democratic bias of Babbitt, More, Mencken, and the New Critics." B. T. Spencer
Am Lit 40:235 My '68 600w

Choice 5:780 S '68 170w

"[Professor Ruland] is responsive to the broad concerns of individual American critics and . . . he clarifies cultural climates and recent developments in literary taste. For inclusion in university libraries." Walter Waring
Library J 92:3042 S 15 '67 180w

TLS p247 Mr 14 '68 450w

Va Q R 44:lvi spring '68 130w

"[This discussion] seems disturbingly lopsided. . . . Most of the first half of the book is devoted to four critics whom Ruland labels 'conservative.' . . . Major representatives of a 'liberal' position [are dismissed in a few pages]. . . . Probably Ruland's strongest . . . chapter is devoted to a sympathetic discussion of F. O. Matthiessen. . . . [However] he could have improved it significantly had he given Matthiessen a fuller historical and literary context in which to work. Almost no mention is made . . . of the impact of European criticism on the American critical debate. . . . Finally, chronology in the early chapters tends to be unduly muddled. . . . Ruland's relaxed and readable style gives a greater sense of unity to the book than it may actually have."

Yale R 57:XXVI D '67 950w

RULFO, JUAN. The burning plain, and other stories; tr. with an introd. by George D. Schade; il. by Kermit Oliver. 175p $5 Univ. of Tex. press

67-25698

These fifteen stories tell "of single moments in the lives of the inhabitants of a harsh and isolated area of Mexico, revealing glimpses into their attitudes and thoughts." (Publisher's note) This is a translation of El llano en llamas.

Choice 5:783 S '68 140w

"Rulfo is earning a reputation among Latin-American critics as the Spanish-speaking world's boldest and, perhaps best, fiction writer. . . . [He] is a brilliant writer whose ability to describe both his fellow Mexicans and the landscape which so sharply affects their lives is unparalleled. . . . Techniques vary from story to story. Several tales are simply long monologues. . . . There is no preaching of social themes, no rallying cry against social injustice. These are taken for granted. . . . Rulfo is more concerned with technique and vigorous description than with large social ills. Yet his story 'El Paso del Norte' can be read as a precise and effective critique of the bracero problem." J. N. Goodsell

Christian Science Monitor p11 Ja 4 '68
360w

Reviewed by L. R. Hulsh

Library J 93:1145 Mr 15 '68 100w

"[These tales] clearly reflect the author's pessimistic view of man's condition. Murder, incest, adultery, death overpowering life, violence in varied forms are predominant themes, unrelieved by humor or love. Rulfo's role is not that of the omniscient narrator, for he lets his often indistinct characters tell the story in their own way. . . . Time is hardly a dimension in these tales, which have a curiously static air. With a few bare phrases the author conveys a feeling for the bleak, harsh surroundings in which his people live. . . . The translator has performed his mission well, though the crudity of the original expression is inevitably softened. His introduction is, perhaps, the best review of his book. The pen-and-ink drawings . . . admirably convey the spirit of these tales." I. A. Leonard

Sat R 51:66 Je 22 '68 550w

RUPEN, ROBERT A., ed. Vietnam and the Sino-Soviet dispute; ed. by Robert A. Rupen and Robert Farrell. 120p $5 Praeger

327.597 Vietnamese Conflict, 1961- 67-16684

"The studies offered here grow out of a symposium . . . held at the Institute for the Study of the USSR in Munich, Germany, from May 31 to June 2, 1966." (Pref) Contents: Background to the Vietnam War: an introduction, by Milton Sacks; North Vietnam's model of strategy and tactics for revolution, by P. J. Honey; Military considerations in Vietnam, by David Galula; Relations between the USSR and Vietnam, by W. B. Ballis; Relations between Communist China and Vietnam, by Joachim Glaubitz; The influence of the war in Vietnam on the economy of Communist China, by Bernhard Grossmann; Repercussions in Japan, by Richard Story; Panel discussion: The applicability of the policy of containment in Asia; Vietnam and the Sino-Soviet dispute: a summary, by R. A. Rupen.

"Major aspects of the Vietnamese crisis, as it relates to the Sino-Soviet dispute, are treated but, as one would expect from a symposium, with varying degrees of success. P. J. Honey's analysis of Vietnamese Communist revolutionary strategy is excellent; some of the other contributions are considerably less impressive. On the whole, although uneven and inevitably somewhat dated, this is a useful contribution to the rapidly growing literature on the Vietnamese crisis."

Choice 5:267 Ap '68 70w

"The fact that so much of what these [American and European] experts had to say almost two years ago is still relevant and apt testifies again to how little the conflict has changed over that time, despite the vast input of force on both sides. Perhaps the most interesting chapter is the one by P. J. Honey, a British scholar. . . . A related chapter by David Galula, a retired French army officer, examines why prodigious U.S. and Vietnamese efforts over several years have not been successful in overcoming [Communist advantages.] An American expert, Milton Sacks, concludes in a panel debate at the end of the book: 'The war in Vietnam exemplifies the incapacity of a great state—my own—to deal with revolutionary warfare. . . . [His concern] is not only or even mainly with Vietnam, but that similar situations will arise in other underdeveloped areas and that the U.S. will prove equally ill-equipped to deal with them there." C. W. Yost

Sat R 51:30 My 11 '68 430w

RUSHER, WILLIAM A. Special counsel. 304p $6 Arlington house

335.4 Communism—U.S. 68-18818
"Lawyer, anti-Communist, and National Review publisher Rusher here reviews his career . . . as special counsel of the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee in 1956-57." (Library J) Index.

"The quality of [Rusher's] prose is remarkably undistinguished. His breathless observations are mostly clichés; they are, however, right wing. Libraries that like to give 'equal time' to hack work of all political persuasions may be able to fill in a gap with this book."
Choice 5:1224 N '68 120w

"[This] is in many ways a bright, lively book of memoirs, slightly overwritten, but filled with vignettes of politicians, charlatans and opportunists so dear to the life of our national politics. Rusher [is] conservative by experience and background. . . . Quite apart from [his] views of Communism and liberalism, which understandably are negative, the book gives an intimate insight into the workings of the Communist movement within the U.S. and an even more illuminating peek behind the scenes of congressional and domestic politics. . . . This could be a controversial book; . . . it reflects the driving if somewhat simplistic motivation of troubled men trying to cope with a complex, imperfect society and trying to find in Communism the root cause of it all." R. F. Delaney
Library J 93:2508 Je 15 '68 230w

"An important book as recent history, highly pertinent to the present, and fascinating reading. . . . Rusher has selected seven [of the Senate subcommittee's investigations and staff studies] for detailed narration. . . . To all of them, he brings a lawyer's competence in organizing evidence and a natural writer's skill in depicting the people on both sides of the confrontations as well as the ambience of the period. . . . [This book] thus provides an intimate behind-the-scenes view of an enterprise normally seen only in the distorting mirrors of left-liberal invective. . . . Considering the author's feelings about the menace of Communism, the book is remarkably restrained. . . . Inferentially throughout, and directly in a final chapter of summation, it presents a persuasive defense of legislative investigations of Communist operations." Eugene Lyons
Nat R 20:612 Je 18 '68 1150w

RUSS, LAVINIA. Over the hills and far away. 160p $3.50 Harcourt

68-13371
Peakie Maston describes "her years from twelve to fourteen in Kansas City and a succession of boarding schools [of the early 1900's]. . . . Father was her friend with whom books were shared; mother—in father's eyes a genius who 'turned his life into a party'—enraged Peakie by laughing at her worries, and older sister Beatrice, who unfairly had good looks, three best friends, and then plenty of beaux, was an unkind tease." (Horn Bk)
"Ages eleven to fifteen." (N Y Times Bk R)

"When a noted reviewer of children's books writes a children's book herself, it's news. When the book is as good as this one, it is occasion for congratulations and cheers. Grownups who can remember back to World War I will take nostalgic delight in this fictional memoir. And girls of 12 or so will warm to the emotional Peakie, whose outlook on the world is wholly honest and individual." Polly Goodwin

Book World p26 (children's issue)
My 5 '68 250w

"A pleasing first-person vignette of life in rural Missouri in the early 1900's. . . . At times [Mrs. Russ's] story reads like a librarian's list of 'Best Books for Children.' Hardly a classic is missing as 12-year-old Peakie reads her way through several lonely years and many unhappy experiences. Books, coupled with a keen imagination, give her vicarious adventures. . . . Peakie's counterparts today may find her imaginary conversations with Jo March of [Louisa May Alcott's] 'Little Women' somewhat hard to believe, and they may agree at times with her sister: 'I wish you'd climb out of the books you read and live like other people.' But the story as a whole is a charming one—a refreshing backward glance into an era today's miniskirted teens have only heard grandparents tell about." Marilyn Gardner

Christian Science Monitor pB1 My 2 '68 190w

"Peakie's anguished words describing her [life] . . . are autobiographical experiences that will be remembered for their vividness and humor, and for the charming portraits of a striking family and their intimates. They reveal a wit, a lovable precocity, and an intensity that make Peakie herself an unforgettable adolescent. . . . A rare, wholly engrossing story." V. H.

Horn Bk 44:331 Je '68 180w

Reviewed by M. C. Young
Library J 93:2125 My 15 '68 110w

Reviewed by Polly Longworth
N Y Times Bk R p38 Mr 24 '68 150w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland
Sat R 51:39 Mr 16 '68 120w

RUSS, MARTIN. Happy hunting ground. 269p
$5.95 Atheneum pubs.

959.7 Vietnamese Conflict, 1961- —Personal narratives 68-16863

"The author, who saw action with the Marines in the Korean war, went to Vietnam to find out about this war and, as a free-lance writer, spent about six months on various fronts, with American, South Vietnamese, and Australian troops; his book, in the form of a diary, reflects day-by-day events and states of mind. He shared and describes the emotions of fighting men." (New Yorker)

"The author of The Last Parallel [BRD 1957], a Marine's account of fighting in Korea, felt a call to see Vietnam in 1966. This book . . . is a very personal but not impassioned report. There is blood and death on the pages but as in a novel of manners Mr. Russ speaks mostly of the heat, the taste of C-rations, civilian customs, and military boredom. He contrasts the personalities of dumb, lovable Marines and shrewd Australians. A minor wound allows him to observe medical practice and facilities. To many American families this book could serve as a kind of long, articulate letter home from their man in Vietnam helping them understand the way things are. Nothing is asked or answered about why they should be there." Collin Clark

Library J 93:985 Mr 1 '68 180w

"This exceptional book describes, in good, plain prose and with remarkable honesty, an appalling human activity—combat. . . . Like the soldiers, [the author] would be at times shocked by violence and at other times indifferent to it; at some moments careful and conscientious, at others dazed and silly. . . . What he gives here is a rational account of irrationality, made the more persuasive and comprehensible by his literary control."

New Yorker 44:182 Ap 13 '68 180w

Reviewed by Richard Dudman
Sat R 51:36 Je 15 '68 320w

RUSS, MARTIN. War memorial. 185p $4.50
Atheneum pubs.

67-11993

"Seven years after World War II Private Joe Shasta visits his former marine commander, Lieutenant Metraw, whom he has always idolized. Though Joe practically slept through the war, killing only one Japanese and that by accident, he lives for nothing but his war memories. Metraw, on the other hand, is trying his best to sell sewing machines and forget about the war." (Library J)

"The novel's most noticeable characteristic is the slapstick and often highly spiced humor with which Joe is presented as he blunders his way through life. . . . Whether or not Russ had a serious purpose in writing, Private Joe Shasta is a believable and amusing creation." R. E. Wagenknecht

Library J 92:135 Ja 1 '67 170w

"[This] is a whimsical, witty account of a veteran's postwar floundering; . . . and it is a gruesome flashback to the battle of Tarawa. . . . [Russ contrasts the] two scenes—bloody past and mundane present—in fine style, but with considerable fictional license. Shasta is as much a marine as Joe Palooka is a prize-fighter." Martin Levin

RUSS, MARTIN—Continued

N Y Times Bk R p40 Ja 22 '67 130w

"[The] flashback scenes are abrupt, macabre, and gruesomely humorous. The aimless searchings of the prodigal warrior are skillfully depicted. But the story seems to be notes for a novel, rather than a complete work; . . . the characters are cryptically sketched as the writing style. . . . [The reader] will have great difficulty pressing past the stark, arid shorthand of the narrative in order to find the bleak realities meant to underscore the story." Brian Garfield

Sat R 50:45 F 4 '67 260w

TLS p656 Je 20 '68 190w

RUSSELL, BERTRAND. The autobiography of Bertrand Russell, 1872-1914. 356p $7.95 Little

B or 92 (67-14453

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by Maurice Adelman
America 119:571 N 30 '68 70w

Reviewed by David Owen
Am Hist R 73:483 D '67 450w

Reviewed by Peter Shaw
Am Scholar 38:136 winter '68 2250w

Reviewed by M. H. Stone
Bul Atomic Sci 24:54 Ja '68 1150w

Reviewed by F. E. Sparshott
Canadian Forum 48:158 O '68 1850w

Reviewed by Jean Kellogg
Christian Century 85:1218 S 25 '68 1100w

Christian Science Monitor p11 J1 3 '68 460w

Reviewed by Warren Coffey
Commonweal 89:221 N 8 '68 3450w

Reviewed by Cyril Connolly
Critic 27:69 Ag '68 1300w

Reviewed by C. L. Mowat
Engl Hist R 83:575 J1 '68 1100w

Reviewed by Max Byrd
Nation 206:25 J1 8 '68 1000w

Reviewed by P. P. Witonski
Nat R 20:661 J1 2 '68 1350w

Reviewed by Stuart Hampshire
N Y Rev of Books 11:3 Ag 22 '68 2450w

Newsweek 72:70 J1 8 '68 750w

Va Q R 44:clxi autumn '68 140w

RUSSELL, BERTRAND. The autobiography of Bertrand Russell, 1914-1944. v2 418p pl $8.95 Little

B or 92 (67-14453)

This second volume "covers the period from the outbreak of the First World War . . . when [the author] was 42, to his return from the United States to England in 1944, when he was 72. . . . These were the years of his love-affairs with Ottoline Morrell and Colette O'Neill and his marriages to Dora Black and Patricia Spence. As a result of his strenuous opposition to the First World War he was fined, imprisoned and ejected from his lectureship at Trinity College, Cambridge. With his second wife he ran a progressive school for several years. . . . [He tells how] he was prevented from taking up a post at the City College of New York . . . [and] explains that the hard core of the book is an autobiography he dictated in 1931." (TLS) Index. For the first volume see BRD 1967 and 1968.

Reviewed by Ambrose Agius
Best Sell 28:149 J1 1 '68 460w

Reviewed by W. H. Gass
Book World p1 Je 16 '68 1100w

Christian Century 85:820 Je 19 '68 50w

Economist 227:xiii Ap 27 '68 380w

Reviewed by William Newman
Library J 93:1999 My 15 '68 190w

Reviewed by Kingsley Martin
New Statesman 75:548 Ap 26 '68 900w

"As with the first volume, [Russell] fixes on to the end of each chapter a fairly haphazard selection of letters. . . . This is a lamentable method, inartistic, and displaying an almost infinite capacity for taking no pains. Very many of the letters are extremely interesting, and almost all the narrative is good. But stacked together in this way, each section diminishes the interest of the other, since the reader must traverse every period of Lord Russell's life, from beginning to end, twice. . . . Yet out of this uneven work there is a marvelous essay in autobiography struggling to emerge, so that, for all the enjoyment of this book, one puts it down at the end with a feeling of disappointment, a sense of some great opportunity lost." Michael Holroyd

N Y Times Bk R p3 Je 16 '68 1350w

"Russell is one of the world's most penetrating thinkers within the disciplines of mathematics and philosophy, and one of the most provocative, not to say infuriating, outside them. Yet he has ventured only timidly and superficially into the field of self-confession. Now 96, he is nearly fanatical in his public utterances, notably those concerning his anti-American position on the Viet Nam war, but he is not a driven author who boldly and recklessly storms the secret vaults of his own life. He is more a Sunday writer, coyly playing it safe, as he wistfully leafs through some of the mementos and letters stored in an attic trunk. . . . A better sense of [Russell's] essential qualities emerges from a reading of A History of Western Philosophy [BRD 1945] than from this self-portrait."

Time 91:82 Je 28 '68 750w

"Although highly enjoyable, consistently entertaining and always admirable in its good sense and good nature this is, in many ways, an unsatisfactory book. Less than a third of it is Russell's own narrative. The rest is letters to and from him, and since these are in smaller print the disproportion is accentuated. . . . There are signs too that not much has been done to bring the 1931 text up to date; . . . the skimpiness of Russell's account of his life since 1920 leaves the reader crying for more. . . . In themselves the best letters are those of Conrad and of Desmond MacCarthy. Conrad is magisterially humorous, profoundly affectionate and always sensible. . . . The single letter from Desmond MacCarthy is the most delightful in the book."

TLS p412 Ap 25 '68 1200w

RUSSELL, CARL P. Firearms, traps, & tools of the mountain men. 448p il maps $12.50 Knopf 609 Frontier and pioneer life—The West.

Fur trade. Firearms. Trapping 66-10748

"Russell, best known for his Guns on the Early Frontier [BRD 1957] provides us with an account of the fur trade from its beginning in North America. Not only does he describe the knives, traps, and other iron tools and weapons of the trapper-trader, but he also tells us how they were used—to trap a beaver, make a dug-out canoe, or build a blacksmith's forge. He also provides a . . . discussion of the mutual benefits resulting from the cooperation of historians and archaeologists." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

Choice 5:1034 O '68 160w

Reviewed by M. G. Burlingame
J Am Hist 55:140 Je '68 290w

"More than an account of the ironwork of the mountain men, . . . this well illustrated book is a valuable reference work for any student of the American frontier." W. T. Hagan

Library J 93:1616 Ap 15 '68 130w

"[This] survey of iron artifacts of the trader-trapper during the first half of the 19th century—from the Lewis and Clark Expedition to the beginnings of the Westward emigration. . . . [is] useful mainly as a reference. . . . The chapter on firearms, with its wealth of ballistic information, should be of particular interest to gun collectors. The mountain man evidently had a strong sentimental attachment to his favorite knife or gun, imparting to it a personality of its own. . . . [The author's] principal sources were expedition inventories, suppliers' catalogues and archeological remains. [The book] is handsomely produced and contains more than 400 drawings of the items described."

N Y Times Bk R p30 Ja 28 '68 250w

Sci Am 219:162 N '68 650w

RUSSELL, FRANCIS. The world of Dürer, 1471-1528, by Francis Russell and the eds. of Time-Life books. 183p il col il $7.95 Time

759.94 Dürer, Albrecht 67-29856

"A general introduction to Dürer and his immediate predecessors and followers in painting and printmaking." (Choice) Chronology. Bibliography. Index.

"The book is a mixture of fact and fancy, well illustrated, but not fully reliable. . . It is not clearly indicated who wrote certain sections of the text. This departure from traditional procedures introduces an impersonal element which is not welcome. The book, unfortunately, does not reach the scholarly level of other books in the [Time-Life Library of Art] series."

Choice 5:617 J1 '68 70w

"Dürer's uncontested stature as the greatest genius among Renaissance masters of the Germanic North will make this new volume of the well-known series welcome to all those who, teachers, students, or friends of beautiful books, are interested in this representative man and his contemporary background. . . The excellent illustrations, accompanied by pertinent notes and essays on the facts of Dürer's life and the social, religious, and cultural issues of his transitional and revolutionary world at the threshold from medieval to modern life, present most of his significant masterpieces, many on full-page plates and in color." Felix Wassermann

Library J 93:538 F 1 '68 110w

Library J 93:1828 Ap 15 '68 10w [YA]

RUSSELL, JOHN. Max Ernst: life and work. 359p il col il $25 Abrams

709.44 Ernst, Max 67-22852

This biographical study by a British art critic contains an 'account of Max Ernst's youth in Cologne and of what he studied and read; of his first contacts locally with modern art from Paris; of his association with the group Das Junge Rheinland and what it stood for; of Dadamax's postwar activities in Cologne; of the purpose and workings of Dada; of the philosophico-literary principles of Surrealism, of its experiments, and of the internal squabbles between its adherents." (TLS) Bibliography. Index.

"This book is not only an important addition to the literature on Ernst, it is a useful supplement to that on Dada and Surrealism as well."

Choice 5:187 Ap '68 130w

"This is an ably written biography, well indexed and illustrated, a book for wide art collection purchase." M. M. Ferguson

Library J 93:539 F 1 '68 140w

"[Russell] amassed a great deal of biographical and historical material which he has duly written into the record. . . [However,] he is neither sensitive and helpful exegete nor yet an analytical art historian. And his style . . . seems to compete with Ernstian images and gets in the way of meaning. . . [The book] is well produced and illustrated with fifty colour plates and 446 in black-and-white (many very small). Also included are a skeleton biography, an incomplete bibliography and a wholly inadequate index."

TLS p252 Mr 14 '68 2300w

RUSSELL, RICHARD J. River plains and sea coasts. 173p il maps $8.75 Univ. of Calif. press

551.4 Geomorphology 67-17694

"How and why do rivers meander? How are deltas built? What is the origin of beach rock? Why are beaches losing sand? These are some of the questions to which [the author] has devoted a lifetime of research. . . [He] recounts, in an informal autobiographical vein, the stages of his investigations in alluvial morphology, stream patterns, coastal morphology, and tropical island problems." (Publisher's note) The materials in this book were originally presented as four lectures of the Charles M. and Martha Hitchcock Foundation Professorship at the University of California, Berkeley, in 1965. Chapter bibliographies. Index.

Choice 5:822 S '68 90w

"The book is not really technical, but will be heavy going for anyone lacking at least basic geological and geographic knowledge. It will be best used in academic and large public libraries by professionals, students, and conservationists." W. C. Allen

Library J 92:4514 D 15 '67 130w

"This short book does not pretend to be a highly technical presentation; it is, rather, a simply and clearly written autobiographical account of the author's important contributions to geomorphology. . . [The second half of the book] is based on Russell's studies since 1956. The summary here given by Russell is particularly valuable, for the publications are scattered and the studies not generally as widely known as those on rivers. . . Certainly not all of Russell's conclusions have won wide acceptance, but his contributions to geomorphology are enduring. His obvious love of fieldwork and the excitement of discovery are clearly revealed here; they are contagious. In an assigned reading list for a modern undergraduate course in geomorphology (physical geography) this small book may well be among the most valuable entries." L. H. Lattman

Science 160:670 My 10 '68 300w

RUSSELL, SOLVEIG PAULSON. The mushmen; il. by Imero Gobbato. 94p $3.50; lib bdg $3.23 Dodd

Fairy tales 68-12302

"Five squashy little Mushmen . . . bravely pushed through from Down There to Up Here. Getting home again would be a problem, but Mush Miller, Mush McCracken, Mello Mush, Mushkeegan, and Sush Mush boldly set about exploring the woods, furnishing Headquarters, and defending themselves from That Cat, who was huge and frightening." (Publisher's note) "Grades two to four." (Library J)

"Mrs. Russell's congeniality with leaf and tree, caterpillar and squirrel, makes life even at ground level fun to watch and wonder about. The pictures, almost one to a page, are perfect." D. B. Whitman

Book World p12 Ag 11 '68 100w

Reviewed by C. F. Ruffin

Christian Science Monitor pB5 My 2 '68

90w

"Unfortunately, the story plods along with no feeling of magic and none of the lightness of fantasy. The writing is pedestrian, as typified by the frequent use of the clumsy exclamation 'Stunker dunks and dismal didoes' and the names chosen by the little men. . . The illustrations are reminiscent of Disney's seven dwarfs." Dorothy Gunzenhauser

Library J 93:2116 My 15 '68 180w

"[Mushmen] are brave little fellows, coming to a bittersweet end. The publisher says this story is 'amusing yet thought-provoking.' Don't worry; it's not thought-provoking—just plain amusing." Jerome Beatty

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p46 My 5 '68 150w

RUSSELL, SOLVEIG PAULSON. Which is which? pictures by Gail E. Haley. 30p $3.50 Prentice-Hall

591 Animals—Juvenile literature 66-11697

This book brings together similar animals, insects and birds and discusses their differences. Included are butterflies and moths, monkeys and apes, toads and frogs and alligators and crocodiles, among others. "The pictures are not captioned, but are identified, in outline and on a smaller scale, on the final page." (TLS) "Grades one to three." (Library J)

"With brief, but explicit text and illustrations in pen-and-ink with color wash, the differences [between animals] are shown. . . The only fault is in the key to answers on the last page where the drawings and text are a little small for young children, but, since the illustrations and text in the body of the book are so well defined, it will not be necessary to use this key often. Recommended for school libraries especially, where it will be useful in primary grades and with older slow readers." E. T. Dobbins

Library J 91:4322 S 15 '66 120w

"Although well-presented and interesting, this book seems likely to create confusion rather than resolve. . . Like the old-fashioned spelling book which confronted one with their and there, hear and here, permanent confusion between similar objects is likely to occur."

TLS p1165 N 30 '67 90w

RUSO, WILLIAM. Jazz composition and orchestration. 825p $22.50 Univ. of Chicago press

781.6 Composition (Music). Instrumentation and orchestration 67-20580

The author discusses orchestration and transformation from a fundamental point of view. He "approaches from a new perspective . . . basic elements of musical craft (harmonic use of the modes) [and] of jazz craft (open position voicings). The book also deals with aspects of jazz quite personal to the author's experience, such as the division of the orchestra into five groups." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

RUSSO, WILLIAM—Continued

"This is not a general book on jazz composition but rather an exploration of Mr. Russo's unique viewpoint. He offers his own best description of the book as 'dense, oblique, and at times even polemical.' The book is aimed at teachers but it will require a dedicated and well-educated teacher to follow it to the very end. Each chapter contains exercises for students. . . . The book, however, is not intended as a history but rather a doorway to the future. Mr. Russo's kind of jazz represents only a small portion of today's jazz work which should be noted by purchasers and users. Those who are able to stay with his book to the end will learn a great deal." C. M. Weisenberg

Library J 93:3564 O 1 '68 200w

"Within their limitations, the arguments, well supported by examples from his own work, are convincing and simple enough. . . . If Mr. Russo's critique of the status quo and his musical analysis of harmony, counterpoint, voicing and form are scholarly and helpful, his overall musical sensibility has been, and will continue to be, criticized. . . . Nevertheless, technical knowledge, however erudite, can never do a jazz musician harm, and parts of Mr. Russo's book will be valuable for the practicing solo musician and for the studio arranger. Yet anyone acquainted with modern jazz will be surprised that there is so little mention, or analysis, of what has been played in the past and what is being played now. . . . By largely omitting musical example (other than his own) from a book on musical theory, Mr. Russo is in danger of losing precisely the audience which he aims to instruct."

TLS p1216 O 31 '68 800w

RUST, ERIC C. Science and faith; towards a theological understanding of nature. 330p $6.50 Oxford

215 Religion and science 67-28130

"An attempt to bring together current science and traditional trinitarian theism, including miracles and the Virgin Birth." (Choice) Subject index. Name index.

"[This volume] represents wide reading and hard thinking though it is not likely to convince anyone not already committed to this way of thinking. Rust is critical of reductionism, stresses the idea that scientific concepts are 'models' which allow us to control and predict but which do not exclude further depth of personal knowledge and insight. He discusses in broad terms evolution, . . . man as a psychosomatic whole, and incarnation and a sacramental universe. . . . Useful as showing that adherence to traditional theology is not necessarily based on ignorance. [I. G.] Barbour's Issues in Science and Religion [BRD 1967] is more objective and considers a wider range of positions."

Choice 5:762 S '68 140w

Christian Century 84:1381 O 25 '67 40w

"For Professor Rust, who occupies a chair of Christian philosophy at a Baptist seminary in Kentucky, revelation and science are definitely two languages and no more contradictory than French and English. . . . If he adds little that is new to an age-old topic, he commits no error more serious than conferring a peerage upon Sir Arthur Eddington; and he writes urbanely and persuasively."

TLS p757 J1 18 '68 220w

RUTGERS, ABRAM, ed. Birds of Australia. See Gould, J.

RUTHVEN, A. J. OTWAY-. See Otway-Ruthven, J. A

RUTSTEIN, DAVID D. The coming revolution in medicine. 180p $4.95 Mass. inst. of technology

610 Medicine. Medical care 67-27351

The "head of the department of preventive medicine at Harvard delivered these four lectures at Massachusetts Institute of Technology in the fall of 1966. [He begins] by examining medicine in the United States and the rest of the world through the indexes of life expectancy and infant mortality. . . . He next discusses specialization, the depersonalizing of the doctor-patient relationship, and efficient methods in medical practice. In the third lecture he deals with the possibilities and dangers involved in the use of computers and artificial organs. . . . In conclusion, he presents a general plan for medical practice, care, and education for the future, [making] the rational and most efficient use of a variety of medical personnel working compassionately within a broadly based program." (Library J) Index.

"Dr. Rutstein rightly condemns depersonalization of medicine. . . . [Yet] there is something lacking in this book, something perhaps symbolized by the author's uncompromisingly barren and humorless style, his lack of quotation or citation of authors or authorities outside the medical field. Dr. Rutstein gropes for some of the basic paradoxes involved in medical care, but he does not quite touch them. . . . [He] is perceptive and imaginative, but when one deals with topics as diverse as the ethics of artificial organ transplantation, the ideal medical school curriculum, the proper organization of hospitals, the duties of the modern nurse, and the place of osteopaths in health care, all in one hundred and forty-nine pages of nicely spaced type, it is hard not to be superficial and, at times, misleading. The newcomer to the field of medical education or planning will get from this book a brief, varied account of some problems and solutions, but the full-time worker in either area will only regret that Dr. Rutstein did not spend more time on fewer subjects." M. J. Halberstam

Am Scholar 37:346 spring '68 2100w

"While there are probably no other books with this specific focus on the wedding of computers and medicine, [other] recent works . . . cover many of the same topics. Minimal footnoting, no bibliography, and superficial treatment of most topics severely limit usefulness for academic or professional audiences. A further drawback is that [the] volume adds nothing new or original to the literature. As a general survey, it is well written and interesting."

Choice 5:374 My '68 150w

"Dr. Rutstein emphasizes in all of the lectures specific problems needing further research. This is a thought-provoking book that should be useful in most public, university, and medical libraries." W. K. Beatty

Library J 93:1009 Mr 1 '68 180w

Reviewed by E. T. Chase

New Repub 157:24 N 11 '67 1350w

Reviewed by M. J. Crichton

N Y Rev of Books p30 N 10 '68 280w

RYALS, CLYDE DE L. From the great deep: essays on Idylls of the king. 204p $5.50 Ohio univ. press

821 Tennyson, Alfred Tennyson, 1st Baron-- Idylls of the King 67-15456

"The author presents the Idylls of the King as the culmination of the poet's search for form (a unique blending of the dramatic, the narrative and the lyric) and as the poet's most profound comment on life. He . . . shows Tennyson as a modern poet with the vision of a Christian existentialist and the deep disquiet which presages the unrest of our own century." (Publisher's note) Index.

"Giving more credit to Tennyson as a philosophical thinker than have previous critics from the poet's own time to the present, Ryals offers a new, provocative, stimulating interpretation of the Idylls. . . . Ryals possibly explains some things too allegorically, too symbolically, too philosophically; but his ideas will surely give new life to Tennyson criticism. The book, extraordinarily well written as well as well argued, is excellent and recommended for advanced students who have read fairly widely in Tennyson criticism."

Choice 5:197 Ap '68 150w

"Mr. Ryals writes smoothly, uses memoirs and criticisms of Tennyson's contemporaries, and makes his point with quotations from the Idylls. Recommended for college libraries and public libraries with criticism collections." E. F. Waterman

Library J 92:1625 Ap 15 '67 130w

RYAN, JOHN JULIAN, jt. auth. Love and sexuality. See Ryan, M. P.

RYAN, MARLEIGH GRAYER. Japan's first modern novel; Ukigumo of Futabatei Shimei; tr. and critical commentary by Marleigh Grayer Ryan. (Columbia univ. East Asian inst. East Asian inst. study; UNESCO coll. of representative works; Japanese ser) 381p $10 Columbia univ. press

67-15896

"Hasegawa Tatsunosuke, who wrote under the pen name of Futabatei Shimei (Go to Hell), wrote Ukigumo (Drifting Clouds), . . . in the late 1880's. It is the tale of a young [Japanese] bureaucrat [Utsumi Bunzō] who, in being dismissed from his job because he refuses to play up to his chief, loses also his fiancée [Osei] because she wanted the security of his rank more than his love. . . . [Mrs. Ryan] also includes a biographical sketch of Futabatei, and a . . . discussion of his literary theories and his influence on the Japanese novel." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"The only available translation of this important 19th-century novel of early Japanese realism. . . . Aside from the values inherent in the novel itself, this work contains valuable critical and biographical material not previously assembled, which supersedes all earlier work on Shimei in English. Shimei's work is richly subtle, and it reveals a sensitivity and feeling for psychological realism suggestive of his association with the works of Turgenev. The love story is remarkable for its originality from an Occidental as well as an Oriental point of view. Recommended for all libraries."

Choice 5:63 Mr '68 110w

"[The story] reminds one of a Frank Norris novel, though it is told with a simplicity of style that Norris never achieved. Although the background is Japanese, the events are universal. The novel is a brief one, as are so many modern Japanese novels. Mrs. Ryan's translation is well adapted to the mood of the novel. This edition is obviously aimed at the scholar. It is too bad that an inexpensive paperback of just the novel itself has not been made available for the general reader." Walter Harding

Library J 92:2607 J1 '67 200w

Reviewed by Edward Seidensticker

N Y Times Bk R p32 Ag 27 '67 800w

"Not only a student of modern Japanese literature but anyone studying the modernization of Japan will gain a good deal of pertinent information from reading [the commentary]. . . . On the novel itself, Professor Ryan has a number of interesting things to say. . . . [including] her suggestion that Ukigumo is a finished work, for most Japanese scholars today do not think so. . . . Equally interesting is the section entitled 'Ukigumo as a Reflection of Meiji Life,' in which the novel's main characters are related to different phases of contemporary Japanese society. . . . [I] enjoyed the novel more in [Professor Ryan's] translation than in the original, partly because Futabatei's colloquial style . . . is uneven and shows too many remnants of the literary language. A Western reader will find the novel a delightful reading, whether or not he has an interest in its historical significance." Makoto Ueda

Pacific Affairs 40:386 fall-winter '67-'68 260w

TLS p9 Ja 4 '68 600w

RYAN, MARY PERKINS. Love and sexuality; a Christian approach [by] Mary Perkins Ryan & John Julian Ryan. 196p $4.95 Holt

176 Sexual ethics. Love 67-12909

The authors, who are the parents of five children, present "the interrelated ideas about life, love and sexuality with which we wish that we could have entered into adult life, and into marriage and parenthood. . . . [They include] the movements and thinking in the Church which were recognized by the Second Vatican Council." (Pref) Annotated bibliography.

"Taking an open and positive approach, the Ryans deal with delicate issues that have long been avoided or legalistically shelved. . . . Without minimizing 'the destructive potentialities of sexuality gone astray,' the authors declare that sexuality at all levels may naturally be seen as a shared pleasure and a delighting in the personhood of the other. In discussing masturbation, dating, homosexuality, premarital intercourse, marriage, contraception, abortion, divorce, celibacy, etc., the Ryans combine insights from modern psychology with the best of biblical and ethical thought. . . . An index would have made the book more easily usable, and case studies would have made it more nearly complete and less theoretical." Boyd Gibson

Christian Century 85:654 My 15 '68 400w

"Sexual introspection seems to be a Christian way of life, guidelines continue to be in demand. The Ryans offer a sane, sensible perspective in good, clear language."

Critic 26:94 Ap '68 50w

"Mr. and Mrs. Ryan are highly informed Catholics and skillful writers. . . . They believe that all of us have a vocation to love others; our sexuality makes this imperative, but marriage is totally 'a vocation to love.' However they question the dogma that all Christian marriages are indissoluble, because many people may not enter into marriage consenting to such a commitment. They also suggest that contraception may be one way of expressing real love in marriage when circumstances make having a large family undesirable. . . . [Their] whole approach is positive and idealistic, but not unrealistic in relation to all the changes now being discussed in the Church. Recommended for libraries with Catholic readers." E. T. Smith

Library J 92:3646 O 15 '67 190w

RYAN, WILLIAM L. The China cloud; America's tragic blunder and China's rise to nuclear power, by William L. Ryan & Sam Summerlin. 309p $7.95 Little

301.453 U.S.—Social policy. Science and state. Chinese in the U.S. 63-24245

The authors describe the lives and work of some of the Chinese scientists now in China who were trained in American universities. "Hsue-shen Tsien was a distinguished professor in aero- and astro-dynamics at California Institute of Technology and was planning to apply for United States citizenship; now, in 1968, he is a leader in China's nuclear missile program. [This is the] story of his dramatic transformation. . . . [Maintaining that] persecution of individuals in the name of national 'security' can only endanger true security in the long run, Ryan and Summerlin, both foreign correspondents for the Associated Press, also list and discuss more briefly other distinguished Chinese scientists who were trained in the United States and who are now helping to build China's nuclear arsenal." (Library J) Bibliography.

"Toward the end the narrative is padded with a tedious and irrelevant rehash of the power struggle during the Cultural Revolution. This book has an important point to make; for public and college libraries." Jack Weigel

Library J 93:3149 S 15 '68 200w

"[The authors] have put together an impressive research project dealing with the origins of China's nuclear know-how. . . . During the feverish Red hunts of the early 1950s, many of the scientists fled the U.S., while others were deported. Eighty returned to China—taking with them vast amounts of information—and were pressed into Mao Tse-tung's service. Ryan and Summerlin offer evidence that some would have stayed in America if given the chance. The authors attempt to trace their subjects' activities back home but, predictably, the book teeters for lack of authoritative information. It is clear enough, however, that the returning scientists did their job well."

Time 92:112 O 18 '68 150w

RYDER, A. J. The German revolution of 1918; a study of German socialism in war and revolt. 304p $11.50 Cambridge

943.085 Germany—History—1918-1933. Socialism—Germany—History 67-10057

The author, a lecturer at Cambridge University, begins by summarizing the origins and background of German socialism. He then describes "the events and issues of 1918 to 1920—from the naval mutiny of October, 1918, through the crushing of the risings of 1919 to the Kapp Putsch—in the context of German social and political developments since before 1914." (Economist) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by J. L. Snell

Am Hist R 73:1186 Ap '68 450w

Reviewed by Robert Scharf

Ann Am Acad 378:156 J1 '68 480w

"It is a real merit of the book that the context is carefully and intelligently painted in, but we must still wait for an adequate modern study of the German revolution. The present book is distinguished from its only competitor in English, [A.] Berlau's The German Social Democratic Party, 1914-1921 [BRD 1950], by being markedly more thoughtful and better written. It is not, however, up to the level of modern (German) scholarship on the subject, nor is it ultimately very profound. Though it is therefore not about to become a classic, it still should be very useful for advanced students of modern Europe."

RYDER, A. J.—Continued

Choice 4:1307 Ja '68 150w

"[This] book is exhaustive—admirably so in its use of the contemporary evidence, perhaps excessively so in its canvassing of the problems of interpreting this. It is also irritating occasionally, as a result of [the author's] forgetting that in historical and political explanations the greater often excludes the less. . . . This defect apart, the book deserves great praise. . . . Of the complicated history of the prevarications and divisions of the German socialists in this period, in particular, it provides an account that could hardly be bettered for lucidity and balance."

Economist 225:59 O 7 '67 460w

Reviewed by Geoffrey Barraclough
New Statesman 74:686 N 17 '67 250w

RYNNE, XAVIER. Vatican council II. 596p $10
Farrar, Straus

262 Vatican Council, 2d 67-21527

A one-volume version of four books published separately: Letters From Vatican City (BRD 1963), The Second Session (BRD 1964), The Third Session (BRD 1965) and The Fourth Session (BRD 1966). The chronologies, lists of speakers and documentary appendices are omitted. Index.

Best Sell 27:385 Ja 1 '68 100w

Reviewed by Creighton Lacy
Christian Century 85:558 Ap 24 '68 120w

"The type has been reset, but only minor changes have been made in the text. . . . Xavier Rynne is the pseudonym of one of the best reporters and analysts of the Council, but libraries which have the original volumes will not need this revision." W. C. Heiser
Library J 92:4162 N 15 '67 80w

RYSKIND, ALLAN H. Hubert; an unauthorized biography of the Vice President. 355p $5.95 Arlington house

B or 92 Humphrey, Hubert Horatio 68-22456

A biography of the vice-president of the United States. Bibliography. Index.

"'Hubert,' of course, is Vice-President Humphrey who is categorically attacked throughout for being, among other things, inconsistent and hypocritical, an idolater of socialism, labor unions, and LBJ. . . . [The author] definitely does not want him to become President. The book is similar to those written by the 'Roosevelt haters' of the 1930's or, in a lesser degree, to Victor Lasky's JFK: The Man and the Myth [BRD 1963]. Only those libraries that collect campaign literature will want this book." Perry Armin
Library J 93:2647 Jl '68 100w

"Is Hubert Humphrey 'soft on Communism'? The answer depends, quite clearly, on what one means by the phrase. In his well-documented biography of the Democratic nominee, Allan Ryskind explores the matter at enlightening length. . . . [The book] contains a good deal of information about Humphrey's career in other respects." M. S. Evans
Nat R 20:1122 N 5 '68 850w

"[The author is] of the far right and is] out to prove that Hubert Humphrey is the devil incarnate. [He] fails at that. [He] succeeds in documenting that Humphrey is a shrewd, glib, compromising, fancy-stepping pragmatist—in short, the sort of fellow we usually choose to be our President. Allan Ryskind [is] an editor of the conservative journal Human Events. . . . [His book] abounds with the curious catchphrases and sly arguments of the far right. . . . Nonetheless, when Ryskind abandons dogma for simple fact-gathering, he does get in some sharp jabs to the Vice President's midsection. [He] documents in loving detail Humphrey's amazing acrobatics with anti-Communist legislation in the early 1950's." Patrick Anderson
N Y Times Bk R p1 Jl 21 '68 800w

Reviewed by Donald Young
Sat R 51:42 N 7 '68 1000w

S

SAAB, GABRIEL S. The Egyptian agrarian reform: 1952-1962. (Royal Inst. of int. affairs. Middle Eastern monograph) 236p $8 Oxford

333 Land tenure, Agriculture—Egypt, Agriculture and state 67-845701

This volume describes "Egyptian land reform during the first decade of the Nasser regime. The formal laws, their application, and their success or failure in practice are examined." (Choice) Bibliography.

"Dr. Gabriel Saab was farming in the Nile Delta at the time of the revolution and later served in various departments of the UAR government as well as with the F.A.O. Later he was Director of the Institute of Rural Economics in Beirut. . . . He no longer lives in the UAR and has been free to write this frank, perceptive appraisal. . . . It is not likely that other nations will copy the Egyptian Agrarian Reform; but no scholar interested in this topic or in the UAR should fail to read Saab's descriptive and factual book. Theoretical economists will miss any references to the actual planning process; to input/output ratios; to zero marginal productivity; to balance of payments difficulties or under-employment. But if one wishes to know how it was done in Egypt this is a very clear description." A. L. Gray
Am Econ R 57:1411 D '67 1100w

"[Saab] concludes that reductions in ceilings on land ownership to roughly five acres per family (from the present limit of 100) are likely and that 'an egalitarian redistribution' would provide an average of 2.5 acres of land to approximately 2.5 million farm families, leaving only 200,000 families (or about 1,000,000 persons) landless. Such a rosy prognosis may well raise skeptical eyebrows. As the only detailed, full-length English language study of the most ambitious agrarian reform effort in the Arab Middle East, this study belongs in every comprehensive college library."

Choice 4:1160 D '67 140w

Economist 222:1043 Mr 18 '67 550w

"Dealing with the economy of a country for which detailed information and above all reliable statistics are so scarce, [Mr. Saab] has been in a position to obtain firsthand evidence of the operations of the land reform programme through visits he paid during 1959-60 to nearly half of the regional administrative centres established to implement the provisions of the 1952 law. . . . [However] he is very sparing with the details of how he obtained his material. . . . He presents a number of general statements about some of the most controversial aspects of Egyptian agricultural development without references of any kind. . . . Leaving politics aside, the one really important agricultural development of recent years was . . . the extension to the whole of rural Egypt of the system of supervised cooperatives pioneered in the original agrarian reform districts, the evolution of which Mr. Saab has so admirably described."

TLS p171 Mr 2 '67 1100w

SAAVEDRA, YOLANDO PINO-. See Pino-Saavedra, Y.

SACHS, ARIEH. Passionate intelligence: imagination and reason in the work of Samuel Johnson. 124p $4.95 Johns Hopkins press

828 Johnson, Samuel 67-12422

The author's purpose is "to show the inner coherence of Johnson's thought by pointing out the interconnectedness of his remarks on religious, moral, aesthetic, political and psychological subjects. Reason and Imagination, the central concepts in the Johnsonian ethos, are elucidated with reference to 'vacuity,' 'attention,' 'novelty,' 'diversity,' and other words to which Johnson attached special significance. . . . [Dr. Sachs is] primarily concerned with the relation between Johnson's ideas and the long tradition of which they are the culmination." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

Choice 5:346 My '68 250w

"The main contribution of this volume is Professor Sachs's assertion that for Johnson, reason and imagination are the basic sets of concepts that form the context of human endeavor. This assertion is traced and tested throughout the corpus of Johnson's work, with special emphasis on Rasselas and the Rambler papers. This original and valuable essay should be a part of every library which claims to represent 18th Century British literature adequately." J. A. Rycenga

Library J 92:2779 Ag '67 200w

"There is much of interest here—some good pages on Johnson and stoicism . . . and a gathering together of various passages from Johnson's writings which are mutually illuminating. . . . Any attempt to demonstrate the unity of Johnson's thought is laudable. However, there are serious deficiencies in this book. Dr. Sachs uses terms such as 'imagination', 'fancy', 'pride', and others in a specially restricted sense. He is aware of this, . . . but the result is that much of the rich complexity of Johnson's thought is ironed out. At other times Dr. Sachs simply misreads Johnson's text."

TLS p318 Mr 28 '68 500w

SACHS, MARILYN. Veronica Ganz; il. by Louis Glanzman. 156p $3.50; lib bdg $4.25 Doubleday

68-11813

"At thirteen Veronica, the bully of her school in the Bronx, hasn't got a friend. Afraid of being made fun of because she's so big, she has long since beaten (boys) or slapped (girls) her classmates into subservience. (She also enjoys making sport of teachers and a librarian.) Then a new boy arrives. Although small, Peter is smart and he side-steps Veronica's persistent attempts to pulverize him. At last the big girl and the undersized boy have a confrontation, which brings some pleasant surprises for the belligerent Veronica. . . . Ages nine to twelve." (Book World)

"Veronica Ganz is a Harriet-the-Spy-type heroine. But Harriet [in L. Fitzhugh's Harriet The Spy, BRD 1965] was from a rich home and expressed her hostility in writing, whereas Veronica is from a poor home and releases her anger by means of physical violence. . . . Mrs. Sachs writes in a light, breezy, amusing way that makes for easy reading. She is very good at showing family life realistically rather than as people would like it to be. The 'everything's going to be all right now' ending, however, may be a bit unrealistic for someone with as much anger inside her as Veronica." R. G.

Book World p18 (children's issue)
My 5 '68 250w

Christian Science Monitor pB7 My 2 '68 80w

"[This story] has warmth and reality. Several subplots about Veronica's family and divorced parents are skillfully introduced but not resolved. . . . Marilyn Sachs has here fulfilled the promise of her earlier books, but she has erred in pinning this story to the pre-World War II period (by mentioning Woolworth prices, ■ stepfather's Roosevelt button), because the book might have greater appeal and immediacy for today's readers had it been set in a present day big city where French lessons in a public elementary school, a curriculum flip relatively rare in the 1930's, would be not only more credible but more familiar. Adults may quaver at Veronica's bullying but children will recognize and take to their hearts this anti-heroine." Peggy Sullivan

Library J 93:1803 Ap 15 '68 150w

Reviewed by Nancy Griffin
N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p32 My ■ '68 240w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland
Sat R 51:40 My 11 '68 140w

SACHS, MOSHE Y., ed. Worldmark encyclopedia of the nations [3d ed]. See Worldmark encyclopedia of the nations

SACHS, NELLY. O the chimneys; sel. poems, incl. the verse play, Eli; tr. from the German by Michael Hamburger [and others]. 387p $7.50 Farrar, Straus

831 67-27518

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Choice 5:56 Mr '68 140w

Reviewed by F. J. Raddatz
Commentary 46:90 O '68 2900w

Reviewed by Louise Bogan
New Yorker 43:136 Mr 30 '68 80w

Reviewed by Hayden Carruth
Poetry 112:418 S '68 550w
Va Q R 44:cv summer '68 140w

SACKMAN, HAROLD. Computers, system science, and evolving society; the challenge of man-machine digital systems. 638p il $14.50 Wiley

651.8 Automation. Electronic computers. Technology and civilization 67-19943

The author "deals with what is called man-computer communication. Much emphasis is upon the SAGE system and on man-computer communication in the system, its development and division of labor between man and the machine. One chapter deals with the philosophy of time." (Choice) Glossary. Indexes of authors and of subjects.

"A publication more sociological than strictly technical though many samples of systems development are given, including some that have not found extensive publication before. . . . Should be of special interest to the military and to those dealing with the problems of the astronauts. A very good reference book, not an undergraduate textbook. Each chapter ends with an excellent summary of the material treated and many line diagrams showing management and operation of the systems discussed. Besides a good summary, references are given at the end of each chapter."

Choice 5:523 Je '68 130w

"To bring pragmatism up to date, so to speak, Harold Sackman has written a penetrating review of the use of man-machine digital systems in social experimentation. . . . [He] closes his book by developing a theory and philosophy of the social prospects of man-machine digital systems, in which he draws heavily on the writings of the pragmatists. Perhaps I should say that he outlines such a theory and philosophy, rather than develops it, for this frustrating section of the book presents an imposing list of desiderata of social experimentation, rather than a detailed account of how the desired features are to be implemented." C. W. Churchman

Science 159:965 Mr 1 '68 1300w

SACKS, RAYMOND. Magnets; il. by Stefan Martin. 45p lib bdg $2.86 Coward-McCann

538 Magnets—Juvenile literature 66-13144

"The author explains in the simplest terms the properties of magnets, the magnetic field, and the arrangement of atom groups (the word 'molecule' is not used) in the magnet. . . . Ages seven to nine." (Sat R)

"The practical learning-by-doing approach in this book makes it a good supplement to textbooks. . . . [It] is distinguished by clear drawings and easy-to-follow directions for basic experiments which encourage individual efforts." R. P. Hennings

Library J 93:1792 Ap 15 '68 80w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland
Sat R 51:41 Ap 20 '68 60w

SACKS, SEYMOUR, jt. auth. Metropolitan America. See Campbell, A. K.

SADIE, STANLEY. Beethoven. 76p pl $3.95 Crowell

B or 92 Beethoven, Ludwig van—Juvenile literature 67-12295

This chronological account of both the man and the musician "is illustrated with contemporary pictures of Beethoven and the places where he lived and worked, and with facsimiles of his manuscripts. There are also many examples of his music . . . chosen and set out so that they can be played on the piano." (Publisher's note) Index. "Grade six and up." (Library J)

"A well written biography. . . . Unfortunately, the presentation of musical examples is confusing and [inconsistent] . . . some are simplified for easy reading by unskilled players, and yet some of the complicated, multi-voiced vocal excerpts are not clarified. . . . The photographs and lithographs of the time are outstanding." L. L. Widdoes

Library J 92:4626 D 15 '67 160w

SADIE. STANLEY—Continued

"The wording is simple, the manner straightforward, the information sound and scholarly. . . . It is a great pity, however, that the excellent, sensible text and the few well-chosen illustrations were not matched by equal care over the many music examples. . . . One suspects that the music itself was prepared by a less expert hand and never checked."

TLS p738 Ag 17 '67 400w

SAFIRE, WILLIAM L. The new language of politics; an anecdotal dictionary of catchwords, slogans, and political usage. 528p $15 Random house

320.03 U.S.—Politics and government—Dictionaries 68-14508

Safire, a public relations executive, explains the words, slogans, and phrases of politics such as 'calculated risk,' 'bunk,' 'cemetery vote,' and 'demagogue.' He provides . . . information on recent political history in the course of explaining terms and phrases." (Library J)

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 222:96 Ag '68 40w

Reviewed by J. G. Harrison

Christian Science Monitor p7 Je 27 '68 420w

"Those who are interested in politics will find this dictionary helpful. Standard terms of government usually available in dictionaries are not included. . . . [Safire] states that various phrases as used in political combat are intended to paint word pictures and are 'designed to rally many men, to destroy some and to change the minds of others.' The written sources he has consulted are listed. . . . Recommended for public libraries." S. D. Nerboso

Library J 93:2472 Je 15 '68 160w

New Yorker 44:183 S 28 '68 100w

"In herding together, classifying and clarifying the epidemic of catchwords and phrases that infects the news media, [the author] sketches a pointillist portrait of the American political landscape. . . . [He] embroiders these emblems of our time with historical footnotes, anecdotal applications and humorous observation. . . . Despite its rather austere double-column formal and small type, the book is not essentially scholarly. . . . No one is expected to read this tome straight through. But even as a bedside snack, it suffers from an unavoidable commitment to the commonplace. . . . Read selectively, [it] is both an interesting commentary on the mood of America now and a scrapbook of American history." P. D. Z.

Newsweek 71:103 Je 24 '68 500w

Reviewed by D. M. Glixon

Sat R 51:59 N 16 '68 60w

SAGAN, FRANÇOISE. The heart-keeper; tr. from the French by Robert Westhoff. 128p $3.95 Dutton

68-25788

Dorothy Seymour, a Hollywood script writer, and her lover, "Paul Brett, almost run over a young acid-head who is wandering around the highway at night. This is Lewis and he is on his latest LSD trip. Dorothy . . . takes him to her home where . . . he becomes infatuated [with her] and tries to murder anyone who insults her)." (Best Sell) This is a translation of Le Garde du Coeur.

"Readers will have to look hard for a book which is as insubstantial and as unsatisfying as [this. It] . . . has the distinction of being the first Sagan novel with a completely American setting. It may be that Miss Sagan was unable to adapt her writing to a new environment, especially to a Hollywood setting. In any case, there is little in this recent work to raise it above the status of a pot-boiler." Peter Corodimas

Best Sell 28:335 N 15 '68 330w

Reviewed by A. C. Foote

Book World p4 N 3 '68 800w

Reviewed by S. H. Begley

Christian Science Monitor pB10 N 29 '68 230w

"[This book is written] with Gallic wit, tenderness, and an unflinching eye for the ridiculous detail. [The author] punctures one melodramatic situation after another through the medium of her heroine's continuous self-awareness. . . . Along with its satirical verve, this novelette contains aphorisms, epigrams, even paragraphs in praise of homely happiness and the joy of living. Delightfully absorbing." S. L. Fell

Library J 93:3157 S 15 '68 140w

Reviewed by Sara Blackburn

Nation 207:539 N 18 '68 110w

Reviewed by Stanley Reynolds

New Statesman 76:504 O 18 '68 110w

"[This is] a puzzle—a book that does not work, that baffles us with its self-contradictions, that resembles the author's best work to the point of parody. . . . The suspicion of a spoof of some kind dawns early. . . . But the suspicion remains an edgy thing, never altogether confirmed. . . . Mostly what we get is stale Hollywood ambience. . . . There is also an up-to-dateness that is, somehow, equally stale. . . . When a good writer gives us a book that does not come off, we long to know what the writer intended. . . . [But] the book draws eventually to its close without relieving our distress." Norman Rosen

N Y Times Bk R p5 N 10 '68 1050w

"Françoise Sagan's latest novel is reassuringly familiar; here are boredom, the quest for happiness, and the sexual passion of middle age for youth. . . . The Hollywood setting is new, but seems a flimsy covering. The dialogue is, as ever, absurd, and particularly so in English. As Americans, the protagonists are unconvincing. . . . Yet Mlle. Sagan has a certain instinctive knowledge of a few characters, who reappear in her novels in different disguises. The interest [here] lies in the exposition of these oft-frequented psyches rather than in the unprecedented occurrence of multiple murder. It has enough of the indefinable somnambulant charm of the earlier novels to nullify charges of superficiality or inaccuracy. It is tasteless and melodramatic, but never boring."

New Yorker 44:201 N 2 '68 170w

Time 92:104 N 1 '68 260w

ST CLAIR, WILLIAM. Lord Elgin and the marbles. 309p pl $6.75 Oxford

733 Elgin, Thomas Bruce, 7th Earl of. Sculpture, Greek [67-92112]

The book covers the later years of Lord Elgin's life "so disastrously affected by the magnificent collection of Greek sculpture which now bears his name. The author writes essentially about the famous marbles, their manner of removal from Greek monuments and their vicissitudes before coming to rest in the British Museum." (Class World) Bibliography.

Reviewed by Ruth Emery

Am Hist R 73:1153 Ap '68 450w

"Although not intended as a full biography of Lord Elgin, this book serves most admirably as a summary introduction to the later years of his life. . . . [The author] does his best to be impartial and he makes it quite clear that there was a varied assortment of intense nationals, British and otherwise, actively involved in the scandal—if such it was. His account cannot help but evoke pity for Lord Elgin, whose private life and public career were ruined by the affair. Mr. St. Clair's style is precise, factual and most pleasing; the book altogether is quite enjoyable and very informative." K. D. Matthews

Class World 61:256 F '68 300w

Economist 224:580 Ag 12 '67 750w

"Mr. St. Clair's book, in lieu of the full biography which remains to be written, is a measured, well-founded, wise, witty and intensely interesting vindication. Going back wherever possible to primary sources, and making good use of important unpublished material, it gives the first full and authoritative account of how the Elgin Marbles came to this country. . . . [It is an] admirably controlled account, succinct and convincing on a subject full of temptations for exaggerated claims."

TLS p620 Jl 13 '67 1200w

SAINZ, GUSTAVO. Gazapo! tr. from the Spanish by Hardie St Martin. 179p $4.95 Farrar, Straus

67-15014

In this first novel, by using fragments of a single week—"diaries, letters, recorded tapes, elaborations of one incident gone into by various characters, telephone conversations—Sainz constructs his [story] of the intermingled lives and dreams of a band of teenagers. They aspire to the sexual bravura of young animals. . . . At the center of this world is Menelao, half-boy, half-man, who has broken with his family to live on his own and concentrate on his seduction of innocent, timid Gisela. . . . In the cafés, apartments, and streets of Mexico City, Menelao, Gisela, and their crowd confirm the value they place on friendship, glimpse the secrets of love, and find reassurance that the world their elders make is hateful and tiresome." (Publisher's note)

Reviewed by Alan Levensohn
Christian Science Monitor p11 Ag 8 '68
550w

"Although Hardie St. Martin has translated the work into very relaxed, colloquial English, [this] is a rigid little book that is so overintention on how it is made that it is seldom engrossing for more than a few pages at a time." Sara Blackburn
Nation 207:91 Ag 5 '68 130w

Reviewed by Richard Gilman
New Repub 159:30 Ag 17 '68 390w

"This novel is a brilliant celebration of the comedy of life. . . . In the end, the media-metaphor becomes as much a sexual statement as the exploits themselves. Eventually, of course, these boy-men discover that they must face their girl-women alone. This is the comic underpinning of the novel, and it is to the author's credit that he maintains a simplicity of plot in so baroque a structure. . . . Because of the novel's structure, its grotesquerie of incidents, its theme of the distaste of generations and technological sex, the fleshy, human seduction of a boy by a girl (and vice versa) takes on special dimensions. . . . This is a performance that deserves an audience." Stephen Geller

N Y Times Bk R p32 J1 21 '68 370w
New Yorker 44:248 N 23 '68 100w

"The untranslatable title is defined as '1. Young rabbit. 2. Sly, astute man (colloquial). 3. A big lie, a whopper. 4. Something cacophonous or indecent or vulgar.' This disjointed work tends to fall most into the last definition. The mindless, repetitive obscenities of undirected adolescents, who clearly 'don't trust anyone over thirty' or even younger, soon grow tiresome, and the nearly unrelieved eroticism of the descriptions of the preliminaries to the sexual act seem, on the whole, more prurient than artistic. Except for the frequent mention of street names of Mexico City, the setting might well be any large municipality of the Western world, and the careless actions and crude language are, perhaps, characteristic of unmotivated youth everywhere. To this extent only the work possesses a certain universality." I. A. Leonard
Sat R 51:24 Ag 3 '68 280w

SAIYIDAIN, K. G. Universities and the life of the mind. 236p $5.25 Asia pub.

378 Education, Higher SA66-7052

"This book analyses the crucial role played by the mind of man in broadening and deepening his life and giving it enduring meaning. It also refers to the part played by universities generally in this process and examines at length the situation in Indian universities at present." (Publisher's note) Index.

"[A] highly articulate plea for general and not specialized education to meet the fundamental needs of one developing nation, India. . . . Written by a wise and cosmopolitan Indian Muslim, his well rounded argument—which is not a restatement of old platitudes but has a forward thrust—will appeal not only to educators in India and in other developing nations but to all involved in higher education. Even those who would argue that Saiyidain fails to face up to the crass practicalities of the times, and offers no concrete alternative to programs of technology and specialization in higher education for developing nations, will find this book worthwhile."

Choice 4:1294 Ja '68 150w

"Saiyidain's aversions range from prescribed examinations to untimely progressivism. He zigzags from Russell to Cubberley, Einstein to the Encyclopedia Britannica, pressing home an appeal for improved Indian universities strangely resembling Oxbridge-Harvard composites. Method aside, though, his vision of a university which will 'improve standards of living . . . and not put up with physical and mental slums all around it,' if not wholly original, is undeniably timely." John Calam
Sat R 50:66 Ag 19 '67 100w

SAKLATVALA, BERAM. Arthur: Roman Britain's last champion. 221p il maps $5.95 Tapplinger

942.01 Arthur, King. Great Britain—History —To 1066 67-19281

Maintaining that behind the legendary King Arthur there is a real and historic person, the author "studies the historical background of Roman Britain and its . . . ruler Arthur. He sifts the various sources for the period and its hero, and attempts to produce a consistent picture." (Library J) Appendix: Arthurian sites in Britain. Chronology. Index.

Choice 5:674 J1 '68 100w

"Unfortunately, [Saklatvala] lacks the dexterity required for such scholarly knots. His handling of sources is unsophisticated to say the least, failing to make sufficient allowances for lapses of time and prejudiced historians. His style embodies all this in dull and unpolished prose. Neither scholars nor libraries will need this book." D. K. Fry
Library J 93:74 Ja 1 '68 120w

"The author proceeds [to describe Arthur] by fitting into a large pattern various bits of history, pseudo-history, philology, folklore, and pure fiction. The sheer ingenuity of the enterprise has its own fascination, but ultimately the reader comes to feel so divorced from reality that he would trade the whole glittering mosaic for one or two irrefutable facts." TLS p1126 N 30 '67 330w

SALAH-BEY, ANISSE, jt. auth. Trade unionism in Africa. See Meynaud, J.

SALISBURY, CHARLOTTE Y. Asian diary. 158p il $4.95 Scribner

915 Asia—Description and travel 68-11360

"From May through July 1966 [the author and her husband, an assistant managing editor of the New York Times], . . . traveled on the periphery of China. . . . Now Charlotte Salisbury presents her travel diary of their visits to Hong Kong, Cambodia, Thailand, Burma, India, Sikkim, Mongolia, Siberia, and Japan." (Library J)

"Salisbury has done well for her first book. She has written a fine narrative of her journey. . . . The limited political content of the book reflects the thinking of her famous husband. . . . The book is neither scholarly nor sensational. It is just a good travelogue of harder-than-usual-to-visit countries. It has a place in the libraries of high schools and women's clubs."

Choice 5:1026 O '68 90w

"Mrs. Salisbury had no previous acquaintance with the Orient and sees it with fresh tourist eyes. The couple, however, had access to places now closed to the ordinary tourist and even brief glimpses of Burma and Mongolia are of particular interest. [The author] focuses on the people, the food, and the scenery; her descriptions are graphic. She emerges as a concerned and kindly American woman, passionately opposed to the war in Vietnam and to the damage she believes that war has done to the American reputation in Asia. This is a simple, plain, and diverting account of a hurried trip to some of the world's most interesting and troubled places that will be of interest to general readers and perhaps to younger teen-age girls." Muriel Weins

Library J 93:78 Ja 1 '68 180w [YA]

Reviewed by N. J. Gallo

Nation 206:614 My 6 '68 20w

N Y Times Bk R p22 F 13 '68 320w

SALMON, E. T. Samnium and the Samnites. 446p il maps $13.50 Cambridge

913.37 Samnites 67-10781

"After chapters on the sources and the landscape [the author] surveys . . . the people and culture of Samnium [and] its political travails from 354 B.C. to the Roman Empire." (Class World) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by H. C. Boren

Am Hist R 73:1488 Je '68 350w

Choice 5:847 S '68 170w

"This is a useful book, the product of protracted research in an area too much neglected. The conscientious historian, while grateful for the study in depth, will feel moments of unease [with the historical aspects of the study]. The evidence is almost entirely Roman, and the Romans were not much inclined to put themselves in their opponents' place; the course of the Samnite wars, moreover, was subject to the distortion of Roman family pride and the elaborations of the Republican annalists. . . . The volume has an abundance of documentation along with bibliography, plates and adequate maps; but the tale of the belliger Samnis is not quite um much 'one of stirring interest' as it might have been. The style is jerky, and incisive interpretation is somewhat hampered by the fact-bound approach in these well-printed pages." C. G. Starr

SALMON, E. T.—Continued

Class World 61:304 Mr '68 200w

"The Cambridge University Press has again upheld its reputation with the publication of this book by one of the better scholars in early Roman history, E. T. Salmon, currently Messer Professor of History at McMaster University in Ontario. . . . No student or scholar of ancient history should forgo reading this work and every library which has academic aspirations should purchase it. Only the larger public libraries will buy this book which is for the scholar or the well-informed layman." F. M. Lauritsen

Library J 93:549 F 1 '68 200w

TLS p618 Je 13 '68 750w

SALMON, PAUL. Literature in medieval Germany. (Introductions to German literature, v.1) 284p $5.75 Barnes & Noble

830.9 German literature—History and criticism 68-1865

"The author describes his book as a 'brief Introduction' . . . which he hopes will 'give guidance to the serious student of [the period from 800 to 1500] . . . and 'provide a first introduction for a more general reader.' . . . The book provides an account of the development within German literature from the Old High German period to the late Middle Ages with the emphasis . . . on the Middle High German period." (Mod Lang J)

"[This] work is scholarly and, though admirably compact, does not fall into the error of treating literature in isolation, but sets it against the historical and cultural background of the period. . . . Extensive bibliography lists editions, translations, and commentaries, especially the more recent ones."

Choice 5:490 Je '68 90w

"Dr. Salmon presents a great deal of sound information, well-balanced and well-evaluated. It is, however, as a guide to the literature of medieval Germany that this book has its greatest merit, for the bibliography . . . is admirably organized and selected. . . . The text as an introduction and the bibliography as a guide complement each other, but each is valuable in its own right and the reader can easily consult one, the other, or both since the index reflects the dual function of the work and clearly distinguishes textual references from bibliographical references. While this book is not intended for the professional medievalist, it should be made available in every college library." J. E. Engel

Mod Lang J 52:374 O '68 550w

SALSBURY, STEPHEN. The state, the investor, and the railroad: the Boston & Albany, 1825-1867. 404p 11 maps $10 Harvard univ. press

338.7 Boston and Albany Railroad. Railroads 67-20881

A study of the "promotion in Massachusetts of a main-line railroad or canal project to the Hudson River, stressing the role of a coalition between Boston merchants and manufacturers of the Connecticut Valley towns, especially Springfield. . . . [The author gives an] account of early railroad construction, management, and technical and administrative innovation. . . . [and includes] vignettes of leading B & W and Western management figures; analysis of rate making policies and their effects on traffic; an . . . account of inter-railroad rivalries and coalitions; [and of the] uses of leverage to obtain legislative aid." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by R. C. Overton
Am Hist R 73:1638 Je '68 360w

"Highly detailed, well written, absorbing analysis of Boston's railroads westward. . . . E. C. Kirkland's Men, Cities and Transportation [BRD 1948] . . . remains the standard [but] Salsbury contributes more depth on internal railroad management. Highly recommended."

Choice 5:404 My '68 210w

"In his detailed study of the economic needs which led to the building of [this railroad] . . . Mr. Salsbury, assistant professor of history at the University of Delaware, shows that such major matters as the source of capital, return on investment, rate structure, and administration and mechanical operations were far from settled in the beginning. Students of economic history will find the book of interest although there is little in it for the rail buff or general reader. Recommended for research collections only." T. M. Bogle

Library J 92:3634 O 15 '67 110w

Reviewed by Thomas LeDuc
New Eng Q 41:301 Je '68 650w

SALZMAN, JACK, ed. Years of protest: a collection of American writings of the 1930's; ed. by Jack Salzman; Barry Wallenstein, assistant editor. 448p 11 $7.50; pa $2.50; to schools & libs $5.98 Pegasus

810.8 American literature—Collections

67-13489

An anthology of protest writing from the thirties. Included are stories, songs, poems and plays as well as examples of photographs, cartoons and paintings of the period. Bibliography.

"A first-rate anthology. . . . The major and minor writers are well represented, and the organization of the book is sufficiently coherent to give adequate context for the contents. The introductory essays to the various divisions of the book are brief but adequate. . . . It is roughly on a par with [Harvey Swados] The American Writer and the Great Depression, BRD 1966], an anthology of similar material."

Choice 4:1246 Ja '68 90w

"Ten years ago this anthology would have seemed dated. Today, thanks to the cycles of history, it seems closer to the present than some of the writing of ten years ago. Here are the new-old furious accents of anger spoken in the collective 'we.' The topics have become period pieces. . . . But—with important differences in style—certain motifs of social criticism are back in circulation. Belligerently attacking unjust wars, itemizing poverty, documenting police brutality, dramatizing the ubiquitous complacency of the Establishment, the obvious representatives are here—James Farrell, John Dos Passos, Erskine Caldwell, the minor party-lining artists. But the editors have strengthened their book by such unexpected presences as Wallace Stevens and William Saroyan and by allowing dissident artists of the 1930's to make the case against commitment, right up to the extreme position of the poet John Peale Bishop." M. M

Christian Science Monitor p13 Ag 9 '67
260w

"Salzman does not try to frame a coherent critical approach to the literature of the 1930s, but his controlling attitudes are obvious enough—for instance, in his chosen title. He is in essential sympathy with the radical political spirits of the time, and he suggests that the heart of this literature lies in its protest—against the men and institutions that made a national disaster out of greed, inertia and mendacity. He notes the differences within the Left and its real disasters, but his commentary is burdened with a minimum of refought squabbles and inherited sectarian bias." M. B. Folsom

Nation 206:213 F 12 '68 900w

SAMPSON, ANTHONY. Macmillan; a study in ambiguity. 256p $6.50 Simon & Schuster

B or 92 Macmillan, Harold 67-22940

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by Alex Campbell
New Repub 158:32 Ja 27 '68 490w

Reviewed by C. C. O'Brien
N Y Rev of Books 10:10 F 15 '68 1200w

Reviewed by J. H. Plumb
Sat R 51:26 Ja 27 '68 750w

SAMUEL, HOWARD D., ed. Toward a better America; ed. and with an intro by Howard D. Samuel. 300p il $5.95 Macmillan (N Y) 309.173 Civil rights, U.S.—Social conditions, U.S.—Foreign relations 68-17204

"The four major areas of conflict in our recent history—civil rights, public welfare, civil liberties, and foreign relations—are the subjects of commentary by some of the . . . noted figures of our time. Carl Rowan, Kenneth B. Clark, and Roy Wilkins write on racism and urban problems; Alan Barth and Edward R. Murrow on civil liberties; John K. Galbraith on 'the affluent society' and Michael Harrington on 'the other America'; Theodore H. White, George F. Kennan, Henry Steele Commager on foreign affairs." (Publisher's note)

"A useful source book for high school, college, and public libraries." R. W. Henderson
Library J 93:2682 J1 '68 110w

"A decade and more of the troubles we've seen unify this enlightening and disparate book. . . . [It] is a mixed bag because its premise is not built on a strong enough foundation. It consists of bits and pieces from the Sidney Hillman Prize Awards, Reprint Series, and Lectureship program. . . . [This permits the editor] to include excerpts from books, articles, editorials, and even testimony before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. . . . Although the book covers none of the basic areas as thoroughly as the authors have done individually, small gems are encountered." Herbert Mitgang
Sat R 51:32 J1 20 '68 420w

SAMUEL, MAURICE. Light on Israel. 212p maps $4.95 Knopf

956.94 Israel—History. Zionism 68-14882

An account "of the origins, growth and development, and future aspirations of the state of Israel. [The author] describes the inseparable bond linking the Jewish people with the land of Israel for more than three millennia; he relates briefly the history of political Zionism; he probes the roots of friction between Jew and Arab originating in the mandate period; he presents Israel's . . . desire to live in peace with her neighbors; and he explores possibilities for future accord in light of the six-day war." (Library J)

Christian Century 85:654 My 15 '68 40w

"The book is a moving account written in zestful style. Mr. Samuel's subjective involvement with Israel's accomplishments and past problems causes him to wander a bit from his main thesis, and areas such as Russian anti-Semitism, or speculations about Jewish assimilation might well have been left to more definitive studies, even though they do shed some additional 'light on Israel.' Highly recommended for public and academic libraries." C. R. Glatt

Library J 93:1478 Ap 1 '68 160w

Reviewed by Chaim Potok

N Y Times Bk R p3 Je 9 '68 280w

"The veteran American Zionist . . . has written a political and spiritual guidebook to the problems, tragedies, commitments, and crises in conscience of the modern Jew. . . . His theme that the Jews were turned into usurpers of their own Bible becomes larger and more political as he attacks 'the Christian-Mohammedan (Jewishly derived) sanctification of Jerusalem which would turn the Jews into usurpers in their own capital.' On a canvas that spans the history of the Jewish people's claim to the Land, from the Patriarch Abraham to the Six-Day War last June, Samuel arrays his arguments with passion and wit, with erudition and three score years and thirteen of distilled wisdom. His reason is peppered, his emotions are controlled, his style is lucid and often brilliant." Ruth Gruber

Sat R 51:38 My 18 '68 650w

SAMUEL H. KRESS FOUNDATION. Renaissance medals: from the Samuel H. Kress collection at the National gallery of art. See United States. National gallery of art

SAMUELS, GERTRUDE. The people vs. Baby. 292p $4.95 Doubleday

67-10404

This novel depicts "the wretched lives of narcotics users in Spanish Harlem. The Baby of the title is Josephine Delia Gomez who becomes progressively more entangled in the . . .

environmental jungle of penury, prostitution, and prison. All of the usual law enforcement and rehabilitation agencies fail to alleviate the forces of violence and despair in her life until, in the end, Baby is turned over to Synanon in California." (Choice)

Reviewed by Oscar Handlin

Atlantic 219:129 Je '67 190w

"[This documentary novel] depicts the tragedy of how drug addiction controls and then degenerates the individual to such depths that to be 'treated like a dog' would be an understatement. . . . The author hits hard for many new rehabilitative measures for the drug addict. A strong case is built for the public health approach, legalization of drug purchase at clinics, commitment of prostitute-addicts to a board composed of physicians, psychologists and others more apt to understand the sick person, as well as self-help organizations such as Synanon. Progress toward these ends has been slow, but novels such as [this] should arouse our complacent society to help speed up the process of rehabilitation of the drug-addict." J. A. Szuhay

Best Sell 27:100 Je 1 '67 850w

"Another nonfiction novel, one which Samuels has loosely based on her recent documentary articles in The New York Times. . . . Predictably, the novel is good and frightening sociology but not important fiction. Students would profit by reading it."

Choice 5:54 Mr '68 110w

"The course of [Baby's] downfall is payed with the good intentions of her pious mother and sincere social workers—who expect the girl to learn no more than a trade in jail. The determinist character of a slum environment is realistically presented, without the easy descent into emotionality that it can invite. What could use more emotionality is the character of a lady reporter, a dea ex machina as self-effacing as Lois Lane of The Daily Planet. In novels, reporters deserve better." Martin Levin
N Y Times Bk R p32 My 7 '67 210w

SANDBURG, CARL. The letters of Carl Sandburg; ed. by Herbert Mitgang. 577p $12.50 Harcourt

B or 92

68-12588

"The 640 letters in this volume begin in 1898, . . . and go to 1962. . . . There are letters to Eugene Debs, Amy Lowell, Harriet Monroe, Lincoln Steffens, Ezra Pound, Theodore Dreiser, Robert Frost, Frank Lloyd Wright, Edward Steichen, Franklin D. Roosevelt, Adlai Stevenson (and family members), among many others." (Publisher's note) Chronology. Index.

"'Writing letters too is writing,' Carl Sandburg told a friend, and if this selection . . . is representative, then it seems he took as much care with his letters as he did with his poems. Those whom he wrote to . . . come to little in this collection. What dominates is the force of spirit made always to answer to enlightened discipline. . . . If Herbert Mitgang meant to add a new genre to Sandburg's literary poke, this collection answers his purpose, but it creates a new need, too. Sandburg stopped writing letters five years before he died, so there is no record of how he felt about . . . the state of the world [after 1962]." J. J. McAleer

America 119:358 O 19 '68 850w

"[The editor admits that] thousands of unpublished letters are yet to be collected. Poetry is not given a major role in this selection. . . . Either [Sandburg] was very circumspect in his opinions of the works of his fellow poets, which is highly unlikely, or the juicier letters have been omitted. A third possibility is that the editor has preferred to give us a kind of epistolary biography of the man; in this respect the book is highly successful and informative. . . . In a time when every form of greatness is degraded. . . . it would be well to read these letters, all sixty-four years of them, and to reconsider Sandburg's assent to American greatness." Karl Shapiro

Book World p1 S 8 '68 1400w

Reviewed by Roland Sawyer

Christian Science Monitor p23 D 5 '68 800w

Reviewed by B. W. Fuson

Library J 93:2872 Ag '68 300w

Reviewed by Peter Michelson

New Repub 159:27 D 7 '68 1200w

"The most impressive thing about this collection . . . is the endurance of a man and the vanishing of a society they portray. . . . In the letters we watch the toning down, sentimentalization and emasculation of the old spirit that speaks so fearlessly in Sandburg's earlier books. . . . What stands up through all the book to the very end is the correspondence with his wife. . . . 'Silver Threads Among the Gold' was not a sentimental song to him, it was a fact. . . . The letters reveal that steadfastness was Sandburg's own first virtue. . . . There is no necessary connection between being a good man and a good poet. These letters reveal Sandburg as a very good man indeed, and what is more they reveal the American Midwest that produced him as a society that could produce good men who were good poets and take it for granted that that's the way things ought to be." Kenneth Rexroth

SANDBURG, CARL—Continued

N Y Times Bk R p8 S 29 '68 1300w

Reviewed by Saul Maloff
Newsweek 72:107 O 7 '68 900w

Reviewed by Stanley Weintraub
Sat R 51:46 D 7 '68 1000w

Reviewed by K. S. Lynn
Va Q R 44:682 autumn '68 550w

"One finds the Letters disappointing. . . . It is curious how little . . . excitement gets into [Sandburg's] correspondence. . . . Most of the letters are in fact . . . brief notes containing either perfunctory general comment . . . or, more persistently, minutiae of such necessary but wholly uninteresting arrangements as which book is to be sent to whom. (One often feels that Sandburg should have made more phone calls!) Personal letters are warm and friendly in a wholly temperate way. . . . Nor is there anything remarkable about the letters stylistically. . . . While I doubt that the volume will 'shed much new light' (as the standard academic phrase goes) on Sandburg's life and work, it will be welcomed by that considerable public for which Sandburg has long been a sort of venerable national presence." A. N. Kaul
Yale R 58:304 D '68 1150w

SANDERLIN, GEORGE, ed. 1776: journals of American independence. 262p il $5.95; to libs & schools $5.11 Harper

973.2 U.S.—History—Revolution—Juvenile literature. U.S.—History—Colonial period—Juvenile literature 68-10208

"This volume tells part of the story of American independence largely in terms of original documents. There are an . . . introduction, in which the author sets the scene; the main text which consists of many quotations from a variety of contemporary sources, each with its own introduction; . . . and a brief summary [of] the results of the Declaration of Independence. [Bibliography.] Ages twelve to sixteen." (N Y Times Bk R)

"This book is most welcome since it rises so far above the general level of similar attempts. [The] selection of passages and illustrations for reproduction is masterful, and the spirit of revolution comes alive on the pages. In addition to the text, a fine index and a timetable of events along with a select bibliography make the book a valuable addition to any junior high school library." D. M. Linehan

Best Sell 28:114 Je 1 '68 90w

"The author has drawn heavily on two secondary sources for many quotations: John Braeman, The Road to Independence, and [H. S.] Commager and [R. B.] Morris, The Spirit of Seventy-Six [BRD 1958]. Occasional modern analogies are jarring, e.g. George III is described as 'a good guy.' . . . As a whole, the book is less appealing than Voices from History, Series I, edited by R. B. Morris, which covers a much longer period of time with far less text but livelier quotations mostly from witnesses of the events. While some of the material is in print elsewhere, it is more the framework and the use made of the selections to document the text that is important here. Useful for students doing research for assignments on the decisive events leading to American independence." E. P. Hawley

Library J 93:2125 My 15 '68 230w [YA]

"Probably the author was leaning over backward not to be a chauvinist, yet the text as it stands emphasizes the petty and the brutal over the idealistic and self-sacrificing, encouraging the conclusion that an irresponsible upsetting of the apple cart will result in a better political world. Mr. Sanderlin scrupulously identifies his sources in a way that would permit a sophisticated reader to achieve evaluation. The book is handsomely produced, the many black and white reproductions of 18th-century pictures being of the highest quality. It is unfortunate that the names of painters are not given." J. T. Flexner

N Y Times Bk R p26 Je 30 '68 400w [YA]

SANDERS RUTH MANNING-- See Manning-Sanders, R.

SANDERSON, IVAN T. Uninvited visitors: a biologist looks at UFO's. 244p $6.95 Cowles 629.13 Flying saucers 67-27192

A naturalist "covers UFO's, UAO's (Unexplained Aerial Objects), and UAP's (Unidentified Atmospheric Phenomena) and speculates on the various life forms that may have visited our planet. Stories of witnesses to such events are reported, considered, and discussed." (Library J) Bibliography.

"[The author] is convinced that UAO's are observing mankind in an intelligent way, although this conclusion is never critically examined. . . . A good deal of modern biology is referred to, and (less accurately) physics and astronomy. [The book] is thus useful as collateral reading for high school and undergraduate science courses. . . . Contains a useful list of UFO organizations. . . . Choice 5:364 My '68 200w

"Sanderson's writings have always been popular and this time he may really have hit the jackpot of readers for he has something for everyone—believers and skeptics. . . . He presents equal parts of scientific knowledge, imaginative speculation, and wish-thinking! [He] offers an intriguing distillation of the testimony of numerous eyewitnesses and his own observation of strange phenomena in the sky and on the ground. Although he discounts the 'wilder fringes of crackpotism,' some of his speculation about 'invisibles' among us may cause scientific readers to nominate Mr. Sanderson for membership in that group. But the general public will find this book amusing, fascinating, and in part, convincing." E. T. Smith

Library J 92:4515 D 15 '67 160w

Reviewed by Regina Minudri

Library J 93:897 F 15 '68 90w [YA]

"[Although this book is] for the public and is written in a popular non-technical style, . . . it is not really a book for the beginner (yes, there can be beginners in the UFO field too!). Sanderson attempts to marshal and organize what is known today about UFO's. . . . He writes with skill; his book is certainly one of the more literate of the UFO books, albeit many will find it one of the 'wilder' ones. Sanderson is not afraid to advance the thesis that, from a biologist's viewpoint, the UFO's may indeed be a form of animate matter. He supports his thesis by a logical array of facts that demonstrate that the reported behavior of UFO's exhibits many of the properties ordinarily ascribed to living things." J. A. Hynek

Natur Hist 77:24 Mr '68 800w

SANDISON, ALAN. The wheel of empire: a study of the imperial idea in some late nineteenth and early twentieth-century fiction. 213p $6.95 St Martins

823.9 English fiction—History and criticism 67-13850

"Four writers—Rider Haggard, Rudyard Kipling, Joseph Conrad, and John Buchan—are here restudied in an attempt to delineate the impact of Victorian imperialism upon their creative impulse, and to discover attitudes of the writers themselves about imperialism." (Choice) Bibliography.

"The work is a valuable addition to Victorian studies; it has no exact parallel. Adequate index and bibliography. Probably too technical for all but very sophisticated undergraduates." Choice 5:487 Je '68 200w

"The merit of Mr Sandison's book is that it illustrates, through his chosen authors, that the conception of Empire is a good deal more sophisticated than is sometimes realised; its weakness is its pretentiousness and a style that seldom achieves a natural rhythm."

Economist 223:576 My 6 '67 450w

"An important and illuminating book . . . [which], despite its solidity and perceptiveness, is frighteningly lacking in perspective. Conrad is very thinly treated and the point made about him is familiar. . . . Moreover, his vision is reduced to a moral code, and, without argument, Razumov, a carefully delimited character, is made the author's spokesman. Buchan, on the other hand, is absurdly inflated. . . . Such distortions arise from the need to make Kipling central. Sandison acknowledges the major qualitative difference between Kipling's vision and Conrad's, . . . but he refuses to give this its full weight. The flaw in Sandison's argument is, indeed, basic, and derives from this failure to take full account of qualitative distinctions." John Goode

New Statesman 73:846 Je 16 '67 340w
 TLS p596 J1 6 '67 350w

SANDULESCU, JACQUES. Donbas. 217p $4.95
 McKay

940.54 World War, 1939-1945—Prisoners and prisons. Escapes 68-14127

"In 1945, a 15-year-old Rumanian schoolboy was among the thousands of East Europeans carried off by the Russians to man their slave labor camps. For two and a half years he survived the misery and terror of a mine in the Donbas, the coal and steel area in the Ukraine. Here he tells the story of that ordeal, and of his harrowing escape, in a first-person narrative." (N Y Times Bk R)

Reviewed by V. J. Colimore
 Best Sell 28:41 Ap 15 '68 200w

Reviewed by Jane Manthorne
 Horn Bk 44:341 Je '68 190w

"The Russians were people just like everyone else. There were good and bad among them." These may seem unusual words for a man who spent two years in a Russian labor camp; but then, Jacques Sandulescu's internment and escape were also unusual. . . . The story is a truly human one, which bears excellent testimony to the belief that wars are fought by nations, not people. Mr. Sandulescu offers a fast-moving, vivid narrative which deserves inclusion in all public libraries." F. D. Campbell

Library J 93:748 F 15 '68 200w

Reviewed by Carol Tefft

Library J 93:2742 J1 '68 90w [YA]

"[This] is simply written, direct and extraordinarily moving. Jacques . . . was intelligent enough to learn Russian, which won him better treatment at the camp and made possible his eventual escape. He was tough enough to resist the temptation to give up, to indulge in self-pity, yet sympathetic and warm enough to help those who had despaired. . . . What [Sandulescu] has written is the story of a boy-turning-man, a very old-fashioned, very personal story that, in this most negative of ages, is an unassuming statement of deep affirmation."

N Y Times Bk R p41 Ap 21 '68 200w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland

Sat R 51:62 J1 20 '68 110w [YA]

SANFORD, JOHN. The $300 man. 161p $4.95
 Prentice-Hall

67-13967

This novel concerns David Keogh whose rich "father managed to finagle him out of military service on spurious medical grounds. The title refers to the price one had to pay for a substitute in the Union Army during the Civil War, but the price Keogh's well-meaning father pays is much stiffer. His son's moral sensibilities have been so wounded by his ill-won 4-F status that he enlists anyway, and on his eventual demobilization he tracks down the man who had been called up in his place. Keogh's substitute is a drifter named John Cross. . . . Keogh insists on bringing Cross home with him, partly as penance, partly to torture his father and, new stepmother, Beryl." (Sat R)

"In [this], his eighth novel, Sanford poses the question of man's responsibility to man and answers in a tale that is vividly told and thought-provoking, if at times repetitious. It is a story as physical as its rugged California setting." Maura Mara

Best Sell 27:193 Ag 15 '67 330w

"The writing is both pretentious and ponderous. The plot is something that reads like a crude paraphrase of a bad Robinson Jeffers epic poem and concerns itself with family estrangement and the nature of deceit. The descriptions of the California landscape are over-written, and the characters are overburdened with symbols. Like most bad novels this one is quite forgettable and comparable works elude recollection."

Choice 5:54 Mr '68 80w

Reviewed by C. D. B. Bryan

N Y Times Bk R p58 S 10 '67 500w

"Told in a pseudo-tough, pseudo-poetic manner reminiscent of Steinbeck at his worst. . . . When they aren't cussing each other out the characters, who are all cut from the same prime quality asbestos, philosophize about their moral predicament. . . . Ineptitude is not restricted to the philosophizing but characterizes as well the forced, inaccurate, and mixed metaphors that permeate the novel." Richard Freedman

Sat R 50:37 O 21 '67 320w

SANFORD, TERRY. Storm over the states. 218p $5.95 McGraw 353.9 State governments. State rights

67-27826

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by Norman Wengert

Ann Am Acad 337:194 My '68 440w

Reviewed by H. S. Commager

Book World p4 F 11 '68 1000w

Choice 5:267 Ap '68 190w

SANGER, MARJORY BARTLETT. World of the great white heron; a saga of the Florida Keys; line drawings by John Henry Dick. 144p $10 Devin-Adair

574.9759 Natural history—Florida keys

67-18236

The author of Cypress Country (BRD 1966) and Mangrove Island (BRD 1964) has written an account of a single day in the life of the great white heron, Ardea occidentalis. She also describes the natural history and human history of its habitat, the Florida Keys.

"Because material about the Florida Keys is scarce and scattered, this book should be a welcome addition to library collections. . . . [The author] describes many kinds of birds, mammals, sea life, and plants, along with something of their habits. This information seems accurate, although, at times, oversimplified. She describes at length the hurricanes which are such an important part of the history of the Keys. . . . She deals with human history, covering such topics as the early explorers, Indians, pirates, lighthouses, the coming of the Conchs, and the salvage, sponge, and shrimp industries. Her sections on the building of the railroad, known as 'Flagler's Folly,' and on the destruction and the saving of the egrets are interesting. The whole book is quite readable, the drawings add charm." J. S. Robotham

Library J 92:4515 D 15 '67 200w

Reviewed by J. K. Terres

N Y Times Bk R p9 D 24 '67 550w

SANGER, RICHARD H. Insurgent era; new patterns of political, economic, and social revolution. 231p pl maps $6.95 Potomac bks.

909.8 History, Modern—20th century. Revolutions 67-21743

The author writes about "communist and non-communist revolt in Asia, Africa, Latin America, and the Middle East. . . . The rise to power of Mao and Castro, Gandhi and Nasser, the explosive Congo vacuum, the story of the protracted French loss of Indo-China and the . . . escalation in Vietnam, are some of the topics explored." (Publisher's note) Glossary. Bibliography. Index.

"[This book was] written by a former American [Foreign Service officer] with experience in the Middle East and Africa. . . . What principles were used for inclusion of some struggles but not others? No clear explanation is given. Is there a theory to tie together the cases selected? The reviewer could not discover any. . . . The author speaks of seven waves of unrest since 1648. . . . In an appendix he offers an uneven listing of violent events for 1945-1966. Yet there is no suggestion about the meanings of these waves and events. . . . Perhaps the main disappointments about the book are the lack of definitions to help tell one conflict from another, and the fact that the insights of the diplomatist were withheld in his efforts to photograph epic landscapes." P. F. Power

Am Pol Sci R 62:1023 S '68 700w

SANGER, R. H.—Continued

"The topic is interesting enough—the frequency and make-up of insurgency—but the treatment is mundane and pedestrian. Ideas lifted almost totally out of context from the works of academically trained authors provide the framework, and case descriptions of revolutions, rebellions, and cold war conflicts . . . provide the commentary. Unfortunately, none of the material is original enough to warrant its inclusion in the work. An original feature, however, is the list in the appendix of most of the countries in the world and their record on instability. The college library would do well to order a more inclusive work like [B.] Crozier. The Rebels: A Study of Post-war Insurrections [BRD 1961]."

Choice 5:409 My '68 150w

SAN JUAN, EPIFANIO. The art of Oscar Wilde. 238p $6.50 Princeton univ. press

828 Wilde, Oscar

66-21840

A critical examination of Oscar Wilde's work.

"The most thorough . . . work since [E.] Roditi's Oscar Wilde [BRD 1948]. San Juan does not venture as far out on critical limbs as Roditi does; his book is less provocative and stimulating, but it is better balanced. . . . He has approached his dissection of Wilde's verse, fiction, criticism, and drama equipped with all the instruments of the New Criticism. His analyses are usually illuminating, though sometimes it would appear that he has simply restated the obvious in New Critical terms. . . . A desirable acquisition for the college library."

Choice 4:985 N '67 160w

"The very grave and thoughtful critical study of [Wilde's] works that Professor San Juan, of Davis, California, has now given us . . . deals at perhaps excessive length with the derivative early poems and is briefer than one might have expected on the literary criticism."

TLS p741 Ag 17 '67 310w

SANN, PAUL. Fads, follies and delusions of the American people. 370p il $10 Crown

917.3 U.S.—Civilization. U.S.—Social life and customs

67-27048

This is "a journalistic account of the people and things that have captured the imagination of Americans for good, evil or fun in the 20th Century. Among other fads, Mr. Sann discusses yoyos, technocracy, flagpole sitting, Frank Sinatra, James Bond, and LSD." (Library J) Index.

"[This] book is not primarily a discussion of why Americans took to Ouija boards and Elvis Presley, although [Mr. Sann] quotes liberally from the critics of the times. Rather, the reader learns what went on and who was responsible. It will stir up memories, especially among those who are over 30." T. M. Wagenknecht

Library J 92:4020 N 1 '67 90w

Reviewed by Marian Trahan

Library J 93:316 Ja 15 '68 80w [YA]

"Mr. Sann is executive editor of the New York Post, and he writes a fast, flip, entertaining tabloid prose. The illustrations—over four hundred of them—are mostly old news photographs and publicity pictures."

New Yorker 44:136 F 24 '68 130w

SANSOM, WILLIAM. A book of Christmas. 256p il col il col pl $14.50 McGraw

394.26 Christmas

68-28657

The author "explains and explores all the . . . customs and . . . ceremonies which have always surrounded the Christmas festival. He traces rituals from their Stone-Age beginnings to all parts of the world—including the United States. . . . He scrutinizes the literature and the art of the mid-winter festival, both pagan and Christian; he takes the reader on a gastronomic tour of Christmas delicacies." (Publisher's note) Bibliography.

Best Sell 28:298 O 15 '68 120w

"[Sansom has an impressive range of] knowledge and interest. He covers almost every aspect of the Christmas holidays except . . . those preempted seasonally by ladies' magazines—recipes and decorations. . . . There is, however, one unexpected major omission. . . . As far as I could tell, the text includes not a single Biblical quotation; . . . nor is there any retelling of or even direct allusion to the Nativity story of the Bible. . . . [The] book is less anthology or hagiography than anthropology. . . . Temperamentally Sansom seems more than normally inclined to stress the 'darkness of the old instincts' which ride 'alongside the joyful birth of the Saviour,' to play off opposites and extremes. . . . However, paradox can illuminate the true full meaning of Christmas . . . and Sansom does indeed exercise a poetic complexity of vision that can take us far beyond mere sentimentality." A. C. Foote

Book World p5 D 1 '68 230w

"A triumph of style over research, there isn't a dull line in this delightful book: informative, rich in quotations, closing on exactly the right note of personal reminiscence. For any library." S. C. Gross

Library J 93:4281 N 15 '68 170w

SANTAYANA, GEORGE. Animal faith and spiritual life; previously unpublished and uncollected writings by George Santayana with critical essays on his thought; ed. by John Lachs. 470p $5.95; pa $3.95 Appleton

191 Philosophy

67-20665

The editor uses "both original and secondary sources to provide a set of dialogues embracing the entire scope of [Santayana's] systematic philosophy. . . . The writings, grouped under eight subject headings, open with an overview to his work. The topics then range through his metaphysics and epistemology to his philosophy of mind, his views on morality, his . . . theory of the spiritual life, and his aesthetics." (Publisher's note) Index.

Reviewed by William Gerber

Library J 93:2504 Je 15 '68 80w

"Though not intended as an introduction, this fine book might well serve to tell a new generation of Americans about Santayana. 'the one invulnerable man among crude captains,' as Wallace Stevens memorably described the philosopher when he was dying in Rome. John Lachs has republished such famous pieces as 'The Wind and the Spirit,' and exhumed others previously unpublished. . . . Some of the latter are rather rough gems to have come from the fastidious stylist, but they do succeed in showing a tentative and groping Santayana rarely evident in the finished essays. . . . Understandably and regrettable, no one of the contributors can begin to approach the eloquence of Santayana himself."

N Y Times Bk R p38 Ap 21 '68 140w

SARASON, SEYMOUR B. Psychology in community settings: clinical, educational, vocational, social aspects [by] Seymour B. Sarason [and others]. 714p $12.95 Wiley

362 Psychology. Applied. Educational psychology. Social psychology. Psychiatry

66-26757

"The authors, all members of Yale University's Psycho-Educational Clinic and New Haven's forerunner of antipoverty programs, Community Progress Inc., explore a wide variety of problems ranging from those of underprivileged children and young job-seekers to those of teachers and administrators attempting to help them. . . . [A] portion of the book consists of case illustrations. . . . Methods used by the clinic on a day-to-day working basis within the environment [are described]. Discussed and evaluated are the clinic's activities in an elementary school, a neighborhood employment center, a work crew program and a center for the mentally retarded." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"This is an important book, a useful book, [and] an exciting book, yet it leaves one frustrated and unhappy for a number of reasons. . . . There are a great number of case examples which are probably the book's strongest asset as a teaching vehicle. Young community and school psychologists-to-be and other school and community mental-health workers will find a wide variety of problems presented in these cases, which can be used for seminar discussion or beginning practicum reading. More experienced workers would wish that the discussion of the examples had less of a 'soap box' quality and more of a tie to the increasing literature in this area. This is one of the frustrations. . . . [Despite the] heavy style, combined with an uneven quality in the presentation, . . . one cannot deny that a number of ground-breaking efforts are being described in this book." A. J. Bindman

Harvard Ed R 37:506 summer '67 1400w

"Perhaps the most noteworthy part of the book is the 254-page section which resulted from the work of this group in the schools. . . . The authors emphasize the loneliness of the teacher and the consequent need for someone like the psychological consultant to be aware of and give assistance in the solution of difficult problems. . . . The last two sections of the book show how the psychologist can work with community agencies. . . . This is an important publication that should arouse a great deal of discussion among psychologists, social workers, teachers, school administrators, vocational rehabilitation workers, and all of those groups interested in the education of educationally and culturally disadvantaged children and youth." E. P. Torrance

Social Studies 59:41 Ja '68 300w

SARNOFF, DAVID. Looking ahead; the papers of David Sarnoff. 313p pl $9.95 McGraw

621.38 Telecommunication 68-19491

A selection from documents in the David Sarnoff Library at Princeton. These excerpts from volumes covering "technical and commercial activities, letters, public statements and speeches were . . . assembled in book form for the convenience of researchers and for young people interested in careers in electronics." (Acknowledgments) Name index. Subject index.

"This is an important book, but of limited appeal. . . . It will serve as an excellent introduction to both the fields of communication and electronics and to the career of David Sarnoff [and] . . . is highly recommended for libraries with patrons interested in these fields." Robert Hamm

Library J 93:2478 Je 15 '68 100w

"For all the insights these documents offer into an active mind, they also reveal (surely unwittingly) a pompous man, whose prose is platitudinous, desiccated and humorless. . . . Plowing one's way through these papers, one is struck by a lack of self-criticism or perspective. There is very little light on the personal man. . . . There is no question that Mr. Sarnoff's documents are valuable to the historian of electronics; but this selection is such that the author is far from being cast in living color." Alden Whitman

N Y Times Bk R p22 Ap 7 '68 340w

Reviewed by S. W. Little

Sat R 51:77 My 11 '68 550w

SARNOFF, PAUL. Wall Street careers. 189p pl $3.95 Messner

332.6 Stock exchange—Juvenile literature.
Vocational guidance—Juvenile literature

68-14934

"A general survey of the functions of Wall Street and its brokerage houses, investment counsellors, banks and other organizations, this also includes a listing of the various kinds of jobs available, the member firms of the New York Stock Exchange, Research departments, counselling services and investment advisory services, stockholder and financial relations firms." (Best Sell) Index. "Grades eight to ten" (Library J)

Best Sell 28:66 My 1 '68 70w

"With the exception of Registered Representative, most of the positions described exist only in New York City. There is a brief history and background on the New York Stock Exchange and the securities business in general. The information is sound and reliable, conveyed in an anecdotal style. Since other material on stock market careers is in pamphlet form or consists of selected chapters in more general books, this title, with its appendixes describing jobs and qualifications, member firms, and investment services, will be a useful addition to your vocational information shelves." J. C. Dick

Library J 93:[3326] S 15 '68 110w

SARRIS, ANDREW, ed. Interviews with film directors. 478p il $10 Bobbs

791.43 Moving pictures—Production and direction 67-20455

"Sarris has brought together forty of the world's great film-makers to discuss their own work and the art of film. . . . In addition to his . . . introduction on the history of the director as the significant artist in the creation of a film, Mr. Sarris has prefaced each interview with a brief essay evaluating the director's career, included a photograph of him [and a filmography]." (Publisher's note)

"It takes a perceptive critic (like Sarris) to set the stage with his brief introductions and then [select] those interviews which most tellingly reveal the director. Students of Film . . . will profit from this study."

Best Sell 27:409 Ja 15 '68 270w

"The 40 film directors represented in this anthology are significant figures in world cinema—Antonioni, Fellini, Huston, Resnais, and others. . . . We see here the rise of a generation of intellectual and highly articulate film makers. [This book and Film Makers on Film Making, ed. by H. M. Geduld, BRD 1968] really supplement each other, but if a choice must be made, the work of Mr. Sarris, with its high standard of selection and the brilliance of its editorial contributions, should come first." G. D. McDonald

Library J 92:4432 D 1 '67 260w

SARTON, MAY. Plant dreaming deep. 189p il $5 Norton

B or 92

68-10885

The author of I Knew a Phoenix; Sketches for an Autobiography (BRD 1959) has written a second autobiographical book which "tells how she bought a house in a small New Hampshire town, how she remade it, what she experienced as the seasons passed, and what she learned from the house, its surroundings, and the village." (Sat R)

"Miss Sarton, meandering about her domain of solitude, picks and arranges imagery as she does her garden's yield. . . . The book is hospitable. It houses comfortably her meditations and her images. It moves slowly, even unevenly perhaps, because the pace is set by Miss Sarton's desire to give a full inventory of ghosts that hover over cherished parental furniture, friends that come and go leaving ghosts, and demons that play about a poet who is home-building. . . . [But] it is unfortunate that the book, for all its design, does not have more compactness." C. F. Ruffin

Christian Science Monitor p19 Ap 4 '68 460w

Reviewed by K. T. Willis

Library J 92:4498 D 15 '67 200w

"The house May Sarton bought a decade ago in Nelson, N.H., was built in the 18th century; many people had lived in it before she did. But to judge by what she has written in a sensitive, luminous book and by the pleasant photographs it contains, the house reflects her tastes and style now—immaculate and orderly, traditional, basically austere with overtones of grace and charm. . . . As a poet, novelist, teacher and traveler, Miss Sarton is less interested in the ingenuity of her remodeling and the creature comforts of her house than in the significance of living itself. . . . Love is the genius of this small, but tender and often poignant book by a woman of many insights." Brooks Atkinson

N Y Times Bk R p39 F 4 '68 1000w

"That place in the country has often been written about, frequently in books intended to be funny; Miss Sarton's is tenderly poetic though not sentimental. . . . [This] is not merely a book about a house and a garden; it is a book about a woman living alone, her work as a writer, the music she listens to, the friends who come to see her new home and the older friends who visit her only in memory. It is also about a community. Miss Sarton describes the annual town meeting, an institution she rightly admires but views with a sharp eye. . . . There are millions of people in the world who would be bored by the book, and I am sorry for them." Granville Hicks

Sat R 51:27 F 17 '68 1300w

SARTRE, JEAN PAUL. The Communists and peace [tr. by Martha H. Fletcher, with the assistance of John R. Kleinschmidt] with A reply to Claude Lefort [tr. by Philip R. Berk]. 2pts in 1 307p $6.95 Braziller

329.944 Communist party (France). Labor and laboring classes—France. Communism 68-17390

Two articles by the French author. The first is an examination of some of the problems facing the Communist party in France. This "analysis is centered upon the dialectical relationship between the proletariat and the Communist Party. . . . [In the second essay], A Reply to Claude Lefort. . . . [Sartre] in response to criticisms leveled by a prominent liberal opponent . . . analyzes his interpretation of Marxist philosophy and . . . [presents] his view of the essential relation between the proletariat and the Communist Party." (Publisher's note) The first of these essays appeared in the periodical Les Temps Modernes in 1952 and 1954, and in book form in the author's Situations, VI in 1964. The second essay appeared in Les Temps Modernes in 1953 and was published in Sartre's book Situations VII in 1965.

SARTRE, JEAN PAUL—Continued

Christian Century 85:874 J1 3 '68 20w

"Sartre is speaking, in [this book], to the mass of French Marxists, Socialists and syndicalists. . . . The language [in the first essay], not helped in this instance by Martha Fletcher's wooden translation, is cloaked in the rhetoric of Marxist devices, and distinguished throughout by a bombastic style more reminiscent of the Daily Worker than of Sartre's own philosophical works, or his finely shaped novels. . . . The reader is being addressed directly: pushed back into his chair and delivered a monologue. . . . And there is to be no escape from the armchair harangue until it is finished. is it, then, worth the effort to read? The answer is in the affirmative for [it provides] . . . an opportunity to observe Sartre the political analyst working as journalist." Keith Ovenden
Commonweal 80:259 N 15 '68 350w

SARTRE, JEAN PAUL. The ghost of Stalin: tr. from the French by Martha H. Fletcher; with the assistance of John R. Kleinschmidt. 150p $4.50 Braziller

320.9439 Hungary—History—Revolution, 1956. Communism—Russia 67-19872

A statement by Sartre inspired by the "Soviet intervention in Hungary in 1956. It represents . . . [a] critique of Stalinism in its relation to the historical development of Marxism. . . . Marxism, he finds, is blocked in its development by the spread of Stalinism in Russia and beyond. Budapest, 1956, became a tragic, dramatic moment of confrontation with the implications of Stalinism. . . . To interpret the Stalinist phenomenon, Sartre analyzes the dialectical relationship between the proletariat and the Communist Party. . . . [and] pleads for a humanization of Marxism by the introduction of a more liberal political and social philosophy." (Publisher's note) The material in this book first appeared in a series of articles in Les Temps Modernes in 1956-57, and was published as Le Fantôme de Staline in Situations, VII in 1965. Glossary and index.

"[This book] demonstrates that a man of even Sartre's intellectual power is not at his best when subservient to an ideology."

Christian Century 85:874 J1 3 '68 20w

"Sartre is speaking [here] . . . to the mass of French Marxists, Socialists and syndicalists. This is not stuff for the bourgeoisie, but it assumes both an ideological belief and sophistication which they do not share, and is, in any case, in sympathy with the general desire to exterminate them as a class. The language, not helped in this instance by [the] wooden translation, is cloaked in the rhetoric of Marxist devices, and distinguished throughout by a bombastic style more reminiscent of the Daily Worker than of Sartre's own philosophical works, or his finely shaped novels. . . . Is it, then, worth the effort to read? The answer is in the affirmative. . . . [It provides] an opportunity to observe Sartre the political analyst working as journalist, under the pressure of a publication deadline, and . . . is all the more poignant now that the Czechs face the same critical dilemmas." Keith Ovenden
Commonweal 80:259 N 15 '68 350w

SARTRE, JEAN PAUL. The Trojan women (Euripides); adapted; English version by Ronald Duncan. 80p $4.50 Knopf

842 Euripides—Adaptations 67-18620

"The present version constitutes an adaptation into English of Sartre's French adaptation [preceded by an introductory essay]." (Choice) Originally published in French as Les Troyennes.

"[This English version of Sartre's adaptation is also] an adaptation rather than a translation. . . . Additions to the original Greek have been minimal, but there is a considerable amount of streamlining and some shift of emphases, all of which are justified in a prefixed explanatory section by Sartre. This version will play very well and should be of interest to all students of Sartre. Students of the classics will be impressed by the large amount of Euripides that remains and fits comfortably into the Sarrtrian mold. It remains, nevertheless, an interpretation, and those wishing to meet Euripides had better continue to do so through the Lattimore translation in the Chicago series."

Choice 5:480 Je '68 120w

"Realizing that Euripides' The Trojan Women deserves an audience, yet faced with problems of Greek liturgy, mythos and language, Jean-Paul Sartre presents here an adaptation geared to the tastes of the mature modern reader. The result is a craftsmanlike updating of the original which eliminates much of the heavy mythos and in the English translation by Ronald Duncan, keeps rhetoric and bombast to a minimum. Written in verse, yet employing simple believable dialogue, Sartre probes the ramifications of the costly Trojan war as he reflects upon the conquered. His 11-page introductory essay establishes his point of view along with that of Euripides: war is no solution to human conflict. [This English version of] Sartre's adaptation was produced in 1966 at the Edinburgh International Festival." Robert Baker
Library J 92:4431 D 1 '67 140w

SASEK, M. This is the United Nations; pub. with the coop. of the United Nations. 60p col il $4.95 Macmillan (N Y)

341.13 United Nations—Juvenile literature 68-12093

A "guide to the United Nations, the organization of which is briefly explained. The various rooms, art objects, and items of interest—like gifts from member countries—are pictured, and stories told about them. A chart shows the flags of the 122 nations that make up the United Nations; and the specialized agencies—UNESCO, UNICEF, WHO, and the rest—are listed and identified." (Horn Bk) "Ages seven to eleven." (N Y Times Bk R)

Book World p12 S 1 '68 130w

Horn Bk 44:410 Ag '68 80w

Reviewed by Edward Blishen
New Statesman 75:697 My 24 '68 90w

"As always, M. Sasek is smoothly passing along the odd bits and pieces of data children seem to enjoy: 26 miles of carpeting, he informs us, for the diplomats to tread. . . . But there is plenty of basic historical information in the slim volume. The style is whimsical but not so whimsical that the read-aloud experience is a bore. Inevitably U.N. fans will grumble that [there is] not enough about the unique status of the U.N.'s staff as international civil servants, or the U.N.'s Peace Force accomplishments in the Middle East and Cyprus and the Congo. But this is such an attractive introduction to the U.N. it seems a pity to carp. It's gay. It's informative. A book to be read once and again, handed down in the family, borrowed—and returned." Kathleen Teltsch
N Y Times Bk R p22 Je 23 '68 180w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland
Sat R 51:33 Je 15 '68 110w

"[M. Sasek] has given so much prominence to the external structure and organization that young readers may well miss the purpose behind it all. His vivid illustrations accompanied by verse text are arresting and exciting, but so much is lacking that would give a child some idea of the high aims and practical achievements of the U.N. Mr Sasek has had great success with the series to which this book belongs but the U.N. is the planned expression of an ideal rather than the gradual development of history and it calls for different treatment."

TLS p596 Je 6 '68 130w

SASSOON, VIDAL. Sorry I kept you waiting, madam. 251p il $5.95 Putnam

B or 92 Hair 68-15521

A biography of the English hairdresser. "Sassoon, a 'basement boy' from London's Petticoat Lane, tells how his mother pressed him to learn the trade when he was 14 years old, and of his East End apprenticeship. He devotes an early chapter to his experiences in action as an Israeli commando before he was 21 years old. He also includes accounts of his beginnings in the 1950's at Bond and New Bond Streets and . . . details on [his] salon's growing clientele of peeresses, movie stars, and top models." (Library J Index.

Economist 227:vii Ap 27 '68 160w

"[Sassoon] cuts away at himself and his work in this lively, colorful, and, at times, comic autobiography. . . . Truly a success story of the 1960's, and one in which the ambitious young hero really wins in 'selling short.' This Sassoon spectacular will entertain a wide audience, especially the 'beautiful people.' Most public libraries will want to consider purchasing this book. D. L. Gustafson

Library J 93:2480 Je 15 '68 170w

Reviewed by Alberta Hankenson

Library J 93:2553 Je 15 '68 130w [YA]

Reviewed by D. C. Goddard

N Y Times Bk R p22 J1 28 '68 270w

"It is most unlikely that an autobiography has ever been more determinedly studded with dropped names, but the worlds of high fashion and theater are Sassoon's arenas, and there is considerable entertainment in the zeal and relish with which he describes them. . . . Much of his story consists of professional or social chitchat, but the author's high good humor and breezy style are quite engaging." Zena Sutherland

Sat R 51:37 O 19 '68 120w [YA]

"This is not a book for people who read books. Like biographies of racing drivers, or the memoirs of ballroom dancing champions, it will be read by ambitious adolescents and other people in the game. It can be recommended . . . as one of those improving works which show the lethargic boy how grit and determination can lead to riches and success, and how successful people are good at heart and not the egomaniac cut-throats the real books say they are. . . . We are reading one of those ghosted confessions that bring the publisher a profit by serialization in the kind of journal that is used to wrap the fish. . . . The book could still have been useful to the historian of fashion; but instead of giving us a picture of his times Mr. Sassoon persists in projecting the image his publicists have invented."

TLS p524 My 23 '68 340w

SAUER, JONATHAN D. Plants and man on the Seychelles coast; a study in historical biogeography. 132p il maps $5 Univ. of Wis. press

581.969 Botany—Seychelles. Seychelles—History 67-13556

The Seychelles are "an isolated archipelago in the Indian Ocean 600 miles northeast of Madagascar . . . [which] were first settled in 1770. Reconstructing this change, Dr. Sauer presents an historical account of the islands' coastal vegetation and the shaping of its distribution patterns by natural environment and human activities. . . . Special consideration is given to the origin of the coconut, [and] the rise of coconut plantations. . . . Present distribution patterns are characterized by photographs, transects, and maps of sample areas. Species distributions are given." (Publisher's note) Appendixes include aboriginal and introduced coastal species. Bibliography. Index.

"A well written and beautifully illustrated book by a competent scientist. It is simple, yet interesting, easily understood by scientist and nonscientist. Anyone interested in the fabled Seychelles Islands and the even more fabled coco de mer will enjoy this book. However, the lack of illustrations, not only of this plant but of most of those discussed, limits its value for the general reader. The system of reference used to identify plants drawn in diagrams and maps is awkward in that the reader must go back and forth in the book to ascertain what these illustrations refer to. Excellent bibliography; good index."

Choice 4:1269 Ja '68 100w

Reviewed by H. G. Baker

Science 158:247 O 13 '67 380w

SAUNDERS, F. WENDEROTH. Machines for you; il. by the author. 57p $3.95 Little 621.9 Machinery—Juvenile literature. Roads—Juvenile literature 67-17293

"The shoveling, scooping, sucking up, snow-blowing, rolling, and chopping operations [of city and highway maintenance and road building machines] . . . are shown as services necessary in various seasons or throughout the year." (Horn Bk) Index. "Ages seven to twelve." (America)

Reviewed by Ethna Sheehan

America 117:520 N 4 '67 60w

"Sepia drawings, many of them brightened with blue and orange, project a greater sense of power and action than photographs might have done in illustrating the work of [these] machines. . . . Hand-lettered captions add descriptive details about the work or the machinery to an informal, easy-to-read text." V. H.

Horn Bk 44:57 F '68 80w

"The illustrations are less exact than those in [George] Zaffo's picture book Big Book of Real Building and Wrecking Machines [BRD 1951], but the expanded discussion should appeal to third- and fourth-grade boys who can read it themselves. In addition, its emphasis on community service and the good chapter on road-building suggest its use as source material for units on community life or transportation." Janet French

Library J 93:2116 My 15 '68 120w

SAUSER, FRÉDÉRIC. See Cendrars, B.

SAUTER, VAN GORDON. Nightmare in Detroit; a rebellion and its victims [by] Van Gordon Sauter and Burleigh Hines. 231p $4.95 Regnery

301.45 Detroit—Riots. Negroes—Detroit. Riots 68-19792

Two newspapermen give an account of the disorders in Detroit in 1967 in which forty-three people were killed "showing how they lived and died. Most of the information comes from interviews with relatives and friends of the deceased. . . . Interspersed with the profiles of the victims are brief descriptions of what officialdom was doing or not doing to control the riot." (Library J)

"[This is] a gripping account . . . but it gives almost no analysis of the reasons for such urban disorders. . . . [It] should prove helpful to most church people . . . [since it] provides a good basic education on the racial problem [and points] to the need for the church to increase its moral influence in the months ahead if we are to remain a nation committed to justice for all." Alan Seaburg

Christian Century 85:1081 Ag 28 '68 140w

"These two excellent journalist-authors give an . . . account of each of 43 persons killed—the policemen, the 4-year-old girl, the fireman, innocent bystanders, the drunken sniper, and the others—in last summer's riot in Detroit. They then make important conclusions: the deaths have resulted neither in an impact on the national conscience nor in meaningful reform; rather than a race riot, it was 'a riot by a portion of a race of people'; black nationalists did not spark the riot. The authors state that . . . the [Michigan National] Guard was ill prepared to stop civil disorder, [and] they aver that the Army's 1944 'civil disturbance' program is totally inapplicable today. . . . Both small and large libraries should anticipate reader interest." W. A. Smith

Library J 93:1494 Ap 1 '68 230w

Reviewed by Sumika Yamashita

Library J 93:2742 J1 '68 100w [YA]

SAVELLE, MAX. The origins of American diplomacy: the international history of Anglo-america, 1492-1763; with the assistance of Margaret Anne Fisher. 624p maps $12.95 Macmillan (N Y)

327.7 U.S.—History—Colonial period 67-20734

The "professor emeritus of history at the University of Washington . . . covers the era from the investigations of Henry the Navigator in the 15th century through the fall of New France to Great Britain in 1763. . . . Much of Savelle's story takes place in the courts of Europe. . . . [but it] also gives some attention to diplomatic dealings between the colonial outposts themselves. . . . [and] analyzes changes in international law occasioned by the discovery and settlement of America." (N Y Times Bk R) Bibliography. Index.

"[This] will doubtless be held the most important of the contributions that Professor

SAVELLE, MAX—Continued

Max Savelle has made over the years to illuminate American colonial history. . . . In fact this is the only book that one can point to concerned with American diplomacy that covers its history systematically from the discovery of America to the Peace of Paris that terminated Britain's war for the Empire. It should therefore take its place as one of the essential books for students of American colonial history. . . . The bibliography, together with the footnotes, merits only praise. Savelle may rightfully claim to be the leading living authority on diplomacy involving America during the colonial period." L. H. Gipson

Am Hist R 73:1611 Je '68 420w

"The book is likely to be more valuable as a sort of encyclopedic piece than as one easily read. However, there are sections and chapters in which Savelle carries the reader along very enjoyably, notably when he departs from the necessary chronicle and either previews what is to come, summarizes what has been covered, or synthesizes under a given head, as in his final chapter 'The Growth of American Opinion Relative to International Affairs.' . . . The volume opens a number of new insights and documents others more or less well-known. A valuable contribution to the study of the colonial centuries." J. F. Bannon

J Am Hist 55:111 Je '68 350w

Reviewed by W. C. Kiessel

Library J 92:3417 O 1 '67 170w

Reviewed by Alden Vaughan

N Y Times Bk R p22 Mr 24 '68 320w

"This work is evidently intended as a textbook for American university students who have no great familiarity with foreign languages, and their British counterparts will find it equally useful. It has the advantage of surveying in the compass of one volume the ramifications of North American, Caribbean and European treaties and wars, settlements and explorations, which otherwise would have to be traced from several books in different languages. It has an excellent bibliography, some useful sketch-maps, and can be recommended for inclusion in university departmental history libraries."

TLS p780 J1 25 '68 230w

SAVILLE, LLOYD. Regional economic development in Italy. 191p $7 Duke univ. press

330.945 Italy—Economic conditions

67-21707

This is a comparative study of "the seven different regions of what is now a single nation. . . . Part One orients the problem. . . . To deal with the diversities offered by the seven regions, a representative province is chosen from each. . . . A summary view of development is obtained by plotting changes in real per capita income over the recent past. Part Two seeks explanations for the continuing disparities in regional income and growth. The Northwest is chosen for study of the scope of the market. Economic aspects of the labor force are considered. . . . The importance of available education, labor organization, and social security in shaping regional variation is explored. . . . In part Three Mr. Saville . . . [suggests] more regional autonomy and action." (Publisher's note) Index.

"With the exception of its commendable brevity, the book is an example of how not to write a book on economics. . . . In the second part . . . there are some interesting findings as, for instance, the finding that the density of population is positively correlated with the rate of growth of income, but not with the income level. Much of the work relies, however, on secondary sources which, though interesting, are not very trustworthy. . . . Because of the confused nature of the book, it is really extremely difficult to say what the whole book is about. At some points comparisons are made between one small and well-defined region and another. At other times Germany is compared with Italy. The time span jumps from prehistory to postwar history, the subject from women's participation in the labor force to the results of investment programs for Southern Italy." S. H. Wellisz

Am Econ R 58:984 S '68 700w

"By using seven regions, Saville achieves a finer grain for his work than earlier studies attained by distinguishing only the North and the Mezzogiorno. Evidence is presented as descriptive and statistical material. The tables and charts are clear and well presented. . . . The volume is well indexed, and should be a valuable addition to an undergraduate library."

Choice 5:236 Ap '68 80w

SAWYER, CAROLE A. Communist trade with developing countries, 1955-65. 126p $10 Praeger

382 Communist countries. Underdeveloped areas 66-18920

"After some remarks on the Marxist doctrinal background for trade with developing nations, Dr. Sawyer . . . [reviews] the balance of this trade, and its commodity pattern. Her data are drawn from trade sources of both groups of nations. . . . Major conclusions center around the heavy geographical concentration of this trade in relatively few commodity categories. . . . [The author also describes the] relation between trade and foreign aid of the Soviet Union. . . . [and] the policy dilemmas facing the aid givers. . . . [Other topics include] the economic rationale of this trade, problems arising from bilateralism [and] instability of trade, and re-exports." (Am Econ R)

"Sawyer's monograph is a short, well executed and useful study. Her major contribution is to present the most important data on trade between the developing nations and the communist bloc and to draw from these data a number of conclusions that hitherto have unfortunately been neglected in the public discussion of these matters. Her unpretentious and straightforward analysis will be of considerable use, not only to economists but to the general public interested in these questions as well. . . . Of particular interest is her demonstration of the relatively unchanging commodity pattern of this trade over the entire period. . . . [The author also] draws a number of tentative and pessimistic predictions about the future trade volume." F. L. Pryor

Am Econ R 58:274 Mr '68 500w

Choice 4:72 Mr '67 100w

SAYEED, KHALID B. The political system of Pakistan. 321p maps $5.95; pa $2.95 Houghton

954.9 Pakistan—Politics and government 67-2945

The author "highlights the problems that Pakistan is facing in its attempts to build a viable nation out of heterogeneous forces and achieve at the same time rapid economic development. . . . [and] describes the kind of political system that is emerging out of the attempts of Pakistan's leaders to build national unity and promote economic growth." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Professor Sayeed's book ranks among 'the classics' on Pakistan's political development. . . . The primary orientation of the book is naturally political, but it also has a good deal of sociological and economic insight. Often the flavor is more journalistic than academic, yet all of the documentation and sound scholarship that one could desire is present. . . . To add to everything else, it is beautifully written. Some of the material is virtually unique. . . . It should . . . be eminently useful in helping the people of Pakistan to comprehend better their own society and government." J. W. Spain

Ann Am Acad 376:166 Mr '68 270w

"The first few chapters of this book cover the same ground as Professor Sayeed's excellent earlier study, Pakistan, the Formative Phase, but with the aid of new sources, such as the papers of Sir George Cunningham and Sir Francis Mudie. . . . Where the book breaks new ground is in its analysis and comments on the politics of the Ayub regime. . . . There is much which is controversial in Professor Sayeed's book, but his arguments are well documented and in his chapter on Basic Democracies he recognises the achievements as well as the weaknesses of the Union Councils." Richard Symonds

Pacific Affairs 41:324 summer '68 430w

"The most valuable parts of this . . . book are those in which the author treats of the problems that are facing Pakistan today; the working of the constitution, the gap between the rural masses and the urban intelligentsia, the functioning of the bureaucracy, the place of Islam in political culture and national unity, the centrifugal effects of regionalism, the working of basic democracies and development in the rural areas. Dr. Sayeed ends an illuminating and comprehensive survey of these and other problems with a very neatly-constructed chapter on Pakistan's foreign relations. This is a most useful book; nothing has yet appeared which gives so much accurate and comprehensive information within so modest a compass."

TLS p178 F 22 '68 320w

SAYRE, KENNETH M., Jr. ed. Philosophy and cybernetics. See Crosson, F. J.

SCARISBRICK, J. J. Henry VIII. 561p il $10.95 Univ. of Calif. press

B or 92 Henry VIII, King of England

[68-109677]

This biography is based on documentary material from the Public Records Office in London and the British Museum. While covering all aspects of Henry's life and reign, Scarisbrick concentrates on the "theme of Henry's personal life, the divorce from Catherine of Aragon which led to the break with Rome and the establishment of royal supremacy." (Economist)

Reviewed by Maurice Adelman

America 119:570 N 30 '68 80w

Reviewed by F. J. Gallagher

Best Sell 28:169 JI 15 '68 400w

"Scarisbrick has written a massive and masterly survey. . . . [Although] it is heavily overweighed on the side of diplomatic history and ignores the important administrative developments of the reign, while it leaves, perhaps inevitably, too many questions unanswered—it is without question a magisterial work, lucid, beautifully written and informed by a penetrating knowledge of the period. . . . [Scarisbrick is inclined] to give Henry the benefit of the doubt, while he seeks to exculpate him from . . . [the] charges of cruelty and lust which have been leveled against his private character. Nevertheless, . . . when he comes to pronounce his final judgment on Henry and the reign, the verdict is damning."

J. C. Thompson

Book World p7 JI 28 '68 1000w

Choice 5:1208 N '68 140w

"[Scarisbrick] writes with admirable restraint and objectivity and has produced a work of formidable scholarship. . . . [An investigation] of canon law dominates the first part of the book, enlivened . . . [by a] reassessment of Wolsey's foreign policy and his relationship with Henry. The picture of Wolsey . . . perhaps the most original part of the book, remains tantalizingly incomplete. . . . Cromwell's great achievements in administration are dealt with only superficially. . . . Henry himself emerges quite rightly as a formidable and able ruler. . . . In spite of his originality in interpretation, Dr Scarisbrick has not made the same imaginative use of the documentary material at his disposal. . . . [He] has written an important even a monumental book; but it is the work of a scholar written for students, and his central figure remains a statue."

Economist 228:49 JI 27 '68 420w

Reviewed by R. R. Rea

Library J 98:2853 Ag '68 140w

"This book is a triumph of biography consonant with the interest and importance of its theme. It's as urbane as it's learned, as elegant as it's subtle, and as well-proportioned as it's well-informed. Even if some of its conclusions may command less than complete unanimity, it seems in no danger of being superseded for a long time to come."

Glanmor Williams

New Statesman 75:763 Je 7 '68 1150w

Reviewed by J. P. Kenyon

N Y Rev of Books 11:28 S 12 '68 2400w

"[This is] by far the best biography of Henry VIII yet written. For 65 years the King's name has been linked with that of his most distinguished apologist and interpreter, A. F. Pollard [Henry VIII, BRD 1906. This new image is] . . . less heroic than Pollard's but every bit as majestic. . . . It is obviously difficult for Scarisbrick to be fair to the King [in the first half of his reign; he] tends to become a flamboyant and disruptive footnote to the story of [Cardinal Wolsey] . . . but never has the tortuous narrative of the divorce been better told or the many roles of the King . . . better analyzed and recounted. . . . The concluding chapter is an impassioned harangue against the . . . waste involved in the Henrician Reformation. . . . [It] is an unexpected, jarring and disproportionate end to an otherwise superb biography." L. B. Smith

N Y Times Bk R p8 JI 7 '68 750w

"[Scarisbrick] does not try to resolve the contradictions in Henry's character so much as to make them comprehensible, balancing them against each other and putting them in their complex historical perspectives. This sounds unexciting—and it is. Scarisbrick's study is . . . a sober, patient amassing of significant details. For the nonspecialist it becomes tedious at times, as when Scarisbrick expounds canon law; . . . but in the end it adds up to a monumental mosaic that has all the quiet authority of first-rate scholarship."

Time 92:68 Ag 2 '68 650w

SCARPATI, ROSARIO. Hope or hindrance? the church of the future; tr. by Alba Zizzamia. 179p $4.50 Sheed

262 Catholic Church

67-21901

The author "distinguishes between the Church as mysterium and as magisterium. Emphasis on the . . . authoritarian aspect of the latter role has led . . . to a rigidity of outlook and practice. Now a renewed awareness of its charismatic essence is bringing about an adaptation of the Church to the needs of the modern world. To explain both the historical inflexibility and the contemporary volte-face, Mr. Scarpatti draws upon the sociology of history, intellectual and cultural history, and . . . Schumpeterian economics." (Library J)

"An Italian professor calls for a new humanism and notes that the church's increase in self-knowledge is a path toward that end. His major field of interest is not theology but social development. The argument is something less than startling."

Christian Century 84:1162 S 13 '67 40w

"Much of Mr. Scarpatti's presentation is summary and theoretical; accordingly, his book, though brief, will be useful primarily to serious readers in larger Catholic academic libraries."

C. E. Zakrzewski

Library J 92:2785 Ag '67 170w

SCHAAP, DICK, ed. Instant replay. See Kramer, J.

SCHAAP, DICK. R. F. K.; picture ed: Michael O'Keefe. 201p $10 New Am. lib.

B or 92 Kennedy, Robert Francis 67-28481

This biography of the New York State senator and brother of the late United States president, covers Robert Kennedy's political history but emphasizes his personal and family life.

"[While Schaap offers an] essentially sympathetic portrayal of the Senator . . . [he also] acknowledges that [Kennedy] blew his cool over Hoffa and Manchester, that he was a big boy when he went to work for the McCarthy Committee, that his intra-party record in New York is partly stained with indecision and impotence, that he can be petty, rude and arrogant, and that he makes mistakes. . . . I take it to be the implied message . . . that most of the warts are attributable to RFK—the frog; but that by virtue of breeding, association, character, experience and a new fatalism and poignancy brought on by the assassination of his brother, the frog has turned into something of a prince. . . . [Schaap] is a presenter rather than an analyzer. . . . By capturing the day-to-day Kennedy in contact with people rather than institutions . . . [the book] yields a sense of immediacy lacking in [W. V. Shannon's] The Heir Apparent [BRD 1967], a you-are-there feeling more akin to cinema vérité documentary than a political source book." V. S. Navasky

Book World p1 O 22 '67 1150w

"Well, now that the quadrennial hustings season is fast approaching once again, it is only reasonable to expect that the body politic will receive injections from time to time and from various sources intended to raise its fever. This book is just such an injection, administered not by the physician, but by an admirer. The physician in this case, Senator Robert F. Kennedy, it must in all fairness be said, did not authorize or even approve the injection—although he gave his reluctant cooperation. . . . The reluctance of R. F. K. is understandable, because though the injection as a whole turns out to be a benign one, it is compounded of both helpful and unhealthful ingredients, some of which may have unintended side effects. . . . Schaap might have been more adroit in his administration of the needle if he had tried more for sobriety than for cuteness. There is a little too much jiggling in the jabbing." A. L. Fessler

SCHAAP, DICK—Continued

Library J 93:560 F 1 '68 280w

"[The author], who was city editor of The Herald Tribune, has enlivened his narrative with a good deal of first-hand reporting and interviews—but his text lacks the depth and detail needed for a full understanding of its subject. Where the book excels is in the range and richness of the pictures—some 200 of them—that Mr. O'Keefe has assembled. His vivid montages do more than complement the text. They reveal nuances of mood, expression and posture, in a fuller dimension than words." Cabell Phillips

N Y Times Bk R p7 O 29 '67 700w

SCHAEFER, JACK. Mavericks; II. by Lorence Bjorklund. 184p $3.25 Houghton

67-23312

"The stories of the mustangs are told through the memories of Jake Hanlon, an old stove-up cowboy. He sits in the sun overlooking a super-highway that follows the route of an early-day cattle trail, and . . . [recalls] herds of long-horn cattle being driven up the trail to market—by Young Jake Hanlon and other cowboys riding mustangs. . . . [He] remembers the time when his horse, 'Jimmie Dun,' won the 530-mile race from Deadwood to Omaha. He also recalls when [he] trailed and captured the famous White Mustang. . . . One of Old Jake's last acts is to set free a band of mustangs doomed to be slaughtered for canned dog food." (Book World) "Grades six to eight." (Library J)

"An excellent book, with a misleading title. Nothing in it about mavericks (unbranded cattle). It deals, instead, with mustangs—wild horses. . . . Schaefer is at his best when describing these horses. . . . [He] brings out their intelligence, gallantry and tragedy. . . . Schaefer does not 'write down' to his young readers. The result is a colorful, sometimes even poetic story." A. R. Bosworth

Book World p14 Ja 14 '68 320w

"In a magnificent tribute to a vanishing breed of men and horses, the author of Shane [BRD 1949] takes us for a few fleeting, memorable moments back to the old Southwest. His mavericks are the invincible mustangs and hard-riding cowboys of New Mexico. . . . They will never die, for they are the symbols of man's stubborn clutch on freedom—which is the real substance of this superb book." M. S. C.

Horn Bk 43:760 D '67 210w

"In the pages of this novel, today's young people meet and know an old character who stands for qualities and a set of values identified with the early days in our western plains. . . . The tale's end would have been maudlin in the hands of a less skilled writer; nevertheless, some readers will wish that Mr. Schaefer had stuck to realism rather than indulging in a fantasy treatment of Jake's death. A handsomely designed book, with strong black-and-white sketches which add to the feeling and character of the whole. It's a step up in literary quality for readers attracted to juvenile western novels." M. A. Wentroth

Library J 92:4265 N 15 '67 140w

Reviewed by Catherine Storr
New Statesman 76:592 N 1 '68 60w

Reviewed by Marshall Sprague
N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p16 N 5 '67
250w [YA]

TLS p1110 O 3 '68 130w

SCHAEFER, JACK. The short novels of Jack Schaefer; with an introd. by Dorothy M. Johnson. 525p $6.95 Houghton

67-19133

This collection of five stories includes Shane (BRD 1949), First Blood, The Canyon (BRD 1954), and The Kean Land (BRD 1959). The fifth story Company of Cowards [BRD 1957, is] a Civil War tale." (Critic)

"Shane is a well written retelling of the stereotyped Western story: the family of homesteaders oppressed by the powerful rancher.

. . . The others in this collection are based on the myth of frontier individualism and are developed around the theme of the West as the place for the making of a man, or for beginning again. Unless Schaefer produces something better than Shane, he, like Owen Wister and his The Virginian (1902), will be known mainly for that one effort."

Choice 5:780 S '68 180w

Critic 26:89 O '67 90w

"Schaefer's novels are circulation-sure and though short, they present a sharp picture of the West as it was." Regina Minudri

Library J 92:4274 N 15 '67 50w [YA]

"[This volume] gathers five exceptional stories, of which three are really full-size novels. The best known is Shane . . . but in some respects the weakest. . . . It was Schaefer's first novel, and it suffers on rereading. The overwritten prose often flounders knee-deep in awe-struck adjectives, and the story is the most formulaistic of the five, incarnating the sun-god hero, the existential superman dressed in black who appears from the horizon, rights wrongs, and disappears again. All five stories are about growing up. . . . The Canyon, probably the best of the five, concerns a Cheyenne Indian whose conscience drives him 'crosswise to the customs.' . . . Here Schaefer ventures far beyond the customary trappings which to some extent, he clings to in the other stories. Yet even where his stories are traditional in structure they are told with great freshness and new perspective, while at their lowest points they remain greatly superior to the average." Brian Garfield

Sat R 50:100 O 14 '67 370w

SCHAFER, EDWARD H. Ancient China, by Edward H. Schafer and the editors of Time-Life books. (Great ages of man; a hist. of the world's cultures) 191p il col il maps $3.95 Time; to libs & schools $4.95 Silver

913.31 China—Civilization. China—Antiquities 67-30847

The "present volume is the history of Chinese civilization from the Bronze-age Shang Dynasty (c. 1500-1000 B.C.) through the early medieval T'ang Dynasty (618-907 A.D.). . . . [The author] describes the daily life of the people, social structure, customs, and philosophical and religious beliefs." (Library J) Chronology. Bibliography. Index.

"A superb introduction to early Chinese civilization. The scope of the book . . . exceeds the period usually designated as ancient China, but still provides a cohesive and very rewarding subject matter. . . . The material on religion and daily life is much fuller than that found in most books on China's early culture. The text is ably supplemented by a large number of illustrations, many grouped as picture essays on such topics as the role of women in society, painting, and Buddhist sculpture. While the illustrations are generally well chosen and beautifully reproduced, some, particularly those of ancient bronzes, are so 'enhanced' through tricks of lighting and multiple exposure as to be almost totally obscured. Several valuable maps and charts."

Choice 5:668 J1 '68 170w

"A prominent feature of this book is the many illustrations which are visual records of life in ancient China as preserved in its arts and artifacts. This is a concise and vivid account of a major civilization written by a recognized scholar." R. T. Doi

Library J 93:1631 Ap 15 '68 140w

Library J 93:1828 Ap 15 '68 20w [YA]

SCHAFER, EDWARD H. The vermilion bird; T'ang images of the South. 380p il $11 Univ. of Calif. press 915.1 China—History. China—Description and travel. Natural history—China.

67-10463

A professor of Chinese at the University of California at Berkeley, author of The Golden Peaches of Samarkand; a study of T'ang Exotics (BRD 1964), presents this volume in which "he explores the impact of the 'tropical and exotic' region to the southeast of the Yangtze River valley—as far as present-day northern Indo-China—upon the customs, thought, material cultures, and images of the 'word' of the Chinese during the T'ang dynasty (618-907)." (Library J) Bibliography. Glossaries include names and titles; words; and Nam-Viet counties. Index.

"The title bird is not an actual bird but a stylized representation of the 'Bird of Heaven,' a 'fictitious icon.' The book is an exhaustive inquiry into the total character and spirit of the imagination of [the] Central Chinese as they moved south. . . . [It] can be read primarily as a sourcebook of T'ang imagery, but it is much more. It provides a wealth of anthropological, historical, and ethnological information about this part of Asia from prehistorical period down to the 9th and 10th centuries. A book of impeccable scholarship, it also has the added charm of a beautiful English style. Illustrated with excellent reproductions of medieval Chinese and Japanese embroideries, bronzes, and studies."

Choice 5:110 Mr '68 290w

"The book, which is no less polished and absorbing than [Schaffer's] earlier ones, gives the reader not only rare insights into the interaction between the Chinese empire and its southern frontier regions, but also a clear explanation of many hitherto obscure aspects of traditional Chinese life and culture. [It] is a gem of a study." Hyman Kublin

Library J 92:3998 N 1 '67 150w

SCHAFFNER, NEIL E. The fabulous Toby and me; with Vance Johnson. 212p il $5.95 Prentice-Hall

B or 92 Theater—U.S.

68-13060

This book deals with an era of the American theater when "the 'tent repertoire' shows flourished, from the middle of the 19th Century to the 1940's. . . . When talkies, television, and air-conditioned summer theatres drove these tent rep companies out of business, one company, 'The Schaffner Players,' refused to die because of the dedication and know-how of Neil Schaffner and his . . . wife, Caroline. Most of the book is Neil's story of how he rose from a boy bill-poster and props assistant to leading man, author, and owner of his own company." (Library J)

"[Schaffner's] experiences of getting jobs, learning his art from many colleagues, his creation of the famous comic character, 'Toby,' his difficulties in obtaining licenses for plays, tent sites, his troubles with Equity (which he joined), the vast repertoire he and many other actors knew, the traveling conditions and so on give a first hand record of an important theatrical era in America." Marguerite McAneny

Library J 93:206 Ja 15 '68 230w

"Mr. Schaffner, the best-known of the tent show managers, has engrossingly chronicled the colorful story of what is often called 'America's only folk theater.'" J. A. White

Sat R 51:59 Mr 23 '68 120w

SCHALK, DAVID L. Roger Martin du Gard; the novelist and history. 257p $6.75 Cornell Univ. press

843 Martin du Gard, Roger

67-14083

This book provides "synopses of Martin du Gard's major novels together with a . . . selection of critical comments from the work of other scholars. . . . [The author, an American professor of history, attempts an] analysis of the special problems of the historical novelist . . . [in order] to throw fresh light on the dramatic change in Martin du Gard's literary plans [which led him] to integrate contemporary history into his fiction." (TLS) Bibliography. Index.

"[This] book, sprinkled with acute observations, raises more questions than it answers. That could be a point in its favor if the questions were actually formulated, but, as it stands, it leaves the impression that the issue posed by the subtitle has been crowded out by an extended and ably conducted biobibliography. One is left wondering over the mysterious process by which historical experience, personal or vicarious, turns into evidence—or into art. How different is this transmogrification from what we historians do? . . . [The book is nevertheless a] valiant attempt to write about the life and work of a stubbornly discreet man who deliberately, and rightly, left his memorial in his books." Eugen Weber

Am Hist R 73:832 F '68 420w

"Schalk, a historian, adopts a historian's point of view, though he is sensitive to literary as well as historical values. He asserts that the novelist's work, especially Les Thibault (1922-40), remains a valuable document depicting, perhaps better than a history, the atmosphere of the period. . . . [His] main concern is the change of plan in Les Thibault which led Martin du Gard to abandon the psychological method of his original project in favor of presenting his characters as situated in, and subjected to, the historical events of their time. Carefully documented, closely argued, and clearly, though not brilliantly, expressed, this study will probably be more useful to students of literature than to historians. Excellent bibliography."

Choice 4:1121 D '67 220w

"[This book] includes a comprehensive and up-to-date bibliography with particularly helpful sections on Martin du Gard's review articles and published correspondence. The specialist reader, on the other hand, will find little that has not already been more incisively said by such critics as Clément Borgal, Denis Boak or Victor Brombert. . . . Schalk's questionable critical assumptions rest on the statements Martin du Gard made about his literary motives either in the Souvenirs autobiographiques . . . or in the letters to his friends. . . . It does not seem to have occurred to Dr. Schalk, as it surely should have done, that Martin du Gard was more often than not mistaken in his own self-analyses. . . . [A] disappointing study."

TLS p1185 D 7 '67 800w

SCHAPIRO, LEONARD, ed. Lenin: the man, the theorist, the leader; a reappraisal; eds: Leonard Schapiro and Peter Reddaway; assistant ed: Paul Rosta. (Stanford Univ. Hoover inst. on war, revolution and peace. Publication) 317p $7.50 Praeger

B or 92 Lenin, Vladimir Il'ich 67-28181

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by S. W. Page

Am Hist R 73:1584 Je '68 200w

Reviewed by A. G. Meyer

Am Pol Sci R 62:1001 S '68 850w

Choice 5:674 J1 '68 110w

Reviewed by Alasdair MacIntyre

Encounter 30:71 My '68 1900w

SCHATZ, LETTA. Whiskers, my cat; Paul Galdone drew the pictures. 32p $3.50 McGraw 811

67-26353

"On the dust jacket, a smug cat—the color of orange marmalade—lies dozing, smuggled deep inside a paper bag. [The book tries to capture] the many moods of cats . . . by the changing rhythms of pictures and [the alliterative onomatopoeic] text." (Horn Bk) "Kindergarten to grade three." (Library J)

"Whether daytime dozer or nighttime prowler, fur-licking preener or 'shivering scrap of scraggly-haired misery,' acrobat or 'warm hum of fur,' Whiskers commands attention and admiration as Letta Schatz and Paul Galdone bring him to life in rhythmic prose and expressive, comical pictures." Polly Goodwin

Book World p14 Ja 14 '68 110w

Horn Bk 44:54 F '68 120w

"Paul Galdone has captured the essence of the cat in his black, white, and ginger illustrations. The text is quick and rhythmical, slow and purring, depending on Whiskers' mood. Fun to read aloud and a good addition to the picture book shelf." Barbara Gibson

Library J 92:4246 N 15 '67 80w

Reviewed by Richard Lockridge

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p6 N 5 '67 50w

TLS p1117 O 3 '68 30w

SCHEER, GEORGE F., ed. Cherokee animal tales; ed. with an introd. by George F. Scheer; il. by Robert Frankenberg. 79p lib bdg $3.50 Holiday

398.2 Animals—Stories. Cherokee Indians—Legends—Juvenile literature. Indians of North America—Legends—Juvenile literature 68-31945

Selected tales, retold "by an American history specialist from the now classic study of Cherokee culture made in 1837 for the Smithsonian Institution by James Mooney and published in 1900 under the title, The Myths of the Cherokee, in the 19th Annual Report of the Bureau of American Ethnology. . . . In his background information Mr. Scheer discusses the role of the animals in Cherokee folklore, noting that the most prominent figure is Rabbit, the trickster and deceiver who is often beaten at his own game. Included are variants of the familiar stories of the rabbit and the tar wolf, and the rabbit and his race with the terrapin. . . . Grades three to five." (Library J)

SCHEER, G. F.—Continued

"With wise restraint Mr. Scheer has left these simple gems of the primitive art of storytelling essentially as he found them, the language spare, the tales lively with surprises. . . . As peers of the Cherokees in both folly and wisdom, [the animals] have comparable problems in dealing with the strong and the wicked; in 'How the Terrapin Beat the Rabbit' justice is swift and funny. The Rabbit's antics, a kind of black humor in 'Why the Deer's Teeth Are Blunt,' parallel those of Nigeria's Ijapa. . . . A useful introduction. . . . The illustrations are a fine blend of perceptive detail and parody." Helen Renthal
Book World p14 (children's issue)
My 5 '68 170w

"These newest retellings by Mr Scheer have not undergone the editorial embellishment characteristic of other collections prepared for children based on the same source, such as those of . . . Corydon Bell's John Rattling-Gourd of Big Cove [BRD 1955]. . . . Soft, realistic pencil sketches capture the humor inherent in these tales. For all libraries, however, the stories gathered by Corydon Bell are still the most important collection of Cherokee folklore for children." J. C. Ullom
Library J 93:2116 My 15 '68 200w

"[Scheer has] provided a substantial introduction—one-quarter of the text—tracing the place of the Cherokee in American culture and history. . . . [The editor] successfully prepares the reader to recognize in these simple stories of animal pranks and one-upmanship the customs and values of the people who produced them. Robert Frankenberg has provided delicately detailed charcoal sketches not of stylized animal caricatures but of real woodland creatures only caught now and then in human posture or expression. The impression of text and illustrations is that of charm and authenticity." M. L. Bird
N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p34 My 5 '68 210w

SCHEFOLD, KARL. The art of classical Greece [tr. by J. R. Foster] [Eng title: Classical Greece]. 294p il col il $6.95 Crown

709.38 Art, Greek

67-17705

A "survey of the artistic achievements of the golden age of Greek art extending from about 500 to 325 B.C. As in all the other works in [the Art of the World] series, the subject is discussed against historical, sociological, and religious backgrounds." (Library J) Chronology. Index. Originally published in 1965 as Klassisches Griechenland.

Reviewed by Cornelius Vermeule

Class World 61:357 Ap '68 430w

"[The] professor of classical archaeology at the University of Basel has a scholarly, discerning grasp of stylistic analysis and most imaginative interpretations which afford remarkable insight into Greek art and the development of Greek culture as a whole. The notes contain good bibliography; the plates are well chosen and clear. Highly recommended as a useful and serious introduction . . . for scholarly and general readers in large public, academic, and special libraries." F. D. Lazenby
Library J 93:743 F 15 '68 200w

"In many ways [this] is a worthy member of the series. The arrangement of the material is clear and logical, and the objects chosen for illustration (for the most part works of sculpture and painting) are well selected. . . . [Professor Schefold] is also to be commended for his generous use, in the appendix of plates, of the so-called record-reliefs; dated monuments which, although seldom works of art, are of supreme importance for the chronology. . . . On the debit side one must deplore the romantic and metaphysical writing with which the book is permeated. The English public prefers a more factual approach. The translation is well done, but it is the ideas rather than the words which all too often defy translation, and very heavy pruning would have done the English version a power of good. . . . [However] there is a regrettable tendency, loved by publishers and hated by authors, to paint out the backgrounds [of the plates]." TLS p370 Ap 11 '68 400w

SCHEIBLA, SHIRLEY. Poverty is where the money is. 280p $5.95 Arlington house

309.2 U.S. Office of Economic Opportunity. Economic assistance, Domestic 68-21667

The author criticizes the Office of Economic Opportunity for its "corruption, mismanagement, treason, and ineptitude." (Library J)

"General libraries more interested in readable, controversial books than scholarly studies would like this one. Academic libraries wanting more detail and less polemic will prefer [S.] Levitan's Antipoverty Work and Training Efforts: Goals and Realities. No index; uneven documentation."

Choice 5:840 S '68 160w

"Mrs. Scheibla's simplistic polemic against the Office of Economic Opportunity is a racy, muckraking, statistics-filled, conservative analysis full of sound and fury. . . . She looked to find waste and, to her seeming shock, she found it. But in her zeal she neglects to mention any of the positive achievements. Hers is not an objective report. It was not intended to be. It is a journalist's effort to explain a socio-political-economic phenomenon from her own bias. She has provided the antipoverty program enthusiasts with new and exciting ammunition." H. S. Camenson
Library J 93:2651 J1 '68 120w

"[The author] seems not to have let a single instance of malfeasance in the community action programs or in the Job Corps elude her, and her dossier is probably accurate. She is always ready with her FBI file on everyone of left-wing orientation in community action. . . . She regards the whole poverty program as an exercise in futility. If we will just let the good old private-enterprise system do its work the deserving will get theirs. As for the millions who have been and would continue to be left in misery—keep the system clean, that's the important thing. Mrs. Scheibla's book, with its smart-aleck title, is a disconcerting reminder that compassion is a quality as unequally distributed as income." Paul Marx
New Repub 159:33 J1 6 '68 380w

SCHEINFELD, AMRAM. Twins and supertwins; with special editing by Arthur Falek, and others herein mentioned; . . . il. by the author. 292p $6.95 Lippincott

155.44 Twins

67-13306

An "account of the lives of the multiple-born from conception through maturity—their type differences, health factors, psychological traits, social relationships, unique experiences, and special problems—as revealed by scientists, by parents of twins, and by twins themselves." (Title page) Bibliography. Index.

"[This book] is mainly concerned with the sociology of twins, how they get on with their parents, with each other, with friends, with their psychiatrists. The science of twins, how they are conceived and when and how they are born, is given much less attention, and the author does not mention some of the very exciting recent work which suggests that a large percentage of identical twins are caused by events occurring days after implantation. . . . Despite the title, Dr. Scheinfeld is less good on supertwins, on triplets, quads and quins. . . . Every now and then it is easy to suspect that other facts are being withheld for fear that some reader might have found cause for concern in them. And throughout the author disseminates a Spock-like cosiness which is always comforting, never alarming. . . . Nevertheless the book is full of meat."

Economist 227:49 Je 15 '68 500w

"The well-known author of You and Heredity [BRD 1939] and Your Heredity and Environment [BRD 1965, has written this account for twins]. . . . their parents, and everyone with a personal or professional interest in the subject. Every aspect of twinning is thoroughly explored: biological, medical, social, and psychological. . . . [Scheinfeld] carefully interprets the scientific information for the lay reader, so that the book becomes a highly readable, fascinating narrative. Appendixes include a chronological listing of 'Trailblazers in Twin Study.' . . . Recommended for general library collections." E. P. Nichols
Library J 92:2792 Ag '67 170w

"[Dr. Scheinfeld] does not overburden his tale with too difficult genetic details and jargon and, apart from what seems a rather too great emphasis on the psychiatric and psychological aspects of twinship, important though these can be in a minority of persons, he has produced a useful study of an interesting subject."

TLS p842 Ag 8 '68 480w

SCHEITHAUER, WALTER. Hummingbirds; tr. by Gwynne Vevers; with 76 colour phot. by the author. 176p $10 Crowell

598 Hummingbirds—Pictures, illustrations, etc. 67-24400

The author describes the life history of the hummingbird, discusses hummingbirds and man; and tells how to photograph hummingbirds in flight. Index. Originally published 1966 in West Germany entitled Kolibris.

"Scheithauer has devoted many years to studying and photographing hummingbirds in his private aviary in Germany. The resulting book is a real gem. The color photographs are utterly fantastic. . . . In the first half of the text Mr. Scheithauer radiates enthusiasm for his pets in a fascinating summary of their ways. . . . The remainder of the volume, in which he details how to raise and photograph hummingbirds will be useful to the specialist but is rather prosaic for the layman. Nevertheless it is an outstanding volume and one that any bird lover or photographer will be delighted to own. Libraries should also consider its appeal." Walter Harding

Library J 92:4515 D 15 '67 130w

"Certainly anyone contemplating keeping hummingbirds in captivity should have Scheithauer's book, where his methods and observations are described in detail. The main problem is food, and Scheithauer gives not only his own formula but those used successfully by the major European zoos. These all differ in detail, but each provides a properly balanced diet. It is abundantly clear that hummingbirds can be kept in captivity easily. . . . [This] book should appeal to anyone interested in the behavior of these extraordinary birds." Marston Bates

Natur Hist 77:70 Mr '68 320w

"Many will acquire this book for the beauty of the . . . plates and they will not be disappointed. . . . Herr Scheithauer's photographs of the hummingbirds in flight or at rest are superlative—there is no other word for the results he has obtained. The brilliance of these flying jewels is marvellously shown, but why in so many of the pictures must the background be in such glaring colours? Is sky ever so intensely blue? . . . [However, this] is far from being just a picture book. The text is crammed with information. Herr Scheithauer states in his preface that his aim has been to report on all the ornithological aspects, but above all to produce a guide to the correct care of hummingbirds under temperate climatic conditions. In that there is no doubt he has succeeded and he has given us a book of great value. . . . [The] translation is excellent."

TLS p1195 D 7 '67 550w

SCHÉLL, JONATHAN. The military half; an account of destruction in Quang Ngai and Quang Tin. 212p maps $4.95; pa $1.65 Knopf

959.7 Vietnamese Conflict, 1961-. Quang Ngai, Vietnam. Quang Tin, Vietnam 68-2431

The author of The Village of Ben Suc (BRD 1967). "follows the . . . path of Task Force Oregon as it moves . . . through Quang Ngai and Quang Tin, two provinces in central Vietnam said to be infested with main force units of the Vietcong and the North Vietnamese army. . . . [He suggests] that in certain parts of South Vietnam we have, by the indiscriminate use of our enormous fire-power, virtually destroyed entire regions that were once inhabited by large peasant populations." (Sat R) This appeared originally in The New Yorker in slightly different form.

"[Schell] makes no bones about his bias. He is irrevocably opposed to United States policy in Vietnam. Much of what he says is, in principle, absolutely correct and needs to be brought to public attention. His method of presentation, however, largely invalidates anything he might have to say. Mr. Schell's method is simple; he hunts around until he finds a soldier or civilian official who will make a statement that reinforces his strongly held preconceived notions. Mostly this entails finding someone directly concerned in the fighting, asking him questions about policies and procedures concerning which he is completely ignorant, and then passing off his comments as fact. . . . The book is made up of a series of personal and particular observations from which no valid generalizations are drawn. The general reader may find it appealing." E. J. Cutler

Library J 93:2664 J1 '68 290w

Reviewed by Jonathan Mirsky

Nation 207:90 Ag 5 '68 1150w

"In this kind of reportage . . . effects are achieved by sharp observations and a piling on of selective detail. The twenty-five-year-old author, a graduate student in Far Eastern history at Harvard, makes no comments and passes no judgments. The facts speak for themselves. . . . His portraits of individual pilots and soldiers, though casual, are sharply etched and sadly revealing. To most Americans, as one private put it, the Vietnamese are people from 'a different planet.' The war is impersonal and so, too, are its horrors. Schell records it just as impersonally, thus magnifying the horror." Hal Dareff

Sat R 51:27 J1 13 '68 600w

SCHÉLL, JONATHAN. The village of Ben Suc. 132p $3.95 Knopf

959.7 Ben Suc, Vietnam. Vietnamese Conflict, 1961-. Vietnam—Social conditions 67-29479

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Choice 5:684 J1 '68 70w

Reviewed by Tsukasa Matsueda

Library J 93:897 F 15 '68 100w

Reviewed by Nicholas Tomalin

New Statesman 75:416 Mr 29 '68 450w

TLS p496 My 16 '68 340w

SCHENK, H. G. The mind of the European romanticism; an essay in cultural history; with a pref. by Isaiah Berlin. 303p pl $9 Ungar

914 Europe—Intellectual life. Romanticism 67-17821

A study of the Romantic Movement "in literature, painting, music, philosophy, religion, and other fields—and an . . . interpretation of its main issues: intellectual, emotional, social and historical [The book begins with a description of the] revolt against the ideas of the eighteenth century. Romantic ideas and sentiments are then illustrated and anatomized in the form of pen portraits of individual Romantics . . . [such] as Schelling, Coleridge and Lamennais." (Publisher's note) Index.

"There can be no quarrel with the importance of romanticism, or with the scope of the analysis promised by this book: from romantic ideas of progress and disenchantment, through their malady of the soul, to the emphasis on love and friendship. Within the book, however, this large vision is sharply contracted.

Schenk judges his romantics with the yardstick of orthodox Christianity. . . . [In so doing] he misses the importance of the occult for the romantics and slights their concept of myth and symbols. . . . This book can [however] provide some interesting insights, and most of the examples are taken from men and women who prized their singularity. For the necessary minimum information . . . this book is both too narrowly conceived and too subjective." G. L. Mosse

Am Hist R 72:961 Ap '67 430w

Economist 221:164 O 8 '66 420w

"Schenk, a fellow of the Royal Historical Society who holds a lectureship at Oxford in European economic and social history, did not (and could not) intend an exhaustive treatment in the scope of less than 300 pages. . . . However, [his] admirable grasp, his unusually wide-ranging knowledge of the subject in the major European languages and his emphatic but never uncritical attitude towards figures and thoughts treated make this a highly stimulating survey and synthesis. . . . A warmly recommended acquisition for large public and academic libraries." Edith Lenel

Library J 93:74 Ja 1 '68 160w

Reviewed by R. M. Adams

N Y Rev of Books 10:26 F 15 '68 1750w

"The impression [the author] sometimes gives of Romanticism [is] as a sort of organized European club, with a strictly limited list of members among all the poets, scholars, novelists, historians and scientists of the early nineteenth century. . . . In spite of references to so many individuals of diverse nationalities, [he] does not succeed in providing any comprehensive view of Romanticism. Important fields of thought are completely ignored, little is said about the movement and complexity of ideas, and the work remains static, fragmentary and superficial. The final impression one has on closing the book is of having passed through a portrait gallery, where names and qualities are recorded, but where each individual portrayed is separated from his contemporaries by a thick frame."

SCHENK, H. G.—Continued

TLS p549 Je 22 '67 2850w

SCHERLE, VICTOR, jt. auth. Affectionately. T. S. Eliot. See Levy, W. T.

SCHERZ, FRANCES H., jt. auth. Family social welfare. See Feldman, F. L.

SCHICKEL, RICHARD. The Disney version; the life, times, art and commerce of Walt Disney. 384p $6.50 Simon & Schuster

790.2 Disney, Walt. Moving picture industry 68-12174

The author, a film critic, interlaces his biographical narrative of the American film producer with social commentary on American culture. Bibliography. Index.

"As an intellectual working for Life magazine . . . [the author] has done a valiant job in trying to include the polarities of Disney and of America. . . . Because Schickel has included various points of view, his book is in many ways like a coherent collection of essays by different men. Its strength lies in its range. The book is full of interesting minutiae. . . . Schickel has not written the last word on Disney, but he conceives a view of Disney that shows his many dimensions and many contradictions. Disney comes out at the end larger than the book, and Mr. Schickel deserves vast credit for this fact. He has demeaned the man, but he has also seen positive values along with the contradictions." F. A. Macklin

America 118:796 Je 22 '68 550w

"This book is one of the finest cultural histories of our times. Superbly written, it is a landmark in the biography genre as well as a high-water mark in serious, critical scrutiny of popular culture. A sensitive social historian with a psychologist's perceptiveness, Mr. Schickel penetrates the myth of the 'beloved magic maker of the movies,' the 'entrepreneur of mass culture' in richly documented detail. Not only does he reveal his subject, he also unveils the America that made him." J. J. Quinn

Best Sell 28:78 My 15 '68 800w

Reviewed by Bernard Wolfe

Book World p5 Ap 28 '68 1200w

Choice 5:1323 D '68 180w

Reviewed by John Allen

Christian Science Monitor p7 My 23 '68 1000w

Reviewed by Joseph Epstein

Commentary 46:102 S '68 1650w

Reviewed by Jane Gibson

Commonweal 88:474 Je 12 '68 750w

Reviewed by K. G. Jackson

Harper 236:94 Je '68 650w

"[This] book tends to be more of a critical analysis of an American cultural institution, Walt Disney Productions, [than of Disney]. . . . Mr. Schickel has approached his subject like a combatant tearing down a venerated hero, demolishing the myths in the life and work of Walt Disney. . . . It is a bitter and basically unfair portrait of a man. Furthermore, to criticize the Disney version of reality, as Mr. Schickel does, in terms of standards one might apply to the works of René Clair or Charlie Chaplin is to mistake the intentions of a Walt Disney production. . . . If the reader can disregard [the author's] version of Disney, the man, then he can begin to enjoy some of the insights into the cultural history of Walt Disney Productions." Henry Halpern

Library J 93:1650 Ap 15 '68 270w

Reviewed by Peter Michelson

New Repub 159:31 Jl 6 '68 1950w

"The Disney Studio denied Schickel access to files and the use of pictures. But I doubt if there is more to learn. . . . The notion that [Disney] produced clean entertainment for the kiddies, free of violence and sex, is nonsense. His films were full of violence and displaced sex, especially an anal-fixation that Schickel documents in detail. His real contribution had nothing to do with art. . . . Like everything Disney created his animated films were controlled environments. . . . Schickel shows where Disney's environments succeed and fail. Like Disney's films, they succeed as technological achievements. . . . Only people who like being rigidly controlled are happy in them. Ultimately, the loss of control over one's destiny is death, and behind all the canned happiness, this is the prevailing mood in Disney's environments. Nevertheless, they are pioneer models in a field of utmost importance. They deserve the serious examination they receive here." Edmund Carpenter

N Y Times Bk R p5 My 5 '68 1300w

New Yorker 44:159 My 25 '68 150w

"This fluent analysis of Disney's life, times, art and commerce . . . ruffles the image without disrupting the performance. . . . It is the puzzling, impure nature of popular mechanized culture that underlies the author's concern. His harshest criticism of Disney is that the entertainment machine he set in motion 'was designed to shatter the two most valuable things about childhood—its secrets and its silences. . . . [He] argues that Disney could not have been an artist because his simplified view of reality narrowed rather than expanded consciousness. Yet time and again he somehow feels the need to hold Disney up as an artist—only to wind up proving that he wasn't. None of this, however, spoils the book's validity."

Time 91:82 My 31 '68 800w

SCHICKEL, RICHARD, ed. Film 67/68; an anthology by the National society of film critics; ed. by Richard Schickel and John Simon. 320p $6.95; pa $1.95 Simon & Schuster

791.43 Moving pictures 68-19946

This "is a compilation of reviews [from periodicals and newspapers] of a number of motion pictures, American and foreign, by various members of the National Society of Film Critics. . . . often presenting divergent views of the films discussed. . . . Included are 'Persona,' 'In the Heat of the Night,' 'The Graduate,' 'In Cold Blood,' 'Far from the Madding Crowd' among some 50 major films, plus 8 documentaries, essays on Avant-Garde films (Underground films), . . . and [a] symposium on 'The Future of Film.' An introduction describes the objectives and methods of the National Society and the listing of the awards presented by the Society for the period 1967-1968." (Best Sell) Index.

Best Sell 28:196 Ag 1 '68 180w

"[This] is an exciting book. It has all the things we have come not to expect from critics. It is essentially affirmative. . . . The critics' offerings are representative of their best work. . . . Although [it] is basically favorable, there is a negative balance, and the book has the zest of critics celebrating the works and ideas they find important. . . . There is a decided variance in style from the quiet, workmanlike prose of Philip T. Hartung (Commonweal) to the urbane whimsy of Wilfrid Sheed (Esquire) to the minstrel flutings . . . of Andrew Sarris. . . . Despite imperfections, [this] is a fine book, worthy of being an annual and becoming a tradition. In this age of 'nonverbal communication' Film 67/68 with words conveys the essence of film." F. A. Macklin

Commonweal 89:88 O 18 '68 750w

SCHILLEBEECKX, E. Celibacy; tr. by C. A. L. Jarrott. 142p $3.95 Sheed 253 Celibacy 68-13845

The book opens with a "survey of 2000 years of controversies and changing opinions. There are discussions on the legal and scriptural aspects of the question, the traditions of the Eastern churches, the teachings of Vatican Council II, the present situation, and future possibilities." (Library J)

"A model of informed detachment. . . . What is essential in Christian celibacy, Schillebeeckx feels, is the existential inability of some who have heard the call of the Kingdom to do otherwise than commit themselves unreservedly to it in the form of a celibate life. . . . The gospel itself [he maintains] contains the idea of 'an affinity between the evangelical "office in the Church" and the equally evangelical "celibacy for the sake of the kingdom of God."' This theological position leaves open the pastoral question of whether the Church today should depart, and to what degree, from the long-standing legislation that has given juridical form to her sense of affinity between celibacy and Church office. Schillebeeckx is open to change, but not to change of a kind or in an atmosphere in which this affinity would be muted." T. E. Clarke

America 118:584 Ap 27 '68 460w

"A finely wrought, superior . . . [and] developed study, keenly aware of human needs and psychological realities without being polemical and excessively emotional. . . . Schillebeeckx' style is that of a competent specialist, so that the average undergraduate student will not profit from this study; however, the superior student in theology, history of religion, philosophy of human relations, and sexuality, will find [it] very helpful. No index or bibliography. Documentation in footnotes, though many references unfortunately not given in English. The translation is uncontrived and clear."

Choice 5:794 S '68 220w

"Father Schillebeeckx' book, as one would expect, is scholarly, existential and eschatological, but not, for all that, overly abstract; he sees the real problems and puts them in a sharp theological focus."

Commonweal 88:274 My 17 '68 60w

"The importance of this brief, penetrating study of celibacy is out of proportion to its 144 pages. . . . Father Schillebeeckx defends the celibacy of religious and of the diocesan priest 'for the sake of the Gospel,' but corrects many misconceptions prevalent even in the writings of theologians. He also corrects current translations of the Council documents which have tended to perpetuate the misleading idea, consciously repudiated by the Council Fathers, that marriage is a second-rate vocation, suitable only for those who cannot practice celibacy. This scholarly study should be in every pertinent collection." W. C. Heiser

Library J 93:1146 Mr 15 '68 180w

SCHILLEBEECKX, E. Revelation and theology; tr. by N. D. Smith. 292p $5.95 Sheed

231.74 Revelation, Theology 67-21907

"This is the first of a projected eight-volume series in which most of [the Dutch Catholic theologian's] previously untranslated writings will appear in a thematically organized form." (Christian Century) Originally published as parts one and two of Openbaring en Theologie 1964. This translation is based on the second revised edition of 1966.

Choice 5:639 J1 '68 130w

"The author has the reputation of being one of the two or three most important contemporary Catholic dogmatists. . . . But the articles in this volume, first published in Dutch between the author's 28th and 43rd years (1945-1963), are likely to disappoint most of his current aficionados whether clerical or lay, Catholic or Protestant. Schillebeeckx was writing for a largely traditionalist audience. . . . The whole of his presentation was molded by the effort to show the continuities between newer insights and older ways of thought. There is little here to shock the conservative, although much that is calculated to enlarge perspectives and increase flexibility. . . . By now, these articles have come to represent establishment theology. They juxtapose the new and the old with no sustained, rigorous or original effort to probe the problems which arise. . . . Publication of these essays, therefore, is more a contribution to the prehistory of Vatican II than an event of contemporary significance." G. A. Lindbeck

Christian Century 85:425 Ap 8 '68 500w

"Schillebeeckx writes with technical precision and avoids flashy popularization. While walking proudly in the footsteps of the Angelic Doctor [St. Thomas Aquinas], he proves himself a modern and progressive thinker, keenly sensitive to contemporary trends. His influence should do much to bridge the gap between traditional and contemporary theology. . . . Schillebeeckx unquestionably stimulates the reader to try to integrate the riches of the Scholastic tradition with new insights derived from modern historical and personalistic thinking. While I do not believe that the two have perfectly coalesced in this work, the author is to be praised for not having prematurely excluded either the old or the new approach." Avery Dulles

Commonweal 88:81 Ap 5 '68 800w

"A great deal has happened in theology just in the past several years . . . and Father Schillebeeckx has both affected and been affected by all that has happened. . . . He would, therefore, now dissociate himself, in varying degrees, from at least part of what is now appearing unrevised for the second or third time. . . . Let me add immediately that any misgivings are speedily dispelled as soon as one begins to page through this volume. Father Schillebeeckx . . . is one of our most readable as well as one of our most relevant theologians. . . . To judge from this first sampling, his collected essays not only will do nothing to diminish this title, they will also add to it by showing how extremely well he wears through the years. . . . [The essays] have been selected not chronologically but thematically, and rearranged to complement one another. The reader therefore now has amplifications and extensions of the author's thinking, along with much additional writing that he ordinarily could get at only with difficulty if at all." Bruce Vawter

Critic 26:73 F '68 800w

SCHILLEBEECKX, EDUARD. The real achievement of Vatican II; tr. by H. J. J. Vaughan [Eng title: Vatican II]. 99p $2.95 Herder & Herder

262.5 Vatican Council, 2d

67-25884

This "assessment of the third and fourth sessions of the Council is a kind of sequel to [the author's] earlier book The Layman in the Church [BRD 1964] which dealt with the first and second sessions. In his latest book he evaluates the overall results of the Council and points out its distinctive innovations in Catholic life and thought and the dangers to be avoided in the post-conciliar era." (Library J) Chronology.

"Yet another work on the Second Vatican Council is hardly what the theologically oriented reading community needs just now. Nevertheless, the stature of the author of this latest Council comment would at first seem to warrant close attention. All the greater, then, is one's disappointment in this attempt to shed light on the forces that created the documents and on the implications of the documents for the future life of the Church. For all this has been done before—and at a time when it was more interesting, valuable and informative." R. J. Burant

America 118:93 Ja 20 '68 220w

"By dint of a type font designed for the nearly blind [this] has been constructed into a thin book from several reports filed by Father Schillebeeckx. . . . It is a pity that it is apparently economically unfeasible to publish this English translation in pamphlet form, since Schillebeeckx's observations are certainly well worth reading, though hardly at the price at which they are offered. The articles, written at different stages in the course of the Council, combine the freshness of trained eye- and earwitness with valuable if brief summations of the positive achievements of Vatican II, together with cautious but cheerful prognosis for the future. The translations are good, and the translators are to be commended for imitating Schillebeeckx in avoiding unnecessary technical jargon." Bruce Vawter

Critic 26:73 F '68 800w

"Father Schillebeeckx of the Catholic University of Nijmegen is one of the most influential theologians of the Catholic Church. . . . This book is a worthwhile addition for those libraries which are keeping rather complete collections on Vatican Council II." W. C. Heiser

Library J 92:4421 D 1 '67 110w

SCHILLER, FRIEDRICH. On the aesthetic education of man; in a series of letters; ed. and tr. with an introd, commentary and glossary of terms by Elizabeth M. Wilkinson and L. A. Willoughby. 372p $20.20 Oxford

111.8 Esthetics

[68-80682]

A bilingual edition of the German philosopher's treatise on the educative value of art in which he "proposed art as a remedy for the flaws the times revealed in man. . . . [Following his indictment of the age, Schiller presents his] analysis of art and of man—as he essentially is and as he putatively evolved. The essay is thus politics, ethics, aesthetics, psychology and conjectural anthropology." (TLS) Bibliography. Index of names.

SCHILLER, FRIEDRICH—Continued

"For both the general reader and the German reading student this . . . edition is as definitive and attractive as it is expensive. . . . An introduction of 185 pages discusses with wide-ranging scholarship the literary form and the philosophical content of the Letters, the origins of Schiller's ideas, the history of their influence, and their contemporary relevance. Eighty pages of notes and commentary occupy a separate section, and there are also . . . four appendices on problems of translation. . . . A necessary acquisition; countless student papers will explore the resources of this volume alone."

Choice 5:636 J1 '68 160w

"Schiller's treatise is as profound an argument for the educative value of art as Europe possesses. . . . Using elements from Rousseau, Kant, Ferguson and others, it is yet unique in its linking of problems and its unified answer. It is a major document of eighteenth-century thought too little (or too vaguely) known outside Germany and German studies. This translation will greatly help matters. . . . One may feel less happy about the rather overloaded introduction. . . . [The editors] decided to omit a connected discussion of what Schiller says—thus neglecting their wider audience—and instead describe at length how he says it and the subsequent history of his ideas; but these are two superstructures needing a base. . . . Surely the scholar's mediating job was to provide this basis. . . . A less bulky introduction would also have helped to keep the price down. . . . [It is, however,] an impressive piece of concentrated scholarship."

TLS p722 J1 11 '68 480w

SCHILLER, JOHANN CHRISTOPH FRIEDRICH VON. See Schiller, F.

SCHISGALL, OSCAR. The magic of mergers; the saga of Meshulam Riklis. 236p $5.95 Little 658.1 Riklis, Meshulam. Trusts, Industrial 68-11521

Biography of an Israeli-born, naturalized American, a pioneer in a "new approach to corporate growth. . . . [Schisgall] tells here how Riklis came to the United States in 1947 and started to earn his living as a Hebrew teacher. He went on to become a sales representative in [a] brokerage firm. . . . and at the age of 32, became chairman and chief executive of his first corporation. Today, at the age of 45, he controls a billion-dollar enterprise which consists of many well-known corporations." (Library J)

"The book, by narrating the activities of a naturalized American, attempts to illustrate the opportunities available to any individual of ability, initiative and drive. It also points out the modern trend in building business empires through the conglomerate mergers." A. J. Giunta

Best Sell 28:79 My 15 '68 330w

"Written with the cooperation of Riklis and very flattering, Schisgall . . . tends to gloss over too many important aspects in this brief treatment. . . . [He] defends the conglomerate merger movement but does raise questions about debt financing and the hazards of dubious practices by some entrepreneurs. Several good lists of reasons for mergers are included. Based on interviews and newspaper accounts with extended quotations. . . . Despite its brevity and bias, an enlightening description of American business finance at mid-century."

Choice 5:1012 O '68 170w

"This [is a] very fine biography, a book which is as much an education in big business tactics as it is the story of a remarkable man. . . . Highly recommended for general and informed readers." Sylvia Mechanic

Library J 93:1996 My 15 '68 260w

SCHLEGEL, RICHARD. Completeness in science. 280p $7.50 Appleton 501 Science 67-11919

"To what extent can science describe and explain the natural world—including ourselves? Are there intrinsic limits to the methods of science that make an adequate scientific description impossible, or can we expect that science will eventually give us a complete account of the universe? . . . In writing this book-length study, I have tried to bring together both those considerations that arise from logic and philosophical analysis, and those that come from the content of science itself." (Pref) Index.

"The book is prefaced by a chapter on the author's 'philosophy of science' which is, in several ways, too vague to count as a genuine doctrine at all. It is epilogued by a short but wide-ranging chapter on the 'Non-Cognitive Completeness of Science' which ranges as far from the main issues of the book as to note the influence of scientific progress on 'fine cookery' and the treatment of juvenile delinquency. Occasionally the author loses sight of the level of audience to which the book is directed. . . . Schlegel has made an ambitious attempt to discuss an important philosophical problem . . . which the author rightly feels is of some interest to nonscientists and nonphilosophers as well as to professionals in these fields. As a 'first' in this area the book is very welcome, but one looks forward to less wide-ranging and philosophically more rigorous successors." Lawrence Sklar

J Philos 65:179 Mr 21 '68 1800w

"Because he is so much concerned with presenting the results of modern physics, Schlegel does not realize how much he is taking for granted in his subject. He seems unaware of the relevance of the history of science to a general discussion of how complete science can be. . . . In addition to ignoring the historical perspectives of his problem, Schlegel slides over the epistemological aspects. . . . He offers few arguments to show that science can be completed. . . . In spite of its avowed theme, this book is primarily about contemporary cosmology and quantum theory and what it would be like to complete science on the basis they provide. The result is an adequate and stimulating introduction to some interesting issues in the philosophy of physics, but nothing to satisfy anyone who has wondered at all about the problem of completeness in science." R. G. A. Dalby

Science 159:617 F 9 '68 900w

SCHLESINGER, ARTHUR M. The birth of a nation; a portrait of the American people on the eve of independence; with an introd. by Arthur M. Schlesinger, Jr. 258p $7.95 Knopf 973.2 U.S.—History—Colonial period. National characteristics, American 68-23942

"In displaying the character of American folkways and institutions just before the Revolution, Professor Schlesinger shows how social, political, and intellectual changes in the century and three quarters of America's colonial history had by 1776 created a distinctive American character and a separate American society." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by R. A. Mohl

Best Sell 28:307 N 1 '68 700w

Christian Century 85:1342 O 23 '68 60w

"[This book] will give every individual American, regardless of whether his forebears settled in Jamestown in 1605 or arrived on the latest boat from Palermo, a deeper understanding of what he is—and why. There will be much in the book to awaken and sometimes surprise. . . . [It] is a volume full of a profound understanding of what moved early Americans. It remains a valuable textbook for and on today." J. G. Harrison

Christian Science Monitor p9 N 1 '68 700w

Reviewed by Jerome Nadelhaft

Library J 93:3136 S 15 '68 100w

"[This posthumously published] book is lucidly written, wide-ranging and judicious. Conceived for the general reader rather than the specialist, it represents a synthesis of the author's lifetime of reading and teaching in the Colonial field. . . . The focus is on social and cultural rather than political affairs. Women and the family are given their due. Attention is paid to such subjects as the laboring man, religious diversity, town life, the pragmatic approach to social betterment, and the rise of a Colonial aristocracy. One of the more interesting insights in the book is the stress on the colonists' ability to lighten hard work with play. . . . What is disappointing . . . is the dated character of much of the interpretation. Many of the ideas expressed therein seemed fresh . . . when Schlesinger published his 'New Viewpoints in American History' [BRD 1922], but . . . [now] the reader could reasonably expect a fresh synthesis. That, regrettably, he will not find." R. B. Morris

N Y Times Bk R p46 N 3 '68 1000w

New Yorker 44:238 N 9 '68 100w

"[Schlesinger's writing has] an important premise: that history is not merely past politics, war, and diplomacy, but includes all of man's activities and interests—social, economic, religious, intellectual, artistic, recreational. . . . The picture that emerges from Schlesinger's skillful presentation is of a people who during more than a century and a half of remarkable growth had acquired most of the institutions and characteristics that would mark . . . the course of American history to the present time. . . . [Schlesinger] frequently spices his work with items of lesser importance that add flavor if not nourishment. We learn, for example, why Americans drive on the right, how they came to take up golf, and when we acquired Yankee Doodle as a national song. . . . Such tidbits, along with frequent quotations from newspapers and other contemporary sources, help to make [the book] enjoyable as well as profitable reading. . . . Curiously, [the chapter on the causes of the Revolution] is the least convincing and the most out of touch with recent scholarship." Alden Vaughan

Sat R 51:43 N 2 '68 1150w

SCHLISSEL, LILLIAN, ed. Conscience in America; a documentary history of conscientious objection in America, 1757-1967. 444p $6.50 Dutton

323.44 Conscientious objectors 67-11369

Through selected documents issued in America "from colonial times to the present. . . [the author attempts to record] the collision of convictions—the individual's belief that he must not violate the voice of his conscience or the word of his God, and the state's assertion that it must preserve its own viability, by force of arms when need be, and that this heavy burden is for all citizens to share." (Introd)

"Schlissel, a professor of English with a superb background in American studies, presents a fitting supplement to Staughton Lynd's Nonviolence in America [BRD 1966]. . . . The documents are presented chronologically in six sections, each with its own introductory essay. Taken collectively, the documents stand as definitive proof that there has been a long and sincere tradition of conscientious objection in American history. Taken individually, the documents reflect the variety of motives and passions involved in antiwar movements throughout American history. The volume reflects careful editing and its essays are clearly written; however, it lacks an index and bibliography. Recommended for those libraries who are developing in-depth collections in the history of American civilization and/or those interested in the historical background of the current debate over the legality and morality of conscientious objection." Choice 5:1216 N '68 140w

"The 55 documents included here range from selections by John Woolman to Martin Luther King, Jr., and include recent legal decisions. [The book] is a most timely compendium on a matter of crucial importance. It should be available in public and college libraries." R. W. Henderson

Library J 93:2867 Ag '68 100w

SCHMALENBACH, FRITZ. Oskar Kokoschka [tr. by Violet M. Macdonald]. 80p il col il $4.75 N.Y. graphic

759.436 Kokoschka, Oskar 68-18965

This volume contains "a selection drawn from the artist's body of work . . . [with a] guide to the study of [his] two major themes—portraiture and the landscape." (Choice)

"[This is] an adequate introduction to the pictorial thought of Kokoschka. . . . The illustrations, which are rather good, provide a rigorous but sympathetic appraisal of the key themes. Comments supply background material. . . . Although an engaging study of the painter's career, it does not present the more intimate aspects as offered in the biographical study by J. P. Hodin [Oskar Kokoschka, BRD 1967]. . . . One wishes the reproductions and the text were dovetailed and that the layout were more aesthetic than functional, but for the price it is a bargain."

Choice 5:1124 N '68 130w

"Unfortunately, the text is badly overwritten and carries the use of an art writer's vocabulary ad absurdum, for example, by dividing Kokoschka's work into eight style periods which have the less significance since the artist frequently leaves his work unfinished and returns to it much later. . . . This inexpensive book is acceptable for the informed layman." J. L. Dewton

Library J 93:2643 J1 '68 120w

SCHMIDT, DANA ADAMS. Yemen; the unknown war. 316p il pl maps $6.50 Holt

953 Yemen—History

68-24747

This account of the war between the royalists and republicans in Yemen "covers a period which opens with the coup d'état of 26 September 1962, followed by the arrival of the Egyptians, and draws to its end with the Khartoum agreement of 31 August 1967 under which the Egyptians undertook to withdraw." (Introd) Index.

"[This book] reminds one of the excitement and color of the Bengal Lancers movies. . . . The various stages of the Yemeni war are described in great and vivid detail by the author, a . . . New York Times reporter who represented his paper . . . in the Middle East. . . . There are long, fascinating discourses about the queen of Sheba, the Incense Trail, the five pre-Islamic Kingdoms, . . . as well as descriptions of his visits to the Imam and his men in their mountain caves. Schmidt . . . succeeds in imparting his own excitement to the reader. . . . [His] daring and enterprise have given us a most interesting and reliable account of the first . . . years of this conflict." Walter Laqueur
Book World p4 S 29 '68 1150w

"[This is] informative, if highly romanticized, reportage. . . . While revealing an appreciable degree of understanding and originality, and shedding a great deal of light on an obscure subject, Schmidt's analysis is in more than one instance defective. Some of his conclusions are highly questionable (to an Arab nationalist simply outrageous). The organization is rather awkward, and the style, while urbane and literate, has an excessive amount of inadequately transliterated Arabic terms. Such criticisms, however, are minor and should not affect the study's value in highlighting the subject. Libraries with research facilities in the Middle East area should find it profitable." Choice 5:1026 O '68 180w

Reviewed by J. J. Landau

Christian Science Monitor p9 D 21 '68 750w

"Mr. Schmidt had a firsthand look at both sides of the war, but in this book he shows considerable distaste for the Egyptian intruders, and perhaps as a result, some preference for the royalist cause. . . . Here is a lively and interesting narrative dealing with a people, their culture, and a war which will be completely novel to most readers. As one of the few books available on the current situation in Yemen, the book should fill a definite need among informed as well as general readers." J. C. Shipman

Library J 93:3014 S 1 '68 200w

"Mr. Schmidt illuminates the scene with a journalist's eye for detail and some small but excellent photographs. . . . His book, which causes the war to come alive, . . . is also a tribute to the resource and tenacity that a newspaper correspondent must display." TLS p502 My 16 '68 300w

SCHMIED, WIELAND. Tobey [tr. by Margaret L. Kaplan] [Eng title: Mark Tobey]. 85p pl $5.95 Abrams

759.13 Tobey, Mark

66-15214

This volume contains forty-three plates, seventeen in color, "of paintings and drawings of Mark Tobey, one of the recognized 'old masters' of 20th-century American art. . . . [Tobey's] childhood along the banks of the Mississippi River, his work as a fashion illustrator, his philosophical religious affinity to Bahai and Zen Buddhism, and his frequent sojourns to Europe and the East, are summed up by the author for a better understanding of . . . his life and works." (Choice) Biographical outline. Bibliography.

SCHMIED WIELAND—Continued

"Schmied, noted German authority on American art, follows Tobey's development as an artist and complex personality in the well written text. . . . Since there are only three previous monographs on Tobey, this recent publication is recommended for all adult libraries, particularly undergraduate college ones."

Choice 4:667 S '67 130w

"The biographical outline and selected bibliography are extremely useful. The text, however, lacks the balance of information and intuition of C. Roberts' Mark Tobey or the comprehension of W. C. Seitz's Mark Tobey. The contribution of this monograph is the photographs of 12 pictures completed in the 1960's. Only 9 are in color, however, and we lose the action of Tobey's subtle color versus his linear quality in the black-and-white illustrations. Recommended to academic libraries desiring complete holdings on an important artist."

Delores McColm

Library J 92:2147 Je 1 '67 120w

SCHMITT, HANS A. Charles Péguy; the decline of an idealist. 211p $6 La. state univ. press

848 Péguy, Charles Pierre 67-13894

After providing "biographical information in his introduction, Schmitt points out the . . . historical forces (intellectual, political, social, economic, and so on) at work on Péguy during his lifetime. Though aware of Péguy's dual role as poet and political journalist, Schmitt is not concerned with aesthetic judgments of Péguy's writings; rather he probes the changing conditions under which they were written. Thus Schmitt accentuates his view of Péguy's unconscious transformation from idealistic humanitarian to selfish and misanthropic reactionary." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by Eugen Weber

Am Hist R 73:1171 Ap '68 360w

"Historian Schmitt's scholarly and sober assessment of Péguy emphasizes what he believes to be a clearly discernible process of moral decline in Péguy. The new approach thereby separates this critical study from the bulk of Péguyana. . . . Schmitt convincingly demonstrates Péguy's tragic evolution and believes that the dead Péguy was simply used by both the French nation and the Church in World War I as a convenient symbol of a national hero. Péguy's 'rebirth' during the crisis of World War II is viewed simply as a revival of his heroic cult. This well documented and original study is a valuable contribution to existing studies on Péguy and should be part of every college library."

Choice 4:844 O '67 190w

"The paradox of Péguy—socialist and chauvinist, Catholic and anti-clerical—is fertile by reason not of its contradictions but its consistency. Dr. Schmitt has analysed it with great skill in a well written and richly documented essay—although it is inaccurate to speak of Pétain's 'piety' in 1914."

TLS p21 Ja 4 '68 700w

SCHMITT, KARL M., jt. ed. The politics of violence. See Leiden, C.

SCHNEIDER, LEO. Long life to you; modern medicine at work; il. with drawings by Henri A. Fluchere. 159p $3.75 Harcourt

610 Medicine—Juvenile literature. Physiology—Juvenile literature 68-25195

This book presents "background information on biology, with some modern medical information added. The beginning discussion of simple life and the amoeba is followed by . . . sections on human respiration, blood and the heart. The final chapter deals with the endocrine and nervous systems. The medical developments discussed include hyperbaric chambers, heart-lung machines, open-heart surgery, electroencephalography, and the use of laser beams in eye surgery. [Index.] Grades seven to ten." (Library J)

"Some of the machines and techniques devised for doctors to diagnose, prolong and save lives are considered in this small volume. Before explaining each technique the author explains the many biological, biochemical and physical aspects and functions of life, and it is this that makes the book fascinating and informative. An excellent book, the volume should grace the shelves of all school libraries and it should make the recommended list for budding scientists. The explanations are thorough, simple, and helpful."

Best Sell 28:378 D 1 '68 80w

Reviewed by L. P. Scanlon

Commonweal 89:292 N 22 '68 40w

"The book is well-written, but the selection of topics seems to have been made at random, preventing both the fulfillment of specific subject needs and the unity necessary for interesting recreational reading." Isadora Kunitz

Library J 93:4423 N 15 '68 110w

SCHNEIDER, NICHOLAS, jt. ed. John F. Kennedy talks to young people. See Kennedy, J. F.

SCHNEIDERMAN, ROSE. All for one, by Rose Schneiderman with Lucy Goldthwaite. 264p il $5.95 Ericksson

B or $2 Labor unions. Woman—Employment 67-27015

"An autobiography of Rose Schneiderman who has been active in the labor movement since she organized a local of the Cap Makers Union in 1903. She became president of the New York Women's Trade Union League, worked as an organizer for the I.L.G.W.U., and served as secretary of the New York State Department of Labor." (Choice)

"Written informally, the book brings life to the historic struggle for women's political rights and job rights. The book is suitable for high school or college libraries for its human rather than scholarly interest. The historical material on the labor movement is available elsewhere, but the personal viewpoint here is unique."

Choice 5:533 Je '68 110w

"Beginning with a graphic picture of life in the American Big City, [the author] tells of her mother, pregnant and widowed after two years in the United States, struggling to provide food and shelter for her family; of how she and her brothers and sisters had to be placed in orphanages periodically; of her own labor starting at 13 in a department store as an errand girl at $2.16 for a 64-hour week. . . . She tells of the wealthy women who picketed with labor in the 'Mink Brigade', [and] of the labor legislation that was enacted. . . . This is an authoritative and readable book of general interest." Audrey Cahill

Library J 92:4498 D 15 '67 270w

SCHNORE, LEO F., ed. Urban research and policy planning (Urban affairs annual reviews, v 1) ed. by Leo F. Schnore and Henry Fagin. 638p il $20 Sage publications

301.3 Sociology, Urban. Urban renewal 68-8131

A "series of original articles by specialists in all the disciplines encompassed by urban studies, this is the first of a planned annual review of urban affairs." (Choice) Bibliography.

Reviewed by Frank Smallwood

Am Pol Sci R 62:620 Je '68 900w

"Whatever faults that [this volume] may have do not appear to be the responsibility of its editors. . . . First, they offer a volume that parallels the needs of contemporary urban research by cutting across disciplinary boundaries in both of its major parts. . . . In addition, the readings are organized in pairs. Usually, the first selection in each pair deals with general problems centered on a single discipline or a common theme, while the second deals with specific research interests. . . . This procedure deserves praise, since, at its best, it enables the reader to examine in depth one aspect of a problem that has just been treated in breadth. . . . [However, the selections] range from the banal to those which deserve wider attention."

P. G. Marden

Am Soc R 33:328 Ap '68 700w

"Although possibly regarded as a companion to [P.] Hauser and Schnore's The Study of Urbanization [BRD 1966], this volume performs an important and somewhat unique service by emphasizing policy issues. The difficulty of relating academic research and programmatic interests is illustrated by the separation between Part I, which evaluates the literature in each of the traditional disciplines, and Part II, which focuses on policy planning. The articles are uneven at times, but many represent outstanding analyses and most provide comprehensive descriptions of the state of present knowledge about various urban problems. Excellent bibliography. Should be of considerable value for general reading as well as reference purposes to all social scientists interested in urban affairs."

Choice 4:1140 D '67 150w

SCHOENBAUM, DAVID. The Spiegel affair. 239p $4.95 Doubleday

943.087 Der Spiegel (periodical). Germany (Federal Republic)—Politics and government. Strauss, Franz Joseph 67-19119

This book describes how "on the evening of Friday, October 26, 1962, federal attorneys and police entered the Hamburg and Bonn offices of Der Spiegel, West Germany's most influential weekly news magazine, with search and arrest warrants. The Spiegel's publisher and leading staff members were charged with treason [in publishing military secrets]. . . . In subsequent weeks, the German Federal Republic's strength, stability, law, freedom and commitment to democracy were successively called into question." (Publisher's note)

"In this book [is] the expert historical reconstruction which teachers of history and political science have needed. . . . The book itself will probably become a principal source for students and scholars who will not need to—and soon will no longer be able to—match Schoenbaum's exhaustive documentation from newspapers, confidential interviews and documents supplied him by participants. Some may question his generally optimistic approach, but no one will fail to appreciate the illumination shed on the way politics is practiced in present-day West Germany, not to mention subsidiary topics like the German press laws or law of treason. Schoenbaum . . . finds sheer bureaucratic confusion guilty for many seemingly sinister events; the story is, in fact, frequently very funny. The book's greatest deficiency is the inexcusable omission of an index."

Choice 5:398 My '68 180w

"[A] history professor at the University of Iowa and a former reporter writes about the scandal which [claimed] as victim Franz-Josef Strauss, Defense Minister, and led to the downfall of his aging chief, Konrad Adenauer. . . . [The affair] was judged a curtailment of freedom of the press by many people, both inside and outside Germany. Mr. Schoenbaum's account is well organized and lucid, despite the number of details and names he includes. His viewpoint is nonpartisan, he provides critical perspectives of both sides, and their critics. Recommended to medium-sized and large public libraries, college libraries, and any other library with a particular interest in contemporary Germany." M. E. Kelley

Library J 93:74 Ja 1 '68 290w

SCHOENBERG, ARNOLD. Fundamentals of musical composition; ed. by Gerald Strang; with an introd. by Leonard Stein. 224p $32.50 St Martins

781.6 Composition (Music) 67-10150

"Using the Beethoven sonatas and certain other classical masterworks as models, Schoenberg systematically describes the manner in which the smallest structural units (motive, phrase and period) are extended into simple themes and these are extended into small part forms and, finally, into large sonata forms." (Choice)

"The last of three textbooks on music theory written by Schoenberg in the U.S. Together with the others, Structural Functions of Harmony [BRD 1954] and Preliminary Exercises in Counterpoint, it affords valuable insight into Schoenberg's teaching methods and his approach to formal and harmonic analysis. . . . For the inexperienced composer, this work can be used in conjunction with Schoenberg's brief syllabus, Models for Beginners in Composition, a manual of traditional compositional practice; for more advanced composers and theorists alike it is a stimulating analytical treatise."

Choice 5:634 J1 '68 170w

"Although this is the last of [Schoenberg's] books on musical theory and practice it is one of the most important. The editors were among the composer's many disciples, and they have seen through publication a book which was nearly ready when Schoenberg died. The book . . . is intended for composition students, and also for use in analysis. Although variety of approach is achieved through citing many musical works in different media, the unity of having at least one illustration for most points come from the Beethoven piano sonatas provides a frame of reference. . . . Highly recommended." Baird Hastings

Library J 93:755 F 15 '68 180w

Reviewed by Wendell Margrave

Music Lib Assn Notes 25:233 D '68 800w

SCHOENBRUN, DAVID. Vietnam; how we got in, how to get out. 214p $5; pa $2.95 Atheneum pubs.

959.7 Vietnamese Conflict, 1961- 68-25589

This book deals with the questions "Schoenbrun has been asked at more than 100 lectures and radio-TV discussions on Vietnam in the past year. [The appendix] includes the texts of the . . . documents on Vietnam. . . . Schoenbrun says: 'Like many other Americans, I fought for my country as a soldier in a just war and would do it again. But the war in Vietnam is a war we should never have started and must rapidly end. It is a war that no one can win. It will end eventually in a political settlement. Until then, every man, woman and child being maimed or killed in Vietnam is suffering or dying in vain.'" (Publisher's note) The author is a newspaper, radio and television reporter, and is now professor of Vietnamese history at Columbia.

"The merit of [this] brief account is that, better than any other, it allows us to view the war as the North Vietnamese view it, while yet retaining the standards and values of a Roosevelt democrat. No radical, Schoenbrun is alert to North Vietnamese myths and preconceptions. But his sensitivity to the truth in the North Vietnamese position exposes the illusions in our own." Michael Novak

Book World p6 Ag 11 '68 500w

Christian Century 85:561 Ap 24 '68 40w

Reviewed by Elizabeth Pond

Christian Science Monitor p7 Je 27 '68 360w

"Since peace talks have begun, this book is basically an anachronism. [The author] contributes a brief profile on Ho Chi Minh . . . but on more recent history his work is far surpassed by that of others. . . . and his ideas on American withdrawal are already being rewritten by reality in Paris. . . . Nine appendices dominate the last third of the book, but with one two-page exception, all the material can be found in other volumes now common in library collections on Vietnam." Paul Bixler

Library J 93:2667 J1 '68 160w

"Few, if any American journalists can duplicate David Schoenbrun's two qualifications as a writer on Vietnam: he has known Ho Chi Minh since 1946, and he visited North Vietnam as recently as 1967. . . . Much of the book . . . strikes me as sound but simplistic. . . . Thus Mr. Schoenbrun rather easily dismisses the question of what is to become of the Vietnamese, in the hamlets as well as in the cities, who have cast their lot with the Americans. . . . There are some . . . interpretations with which one could quarrel, but on the whole, Mr. Schoenbrun has told it the way it is, and in the process reminded us of some important facts that tend to be submerged. . . . The questions and answers that make up the second part of the book are well devised. Mr. Schoenbrun . . . proposes a number of steps that could lead to fruitful negotiations, but he does not insist on any one program." R. W. Apple

N Y Times Bk R p10 Ap 28 '68 700w

Reviewed by C. W. Yost

Sat R 51:30 My 11 '68 430w

SCHOENFELD, CLARENCE A. The American university in summer; by Clarence A. Schoenfeld with Donald N. Zillman; foreword by John Guy Fowlkes. 225p $6.50 Univ. of Wis. press

378.1 Colleges and universities—U.S.

67-25941

Beginning with an 'historical survey of the evolution of the summer university and its relation to the year-round posture of the institution, the [authors] proceed through chapters dealing with summer students, the professor in summer, summer services, and summer organization and administration; and they end with a chapter on summer problems and prospects and include in it 'an agenda for the summer university.' (J Higher Ed) Bibliography. Index.

SCHOENFELD, C. A.—Continued

"While [the book] does contain much useful and interesting information, the case for the significance of summer activities is not quite successfully made. And it is not made precisely because the book tries so hard to make a case. . . . The style is of a piece with the content. It is journalistic in a self-consciously breezy manner; the attempts at images and analogies don't quite come off; and phrases and words are too often badly used. . . . The concluding chapter . . . epitomizes, perhaps, the problems of the summer university and the problems of this book. Almost in the same breath, it claims more for the summer enterprise than is justified, asks of it more than is possible [and] suggests and criticizes less than is necessary." H. Lichtenstein
J Higher Ed 39:477 N '68 650w

"[The authors] view the Chautauqua tent as America's first experiment with summer education at an advanced level. . . . They point out that in teaching what he wants throughout the balmy months, the summer professor renders a service often unavailable at other times. Appropriately, this book, which links a university's 'year-round posture' with such public-service notions as the 'Wisconsin Idea,' comes sturdily designed." John Calam
Sat R 51:80 Mr 16 '68 70w

SCHOENFELD, MAXWELL P. The restored House of Lords. (Studies in European hist) 244p $10.50 Humanities press

942.06 Great Britain. Parliament. House of Lords. Great Britain—Politics and government

"Examines the composition and legislative and judicial activity of the House of Lords in detail for the years, 1659-62. In two introductory chapters it traces the decline of the House in the first half of the 17th century and briefly projects its role in the last decades of the century by way of conclusion." (Choice)

"[The author's] main concern is to describe what happened rather than to explain why it happened as it did. He has some welcome new statistical information about the peers in 1660 and about the membership of parliamentary committees, and he has performed a valuable service in collecting all the more or less familiar facts about the peerage at this period in one place. Schoenfeld has helped us a little way along the road toward understanding the reasons for this striking political recovery, . . . assessing the over-all effect of the Interregnum on peerage status and finances, and . . . knowing why the House of Lords adopted the positions it did about the various important pieces of legislation during the early years of the Restoration." Lawrence Stone
Am Hist R 73:812 F '68 340w

"While incorporating some manuscript sources in his work, Schoenfeld relies heavily upon printed sources and secondary works. His study thus becomes an exercise in organization rather than one of exploration of unknown materials. As such it draws together scattered materials into a useful reference book, but it does not add much that is new. Two appendices provide information on committee service and lord lieutenancies held by peers in 1661." Choice 5:115 Mr '68 130w

SCHOENMAN, RALPH, ed. Bertrand Russell: philosopher of the century; essays in his honour. 326p $7.95 Little 192 Russell, Bertrand Arthur William Russell, 3d Earl [67-95441]

The nineteen essays in this volume, which pays homage to and attempts to evaluate Lord Russell's achievements, are divided into four sections: An intimate glance; The public man; Philosopher and writer; Mathematician and logician. Index.

Reviewed by Ambrose Agius
Best Sell 27:385 Ja 1 '68 350w

"[Mr Schoenman] has collected essays from an extremely distinguished batch of contributors, but the balance has not been kept even; some of the contributions . . . have practically nothing to do with Russell [and] the authors write at wildly different levels. . . . Nor has Mr Schoenman seen to the elimination of misprints. . . . [The essays] on Russell the public man are worthy hagiograms. . . . [Those] on mathematics and logic . . . are inaccessible to the ordinary reader, and should have been separately published. . . . The best part of the book [covers] the range of literature and philosophy." Economist 224:330 JI 22 '67 430w

"The somewhat unctuous preface aside, the essays cover all major aspects of Russell's work. Of special interest to the nontechnical reader will be the essays by Erich Fromm, I. F. Stone, and Linus Pauling. Philosophers and intellectual historians will find the appraisals of C. D. Broad, Werner Bloch, and A. J. Ayer illuminating. Those interested in the technical aspects of Russell's work will doubtless value the largest section on logic and mathematics by Hilary Putnam, W. V. Quine, and others. This is a valuable and important book for academic and larger public libraries." W. S. Debenham
Library J 92:4510 D 15 '67 140w

"[Schoenman's collection] contains some very useful material, though the editing leaves a good deal to be desired. We are not told, for instance, when or where or whether the essays have been published before. . . . Several are purely personal memoirs, but nearly a third of the book consists of highly technical comments on Russell's mathematical philosophy, suitable only to the specialist. The outstanding essay in the volume is A. J. Ayer's 'Appraisal of Bertrand Russell's Philosophy,' probably the best short introduction to Russell's central work." Paul Johnson
N Y Times Bk R p3 Ja 21 '68 330w
TLS p741 Ag 17 '67 900w

SCHOLES, ROBERT. The fabulators. 180p $5 Oxford

823 Fiction—History and criticism 67-25465

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by W. J. Lynch
America 118:123 Ja 17 '68 300w
Choice 5:198 Ap '68 200w
Va Q R 44:1xi spring '68 100w

SCHON, GRETA WELS. . See Wels-Schon, G.

SCHÖNBERG, ARNOLD. See Schoenberg, A.

SCHONBERG, HAROLD C. The great conductors. 384p il $7.50 Simon & Schuster

920 Conductors (Music). Conducting 67-19821

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Choice 5:64 Mr '68 200w

Economist 227:57 Ap 27 '68 300w

Reviewed by Richard Freedman
Nation 206:184 F 5 '68 700w

SCHONFIELD, HUGH J. Those incredible Christians. 266p $5.95 Geis

270.1 Church history—Primitive and early church [68-93975]

In this account the author "carries the story he began in The Passover Plot [BRD 1966] through the first 150 years of the Christian Church. He describes the transformation of a minor Jewish sect, beset on all sides by paganism, into a universal and worldwide religion. In the process Christianity became 'a new religion and progressively divested itself of association with the Jewish people and the Jewish faith.'" (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

Christian Century 85:761 Je 5 '68 50w

"Like the Passover Plot, this is a highly controversial book based on original and largely unproven interpretations of biblical documents. Mr. Schonfield is a careful scholar and aims at objectivity in his work although he does not always achieve it. His book, which is beautifully written, will appeal to a very wide audience; for academic and all but the smallest public libraries." Jack Clarke
Library J 93:2630 JI '68 140w

"[I regard this book] as popular vulgarization, history layed on like a late Max Reinhardt panoramic spectacular. The real point and the only point—the relation of the Jesus of history to the Christ of faith—is totally missed. . . . There is a discrepancy between what history begets and what reason, with or without faith, demands. Whether or not Schonfield is right in his interpretations of the early Church, the fact remains that from the Church Fathers to Dostoevsky, the conviction that Jesus was the Christ was more important than whether the Jesus of history ever lived. . . . This plaidoyer for Christian faith . . . is founded upon the conviction that the theological center of Christian belief is independent of history. . . . Schonfield's book will not undermine Christians not already unbelievers nor damage the faith of believing ones. He has written not a bad book, but an irrelevant one." Arthur Cohen

New Repub 159:29 S 21 '68 900w

"The thesis of [this book] is that Jesus had no intention either to furnish a new revelation of God or to found a new religion and that the Christianity that strode out into the Roman world was simply a debased form of the zealously evangelical Jewish messianism of the day. . . . The notion of theological discrepancies between Paul and other New Testament writers is hardly a novel one. Schonfield, though, gives it new life by approaching the whole affair with the eye of a political analyst and producing what might be described as a full-blown, first-century Evans and Novak column. In doing so, however, his case would be stronger if he dealt more forthrightly with the contrary evidence that Christianity had some nontraditional tendencies from the outset, such as the discourses at the Last Supper." E. B. Fiske

N Y Times Bk R p36 J1 21 '68 470w

SCHONLAND, SIR BASIL. The atomists (1805-1933). 198p il pl $5.60 Oxford

539.7 Nuclear physics—History 68-102721

This volume "discusses the major post-1800 antecedents of the quantum mechanical atom. . . . [It reviews] the development of the ideas of the ion, electromagnetic waves, the electron, the early atomic models of the atom of Rutherford and of Bohr, and finally the changes wrought by quantum mechanics. The ideas and the relevant experiments pertaining to each are described." (Science)

"The book is interesting and most college students might learn a great deal, although their knowledge would probably be broadened more by either [F.] Greenaway [John Dalton and the Atom, BRD 1967] or [R. H.] Kargon [Atomism in England from Hariot to Newton, BRD 1967]."

Choice 5:643 J1 '68 100w

"An engaging semipopular account of an extremely interesting and complex aspect of the history of modern science. . . . The illustrations are skillfully selected and helpful. . . . Sir Basil's story of atomism is an example of 'Whig' history; that is, the author has sought to illuminate only those aspects of history which have contributed positively to the development of present-day 'textbook' versions of atomic structure. Consequently, armed with hindsight, the book systematically slights the concerns of the past. . . . [There is] scarcely a reference to the opponents of atomism. . . . Yet there are uses even of Whig history, and Sir Basil's book amply illustrated them. As a concise source for clear discussions of important and well-known scientific events, [it] succeeds admirably." Robert Kargon

Science 161:1233 S 20 '68 430w

SCHORER, MARK. Middlemarch. See Hardy, B., ed.

SCHORER, MARK. The world we imagine; selected essays. 402p $6.95 Farrar, Straus

809 English literature—History and criticism. American literature—History and criticism 68-14917

The essays in this collection were originally published "as prefaces to popular editions of standard literary works . . . [or] first appeared in [such periodicals as] the Hudson Review, Kenyon Review, [and] Evergreen Review. . . . [Some treat] particular works—Emma, Jane Eyre, Lady Chatterley's Lover, and so on—others touch upon specific authors—Hamlet

Garland, Katherine Anne Porter, Carson McCullers, Truman Capote, and others." (Library J)

"In nearly every one of these essays . . . Schorer not only has something new to say but his 'something' is also valid and valuable. . . . Perhaps his ability is most evident in the chapter on Gertrude Stein, Sherwood Anderson, Hemingway, and Fitzgerald. . . . I know of no treatment of these authors that can compare with [his] . . . revealing discussion of [their] interplay of character and opinion. . . . One of the most illuminating things ever written about [Sinclair] Lewis is the gradually worked out contrast between the American satirist and D. H. Lawrence. . . . In general, the essays on authors are better than the ones on artistic problems. . . . Every amateur of the novel would do well to read the first essay which discusses techniques as integral to the whole conception of the work of art. The book is easy in style, interesting, informative—well worthwhile." W. B. Hill

Best Sell 28:203 Ag 15 '68 750w

Reviewed by R. E. Long

Christian Science Monitor p9 S 5 '68 650w

"This book is a basic purchase for any library serving students of the humanities." R. E. Wagenknecht

Library J 93:2658 J1 '68 180w

"These essays are welcome for not diminishing the value of a writer's experience, historical or personal, by limiting its use in his fiction. . . . The advantages of a practicing novelist's writing criticism of the novel are apparent. Here is none of the calculated pedantry of some academic theoreticians or the disheartening illiteracy of some novelists. There is little persiflage and the novel is always seen as a work of art. . . . Many of these pieces . . . were published more than 20 years ago, but their sparkle has not withered. While . . . I cannot agree with all of Schorer's pronouncements, . . . this is one of the most stimulating volumes of criticism I have read in a long time." G. S. Rousseau

N Y Times Bk R p4 Je 16 '68 1150w

"This is not . . . the usual sort of professorial miscellany, for each essay illustrates and helps to define a particular critical approach. . . . In talking about particular novels [Schorer] responds to what the authors have done before he tries to point out how they did it. . . . It is because his conception of technique is so large, and because, in his critical activities, he never allows himself to be narrowed down to merely mechanical matters, that he excels as a critic. Avoiding the faults of both pure formalism and pure impressionism, he serves literature well." Granville Hicks

Sat R 51:33 My 18 '68 1050w

SCHRAM, STUART R., ed. Quotations from chairman Mao-Tse-tung. See Mao, T. T.

SCHRAMM, WILBUR, jt. ed. Communication and change in the developing countries. See Lerner, D.

SCHREIBER, DANIEL, ed. Profile of the school dropout; a reader on America's major educational problem. 393p $7.95; pa $1.95 Random house

371.2 Dropouts. Education—U.S. 67-12751

This volume begins by sketching a profile of the average dropout, "then presents ideological, statistical, social, professional, and strategic statements by [twenty] . . . writers on the subject. [For example] opening [articles] . . . by Edgar Z. Friedenberg and Paul Goodman challenge teachers to accept potential dropouts as they are, rather than to force middle-class authority upon them. Eli Ginzberg sees teaching of reading skills as the pivotal responsibility of schools anxious to retain students and prepare them for working adulthood. Bruno Bettelheim speaks plainly about distinguishing between data and emotion when considering the school integration question." (Sat R) Bibliographies.

Christian Century 85:52 Ja 10 '68 39w

"This overdrawn view of youngsters who drop out of school is presented by . . . primarily professional educators. . . . The real issue is how to keep the potentials from actually dropping out. Disagreement regarding the solution of this staggering question, and the solid agreement that our schools should change in many ways are the outstanding themes of this compilation. Almost all of the fifth part, entitled 'Programs: Present and Future,' is valuable information. The book's main appeal will be to readers who are active in the field of education." T. J. Cole

SCHREIBER, DANIEL—Continued

Library J 92:3635 O 15 '67 120w

"Professional, student, and layman alike will find this a courageous, responsible confrontation of an educational problem crying for solution." John Calam

Sat R 51:73 Ap 20 '68 110w

SCHREIBER, J. J. SERVAN-. See Servan-Schreiber, J. J.

SCHREITER, RICK. The delicious plums of King Oscar the Bad; story and pictures by Rick Schreiter. unp $4.25; lib bdg $3.96 Harlin Quist

67-16285

"One day King Oscar the Bad decides to stop sharing the fruit of his Damson plum tree with his subjects, depriving them of their one last pleasure in life—the jelly they used to make from it. Young Geoffrey Hopewell, however, refuses to eat any other kind of jam and finally sets off to see the king with a jar of his mother's lemon marmalade, which she insists he put in his satchel." (Horn Bk) "Kindergarten to grade two." (Library J)

"The story, entertaining in itself, is more than matched by the illustrations in warm shades of brown with touches of pink, resembling old tapestries, yet alive with humor." M. M.

Horn Bk 43:745 D '67 140w

Reviewed by Elinor Cullen

Library J 92:3180 S 15 '67 80w

"Schreiter's tale is diverting, though rather laboriously concocted with much ado about being whimsical. By comparison, his illustrations are plums indeed. Blushed with magenta, and rich in artistic detail reminiscent of Bruegel, they show a bustling old world hamlet and a plump monarch's 'terrible frown' changing to a broad smile with equal success.. M. F. O'Connell

N Y Times Bk R p26 Ag 6 '67 190w

TLS p1225 D 14 '67 110w

SCHRÖDINGER, ERWIN. Letters on wave mechanics. See Letters on wave mechanics

SCHROETER, JAMES, ed. Willa Cather and her critics. 392p $10 Cornell univ. press

813 Cather, Willa Sibert

67-13043

"Here are gathered reviews, articles, reminiscences, and excerpts from books, showing the vicissitudes of Miss Cather's reputation over a period of nearly fifty years—from 1916 to 1965. The selections are divided into six parts, on the basis of the historical development of American criticism." (Publisher's note) Annotated bibliographies. Index.

"A carefully selected group of first-rate short studies, some heretofore neglected. . . . Schroeter's introductions to groups of essays ranging from Mencken in 1916 to Schroeter himself in 1965 are excellent criticisms of criticism, though necessarily summary in nature. Between his comments, Cather comes into her own, and this book could help accomplish its editor's stated purpose, 'to bring about a more intelligent and enthusiastic audience' for her. Recommended despite its price."

Choice 5:346 My '68 160w

"Mr. Schroeter says he aims to 'shed light on Willa Cather, and only secondarily on American criticism,' but he does just the opposite. Most of the essays are too general in nature and repeat each other too much to be significant to Cather scholars: Carl Van Doren's essay was perceptive in 1922, but its conclusions are obvious at this time. H. L. Mencken's reviews are superficial. . . . Of the general essays collected, only those of Joseph Wood Krutch, Rebecca West, E. K. Brown and Leon Edel contain truly valuable insights. . . . The worst criticism includes Mr. Schroeter's own article, in which 'The Professor's House' is sacrificed to a tirade against Willa Cather's alleged anti-Semitism and hints at sexual abnormality; and the article on 'My Antonia' by John H. Randall, III. . . . This collection indicates not only that we have not yet finished with Willa Cather but that we have hardly begun." J. J. Murphy

N Y Times Bk R p12 N 19 '67 550w

TLS p1254 D 28 '67 140w

SCHUCHTER, ARNOLD. White power, black freedom; planning the future of urban America. 650p $11.50 Beacon press

309.2 Cities and towns—U.S. Negroes. U.S.—Race relations 68-14708

"An analysis of solutions to the white-black problem [in the United States]. . . . The basic thesis of this book is that White Power holds the key to black freedom.' Mr. Schuchter defines White Power as the means and ability to establish goals and then to act, decisively, to advance these goals; to cause the fabric of daily life and the institutions of society to change." (Library J)

"Schuchter knows that in the years ahead urban blacks will have the ball but whites will own the game. In other words, we do have two societies. Ultimately undesirable as this set-up may be for urban community, it has to be dealt with creatively. . . . No matter what, the going will be rough. But Schuchter, who is not optimistic, at least has a plot and a plan for our plotless, planless cities. His is an unemotional and programmatic discourse."

Christian Century 85:1286 O 9 '68 110w

"Schuchter's book [is] based partly on his own community work but mainly on a comprehensive study of current sociological literature. . . . [He] agrees with the President's Commission on Civil Disorders that the institutionalized caste system has been the chief cause of urban rebellions. He believes that domestic peace will require a revolution in the structure, values, and relationships of American society. . . . Although this is a long work which will be most useful to serious students of the subject, most libraries should acquire it." Ruben Kugler

Library J 93:2993 S 1 '68 190w

SCHUELLER, HERBERT M., ed. The letters of John Addington Symonds, v 1. See Symonds, J. A.

SCHULBERG, BUDD, ed. From the ashes; voices of Watts; ed. and with an introd. by Budd Schulberg. 277p $5.95 New Am. lib.

810.8 Watts, Los Angeles—Social conditions. Negro literature. Negro authors. American literature—Collections 67-27434

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Choice 5:200 Ap '68 110w

Reviewed by E. D. Genovese

Nation 207:87 Ag 5 '68 230w

Reviewed by Robert Bone

N Y Times Bk R p36 F 4 '68 550w

SCHULER, EDGAR A. Public opinion and constitution making in Pakistan, 1958-1962, by Edgar A. and Kathryn R. Schuler. 286p $6 Mich. state univ. press

342.549 Pakistan—Constitutional history. Pakistan—Politics and government 66-20902

"The purpose of this study is to detail the steps, as published chiefly in two Pakistani English-language daily newspapers, the Pakistan Observer (Dacca) and Dawn (Karachi), and in an Indian paper, the Statesman (Calcutta), by which a new constitution was created to replace that abrogated in 1958." (Introd) Index.

"The material presented lacks integration. The political and constitutional developments and the participants therein are introduced without contexts. More discomforting are the omissions. After nearly a 175-page account of activities leading to the formation and announcement of the Constitution come the reactions to it. Besides quoting from the editorials of two or three newspapers welcoming the Constitution, the book gives a total of three opinions. . . . The subject of the study is important, and much more material is available than has been utilized. The present study is useful in the sense that it has collected in one place most of the news items and editorials relating to constitution making published in the two leading newspapers of Pakistan between 1958 and 1962." Masood Ghaznavi

Am Hist R 73:574 D '67 400w

Reviewed by R. N. Blue
Am Pol Sci R 62:647 Je '68 850w

"The work suffers greatly because all Urdu and Bengali newspapers were omitted, there were no interviews with key personalities involved in the constitutional effort, no access to committee reports, no attempt to probe the reaction of the large bulk of the population, and no opportunity to verify the accuracy of the alleged facts met in the daily press. The study painstakingly and pedantically goes over ground familiar to most students of Pakistani politics acquainted with Von Vorys's Political Development in Pakistan [BRD 1966], adding little to the expanding literature on Pakistan. Appendices are useful though one wishes the authors had reproduced more of the Report of the Constitution Commission and the 1962 Constitution. Research and university libraries may find marginal use here."

Choice 4:737 S '67 140w

"The Schulers' book is modest in its scope. . . . [It] is hardly an analysis of 'public opinion'; it is rather an account of a 'microscopic minority' (to borrow a famous phrase) but it has its value in determining the record of politics and political attitudes in a country where democracy has been battered and betrayed by its exponents but where the democratic ideal does still survive." Hugh Tinker
Pacific Affairs 41:137 spring '68 380w

SCHULER, KATHRYN R., Jr. auth. Public opinion and constitution making in Pakistan, 1958-1962. See Schuler, E. A.

SCHULLER, GUNTHER. Early jazz; its roots and musical development. 401p $9.75 Oxford 781.5 Jazz music 68-17610

"In this volume, jazz is covered from its beginnings to the early thirties. . . . Major artists or groups [are] dealt with. . . . Important recordings are analyzed bar by bar. . . . The different styles—ragtime, march, jazz—are explained; the different forms—rags, blues, riffs, pop songs—are delineated; the bands of New Orleans, Chicago, New York and the Southwest are described." (N Y Times Bk R)

"Musicologically, by far the most sophisticated attempt in the field of jazz criticism. . . . [Schuller] provides a wealth of material carefully and explicitly analyzed. . . . He is not as well based in anthropology, and as a result, when he tries to trace the connections of jazz to earlier primitive cultures he makes some trenchant criticisms of existing myths and inaccuracies but he adds occasional speculations of his own which are also somewhat difficult to support. When he deals with the major period of jazz development (from 1920 through the 1930's), he is on surer ground, and the book is stimulating and resourceful. . . . Any library which pretends to a serious treatment of jazz must have this book on its shelves."

Choice 5:634 J1 '68 200w

"[Schuller] is an awesomely equipped musicologist and composer. His discussion of jazz may read more into the music than its performers knew they were putting there. But this first volume . . . of a 'basic history of jazz' will make its mark for both its technical competence and its timely accent on the African roots of the art."

Christian Century 85:487 Ap 17 '68 70w

Reviewed by R. A. Hamm
Library J 93:2660 J1 '68 150w

Reviewed by Frank Tirro
Music Lib Assn Notes 25:227 D '68 2000w

"Here, at last, is the definitive work . . . written in the best intellectual tradition. It is clear, thorough, objective, sophisticated and original. A remarkable book by any standard, it is unparalleled in the literature of jazz. The only fault I would mention is Schuller's prose style, which is less than inspired." Frank Conroy
N Y Times Bk R p32 My 12 '68 750w

"It is the flatness of the surrounding countryside that makes some jazz critics loom larger than others. If the same standards that we apply to other forms of musical criticism were being applied to jazz writing, few 'jazz critics' would ever have been published. . . . Viewed from this perspective [this] . . . is a good book. . . . [One feels that Schuller] lacks the scholarly apparatus to cope with the aims he has set himself, that he has read too little and that the world of modern ethnomusicology is alien to him. His strength lies in his understanding of the working musician's daily problems, of the way instrumentalists feel and think, of the borderland between composition and improvisation, between playing from a score and ad-libbing, between legitimate music, twelve-tone writing, and jazz. This is quite an achievement, and for these aspects of the work he deserves high praise. But to generalize about the influence of African music on jazz without having read Kubik and Dauer is truly unforgivable."

TLS p1331 N 28 '68 550w

SCHULTE, HENRY F. The Spanish press, 1470-1966; print, power, and politics. 280p $6.95 Univ. of Ill. press

076 Freedom of the press. Newspapers

67-21856

This tells "the story of the Spanish periodical press—from its beginnings in 1470, through five centuries of Spain's . . . history, to the . . . Press and Print Law of 1966. . . . [Beginning with the] restrictions imposed on the press in 1938 at the close of the Spanish Civil War, Mr. Schulte traces the . . . evolution of the new Press and Print Law, and discusses its impact for the future." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"[The author] provides a competent survey of press censorship and regulation under Franco. After treating the contemporary scene, he investigates the 'background,' and in this section of the work he often writes on a quite general level, assuming ignorance of the outline of Spanish history. Therefore, much of the material is elementary and duplicates work more thoroughly done in standard histories of Spain. . . . Nevertheless, Schulte does provide valuable coverage of and original research into the interaction of power and the press in Spain through the 18th, 19th and early 20th centuries. The book would be a valuable addition to libraries building collections in Spanish history, in the interaction of government and the press, and in totalitarian and authoritarian government."

Choice 5:936 O '68 170w

Reviewed by R. C. Turner
Library J 93:1633 Ap 15 '68 180w

SCHULTZ NORDHOLT, J. W., ed. Bible for children, v 1. See Klink, J. L.

SCHULTZ, PEARLE HENRIKSEN. Sir Walter Scott: wizard of the North. 212p il $4.95 Vanguard

B or 92 Scott, Sir Walter—Juvenile literature 66-28884

A biography of the nineteenth-century Scottish poet and novelist, who wrote Ivanhoe, Kenilworth, The Lady of the Lake and other works. Glossary. Bibliography. "Ages ten to fourteen." (Book World)

"Although dialogue is a bit stagey in spots, Miss Schultz still writes a biography to engage junior high readers. Much of the book depicts Scott as boy and as young man: the crippled boy who learned to live with a handicap and the young man who studied law and became one of Scotland's most celebrated novelists. Readers will not learn a great deal about the construction of Scott's poetry and novels, but they will share Scott's excitement in the legends and stories of his homeland—the stuff of which his poetry and novels are made." Alan Madsen

Book World p12 Mr 17 '68 190w

"The main facts and dates of Scott's life are satisfactorily accounted for. . . . However, Scott's stature as an author is not adequately shown nor his moral stance clarified. . . . Although the writing style improves as the book progresses, the fictionalized conversation is always forced because the dialect is clumsily handled." Betty Henderson

Library J 92:2464 Je 15 '67 140w

Reviewed by G. W. Allen
N Y Times Bk R p22 Je 21 '68 100w

SCHUTZ, ALFRED. The phenomenology of the social world; tr. by George Walsh and Frederick Lehnert; with an introd. by George Walsh. 255p $9 Northwestern univ. press

301.01 Phenomenology. Sociology 67-16716

This book "is an analysis of the meaning-structure of the social world and suggests a new way of investigating the social sciences. Schutz attempts to describe social 'phenomena' and to establish the meaning of 'objectivity' in the social sciences from the perspective of the lived experience of man in the 'natural attitude.' . . . [The book begins with a study] of Max Weber's sociological concepts. . . . Section II shows the meaning-structure of action as a lived experience. . . . Section III deals with the problem of intersubjective understanding. . . . In Section IV, Schutz describes the structure of the social world and formulates a typology of social relationship. In Section V, he reformulates some basic questions concerning 'interpretive sociology.'" (Am Pol Sci R) Translated from the German.

Reviewed by Herbert Lamm

Am J Soc 73:779 My '68 700w

"[This is a] welcome, invaluable translation of Schutz's pioneering work. . . . In Section I, [the author] formulates the basic methodological problems of 'interpretive sociology,' clarifies the basic ambiguities in a series of tacit pre-suppositions. . . . and attempts to go beyond Weber. . . . Section IV is by far the most important and original contribution of [the book] to the theory of social science. By the social world, [Schutz] means a complex network of relationships. . . . [Here he describes] four regions of social relationship. . . . [The book] contributes to a philosophical clarification of the very roots of human social existence. It is (or was) the significant beginning of a new way of theorizing about social science. To evaluate and appreciate [Schutz's] thought fully, one has to read his available and posthumously forthcoming writings." H. Y. Jung

Am Pol Sci R 62:614 Je '68 1100w

"Unfortunately, the translation is not above reproach. . . . The English version is not faithful to the original. I estimate that the text has been reduced by at least ten percent. Though the translators indicate in footnotes that they have 'adapted' several paragraphs, I have found—without comparing the two versions page by page—some two dozen other places in which the text has been altered or abridged as much or more than where changes are actually noted. The lack of faithfulness is evident also in some unwarranted changes of expression. . . . Finally, the book contains an introduction and an index, both of which are barely worth mentioning." Egon Bittner

Am Soc R 33:639 Ag '68 1700w

"Growing out of an interest in Weber, Husserl, Dilthey, and Rickert, [Schutz's] approach stresses the significance of understanding the objective and subjective context of many and particularly the role of ideal types in sociological analysis. A close examination of Schutz' work suggests its relevance for integrating the ideas of George Herbert Mead, Simmel, Durkheim, and Weber. Since the Verstehen approach is still a fundamental aspect of sociological science an understanding of Schutz is indispensable. In addition, Schutz provides clear links with philosophy. Should be in every library that claims to have a sociological collection. It is especially important for university level libraries."

Choice 5:880 S '68 130w

SCHÜTZ, WILHELM WOLFGANG. Rethinking German policy; new approaches to reunification. 154p $5.50 Praeger

327.43 Germany—History—1945- 67-24677

"A German political-affairs specialist argues his plan for reunification of Germany, which, he is convinced, can only be accomplished with the consent and co-operation of the Soviet Union. Schutz proposes: 1) a second peace conference, which would settle on a security system embracing both NATO and the Warsaw Pact; 2) a ten-year plan for negotiation with the West and the Soviet bloc; and 3) the calling together of an all-German national assembly to work out the details of German reunification over a two- or three-year period." (America) This is a revised and updated edition of the book originally published in 1965 as Reform der Deutschlandpolitik.

Reviewed by V. S. Kearney

America 118:603 My 4 '68 90w

"Schütz, the respected chairman of a semi-official West German agency for promoting reunification, is a well-known public speaker and frequent contributor to the best West German newspapers. Unfortunately, these credentials have not helped to produce a good book. The 'new approaches' promised in the title turn out to be nothing but banal platitudes and vague expressions of hope for the future. The reader comes away from the book with no clear idea of how Germany became divided or of what keeps her that way, still less with any concrete notion of what can be done to rectify the situation. It is appropriate that the book concludes with three appendices that have no apparent connection with the text whatsoever. A total disappointment."

Choice 5:874 S '68 120w

"Schutz's study has the merit of pulling together the myriad historical and current problems relating to German reunification. He does not offer any startling new information or suggestions for solving the problem. Although Mr. Schutz is unabashedly West German and writes from this perspective, he is frequently critical of short-sighted Western policies in general and those of former governments of the Federal Republic in particular. And rightly so, one might add. Well-written and with reasoned arguments and presentation, the book offers an excellent introduction to this complex problem, especially for the reader not fluent in German." J. K. Fugate

Library J 92:4165 N 15 '67 160w

"An expert and comprehensive survey of the choices facing Germany in the changing international scene of the 1960s. There is a sensible discussion of the dangers and opportunities presented to Germany by the apparent loosening up of both the cold war blocks and particularly by the apparent liberalization of Russian policy and the evident preoccupation of the United States with Asia. . . . The author discusses the sort of policies . . . which may bring reunification nearer . . . [and] provides a useful guide for English readers to the framework within which Bonn's eastern policy is now being reformulated."

TLS p847 Ag 8 '68 260w

SCHUTZ, WILLIAM C. Joy; expanding human awareness. 223p $5.50 Grove

616.89 Psychotherapy 67-27879

A psychologist on the faculty of the Albert Einstein School of Medicine who has been associated with the Esalen Institute at Big Sur, California, describes a series of techniques in group psychotherapy "employing physical means to dramatize and alleviate states of tension and lack of self-awareness, as well as examples of their use, cautions, and descriptions written by people who have benefited by these techniques." (Publishers' Weekly)

Choice 5:1050 O '68 120w

"[Schutz] says that no person living has ever achieved his full potential. 'Joy' he says, 'is the feeling that comes when one realizes his potential for feeling, for having inner freedom and openness, for full expression of himself . . . of having satisfying relations with others and with society.' . . . This is another facile self-help book in a familiar tradition that is likely to have wide mass appeal even as it irritates more learned or more hesitant psychologists who find it difficult to be so facile about the overwhelming problems of human behavior. Although its main appeal is to the general reader, the book will also be of interest to specialists." Allan Angoff

Library J 92:4166 N 15 '67 190w

"The book is hard to read. . . . and even harder to discuss intelligently. Esalen's approach to joy-making is eclectic; its techniques range from more or less orthodox Freudian free association to . . . 'group grope.' . . . Schutz describes every damn one of them—faithfully, flatly, and with no trace of critical judgment. He has equally loving feelings toward 'encounter groups,' the 'somatopsychic' techniques of Rolf and Lowen, Maria Ebner's 'connective tissue massage,' Perl's Gestalt therapy, Moreno's psychodrama and, as the old song goes, lots more. None of them, he concedes, work all the time—and from the sketchy case histories provided it is impossible to decide whether any of them, as used at Esalen or in the privacy of one's own home, work any of the time." Robert Claiborne

Nation 206:830 Je 24 '68 1300w

SCHWARTZ, ALVIN. Old cities & new towns; the changing face of the nation. 126p il maps $5.95; lib bdg $5.89 Dutton

711 City planning—U.S. Urban renewal 68-24728

The author discusses the problems of urban renewal; "the causes of the deterioration of cities, particularly in their centers. . . . [He describes] what is being done in Philadelphia (the first planned city of the United States), and what has been done in Hartford, Connecticut, and in Boston. . . . Schwartz also considers the planning of complete new cities, such as Columbia in Maryland, and Reston in Virginia." (Best Sell)

Best Sell 28:326 N 1 '68 120w [YA]

"[This] new summary of the American city, past, present and future, has . . . biggish pages lavishly illustrated with many good photographs and a few clear diagrams. Mr. Schwartz admires the city as achievement of the human spirit, but he detests the ghetto and the slum. . . . He proceeds to show slums, to explain how they happened and can still happen, and describes what brave new worlds are beginning to replace them. A disquieting, challenging, encouraging, constructive book. . . . For the twelves and older." N. M.

Christian Science Monitor pB9 N 7 '68 100w [YA]

SCHWARTZ, ALVIN. The people's choice; the story of candidates, campaigns, and elections. 96p il $4.95; lib bdg $4.90 Dutton

329 Politics. Practical—Juvenile literature. Elections—U.S.—Juvenile literature 68-16254

The author examines "such topics as organizing, financing and conducting campaigns; the differences [between] political parties; [and] political machines and voting." (N Y Times Bk R) Glossary.

"An excellent book and one which should be in every high-school library and public library." Best Sell 28:114 Je 1 '68 80w

Reviewed by R. C. Bergenheim
Christian Science Monitor pB8 N 7 '68 130w

Reviewed by M. R. Sive
Library J 93:13309 J S 15 '68 100w

"Publishers print a variety of political-education books for young readers every four years, which are read as avidly as adults read campaign biographies. These guides usually explain such basic things as how every American boy can grow up to be President. . . . There's also a chapter or two on how the young can save the country from the old by following the book's simple directions. Like politicians, these primers usually promise more than they deliver. . . . [This is such a book.]" Marvin Kitman

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p4 My 5 '68 240w

"Although this book covers so much ground that the treatment is rather superficial, it does provide a useful survey of the whole election procedure from the work of volunteers and the smallest organized nuclei of political activity to the ponderous and expensive machinery of Presidential campaigns." Zena Sutherland
Sat R 51:31 Ji 20 '68 90w

SCHWARTZ, ALVIN. The rainy day book. 192p il $4.95 Trident press

793 Amusements. Games 68-14288

"A guide for parents in selecting indoor activities for their children. . . . Suggestions are made ranging from games meant for the individual child or a large group of children, to riddles, jokes, and easy-to-make candy. . . . Games for a single participant are starred and all games and craft programs are listed according to the materials needed." (Christian Science Monitor) Index.

"The book is easy to follow and directions are rather simple. (If there is any difficulty on the reader's part in understanding any of the directions, things are quickly cleared up by looking at the little sketches that prevail throughout the book.) . . . An important feature of the book shows parents how to do with what they already have in the house." Rhysa Davis
Christian Science Monitor p16 O 4 '68 290w

"Numerous possibilities for indoor fun are offered in this slim volume which is directed to parents, but useful to counselors, scout leaders, and other recreational workers who are seeking new ideas or want to refresh themselves on old favorites. . . . [The author] gives suggestions for hobbies, puzzles, kitchen projects, and storytelling, rather than presenting a comprehensive work on home amusement. . . . Plentiful cross references, an index . . . add to the value of this book which is recommended wherever additional material is needed to supplement more complete works." Janet Freedman

Library J 93:1496 Ap 1 '68 160w

"Grade five and up." A. D. Schweibish
Library J 93:4423 N 15 '68 110w

SCHWARTZ, MILDRED A., Jr. auth. Political parties and the Canadian social structure. See Engelmann, F. C.

SCHWARTZ, MILDRED A. Public opinion and Canadian identity; foreword by Seymour Martin Lipset. 263p $7.50 Univ. of Calif. press
320.971 Nationalism. Canada—Politics and government 67-17693

A Canadian sociologist at the University of Illinois examines the concept of national identity in Canada. She "canvases poll reports bearing on a variety of matters connected with Canada's chronic difficulties with national cohesion—public views of Britain and the Commonwealth connection, of the giant neighbor to the south, of conflicts over the choice of a flag and a national anthem, and of issues arising from the English-French division. In addition, she reanalyzes the original survey cards from a number of polls, with particular attention to the degree of heterogeneity among disparate groups." (Choice)

"It may be true that, while many knew, by the defective process of intuition and reading, that there is an absence of consensus in Canada . . . and that such an absence implies that Canadians have no clear image of what it means to be a Canadian, some value lies in having this knowledge given concrete form by quantitative analysis. . . . This book, which helps forward the methodology of comparative macroscopic analysis, should also help forward American awareness of Canada. The chief conclusion . . . [is] that in Canada the principal parties are powerless to overcome the cleavages created by language, race, geography, and history." R. W. Winks
Am J Soc 74:199 S '68 650w

"What [the author] has produced is a secondary analysis of public opinion polls conducted by the Canadian Institute of Public Opinion from 1941 through 1963. . . . In handling the opinions of so diversified a populace, broken into regional settings which make communication even more difficult, Dr. Schwartz shows a calm and dispassionate objectivity. The quality of her prose is not consistent; but writing a text to accompany a long series of statistical tables is not easy. . . . An illuminating book which largely confirms much that social scientists, using less complex techniques, have been saying for a long time. But the work also contains a number of fascinating sidelights on more obscure points, and it is of particular interest for its material on Canadian political parties, and their similarities and differences." Norman Ward
Am Soc R 33:143 F '68 1000w

"In general, the competent discussion and the fascinating data form a study with great implications for the understanding of the determinants of national cohesion." Choice 4:1052 N '67 120w

SCHWARZ, WALTER. Nigeria. 328p il maps $7.50 Praeger

966.9 Nigeria 68-19861

"This book gives the . . . story of Nigeria, from the beginning of its history, through the rise of nationalism before independence and during its post-independence crises, to the [1966 coups]. . . . In addition to the narrative, there are chapters on the former Regions and the main tribal groups—the Hausa-Fulani, the Yoruba, and the Ibo nations, and a score of smaller tribes—and a chapter on the economy." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

Economist 228:65 O 5 '68 30w

"Although this is primarily a political history of Nigeria, Mr. Schwarz, formerly a British news correspondent in West Africa, shows clearly the importance of the rate of economic development on the overall situation of civil strife. His study is recommended for large and special collections." M. D. Herrick

SCHWARZ, WALTER—Continued

Library J 93:2494 Je 15 '68 120w

"[The author] has accomplished a difficult and complicated task with great skill. He writes with intimate knowledge of Nigeria. . . . It is not his fault that it is hard to follow, let alone remember, the details of his elaborate account of three coups in which Nigeria's well-known leaders were killed and a military autocracy established. He does not pretend to understand just why all these events took place. . . . [He] provides the background for the present Biafran war and famine. He has written an expert book, invaluable to students of Africa, not one for the tourist who desires colour and sensation in a country which is rich in both." Kingsley Martin
New Statesman 76:172 Ag 9 '68 750w

"Schwarz is without doubt the best of today's ephemeral commentators on the Nigerian scene. To his credit one must mark up the fact (contrary to critics borne away by Federal or Biafran partisanship) that he remains as impartial as the current tragedy allows. . . . [He] gives a competent, if oversimplified résumé of modern Nigerian history—acceptable enough in its context because of its readability but barely satisfying to the serious scholar, who will have his broader and deeper sources. . . . But the past, in fairness, is none of the author's real concern. What will interest the general reader is rather page 128 et seq. Even from here on he will find as much to dispute as to approve. . . . Unfortunately Mr. Schwarz, while expert among the trees, is not yet far enough out from the wood to draw acceptable conclusions." TLS p876 Ag 15 '68 200w

SCHWEBEL, MILTON. Who can be educated?

277p $6.50 Grove

370.973 Education—U.S. Education—Philosophy 68-22002

The "dean of the graduate school of education, Rutgers University, . . . develops his position that this country's prevailing theory of education, stemming from Plato, and justifying differential education—high-quality, academic education for the higher classes, and low-quality general or vocational education for the lower classes, is unfounded. . . . [Most educators] attribute learning problems and low scholastic performance to native differences in endowment, essentially irremediable. . . . [He] attributes disparities in performance to the quality of the children's physical and cultural environment, and refuses to classify any child, except one suffering from brain damage, as incapable of academic learning. . . . He discusses biological, psychological, social and educational determinants, and presents evidence to show that all of these could be controlled." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"This book will undoubtedly be a controversial one. Dr. Schwebel is a crusader for the rights of children. He attacks the currently accepted theory of education, and doesn't hesitate to name names. . . . While [he] has not proved his theory, he has made it crystal clear that the future of our schools and of our society could be significantly altered if educators would act on the assumption that everyone can be educated." Marian Wozencraft
Library J 93:2840 Ag '68 450w

Reviewed by E. Z. Friedenberg

N Y Rev of Books 11:18 N 21 '68 1250w

"A good education can be considered a piece of property. . . . A third of this book, perhaps its best third, is devoted to a historical analysis of the struggles waged all over the world for that possession. . . . What the author calls 'the class limitations on education' are spelled out very carefully. . . . [In this] long and blunt and relentless historical survey. . . . [Mr. Schwebel] has made the book's title a question, and built its chapters around his answer, which is a loud, emphatic 'everyone.' . . . This book is good at showing how quickly and wrongfully we label children to suit our own (social, political) purposes." Robert Coles
N Y Times Bk R p3 O 13 '68 1200w

SCHWEITZER, ALBERT. The kingdom of God and primitive Christianity; ed. with an introd. by Ulrich Neuenschwander; tr. by L. A. Garrard. 193p $3.95 Seabury

231 Kingdom of God 68-24007

This posthumously published work "presents a survey of the biblical belief in the Kingdom of God from its earliest development in Israel through the period of Primitive Christianity—from Amos to Paul. The book is divided into four parts: The Kingdom of God in the Prophets and Late Judaism; The Kingdom of God in the Teaching of Jesus; Primitive Christian Belief in the Kingdom of God; and The Kingdom of God in Paul." (Publisher's note) Index of biblical passages. Index of names.

"[This] adds little to what we have known about what [Schweitzer] thought. But the personal retrospective view lets Schweitzer's public learn more of what he thought was permanent in his theology." Christian Century 85:1374 O 30 '68 40w

Reviewed by G. M. Ruoss

Library J 94:86 Ja 1 '69 130w

"[This] manuscript, written in the 1950's, was the first part of a projected longer work. Yet the book, 'complete in itself' . . . may be called in a sense Albert Schweitzer's theological testament.' In a rapid pace, he takes us from his initial claim that 'Christianity is essentially a religion of belief in the coming of the Kingdom of God' through the primary sources of this concept. . . . [This book] represents the last formal reflections of thoughtful teacher and determined participant of the 20th century. . . . It is a delight to read." David Poling
N Y Times Bk R p24 N 24 '68 800w

SCHWEITZER, FREDERICK M., ed. Dictionary of the renaissance; ed. by Frederick M. Schweitzer and Harry E. Wedeck. 646p $15 Philosophical lib.

914.02 Renaissance—Dictionaries 64-20429

This volume covers the period 1350-1600. Names, subjects and events are included and entries are arranged alphabetically.

"The entries are written in a brisk and easy-to-read style. The compilers have chosen to use an extensive rather than an intensive approach (approximately 3,870 entries). The single person or event entries prevail by far. Subject entries are relatively scarce although they would be extremely useful. . . . Some criticism of the Dictionary will be widely voiced: not enough subject entries; imbalance in the treatment of the chosen topics. . . . No reference is made to different interpretations of events, persons, or ideas; and there is a lack of references for further readings on a topic or person. . . . Useful mainly for undergraduates in broad survey courses." Choice 4:1228 Ja '68 300w

Reviewed by D. M. Glixon

Sat R 51:44 My 18 '68 100w

Social Studies 59:190 Ap '68 100w

SCIENCE in progress; sixteenth series, 1964-1966 [ed. by W. R. Brodel]. 390p il $10 Yale univ. press

508 Science. Research (39-14778)

"Ever since 1939 the Sigma Xi National Lectures have been collected and published in the series 'Science in Progress.' The first series covered the period from 1937 to 1938. With this 16th series, covering the years from 1964 to 1966, the publication will be terminated. . . . Papers in this [volume] range from 'Humanistic Biology' by Rene Dubos and 'The Logic of the Mind' by J. Bronowski to 'Selection of Space Experiments' by W. H. Pickering and 'Liquid Helium' by Lyle B. Borst." (Library J)

"Although the lecture series will continue, readers will be deprived of an excellent set of quality papers covering all phases of natural and social sciences, written for the layman [with the termination of publication of the papers]. . . . This volume is an excellent finish to an excellent series." R. J. Havlik
Library J 92:4426 D 1 '67 120w

"[The discontinuation of] publication of this series [is] a step that has long seemed overdue. In spite of the fact that all the articles in each volume have been outstanding, the volumes have lacked unity and purpose as books, and since the lecturers are conspicuous contributors to their fields of research, the material they present in their Sigma Xi lectures has as a rule already been published elsewhere. The decision to discontinue publication serves, however, to single out the present volume as the swan song of the series, and it acquits itself nobly of this distinction. Of vital interest to all scientists regardless of specialization are the articles by J. Bronowski and René Dubos." Mark Graubard
Science 160:1330 Je 21 '68 550w

SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN (periodical). Materials. 210p il $5; pa $2.50 Freeman

620.1 Materials

67-30439

"A collection of articles originally published in the September 1967 issue of Scientific American, this book covers materials in general, their nature and properties, and the solid state. The ramifications of the fact that several materials can fulfill the same function are explored from an economic and technological viewpoint." (Library J) Bibliography.

"The articles are descriptive and written for the layman by well-known authorities in the field. Would be of interest to high school students of science and their teachers. Even those professional scientists who may be working in some aspect of materials will find this collection interesting. There is a limited bibliography at the end of the book. In those libraries where this issue of Scientific American receives wide use, the hardbound book may be a valuable asset."

Choice 5:364 My '68 100w

"As one might expect in a book of this size the subject could not possibly be thoroughly covered, and unfortunately, color illustrations which appeared with the original articles are among those omitted. The value of the book would have been increased by an index. The references cited at the beginning of pages 208, 209 and 210 have been placed under the wrong subjects. However, these essays will be enlightening and enjoyable to the intelligent layman and students interested in this field. The book is recommended for large public libraries." L. J. Creek

Library J 93:1491 Ap 1 '68 150w

SCIMECCA, JOSEPH. Crisis at St John's; strike and revolution on the Catholic campus [by] Joseph Scimecca & Roland Damiano. 213p $5.95 Random house

378.7471 St John's university, New York

67-12734

"Written by two instructors of sociology who picketed at St. John's University in 1966, this book attempts to portray the character of the university and the New York Roman Catholic community it serves. Further, it essays a picture of American Catholic higher education in general." (N Y Times Bk R)

"[This] study is enlivened by, but not delimited by, the specific incidents described and has much to say about the history, present status, and future of Catholic higher education. It should be of interest to all students of higher education and to anyone seeking to understand the ferment and revolution that is part of our times on so many campuses."

Choice 5:653 J1 '68 90w

"The St. John's crisis is treated as a happening at the most parochial of Catholic higher educational institutions. All the sharp contrasts and incongruities of revolutionary ferment in such a setting are thoroughly and graphically delineated, much to the detriment of the administration and to the credit of the strikers. This 'good guys versus bad guys' approach somewhat limits the overall value of the study as a scholarly enterprise. . . . The authors inevitably look at the events at St. John's from the perspective of the United Federation of Teachers. . . . The consistent, behind-the-scenes activity of the higher education unit of the state education department with its power to withdraw the charter of the institution, the firm and effective role of the Commission on Institutions of Higher Education of the Middle States Association, and the part played by the American Association of University Professors deserve more emphasis than they are given here." A. A. Kuusisto

J Higher Ed 39:530 D '68 600w

"The authors carefully analyze students and faculty with respect to their education, their general attitudes and their position in the crisis that led to the censure of St. John's by leading academic associations. . . . In so doing they maintain that the problems of St. John's exist to some degree in all Catholic universities. The question is raised, can religious orthodoxy and academic freedom be reconciled? Or must Catholic colleges and universities remain 'ideological bootcamps?' . . . To these questions the book provides no answers; it does, however, outline the dialogue that is taking place in the Catholic intellectual communities today. The authors have provided a good study of the issues involved in the strike, but they are less effective in characterizing Catholic education as a whole."

N Y Times ■K ■ p26 Mr 17 '68 350w

SCOTT, CHARLES T., Jr. ed. Approaches in linguistic methodology. See Rauch, I.

SCOTT, HUGH. Come to the party. 269p $5.95 Prentice-Hall

329.6 Republican party

68-13061

The author has been a Congressman from Pennsylvania, "GOP National Chairman during the Dewey-Truman campaign of 1948, . . . and later United States Senator. In these political memoirs he recounts his battles with the GOP . . . and his efforts to keep his party true to its human rights origins and capable of presenting a positive program for America's [needs]." (Library J)

Reviewed by Walter Karp

Book World p5 Mr 17 '68 1400w

"[The author] makes no startling disclosures here. Rather he pleads for an end to intra-party vendettas and for a refurbishing of the GOP." R. W. Schwarz

Library J 93:561 F 1 '68 100w

"The author, virtually a charter member of the 'Eastern establishment,' has always been known for his savage sarcasm, and in this book he will not disappoint those who admire that trait. . . . Republicans who in Scott's judgment are not sufficiently attuned to current social problems are dismissed, in his words, as mastodons, aboriginals, old fuds, dinosaurs, foot draggers, noisy obstructionists, neolithics, and troglodytes. The Senator is fond of the withering invective of yesteryear. . . . This kind of bombast takes the place of documentation and serious analysis. . . . [Moreover] he fails to support his contention that the young Republicans are unrepresentative of the American youth he considers so vital to the Party's future. Nor does he document his assertion that the Right-wingers took over the organization by undemocratic maneuvers. . . . None the less, Scott has much to say." Donald Young

Sat R 51:32 Mr 16 '68 950w

SCOTT, J. F., ed. The correspondence of Isaac Newton, v4. See Newton, I.

SCOTT, JACK DENTON. The complete book of pasta; an Italian cookbook; with phot. of Italy by Samuel Chamberlain & drawings by Melvin Klappholz. 429p $15 Morrow

641.6 Cookery, Italian. Cookery—Pasta

68-22739

This volume begins with "a history of pasta, a description of the numerous types, and an illustrated glossary. The recipes are divided into sauces, basic and special; seafood, meat, poultry, game, and vegetables with pasta; particular pastas; recipes gleaned from 'friends, Romans and countrymen'; pasta as cooked outside Italy; and what to do with leftover pasta. There are black-and-white photographs of Italy throughout the text." (Library J) Index.

Best Sell 28:351 N 15 '68 170w

"An overwhelming passion for pasta will be satisfied only by [this book]. . . . A fine Italian hand is not needed to prepare the delectable sauces, fillings and accompaniments, but a strong arm is essential—for taming hard-wheat semolina flour into the . . . pastas that comprise the extensive repertoire. The work is worth it. . . . Lazy cooks may use the recipes with commercial pasta." Gloria Levitas

Book World p1 D 15 '68 110w

Reviewed by Yvonne Horton

Christian Science Monitor p8 N 29 '68

40w

Reviewed by Nora Corley

Library J 93:4142 N 1 '68 130w

Reviewed by Michael Field

N Y Rev of Books 11:23 D 19 '68 470w

"[This] goes far beyond its subject to include many surprisingly easy Italian recipes related to pasta. The numerous marvelous photographs . . . made me violently homesick, as did the food. 'Pasta' will be instructive to the poveri innocenti . . . who think that spaghetti, macaroni, lasagna and ravioli (with tomato sauce) exhaust the subject. . . . Included is information from such non-pasta areas as Korea, Japan and Mexico, as well as much thorough background information. The only thing I don't accept is Mr. Scott's wholesale condemnation of tomato paste." Nika Hazelton

N Y Times Bk R p28 D 1 '68 110w

SCOTT, JOHN. China, the hungry dragon. 256p $4.50; lib bdg $3.75 Parents mag. press 951 China—History—Juvenile literature 67-18473

After an historical survey of China from ancient times, the author covers "the present situation within China, the Sino-Soviet conflict, and Peking's foreign relations; as well as the Republic of China (Taiwan) and the overseas Chinese." (N Y Times Bk R) Bibliography. Index. "Grades eight to ten." (Library J)

Best Sell 27:392 Ja 1 '68 50w

"This is a well-written book. Its style is simple but not condescending; its contents are as up to date as possible, accurate, and there are no important omissions. The author is obviously not particularly friendly towards the Red regime. . . . The appendixes giving economic statistics and up-to-date biographic sketches of important personalities are of special value to high schools." Wen Chao Chen
Library J 93:310 Ja 15 '68 120w

"Based in part on an earlier report to his publisher ('Crisis in Communist China,' 1962), Scott's material has been updated and expanded by recent travel to Hong Kong and includes appraisal of China's 'cultural revolution' and of the Vietnam war. The author's researchers have occasionally failed him; and the text is intermittently blurred by that blend of breathless imprecision and adjectival excess associated with Time Inc. But Mr. Scott scores as an experienced reporter: diligent in collation of industrial and trade data, shrewd in analysis of Sino-Soviet tensions, perceptive in appraisal of the semi-religious schismatic tendencies in contemporary Communism." H. L. Boorman
N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p32 N 5 '67 210w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland

Sat R 51:42 My 11 '68 90w

"As an almost inevitable result of the attempt to deal with China past, present and to come, the book is very uneven. The survey of Chinese history is not well done: it contains errors of fact, instances of outmoded interpretation, and emphases and comparisons which many historians of China would not support. . . . The central part of the book goes better. In his account of the rise of the Communists, Mr. Scott has wisely and properly relied on Schramm's excellent biography of Mao Tse-tung. The discussions of Communist China from various angles, though necessarily based on relatively fragmentary evidence, benefit from Mr. Scott's journalistic experience and contacts. . . . [He] neither writes down to nor over the heads of his prospective readers. Especially in the middle portion of the book his style is informative, lively and straightforward." M. E. Cameron
Social Studies 59:281 N '68 470w

SCOTT, JOHN ANTHONY. Settlers on the Eastern shore, 1607-1750 (The living hist. lib) 227p il maps $3.95; lib bdg $3.95 Knopf 973.2 U.S.—History—Colonial period—Juvenile literature 67-19484

"Selections from primary source materials relating to the development of colonial British America are chronologically arranged with a connecting narrative. Sources used include: the diary of Mary Rowlandson who lived with the Nipmuck Indians as their captive for three months. Gottlieb Mittelberger's descriptions of the horrors of the sea voyage faced by immigrants, John Barbot's account of the slave trade, Andrew Hamilton's defense of Peter Zenger, the sermons of Jonathan Edwards, Peter Kalm's observation of American society in 1750, and songs . . . of the time. [Bibliography. Index.] Grades six to eight." (Library J)

"Almost two-thirds of this volume is made of excerpts from diaries of people who were on the scene in the founding of our early colonies. The actual accounts are interesting, but the commentaries are dull and the entire book necessarily lacks completeness since it tries to tell too much in a few pages."

Best Sell 27:363 D 1 '67 90w

"[This book] combines adequacy of research, maturity of style and integrity of presentation in a form that deserves attention. . . . [Scott] has written a story of people, not merely of great men." Alden Vaughan
Book World p26 F 25 '68 110w

Horn Bk 44:194 Ap '68 180w

"The amount of information presented in each chapter varies, but the whole offers a well-rounded picture with appropriate contrasts as to how the corporate colonies such as Massachusetts, the proprietary colonies such as Pennsylvania, and the royal colony of Virginia were settled, their patterns of government, and how they met their need for labor. A thoughtful approach to the presentation of firsthand accounts should suggest to students topics for further exploration." J. C. Ullam

Library J 93:889 F 15 '68 150w

SCOTT, MARIANA, ed. & tr. The Heliand. See Heliand

SCOTT, NATHAN A., ed. Adversity and grace; studies in recent American literature, by Preston M. Browning, Jr [and others] ed. by Nathan A. Scott, Jr. (Chicago. Univ. Divinity school. Essays in divinity. 269p $7.95 Univ. of Chicago press

810.9 American literature—History and criticism. Religion in literature 68-16717

A collection of essays by 'Henry Rago, J. C. Brauer, Gunnar Urang, N. A. Scott, Jr. [and others]. Professor Scott's introduction [discusses] 'Theology and the Literary Imagination,' and his opening essay [is] on the fiction of Saul Bellow. . . . The other essays are on Malamud, Heller, Pynchon, Salinger, O'Connor, Powers, Styron, Mailer, and [on] 'Faith and the Literary Imagination—The Vocation of Poetry.' (Va Q R) Index.

"There has been no better book to date either to explain the mystique of the common ground between theological method and the literary imagination or to provide sustained evidence of the valuable results that such an undertaking can produce. . . . A first-rate contribution to critical exegesis and a cause for hope." R. J. Thompson
Library J 93:2009 My 15 '68 140w

"Professor Scott has long since proven himself the most brilliant scholar and critic in the field. This book is in all respects up to his high standards and is a valuable addition to the small body of really intelligent criticism of modern American literature. The theological approach in this instance is a fruitful one, for American literature has always been religious at its source, and the writers considered here, although heterodox, are no exception." Va Q R 44:ciii autumn '68 160w

SCOTT, PAUL. The day of the scorpion; a novel. 483p $6.95 Morrow

68-135092

This novel continues "the story of the twilight of British rule in India [began in The Jewel in the Crown, BRD 1966]. . . . Most of the characters are British: Sarah and Susan [Layton]; . . . Lady Manners, the Governor's widow; . . . Captain Teddie Bingham of the Muzzy Guides, who marries Susan and . . . Captain Ronald Merrick. . . . Their lives overlap but never actually merge with those of the imprisoned Muslim member of Congress, Mohammed Ali Kasim, his son Ahmed, Nawab Sahib, and [Hari Kumar]." (Library J)

Reviewed by S. L. Hopkinson

Library J 93:3800 O 15 '68 210w

"[This] is a moderately good novel of a classic type, but hardly a leader. . . . [Scott] writes honestly, carefully, occasionally memorably. The sense of a community running down is conveyed by unexpected turns. . . . The book is fearfully long, however, and diffuse in a way that suggests not so much breadth of view as inability to select and discard. Conversations drag on, and too much time is spent establishing personalities. . . . Cut by a third, this novel would probably have gained in both poignancy and impact—and yet it is only half a novel, for one of its central themes, a rape-charge, has already played a major part in the action of . . . The Jewel in the Crown." Gillian Tindall
New Statesman 76:292 S 11 '68 320w

Reviewed by P. A. Duhamel

N Y Times Bk R p60 N 10 '68 700w

"The strength, assurance and stamina displayed in [this novel] are quite outstanding. The characters, while they successfully represent aspirations and conflicts which are bigger than themselves, never cease to be individuals. The conversations have subtlety and a quality of plenteousness which is none the less welcome for being out of fashion. Above all, the reader is impressed, and given confidence, by the feeling which Mr. Scott can generate of a writer who has thoroughly mastered his material, and who can . . . work through a maze of fascinating detail without for a moment losing sight of distant and considerable objectives."

TLS p975 S 12 '68 420w

SCOTT, TOM, ed. Late medieval Scots poetry; a selection from the makars and their heirs down to 1610; ed. with an introd, notes and glossary by Tom Scott. 207p $4 Barnes & Noble

821 Scottish poetry—Collections 67-3419

A selection of verse from "the 15th and 16th centuries . . . [in which the editor chose], with one exception ('Christis Kirk'), only those poems which exist as 'artefacts' rather than as utterance, message, or vision," and which he equates with the products of the Makars." (Choice)

"Although its editorial apparatus may make this anthology of some use as a classroom text, there is little reason for the libraries to purchase it. There are only 140 pages of poems from the period covered . . . compared with 232 pages of poems, just as judiciously and more liberally selected, from the same period in the recent Oxford Book of Scottish Verse [edited by J. MacQueen, BRD 1967]. . . . Students of Scots poetry will want to consider the editor's characteristic flatly dogmatic and often brilliant assessments and judgments in the introduction, the brief biographical summaries, and the inadequate editorial notes. Short bibliography and note on the Scots language."

Choice 4:989 N '67 170w

"There is nothing anonymous about the poets represented in Scott's [book]. . . . These gifted amateurs of the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries rejoiced in the proud name of makars. They wrote a vernacular that is teasingly like English, an English archaic and enriched by oddity. . . . This [is a] fine anthology. Mr. Scott, a worthy heir of poets he edits here, has made a valuable selection from the richest period of Scots verse. His Introduction, notes, and Commentary are very useful."

Daryl Hine

Poetry 113:37 O '68 1300w

SCOTT, W. N. Focus on Judith Wright. (Artists in Queensland) 55p il $6.75 Tri-ocean bks.

821 Wright, Judith [68-77530]

This volume gives the background of the Australian poet's "life in various parts of Australia and in Europe, and . . . [discusses] many of the ideas and problems underlying her work." (Publisher's note) Bibliography.

"In this book of introduction and background . . . [Miss Wright] is shown to be exactly what her poetry, children's books, and regional-family history would suggest: a woman of passionate intellect, strong attachment to a rural life in the Australian landscape, and concern for the preservation of both. A close friend of the poet's, Scott has skillfully woven excerpts from interviews with the poet and commentary on a handful of key poems with descriptions and pictures of the regions that provided objectification for the poet's themes. Recommended for college poetry collections, though the price seems a little steep."

Choice 5:1134 N '68 120w

Reviewed by Jerome Cushman

Library J 93:2664 J1 '68 110w

SCOTT, WILLIAM T. Erwin Schrödinger; an introduction to his writings. 175p $6.50 Univ. of Mass. press

530 Schrödinger, Erwin. Physics 66-28117

Schrödinger was awarded the Nobel prize in physics in 1933 for the development of his theory of wave mechanics. "I have tried to present here a connected account of a considerable portion of his work. I have selected the several areas of atomic and statistical physics that led up to wave mechanics, the famous theory itself, and the later developmental and critical work that is related to it. I have also included a brief biography, an account of most of his nontechnical writing, and a bibliography of his work." (Pref) Bibliography. Name and subject indexes.

"This monograph—written with authority—gives us the first comprehensive study of the scientific and philosophical works of Schrödinger. . . . Scott gives us a beautiful biographical sketch and several interpretative chapters on the foundations of wave mechanics and quantum mechanics (as viewed by Schrödinger). The chapter, 'Nature and Self,' explores the diversity of Schrödinger's intellectual adventures. . . . Should be read by students at all levels and in all fields of intellectual endeavor."

Choice 4:1283 Ja '68 120w

"Scott is not at his best in treating historical questions. His discussion of the development of wave mechanics is only a chronicle, in which one paper after another is described briefly. He does not convey much sense of just what problems these papers were written to solve, or why Schrödinger's contemporaries should have found them exciting or puzzling or disturbing. When Scott turns to an analysis of Schrödinger's views on the interpretation of quantum mechanics he has more to contribute. . . . He gives a very fair analysis of those points where Schrödinger was refuted by Born and Heisenberg, who were spokesmen for the viewpoint of the overwhelming majority of theorists, and those points that are still unresolved. . . . Scott has succeeded in providing a useful introduction to some of Schrödinger's main concerns. Let us join him hoping that someone will now go further and give us a full-length picture." M. J. Klein

Science 159:967 Mr 1 '68 650w

SCOTT, WINFIELD TOWNLEY. New and selected poems; sel. and ed. by George P. Elliott. 154p $4.95 Doubleday

811

67-19106

Most of these poems were previously published in literary journals or in Scott's earlier volumes of poetry.

"Poems such as 'Mr. Whittier,' 'Come Green Again,' 'Grant Wood's American Landscape,' and 'The Sword on the Table' successfully express dimensions of American culture not frequently treated. But Mr. Scott is more than an observer of the national scene, and some of his sensitive personal expressions are included here. 'Go Little, My Tragedy' and 'Memento' are poems that merit wider reading than they have received. 'Orchard Burial' and 'Electric Silence,' two of his newly published poems, are worth the book's price." Walter Waring

Library J 92:3427 O 1 '67 160w

"Scott is another conventional lyricist from New England. . . . He has a splendid talent for story poems and biographical poems, to my mind a talent the equal of Frost's and probably greater, yet he has used it sparingly. . . . One can guess that Scott has been intimidated by the presence of Frost. . . . and it would be folly to abuse him for that. . . . [The editor has] written a modest and good introduction. . . . Among the thirty-five new poems at the end of the book, all short, at least ten are—but why search for an adjective. All thirty-five make it." Hayden Carruth

Poetry 112:425 S '68 320w

SCOTT'S New handbook for philatelists. 192p il $4.95; pa $1.95 Simon & Schuster

383.2 Postage stamps 67-19818

"The 14 chapters in this volume include, among other items, a glossary of philatelic terms, lists of philatelic societies (specialized and general), magazines and other literature; a stamp identifier (for markings not readily identified); information about the designs of the Prominent Americans Stamps of 1966; and an index of United States stamp designers." (Library J) Index.

"Use of a short type line has left about 30 per cent of the usable space on each page blank, space which could have been used to reduce the size of the book or, better, to include much more information. The price is sufficiently low for almost anyone needing this type of material." Phillip Rochlin

Library J 92:4398 D 1 '67 120w

°Reviewed by D. M. Glixon

Sat R 51:63 My 18 '68 70w

SCOVEL, MYRA. To lay a hearth. 148p il $4.50 Harper

917.3 U.S.—Social life and customs—Juvenile literature 68-17581

"How does it feel to come back to the United States after almost thirty years of living in an oriental culture? . . . Myra Scovel describes . . . how it felt for her and for her family." (Publisher's note)

SCOVEL, MYRA—Continued

"After many years as missionaries in China and India for the United Presbyterian Church, the Scovels had many new experiences, and adjustment to modern-day American civilization was not always as easy as one might think. The Scovels were soon busily involved in new jobs at the Interchurch Center in New York City, and there were also new grandchildren to visit and to love. The reader is easily carried along with the family, and occasionally treated to new or different insights into our American way of life as seen from other viewpoints." Nadine Purcell

Library J 93:1131 Mr 15 '68 110w

"Written in a bubbling, conversational flow, this is not a deep analysis of the American scene but a warm, personal, and often thoughtful record of one family's adjustment to change and its enjoyment of family life." Zena Sutherland

Sat R 51:37 S 21 '68 90w [YA]

SCULLARD, H. H. The Etruscan cities and Rome. 320p pl maps $8.50 Cornell univ. press 913.37 Etruscans 67-20031

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by I. S. Ryberg
Am Hist R 73:780 F '68 490w
Choice 5:392 My '68 140w

Reviewed by D. T. Bishop
Class World 61:206 Ja '68 340w

SCULLY, VINCENT J., jr. auth. The architectural heritage of Newport, Rhode Island, 1640-1915 [2d ed revl. See Downing, A. F.]

SEABROOK, ISAAC DUBOSE. Before and after; or, The relations of the races at the South; ed. with an introd. by John Hammond Moore. 157p $5.50 La. state univ. press
301.451 Negroes—Southern States. Negroes—Segregation 67-13893

"An aristocratic Charlestonian down on his luck wrote this essay . . . in 1895 while he was earning his living as a hotel clerk. Unpublished until this edition, . . . [his thoughts reflect] both the time and circumstance of their origins. . . . Seabrook, reacting against the [1895 segregationist Tillmanite] movement from the upperclass position of racial conservatism, opposed segregation on the ground that it would remove the Negro from the civilizing influence of the whites and maintained that the true policy was to elevate the blacks to the level of the whites gradually by education and economic opportunity." (Am Hist R) Index.

"While he rejects the doctrines of the extreme racists, Seabrook retains the nostalgic picture of race relations in the old regime and most of the corresponding stereotypes regarding 'the character of the African race.' Racial inferiorities are the root of all the trouble, and improvement is 'the work of a long period of time.' Seabrook dismisses the liberal program for racial justice put forward by George W. Cable as impractical. . . . [The] essay is ably edited by John Hammond Moore, who writes an informative introduction on the life of the author and the emergence of 'Jim Crowism' in South Carolina." C. V. Woodward
Am Hist R 73:1255 Ap '68 300w

"Of interest to students of race relations in the South. . . . The essay's significance lies especially in the period out of which it came, when laws to segregate and disfranchise the Negro were being formulated and enacted. Seabrook was a thoughtful and well read man, a close observer of the trends of his day in race relations, who was disturbed by the emerging Jim Crow legislation. His views on the role of education in the changing South are particularly noteworthy. . . . An excellent addition to similar materials found in C. Vann Woodward's Strange Career of Jim Crow [2d revised edition, BRD 1966]."

Choice 5:274 Ap '68 150w

SEABURY, PAUL. The rise and decline of the cold war; written under the auspices of the Center for int. affairs, Harvard university. 171p $4.95 Basic bks.

909.82 History, Modern—20th century. World politics—1945- 67-14283

The author asserts that "the Cold War started in 1946 or 1947 [and that] it was the containment policy of American realpolitik which brought the Cold War to the state in which all issues of the 'war' remain unresolved but the danger of an armed conflict between the two protagonists is practically nonexistent. . . . [The author further maintains that] today, in many conflicts, the two world powers lead parallel policies. The end of the classic Cold War in Europe does not mean peace, however, as the Vietnam conflict, which is the subject of the last chapter of the book, proves. Dr. Seabury is . . . Acting Dean of the Social Sciences at the University of California at Santa Cruz." (Library J) Index.

"A noteworthy study of the Cold War [which] will be of interest to political scientists, historians, and interested laymen. Recommended." Victor Novak

Library J 92:1941 My 15 '67 200w

"Seabury finds that in Europe Soviet control of East and Central Europe after the war tended to be regarded as a new barbarian invasion; in the United States as a Free World vs. totalitarian-slave confrontation and as a balance of power struggle. These three concepts are discussed in separate chapters. . . . In an excellent chapter on containment, Seabury finds the ledgers of containment hard to read. . . . He believes containment had 'demonstrable success. Yet questions remain. . . . In his last chapter on Vietnam Seabury accepts our official version that we are defending 'the commitment to support freedom,' 'against aggression,' and 'against the willful violence of an armed minority.' The real problem is China. . . . No evidence is cited of China's intention to overwhelm her small neighbors." D. F. Fleming

Nation 206:508 Ap 15 '68 900w

SEAGER, ALLAN. The glass house: the life of Theodore Roethke. 301p $7.95 McGraw B or 92 Roethke, Theodore 68-15741

This biography chronicles Roethke's life and work as poet and teacher from his "childhood in a small Michigan town to his . . . death in 1963." (Publisher's note) Index.

"[This biography] is like a long letter by a friend. . . . The friend's concern and occasional bewilderment about the subject are apparent. . . . But the main thrust of [Roethke's] life . . . is always clear. . . . [Seager] is wonderful on the genesis of the poetry, and his accounts of Roethke's greatest breakthrough, . . . his 'greenhouse line,' are moving indeed, and show in astonishing detail the extent to which Roethke lived his poems. . . . I doubt very much if Roethke will ever have another biography as good as this one. And yet something is wrong here, even so. One senses too much of an effort to mitigate certain traits of Roethke's. . . . [Mrs. Roethke] must be blamed for this. . . . [It] is a dreadful misplacement of loyalty, for Roethke deserves the monument that this book could have been." James Dickey
Atlantic 222:53 N '68 2850w

Reviewed by S. M. A. Weinig
Best Sell 28:417 Ja 1 '69 550w

"This book is a pathography, a study of the sufferings of a middle-class American poet. . . . Whether [it] contributes anything to our knowledge or appreciation of Roethke is doubtful. . . . It is the very grubbiness of the poet's career and the weaknesses of his personality which make us want to avert our eyes. The late Allan Seager . . . recreates Roethke as a kind of half-trained St. Bernard with a strong taste for boot polish. . . . Here, with almost Flemish detail, we are treated to the paltry minutiae of the poet Getting Ahead, the prideless transactions of the poet as ninny. Was this necessary? . . . The most remarkable passage . . . is the quotation of a letter by Robert Heilman, Roethke's chairman at the University of Washington. . . . Heilman's letter to the bureaucrats is a masterful defense of the artist on campus. . . . Seager's book, rich as it is in the details of the poet's life, presents a clouded portrait of the man himself." Karl Shapiro

Book World p7 O 13 '68 850w

"Seager is compassionate in his biography. . . . The full-bodied portrait of Roethke . . . includes the wide range of his attributes: from vital, idealistic, honest, warmhearted, incandescent, intuitive, tender, and penetrating, to arrogant . . . cynical one moment and embarrasingly self-loathing another, wheedlingly ambitious, over-apologetic, coarse, and 'frightened.' . . . Seager has included stenographic notes by students to illustrate Roethke's free-wheeling vitality in teaching; interviews further revealing the poet also spice the final pages. . . . [This] sturdily researched biography . . . will appeal to those who appreciate modern poetry and to scholars and specialists in the field. Larger libraries will find [it] essential." B. W. Fuson

Library J 93:3006 S 1 '68 150w

"I have been told that the biography was completed at the time of Mr. Seager's death, but it is more agreeable to think that such a competent writer had sketched in only the scenario of the life . . . [for Seager's book] gives only a small part of it. . . . Roethke's life seems thin not only because the resources of his background were thin—his cultural, social and political intelligence was underdeveloped—but because Seager does not give us the milieu that actually stimulated and nurtured him. Roethke's poetic career is not related to the movement of poetry and criticism through which it passed. . . . The critical reception of Roethke's books interests [Seager] more." Sherman Paul

Nation 208:27 Ja 6 '69 450w

Reviewed by M. L. Rosenthal
N Y Times Bk R p12 N 24 '68 900w

Reviewed by Louis Untermeyer
Sat R 51:36 N 9 '68 1350w

SEAMAN, GERALD R. History of Russian music; v 1, From its origins to Dargomyzhsky. 351p il $9 Praeger

781.7 Music, Russian—History and criticism
67-21754

"The author begins by outlining the development of Russian folk music. . . . Following sections deal with the music of Kiev, Novgorod, and Moscow, as each took its place as the center of cultural life in Russia. . . . [Dr. Seaman] goes on to explain the influences exerted upon eighteenth-century Russian music by Peter the Great and the czarinas Anna, Elizabeth, and Catherine the Great. . . . The last part of the book presents the historical and cultural background from which emerged Russian theatrical music . . . and musical criticism, and assesses the influence on Soviet music of two of its standing figures, Glinka and Dargomyzhsky." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"More readable than Bakst, emphasizing musical style more than [R. A.] Leonard [History of Russian Music, BRD 1957] this is the most satisfactory book on Russian music for the undergraduate; the second volume is badly needed. Musical titles are usually translated to benefit English speaking readers. Copious notes are collected at the end of the volume."

Choice 5:786 S '68 100w

"Although we certainly need a comprehensive history of music in Russia, the first volume of this work does not achieve everything its title implies, because it moves too rapidly to be very complete. To cover the history of all music in Russia up to 1869 in a total of 365 pages is inevitably to condense [basic topics] to encyclopedia-size articles. . . . While we are grateful to Gerald Seaman for his prodigious research, at the very least we expect full chapters on Fomin and Bortnyansky. . . . Recommended as a brief survey." Baird Hastings

Library J 93:2007 My 15 '68 140w

"Seaman rarely avoids the well-worn turn of phrase. . . . and neither the layout of the book as a whole nor what he says about the less familiar areas of Russian history inspires confidence in his powers of discernment. His style is distressingly reminiscent of the out-dated school textbook. . . . [Since] useful facts about Russian music [are] not otherwise readily available, his book fills a need."

TLS p816 Ag 1 '68 650w

SEARS, ROEBUCK AND COMPANY. 1897 Sears Roebuck catalogue; introd: S. J. Perelman [and] Richard Rovere; ed: Fred L. Israel. 786p il $14.75 Chelsea house pubs.

380.1 Mail-order business—Catalogs 68-9083
This volume contains a reprint of the 1897 Sears Roebuck Catalogue and two essays on its contents and background, Perelman's Brown's Delight and Rovere's A Mirrored Image. Index.

"An absolutely irresistible rummage in the national attic." Phoebe Adams Atlantic 222:134 S '68 20w

Book World p16 D 8 '68 20w

"Customers are used to Sears supplying anything from crystal chandeliers to hubless angle-groove V-pulleys. But this old catalogue is something new—a chunk of raw history. From this effective time-capsule researchers can trace designs, materials, costs. For the dabblers and browsers it is like poking around in the ruins of a modern Pompeii." Pamela Marsh
Christian Science Monitor p5 Ag 1 '68 550w

"This facsimile edition . . . will evoke nostalgia for many who thumb through its pages. However, it will serve some useful purposes because here . . . are thousands of artifacts that identified a civilization about to enter the 20th Century. The many illustrations give insight concerning the early development of many technical fields. Few sources could be found to better illustrate the early efforts at mass selling by an American business concern." W. S. Wallace

Library J 93:3119 S 15 '68 140w

New Yorker 44:108 D 21 '68 250w

SEBASTIAN, LEE. The South Pole; a book to begin on. unpr il $2.95; lib bdg $2.92 Holt

919.9 South Pole—Juvenile literature. Antarctic regions—Juvenile literature 68-11842

A "presentation of geographical and ecological facts and a . . . narrative of the various explorations of the Antarctic. . . . Grades one to three." (Library J)

"An excellent social studies primer. . . . Good photographs and maps enhance the attractive format, though lack of index and chapter divisions makes locating specific information difficult." Rose Hennings

Library J 93:3959 O 15 '68 50w

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p56 N 3 '68 50w

SEBRELL, WILLIAM H. Food and nutrition, by William H. Sebrell Jr., James J. Hagerty and the editors of Life. 200p il col il maps $3.95 Time; to libs & schools $4.95 Silver

641 Food. Nutrition 67-23026

In "eight chapters, each complemented by a picture essay, the book describes how man obtains the food he needs in each part of the globe, details the processes of nutrition by which the body breaks down food into essential nutrients, discusses the diseases caused by excesses or deficiencies of nutrients, examines the fancies, fads, and frauds that have influenced man's choice of foods over the centuries, and . . . analyzes the impact of the explosive growth in population on the state of the world's food supplies and potential resources. A world map indicating the origins of foodstuffs, [and] a table listing the nutrient composition of familiar foods . . . are appended." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"This excellent addition to the series is unique in its field and should appeal to a wide audience for it contains much of interest to the professional scientist, the student, and the layman alike. Sebrell is an internationally recognized expert in nutritional science and public health."

Choice 4:1278 Ja '68 140w

Library J 92:3215 S 15 '67 30w [YA]

SEFERIS, GEORGE. Collected poems, 1924-1955; tr. ed. and introduced by Edmund Keeley and Philip Sherrard. 490p $10 Princeton univ. press

889

65-17142

This collection of poetry by the winner of the Nobel Prize for Literature in 1963 has Greek and English on facing pages. Bibliography.

"Knowing how little of Shakespeare is left when all that will translate into another language is translated, I wonder what these lines would be in the original. But even as they stand in their modest, second-hand English dress, they have about them the unmistakable mark of great poetry. Here is a poet who has a sweep and a delicacy calling to mind Yeats and few other names of the century. The language barrier is still there, tantalizing; but second-hand Seferis is better than most first-hand verse on the library shelves." Chad Walsh

SEFERIS, GEORGE—Continued

Book World p5 Mr 3 '68 340w

"Sherrard and Keeley may be scolded for some translations, yet libraries valuing literature in translation will use their substantive, in some cases, creations. Serviceable introduction; good beginning bibliography. Recommended as the only decent English version of Seferis' major works."

Choice 4:1390 F '68 130w

"This is the first complete edition of [Mr. Seferis's] poems through 1955 to appear in English. . . . [The translations] succeed admirably in bringing over into English the peculiar qualities of the poet's language. Mr. Seferis is a master in creating striking imagery and metaphors which, though harking back to ancient times and personae, vividly underline deep meaning for the present. . . . Highly recommended for discriminating collections." F. D. Lazenby

Library J 93:87 Ja 1 '68 190w

Reviewed by John Arthos
Nation 207:248 S 16 '68 1600w

Reviewed by Victor Lange
New Repub 158:28 F 17 '68 1200w

Reviewed by W. S. Merwin
N Y Times Bk R p6 Mr 17 '68 400w
Va Q R 44:cv summer '68 110w

SEFTON, JAMES E. The United States army and reconstruction, 1865-1877. 284p il $3 La. state univ. press

973.8 Reconstruction. U.S.—History, Military 67-21377

A study of "the role of the United States Army as an occupation force. . . . [The author investigates] the problems the Army faced in the South, as a military institution enforcing civil policy. . . . [and in so doing re-appraises some of] the political, constitutional, and social aspects of Reconstruction." (Pref) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by David Donald
Am Hist R 73:1649 Je '68 400w

"An excellent account and analysis of the role of the U.S. Army in this period. Successfully, [the author] shows that John Hope Franklin's view, that the Army's influence was small, 'is untenable.' Students would find Sefton's treatment of Reconstruction somewhat refreshing inasmuch as he quietly challenges some of the more recent studies which are unfriendly to both Johnson and the South. Well indexed; footnotes in their proper place; two valuable appendices, one listing the structure of Army commands and the other providing the numbers and locations of the troops for the South during Reconstruction. Certainly one of the best of the many new books on the period, it belongs in college and graduate libraries."

Choice 5:552 Je '68 190w

"Had the author's purpose been limited to a scrutiny of the army's record 'as a military institution enforcing civil policy,' the challenge would have been formidable enough. In addition, however, an effort has been made to pass judgment upon a wide range of vexatious historical problems, some basic and others trivial. The pronouncements are a distraction that seldom carry the authority of intimate investigation or broad perspective, and the narrative form imposes an organization that obstructs analysis. . . . The author's investigation of army records, particularly those from the command posts in the South, has been both extensive and path-breaking. Footnote citations, together with the appendixes on army command and troop disposition, will provide welcome guidance for future researchers. The conclusions drawn from this body of work are limited, but significant." LaWanda Cox
J Am Hist 54:897 Mr '68 1000w

SEGEL, HAROLD B., ed. & tr. The literature of eighteenth-century Russia; an anthology of Russian literary materials of the age of classicism and the enlightenment; from the reign of Peter the Great (1689-1725) to the reign of Alexander I (1801-1825); ed. and tr. with an introd. and notes by Harold B. Segel. 2v 472:448p il ea $5.95; pa ea $2.95 Dutton

891.7 Russian literature—Collections. Russian literature—History and criticism 67-21985

This is a two-volume history and anthology which presents a "description and analysis of the growth and development of eighteenth-century Russian literature, [and] collects together for the first time in English many of the . . . significant works of this period. . . . [The selections include] fiction, non-fiction, poetry, and drama. [Works by] Prokopovich, Kantemir, Trediakovskii, Lomonosov, Sumarokov, Catherine II, Novikov, Fonvizin, Radishchev, Karamzin [are included in volume one. Among the authors included in volume two are] Emin, Chulkov, Kheraskov, Maikov, Bogdanovich, Khemnitser, Derzhavin, and Kniazhnin." (Publisher's note) Bibliography in volume two.

"A most welcome addition to the field of Slavic studies. . . . Segel's work fills a long existing gap. . . . The translations, newly done or reworked, are done carefully. Not all the selections will attract the general reader, but there is enough in the work to please everyone. Although somewhat marred by repetition, Segel's long introductory essay is intelligent and informative. Biographical sketches and explanatory notes. Should be most useful in college courses on the history of Russian literature."

Choice 5:62 Mr '68 210w

"This two-volume publication begins with a lengthy (ninety-two pages) general introduction, justified by the almost complete ignorance of the field even among those Western readers interested in Russian literature. . . . Segel stresses the immense task which the writers of the eighteenth century faced, nothing less than fashioning a new literary language. . . . With regard to literary movements we can see how the Ukrainian-influenced Baroque, prevalent during the reign of Peter the Great, yielded to the French-inspired Neo-Classicism of Elizabeth and Catherine the Great, moving towards Romanticism only in the 1790's. . . . Many genres are represented; there are some twenty-eight illustrations and a Selected Bibliography, providing both primary and secondary sources in Russian as well as works in English."

Va Q R 44:xxvii winter '68 240w

SEGER, GERHART H., jt. auth. Which way Germany? See Flannery, H. W.

SEI SHONAGON. The pillow book of Sei Shōnagon; tr. and ed. by Ivan Morris. 2v 268:326p il v 1 $9; v2 $12.50; set $20 Columbia univ. press

895.6

67-24962

A collection of random notes "written by a lady-in-waiting to a 10th-Century Japanese empress. . . . It includes detailed descriptions of court dress and court ceremonies, numerous poems, anecdotes, descriptions of nature, character sketches, and lists of the author's likes and dislikes. . . . The first volume includes the complete text and the second volume is made up of notes and commentary on the text . . . and several specialized appendixes." (Library J) Chronology. Genealogies. First lines of poems. Bibliography. Index-glossary

Reviewed by D. J. Enright
Encounter 30:74 My '68 550w

"[This] is one of the landmarks of Japanese literature. . . . It stands beside Lady Murasaki's Tale of Genji [BRD 1925] as a literary masterpiece and as a major source of information on Japanese court life during this period. . . . The book will appeal to general readers who enjoyed [I. Morris'] World of the Shining Prince [BRD 1964] and will also be indispensable to the specialist. . . . Highly recommended for all academic collections and for larger public libraries." C. W. Stucki

Library J 93:81 Ja 1 '68 220w

"The term 'pillow book' is usually interpreted to mean that [the author] kept the sheets of these jottings in the hollow of the wooden pillow still used by many Japanese women. . . . She was a very waspish lady. . . . Her personality has become an archetype for the Japanese, as standardized as a No mask. . . . [Morris] has become with this work one of the historic orientalist. The second volume of exhaustively explanatory notes is as endlessly fascinating as the text itself, which in fact it greatly resembles. Every reference is traced, every pun is explained, every quotation or echo is translated and all the Japanese and Chinese poems are transliterated into Romaji—the Western alphabet—and the translations are uniformly excellent. . . . [Morris'] scholarship is a living thing and he shares with Sei Shonagon the virtue of not being a square. . . . he sees through all the painted paper screens." Kenneth Rexroth
N Y Times Bk R p10 Mr '68 1150w

"Dr. Morris's translation inevitably invites comparison with the partial version published by Dr. Waley in 1928. Waley approached Japanese after long study of Chinese literature. . . . The sections which he chose to translate from the Pillow Book constitute a Tang, not a Japanese, view of Kyoto. . . . Dr. Morris is one of those postwar scholars whose approach to Japanese literature was direct. . . . [This complete translation] will stand for centuries: for it is Sei Shōnagon in English, and there can be no higher praise. The companion volume is matchingly outstanding: scholarly, full of sound judgments, skillfully assembled. It combines the depths of a good encyclopedia with such glittering irrelevancies as make delightful Brewer's Dictionary of Phrase and Fable: it will thus be as necessary on university shelves as welcome on the bedside-tables of the lively minded. . . . [However] it would help the non-specialist if the genealogical tables included life-dates and if both readings of personal names were somewhere given."

TLS p919 Ag 29 '68 1450w

"Translation manages successfully to convey, among other things, some sense of the almost breathless character of many of Lady Sei Shōnagon's entries in her journal. The principal drawback (if one can call it that) lies in the quality of the illustrations; though well chosen from the 'Pillow Book Scroll' in the Tōkyō National Museum, these are very imperfectly presented."

Va Q R 44:cix summer '68 140w

SEIBEL, CLIFFORD W. Helium; child of the sun. 138p pl $4.95 Univ. press of Kan.

665 Helium 68-17115

The history of the discovery of an element and "its development from a chemical curiosity in a University of Kansas laboratory into a significant feature of current technology and space exploration. . . . The story begins in 1868 with the detection of helium on the surface of the sun and Sir William Ramsay's subsequent discovery of its presence on earth. The first indication of an accessible source of helium in the United States appeared in 1907, when Kansas University Professor H. P. Cady isolated the inert gas from a sample of natural gas. . . . [The author gives an account of the problems of production] in World War I and [its] military role in World War II. . . . [This account] was prepared under the auspices of the U.S. Bureau of Mines to mark the centennial of helium's discovery." (Publisher's note) Index.

Recommended for all but the very smallest libraries." Phillip Rochlin

Library J 93:2674 J1 '68 160w

"The book is a good narrative account of the development of the production of helium by the Bureau of Mines, although it is disappointing in certain respects. The scientist or historian of science will find no account of the research responsible for the progressive understanding of helium's unusual properties. . . . The historian of technology must be content with a one-paragraph description of the helium-extraction process without learning the details of its evolution. The economic historian will search in vain for any cost analysis of helium production, and no inkling is given as to the economic efficiency of the government-owned plants. Finally, there is no bibliography. . . . Nevertheless, this book should serve to focus public attention on the important work of the Bureau of Mines." J. G. Burke

Science 162:886 N 22 '68 550w

"The story of helium becomes an American story, a story of pragmatism and prairie, of Congress and corporation. The sophisticated metropolitan science of Europe fades into the distance, and we are in a rawer land. The intimate little book reviewed here celebrates this frontier tale. The author . . . lived through it himself, beginning his work with helium in the days of Theodore Roosevelt and continuing it up to the present, years after his retirement as chief of the helium branch of the U.S. Department of the Interior." Philip Morrison

Sci Am 219:249 S '68 2000w

SEIDEN, MORTON IRVING. The paradox of hate; a study in ritual murder. 258p il $6 Yoseloff

301.451 Jewish question 67-10919

The author offers "a psychological explanation of anti-Semitism. 'The Jew,' he explains,

'is the primordial father,' and 'more often symbolizes the guilt—the Original Sin—which the Christian believes himself to have inherited from Adam, the progenitor of mankind.' As a result, 'the Jew is . . . held accountable for every misfortune . . . for which the Christian simultaneously holds only himself responsible.' For Mr. Seiden, therefore, anti-Semitism becomes the repetition of a ritual drama, the actuation of a strange blend of psychology and Christian theology." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"The heart of Seiden's book is an ingenious essay. . . . His thesis will probably convince few students of anti-Semitism, particularly Jewish historians. They would be correct in pointing out that anti-Semitism, while unquestionably rooted in the human psyche, must also be defined in terms of social, political, economic, and broader ideological coordinates. The title of this book is somewhat misleading: in the history of Jewish-Catholic relations, the term ritual murder refers to the alleged murder of Christians by Jews for ritual purposes, not, as Mr. Seiden uses the term, to refer to the actual murder of Jews by Christians." M. A. Cohen

Library J 93:2250 Je 1 '68 150w

TLS p891 Ag 22 '68 1750w

SELBY, JOHN. Stonewall Jackson as military commander. 251p pl maps $8.95 Van Nostrand

973.7 Jackson, Thomas Jonathan. U.S.—History—Civil War—Campaigns and battles. U.S.—History—Civil War—Biography

68-92890

A study of the Confederate general by an English author. The book begins at First Bull Run. "Back-tracking, Mr. Selby describes the upbringing, the education at West Point and the first experience of fighting, in Mexico, which formed Stonewall Jackson's personal character and his qualities as a commander. Coming to the Civil War, Mr Selby analyses . . . the Valley Campaign, . . . the Peninsula operation, Second Bull Run (Manassas), Sharpsburg and Fredericksburg . . . [and concludes with a] consideration of the climactic action at Chancellorsville." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

Economist 227:xix Ap 27 '68 250w

"A penetrating and objective analysis of the personality and leadership of one of the Civil War's great figures. [Selby] discusses Jackson's tactical movements with professional detail, and provides a series of excellent command charts and maps to illustrate his text. His treatment of Jackson's personal attributes is also comprehensive and enlightening. Civil War buffs and military historians will find the appendixes on Jackson's artillery and cavalry particularly interesting. In all, this book is an excellent addition to the extensive material on the Civil War by a professional military historian who analyzes a complex personality as well as he does a battle." R. M. Kennedy

Library J 93:3128 S 15 '68 110w

"The writer of a book on Jackson is competing in a formidable field. This book is lavishly produced, and contains much useful material. The illustrations are fine, though the maps, more important, are of varying quality. And the text tends to a certain imprecision and insipidity most unsuited to the subject. In particular, the battle pieces, with the exception of Cedar Run, lack detail and clarity; I do not think anyone who had read only the account given here of the operations of 3 and 4 May 1863 at Chancellorsville would grasp the sequence of events with any accuracy. In fact this is hardly the book we are waiting for." Robert Conquest

New Statesman 75:616 My 10 '68 850w

TLS p758 J1 18 '68 460w

SELDEN, GEORGE. The dunkard; pictures by Peter Lippman. 47p $2.95; to libs & schools $2.92 Harper

67-14070

"George—the hero—makes a determined search for someone engaged in a very unusual occupation to present on his school's Grown-Up Day. Snubbing firemen and housewives who are all too ready to be exhibit A, George discovers a man who has given up the work-a-day world for his avocation—dunking." (Christian Science Monitor) "Grades two to three." (Library J)

Book World p12 Ag 11 '68 70w

SELDEN, GEORGE—Continued

Reviewed by C. F. Ruffin
Christian Science Monitor pB5 My 1
'68 130w

"Dunking is one of those small private pleasures almost anyone can enjoy. So is this pleasantly silly book, which promotes the practice of dunking to a fine art. . . . This story, which nicely typifies Important School Days, will appeal to the obsession children have with peculiar eating habits in a way that adults won't find in the least offensive. The pen-and-ink drawings with red drips show attractively squat sloppy characters." E. S. Cullen
Library J 93:2731 J1 '68 140w

"Selden's story starts off from an ordinary notion and leads into hilarious offbeat territory. . . . This book may require librarians to demonstrate with crullers and coffee. It will certainly set anyone to laughing who reads it. And it has the endorsement of the chairman of the board of Dunkin' Doughnuts." J. B.
N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p46 My 5 '68
110w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland
Sat R 51:30 J1 20 '68 90w

SELIGMAN, BEN B. Permanent poverty: an American syndrome. 238p $6.50 Quadrangle bks.

339.4 Poverty. U.S.—Economic conditions. U.S.—Social conditions. Economic assistance, Domestic 68-10835

The author, a "former union research director, now labor economist at the University of Massachusetts, has written a . . . synthesis of available materials on the nature and future of poverty in the United States. . . . [There is] an initial chapter examining the causes of poverty; a second on its magnitude; and six on the Negro, the aged, the young, the rural minorities, the unemployed, and the position of the poor before the law. . . . [The last three chapters cover] poverty and national power; poverty and local power; and the demise of the war on poverty." (Library J) Index.

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams
Atlantic 222:106 J1 '68 60w

Reviewed by Michael Harrington
Book World p19 O 16 '68 550w

Christian Century 85:789 Je 12 '68 70w

Reviewed by H. H. Durning
Christian Science Monitor p9 J1 1 '68
550w

Reviewed by Christopher Norwood
Commonweal 89:257 N 15 '68 500w

"Although much has already been written, the significance of poverty, our most important domestic social problem, deserves still another overview, especially when presented with Mr. Seligman's skill and fervor. . . . [The] three final chapters are new and valuable contributions. . . . This book, an encouraging yet realistic view of contemporary poverty, is recommended if demand warrants." R. E. Will
Library J 93:2253 Je 1 '68 160w

"Curiously, Ben Seligman, so full of compassion that he is often annoyingly sentimental, seems ready to give up the fight. . . . By the time he finishes surveying the various categories of the poor he has led the reader to believe that their plight is indeed permanent, that very little can or will be done. Or does he mean that little will be done if we continue to rely on the private-enterprise system and the traditional kinds of modifications? Seligman's book is . . . a good example of how a writer can obscure his own point of view in trying to be comprehensive." Paul Marx
New Repub 159:33 J1 6 '68 380w

"[This book] shows how little we really know about either the rich or the poor. . . . It is not surprising that [this study] depending as [it does] on the present state of scholarship, should seem, in [its] actual proposals for social policy, somewhat diffuse and unsatisfactory. . . . [However, if by its] exposure of the very deficiencies of the present state of our knowledge, [it] can help toward setting up a genuine research program to improve it, [it] will not have been written in vain." K. E. Boulding
N Y Rev of Books 11:40 S 12 '68 1500w

"I would agree with the dismal conclusion of the author . . . if I agreed with his main thesis (stated with some relatively muted caveats): that much if not a preponderance of the analysis and efforts in the War on Poverty has been basically correct but has run into a stone wall nonetheless. But I reject almost the entirety of this thesis and insist that, with a fundamentally different approach, we can virtually liquidate poverty within a generation. . . . What this author chooses to do is done so well that I commend the book to all. But I am deeply concerned that so much of the discussion about poverty is restating what has by now become familiar instead of probing more deeply into what needs to be done and can be done." L. H. Keyserling

N Y Times Bk R p3 Ag 18 '68 800w

Reviewed by C. A. Hogan
Sat R 51:23 J1 20 '68 170w

SELIGSOHN, I. J. Your career in computer programming. 222p pl $3.95; lib bdg $3.64 Messner

621.3819. Programming (Electronic computers). Vocational guidance 67-3551

The author, public relations chairman for the American Federation of Information Processing Societies, "discusses the type of young person best suited to be a computer programmer, the nature of the work, the actual workings of the machines themselves, showing how a machine makes 'decisions,' the 'language' of computers, their history and the tremendous and increasing uses to which they can be put." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Seligsohn cites names and addresses for 53 other sources of information. . . . This stimulating, well written book should be in the career collection of all public, school, and college libraries."

Choice 4:1262 Ja '68 80w

"This excellent book covers an extremely difficult and everchanging area of employment. Giving a history of the computer revolution, a detailed explanation of programming methods, and a general view of opportunities in the field, the author has blended success stories with facts to make an otherwise difficult subject readable and entertaining. . . . This book can also be an intriguing introduction to computer programming for adults." Paul Sarnoff
Library J 92:2464 Je 15 '67 60w [YA]

SELSAM, MILLICENT E. Maple tree; phot. by Jerome Wexler. 46p $3.95; lib bdg $3.73 Morrow

582 Maple—Juvenile literature 68-25933

An "account of the development of a Norway maple, from rooting to maturity. . . . Grades two to four." (Library J)

"Full of the poetry of natural science is Selsam's [book]. . . . Both the urban and the country child will be able to relate the beautifully told life story of this tree to their experience." Julian May Book World p34 (children's issue) N 3
'68 50w

"Clear, simple text and skillful photography combine in an accurate commentary, although the statement that all maples 'grow in the same way' might be considered an oversimplification, in view of seasonal variations among the varieties of maple." Della Thomas
Library J 93:4398 N 15 '68 160w

"The combination of big, clear photographs and a text of admirable simplicity produces for beginning botanists a book that is as visually attractive as it is informative. . . . In describing the life cycle of the maple, the author is not rhapsodic about the beauty of the flower or the wonder of reproduction, but lets the reader see for himself the perennial miracle of seed and bud." Zena Sutherland
Sat R 51:64 N 9 '68 70w

SELSAM, MILLICENT E. Questions and answers about ants; pictures by Arabelle Wheatley. 75p lib bdg $3.38 Four winds

595.7 Ants—Juvenile literature 67-25033

Answers are given here to such questions as: how do ants sleep? how do they wake up? and how do they find their way? "Grades two to five." (Library J)

"[The format] can easily be used by a child and will be equally useful to the adult who must answer, simply, the questions asked by those too young to read. An attractive uncluttered format, with brown print and pen-and-ink drawings which are well executed and eminently suited to the text." A. D. Schweibish
Library J 93:295 Ja 15 '68 100w

"[The author] blends a lucid, easy-going text, written without clichés or condescension, and precise, beautiful drawings. The question-answer format covers concisely many points about ant anatomy and ant behavior, yet never bogs down in dry details. The questions are calculated to arouse a child's interest . . . and the answers are enlivened by the author's personal experiences and reports of some unusual laboratory experiments." Paul Walker
N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p56 N 5 '67 110w

SELVIN, DAVID F. Champions of labor. 256p il $4.50 Abelard-Schuman 920 Labor unions—Juvenile literature 67-16836

This volume contains thirteen sketches "of those who played significant roles in the development of the American trade-union movement . . . from William H. Sylvis (1828-1869) up to A. Philip Randolph, civil rights advocate and head of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters." (N Y Times Bk R) Glossary. Biographical data. Annotated bibliography. Index. "Grades seven to ten." (Library J)

"Selvin, a publicist for unions . . . walks delicately among combatants in today's labor movement. Nor does his prose always convey the excitement and idealism of being a union organizer, as in the bad old days when the AFL-CIO was not a respectable part of 'the establishment' and young rebels thrilled to the cry of exploited toilers." Bernard Weisberger
Book World p16 Ag 25 '68 330w

"[This discussion of] labor leaders is merely the focal device here for a history of the American labor movement. Few personal facts of their lives are reported . . . [and] family life which had little effect on their work is barely mentioned. However, in most cases the movement and the man were so tied together that their stories are one; where this was not the case, the union is dominant and the man is discussed only in relation to the union. . . . This is a good, competent report, though it lacks the immediacy of Milton Meltzer's Bread—and Roses [BRD 1968]. . . . Worth special note is Selvin's chapter on A. Philip Randolph . . . coverage which is missing from several other labor histories." J. G. Russell
Library J 93:1330 Mr 15 '68 200w [YA]

Reviewed by A. H. Raskin
N Y Times Bk R p26 Ja 28 '68 80w [YA]

SELVIN, HANAN C., Jr. auth. Delinquency research. See Hirschi, T.

SELZER, MICHAEL. The Aryanization of the Jewish state. 126p $5 Black star pub. co.
915.94 National characteristics, Israeli, Jews in Israel 67-25792

"During his student days Selzer was president of the Zionist Society at Oxford University; now he works for the . . . anti-Zionist American Council for Judaism. . . . The substance of the book can be . . . summarized under three headings; that . . . Zionism should not be considered the apotheosis of Jewish history, but is rather an aberration in terms of the Jewish heritage; that a Western culture is being forcefully imposed upon Israel's Oriental immigrants; and that Israel will not be able to achieve peace with its Arab neighbors unless it 'orientalizes' its culture." (Commentary) Bibliography.

"The issues are important and need airing but Selzer, formerly a liaison officer with the Jerusalem Sephardi community, who frankly subtitles his work 'a polemic,' presents a paucity of scholarly documentation. A provocative book to add to a collection of materials on the Middle East and Israel."
Choice 5:1369 D '68 140w

"[Selzer has] chosen to sensationalize [his arguments] to such a degree that [his book] loses any kernel of analytical validity it might have possessed. . . . [His] inability to confront sociological factors, his naive insistence that an ideology ('Zionism') is at the root of all that went wrong, and that, furthermore, ideology can be discussed outside the context of social relations, all compound his incapacity to render any significant historical explanation of the phenomena he is trying to discuss. . . . The picture [of the Oriental newcomers to Israel] painted by Selzer . . . has very little to do either with the present reality of the situation or with the policies now being adopted in Israel to handle it. . . . [His] discussion of the integration and participation of Oriental immigrants in Israeli politics is [uninformed]. . . . [Moreover,] he fails to mention . . . the gradual penetration and capture of local party machines by an ethnic, Oriental bloc." Shlomo Avineri

Commentary 44:92 D '67 4250w

Reviewed by Raphael Rothstein
Nation 206:771 Je 10 '68 390w

"[Despite false formulations] some accurate observations [are presented in this book]. Immigrants from North Africa and western Asia, the so-called Oriental Jews of Israel, comprise more than half the nation but are its most politically, culturally and economically deprived. The Government, committed to the goals of a modern technological society, must either westernize the Orientals or risk losing the European-Zionist influence. . . . The problem is real, but some of rhetoric in this self-styled polemic is out of this world."
N Y Times Bk R p44 O 8 '67 210w

SEMINAR ON THE ORGANIZATION AND HANDLING OF BIBLIOGRAPHIC RECORDS BY COMPUTER. Organization and handling of bibliographic records. See Cox N. S. M.

SEMINAR ON THE THEORY OF ECONOMIC CHANGE, UNIVERSITY OF EDINBURGH, 1965. Social theory and economic change; contributions to the Seminar on the Theory of Economic Change held at the Univ. of Edinburgh in Mar. 1965 [by] Michael Argyle [and others] ed. by Tom Burns and S. B. Saul. (Edinburgh. Univ. Faculty of social sciences. Staff seminars. no 1) 104p $4.50 Barnes & Noble

301.24 Great Britain—History—19th century. Industry—History. Social change [67-83241]

"This book consists of four papers, plus an introduction by the editors. [Contents:] 'Social Theory and the Industrial Revolution' by M. W. Flinn of Edinburgh University; 'British Personality and the Industrial Revolution: The Historical Evidence' by E. E. Hagen of MIT; 'The Comparative Analysis of Historical Change' by R. Bendix of the University of California at Berkeley; and 'The Social Psychology of Social Change' by M. Argyle of Wolfson College, Oxford. The general topic is the causal origins of the industrial revolution—more particularly, the non-economic factors responsible for industrial development [and] concomitant questions such as the correlation between individualistic religions and the achievement motif." (Social Studies)

"A very fine volume. . . . Anyone interested in social change will find this book invaluable."

Choice 5:1004 O '68 50w

"Emphasis is placed on personality change, and the social processes responsible therefor, as a significant causal element in historical explanation. . . . [E. E.] Hagen's paper is a further elaboration of his 'status-withdrawal' hypothesis (developed originally in his On the Theory of Social Change [BRD. 1963, 1964]). He maintains that when a social group has declined in status, sons of a later generation, spurred on by their mothers, become technological innovators. . . . As Argyle notes, 'if historians could manage to collect the necessary kinds of data—about child-rearing, national character, and the personalities of innovators—they would be able to add considerably to the understanding of historical processes.' No doubt social psychological studies in the historical dimension can contribute significant elements in conceptualizations of the process of social change." T. W. Rogers
Social Studies 59:230 O '68 390w

SEPHERIADES, GEÖRGIOS. See Seferis, G.

SERANNE, ANN, ed. America cooks; the General federation of women's clubs cookbook. 796p il $6.95 Putnam
641.5 Cookery 67-26317

This is a collection of thirty-five hundred signed recipes taken from the files of the Federation of American Clubwomen and arranged in twenty-six categories. Glossary. Index.

"Crammed full of local favorites and regional specialties [this] should satisfy even the dourest

SERANNE, ANN—Continued

and most exacting New Englander. An occasional unelicitous selection—potatoes stuffed with shrimp comes to mind—has gotten past Miss Seranne's wary and knowledgeable eyes. . . . America Cooks seems a logical sequel to the classic Joy of Cooking [by Irma S. Rombauer, BRD 1963]—a book which it resembles in both appearance and spirit: it is expansive, eclectic, enthusiastic and thoroughly American." Gloria Levitas

Book World p6 D 17 '67 110w

"Here at last is a complete, well-arranged cookbook for a modest price. There are no illustrations, but Ann Seranne has given the reader much information. . . . A young cook may find this book difficult—or overwhelming—after the many easy-to-cook books that have flooded the market, but her perseverance will be rewarded. The dedicated cook will use it with ease, for, in spite of its length and weight, it opens easily and stays open. An index of the names of contributors seems to be the only omission! Reference and general libraries should purchase this different regional cookbook." K. T. Willis

Library J 92:4503 D 15 '67 150w

SERGE, VICTOR. Birth of our power (Nais-sance de notre force) tr. by Richard Greeman; introd. by Harvey Swados, 288p $5.95 Doubleday

Serge, Victor originally Victor Lvovich Kibalchick—Fiction 66-20960

A political novel by the author of Memoirs of a Revolutionary (BRD 1963). It "opens in Barcelona in 1917 on the eve of a massive workers' uprising. . . . But the insurrection is aborted and the revolutionaries—including the narrator who is, like Serge, an international agitator—are compelled to flee. They flee toward another revolution, toward the true revolution in Russia. Stopped in France, they are forced to spend a harrowing interval in a concentration camp, but finally reach Red Petrograd, the city which is both their goal and the deathbed of their hopes." (Publisher's note) Bibliography of works by Victor Serge available in English.

"[This] is a political novel which reflects the personal life of the author himself. Serge was a product of revolution, exile, poverty, and eventually prison for the views which he upheld. . . . In 1917, he witnessed the unsuccessful workers' revolution [in Spain] against a conservative government which had been inspired by the February Revolution in far away Russia. His description of Barcelona itself and the daily life of the workers is indeed a work of an artist. . . . Serge's experience and trials as a revolutionary and exile are revealed in every page. . . . Due to the fact that he wrote the novel while he was on Stalin's blacklist for criticizing the dictator's policies, he did not have the time to perfect his style. In 1936, Serge was expelled from Russia, and first went to Paris and eventually to Mexico where he died." B. D. Williams

Best Sell 27:101 Je 1 '67 370w

"As an anarchist, a frequent political prisoner, and a fighter for social justice [the author] agitated for democratic revolution throughout Europe. . . . This proletarian novel, first published in France in 1931, is understandably autobiographical. . . . In the tense, episodic style that characterizes his works, Serge portrays with sympathy and insight the underground world of anarchism-syndicalism in Europe at the time of World War I. His writings, like his life, are a testimony to the genuine concern for suffering humanity that underlies such movements. Recommended." Arthur Curley

Library J 92:1646 Ap 15 '67 170w

"The early revolutionaries [the author] describes in this autobiographical novel are, with rare exceptions, men and women for whom the idea of 'the people taking power' has a brilliantly simple meaning. . . . They think about the beauty and richness and energy of the city they hide in, and mean to seize it. . . . Again and again, the words 'to take the city,' 'at last in the world we have taken cities' (at the news of the October Revolution), recur. . . . [This is] one of the most moving accounts of revolutionary experience ever written. Serge, . . . after a lifetime of rebellion against powers socialist and capitalist, was indeed a natural writer. . . . But the opening section [of this novel], the Barcelona year, is the least satisfying." Neal Ascherson

N Y Rev of Books 9:29 N 9 '67 600w

"For several decades, Western sensibilities have had no room for the emotions of unfettered rebellion expressed in this novel. . . . Now, in the hour of Guevara, Dutschke, Black Power and the NLF, its values—those of a footloose, unestablished, self-trained intelligentsia feeling its way towards the leadership of social upheaval—chime in with the headlines. Nothing in it has dated. . . . It is less an autobiography than a sustained, incandescent lyric (half-pantheist, half-surrealist) of rebellion and battle. . . . The main task for the translator . . . is the rendering of the fluid, pungent, often synaesthetic imagery which sets the scene and points the relationships; this Richard Greeman has carried off superbly."

TLS p512 My 16 '68 230w

SERLING, ROBERT J. The president's plane is missing, 297p $4.95 Doubleday

67-15368

"Jeremy Haines, President of the United States, leaves Washington, D.C., by jet for Palm Springs and a much-needed rest. His plane crashes in a desolate section of Arizona, and, when rescue parties reach the site, they find that all aboard are dead, but the President's body is missing." (Library J)

"Serling has written in a documentary style, giving his book a startling air of reality. Besides the mystery and the suspense, readers are sure to enjoy the Washington background with its intimate glimpses of newspaper offices, cabinet meetings, and social gatherings at the White House. Recommended to libraries who need good fiction that will not offend any group of readers." O. A. Hagen

Library J 92:3447 O 1 '67 140w

Reviewed by Marian Trahan
Library J 92:4637 D 15 '67 80w [YA]

"[In this novel the Vice President has] a long-awaited opportunity to assert his identity by starting World War III. Will the Vice President get his chance? Will the President return? And who actually was on Air Force One, anyhow? To winkle out the answers to these questions you will have to endure prose as heavy as the weather encountered by the luckless aircraft." Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p83 N 19 '67 90w

"[This book] draws morals about the sanity and balance needed to exercise power both by and around the president and in the adjacent world of communications. . . . [It] is likely to be of only small interest to English readers. The naivety and sentimentality is extreme. Buchanesque, Kiplingesque at least."

TLS p760 Jl 18 '68 110w

SEROFF, VICTOR. Sergei Prokofiev: a Soviet tragedy; the case of Sergei Prokofiev, his life & work, his critics, and his executioners. 339p pl $7.95 Funk

B or 92 Prokofieff, Serge 67-29535

The subtitle of this biography of the late Russian composer indicates its intention. The author "devotes more than half his book to the last seventeen years of Prokofiev's life—the years after his final return to Russia and of his ordeal at the hands of the Soviet cultural dictatorship." (Sat R) Chronology. Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by Herbert Kupferberg
Atlantic 222:144 O '68 1450w

Reviewed by Richard Freedman
Book World p3 Jl 7 '68 600w

"This biography provides a thorough introduction to the man and his times. There are places where careful editing might have clarified points. Mr. Seroff discusses the narrowly pro-Soviet interpretations of Nestyev calmly and carefully; and he tries to establish the facts on Mrs. Prokofiev and her devotion to Sergei Prokofiev through many tribulations which plagued the composer once he returned to the Soviet Union. The author investigates the forced separation of the Prokofievs, and he offers a plausible explanation. Although this is the best book available on Prokofiev, it does not qualify as definitive biography." Baird Hastings

Library J 93:3564 O 1 '68 130w

"Being a careful scholar, Mr. Seroff indulges in conjecture only when forced to do so by lack of evidence, but at such times his conjectures are well considered and appear to be sound. . . . While he does not attempt to dramatize his material (his style is more journalistic than literary), his careful account of what happened to Prokofiev in his homeland from his voluntary return in 1936 until his death in 1953 is both convincing and affecting. . . . Mr. Seroff gives us insights into Prokofiev's methods of composing, but he does not attempt to evaluate the individual works or relate them to the composer's development. . . . Much of the information in this biography is based upon personal contact with Prokofiev and many of the people with whom he was associated. More importantly perhaps, [Seroff] has made a contribution to social history in showing us exactly how (and to some extent why) freedom of expression was denied to all practitioners of the arts in Stalinist Russia." Victor Chapin

Sat R 51:30 J1 6 '68 650w

SERRAILLIER, IAN. Chaucer and his world. 45p il $4.50 Walck, H.Z.

821 Chaucer, Geoffrey—Contemporary England—Juvenile literature. Civilization, Medieval—Juvenile literature 68-11231

This book "examines the career of the author of the 'Canterbury Tales' against a background of daily life in London and rural England at a time when the whole structure of medieval society was beginning to stretch at the seams." (Christian Science Monitor) "Grades nine to twelve." (Library J)

"Students beginning to read Chaucer will find the 14th century puzzling country. This orderly account of it will be reassuring both to them and their teachers. The book can be read in a class hour or so, and is illustrated by 70 photographs of places and objects, all from Chaucer's own time. . . . Serraillier has chosen material unusual and attractive. . . . The book will help students to visualize the poems more vividly and to set them within a world over which six centuries have passed." E. B. H.

Book World p12 (children's issue) My 5 '68 170w

Christian Science Monitor pB9 My 2 '68 90w

Horn Bk 44:441 Ag '68 110w

"Topics covered include living conditions, trade, government, and warfare. References to Chaucer's characters and several quotes are used. Some 70 photographs and reproductions of his era's art, architecture, implements, etc. are included; unfortunately, there are none of the cathedral and the city so closely linked with the Canterbury Tales. Brief, superficial, and without headings or structured divisions, this book is an adequate browsing introduction to such excellent works as M. Chute's Geoffrey Chaucer of England [BRD 1946] or D. Taylor's Chaucer's England [BRD 1961]." R. M. Hilton

Library J 93:889 F 15 '68 110w

Reviewed by C. H. Simonds

Nat R 20:1281 D 17 '68 50w

TLS p1159 N 30 '67 90w

SERRAILLIER, IAN. Robin in the greenwood; ballads of Robin Hood; il. by Victor G. Ambrus. 75p $4 Walck, H.Z.

398.2 Robin Hood—Juvenile literature 68-17105

"Beginning with the story of Robin's birth, Serraillier has retold the adventures of the legendary outlaw hero and the band of merry men who roamed the forest of Sherwood. His source is the medieval ballads which first chronicled Robin Hood's exploits." (Publisher's note) "Grade five and up." (Library J)

"In making his version Mr. Serraillier has relied heavily upon that marvelous source book of ballad literature, the Child collection. . . . Insofar as the twelve ballads which [he] has chosen are separate episodes, it may be argued that the book does not really hang together as a story; but this is a price which any adapter of the ballads must pay. Much more to the point is the unity of feeling which the author has attempted to give them by sifting them through his own sensibility. . . . On the other hand, some of the ruggedness of the old ballad rhythms has been smoothed out with a consequent loss of the feeling that someone is speaking. . . . The question remains as to how far children will find [this version enjoyable]. . . . If they have thought about Robin Hood in literary terms at all, it is surely as the hero of stories, not songs. . . . Perhaps the chief reason for welcoming Mr. Serraillier's book [is] that it offers a signpost to . . . the riches of our ballad literature." B. W. Alderson

Horn Bk 44:281 Je '68 2400w

"Boldly illustrated in black and white and color, the book is tempting bait for readers presently lukewarm toward poetry." M. L. Gardin

Library J 93:2735 J1 '68 60w

Reviewed by A. B. Myers

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p44 N 3 '68 110w

"[This] version of some Robin Hood ballads could only have been made by someone who loves the whole body of early ballad, carol and lay and knows it intimately. . . . Mr. Serraillier has very skilfully succeeded in preserving colour, rhythm and phrase while presenting a more immediately comprehensible language. One notices the occasional rearrangement of stanzas into a more logical order, the small omissions, the translation of a medieval phrase into a striking equivalent. . . . It is both possible and enjoyable to read these tales aloud: the reader will love the rhythm and the listener find the story holds him. . . . There are magnificent drawings, some in colour."

TLS p1139 N 30 '67 400w

SERVADIO, GAIA. Melinda; tr. by L. K. Conrad. 375p $6.95 Farrar, Straus

68-14913

"The main character in this [first] novel of the modern world of the very rich is Melinda, the beautiful daughter of an Eastern European publisher now settled in England. . . . Melinda [has] seven marriages, six divorces, and countless affairs and sexual escapades, some of them incestuous. She becomes a member of Parliament, dabbles in espionage, masterminds with the help of the prime minister, a great train robbery, and commits seven murders for various reasons." (Library J)

Reviewed by F. M. Rotondaro

Best Sell 28:103 Je 1 '68 330w

"In spite of all the action, the tale becomes monotonous. The repetition is tiresome. The style of writing is choppy and erratic. The main character is superficially portrayed and the other characters are mere caricatures or names that never become real. Servadio's satire is labored and overdone. This book is not necessary for library purchase." S. L. Hopkinson

Library J 93:1920 My 1 '68 190w

"[Servadio attempts] an escape from the narrow egocentricity of the autobiographical novel into the dangerous freedom of fantasy with a highly original 'Pop novel' whose eponymous heroine, Melinda, is a vast blow-up of a type common enough in the paper worlds of comic strip and pornography but, alas, never encountered in the scrumptious flesh. . . . The translation by L. K. Conrad . . . does not read like a translation at all and I know of no higher praise than that: the prose which records Melinda's weird progress is energetic without showing strain and it echoes such oddly assorted voices as Firbank, Waugh, de Sade and, perhaps most insistently, Joseph Heller, who wrote Catch 22 [BRD 1962]. I was never quite sure where Gaia Servadio was taking me but I certainly enjoyed the ride. And the rides." Vernon Scannell

New Statesman 75:808 Je 14 '68 300w

Reviewed by Jack Richardson

N Y Rev of Books 11:13 Ag 1 '68 430w

Reviewed by Marian Engel

N Y Times Bk R p36 Je 9 '68 600w

New Yorker 44:173 My 18 '68 120w

Time 91:87 Je 21 '68 220w

TLS p613 Je 13 '68 270w

SERVAN-SCHREIBER, J. J. The American challenge; with a foreword by Arthur Schlesinger, Jr.; tr. from the French by Ronald Steel. 291p $6.95 Atheneum pubs.

327.73 U.S.—Relations (general) with Europe. Europe—Relations (general) with the U.S. 68-19793

The publisher of the weekly magazine L'Express "contends that United States business in Europe succeeds so well because of managerial skill and the complex interplay of big government, big business, and big education. He urges Europeans to upgrade their educational systems and their attention to the art of management. He reviews competition in automation, computerization, space electronics, and supersonic flight to the steady accompanying theme of the European lag in these fields. He also credits the United States with success derived from greater industrial initiative and a real head start, and pleads for prompt action in Europe to catch up in the industrial war." (Library J) Index. Originally published 1967 entitled Le D  fi Am  ricain.

SERVAN-SCHREIBER, J. J.—Continued

Reviewed by B. L. Masse
America 119:81 Ag 3 '68 950w

Reviewed by Stanley Hoffmann
Atlantic 222:96 Jl '68 1650w

Reviewed by Anthony Hartley
Book World p1 Jl 7 '68 950w
Canadian Forum 48:173 N '68 1900w
Choice 5:1339 D '68 270w

Reviewed by Carlyle Morgan
Christian Science Monitor p5 Jl 25 '68 950w

"This book richly deserves the reputation that has preceded it. It merits careful reading in the United States now that it is available in English. Our political and business leadership needs to take account of the impact this analysis is already having in Europe. . . . The book belongs in libraries as a portrait of the way the United States industrial complex appears to a sophisticated and concerned European businessman." G. A. Beebe

Library J 93:2859 Ag '68 200w

Reviewed by Harry Magdoff
Nation 207:726 D 30 '68 2200w

Reviewed by David Haddon
Nat R 20:912 S 10 '68 1200w

"One wonders why [this book caused considerable stir] because, despite topical statistics, it's mostly old hat. . . . [However] while M. Servan-Schreiber specifically pinpoints [a form of] American state capitalism as the primary cause of what he calls 'the most extraordinary technological break-through in the history of the world' . . . he somehow manages to depict it as a triumph of American private enterprise over European statism. It certainly isn't that—or that simple. Undoubtedly, the size and unity of the American market promotes firms' growth whereas Europe's political fragmentation tends to stunt them (though Krupp and Skoda weren't exactly tiny). But what has recently given American firms a powerful overseas punch is the brass knuckles slipped into their gloves by the American government, and paid for out of your taxes and mine." Alex Campbell

New Repub 159:20 Jl 27 '68 850w

Reviewed by Raymond Fletcher
New Statesman 76:144 Ag 2 '68 460w

Reviewed by George Lichtheim
N Y Rev of Books 10:19 Je 20 '68 1950w

"When [this book] was first published in Paris . . . it immediately became a best seller. [The author] welcomes American economic penetration of Europe as necessary and stimulating, and urges Europeans to take up the challenge by imitating American flair and flexibility. To this end his book advocates the creation of large European industrial units . . . [and other changes including] a revolution to revitalize the   lites and produce more efficient systems of decision-making; and . . . at least a measure of federal government in Europe. . . . [However] the events that have occurred in France during the last three months constitute a massive mockery of the attitudes and objectives for which Mr. Servan-Schreiber pleads in this book. . . . No doubt much of what he says is good sense. . . . A pity, then, that [he] does not write with more subtlety and persuasion." David Caute

N Y Times Bk R p8 Jl 28 '68 1250w

Reviewed by Naomi Bliven
New Yorker 44:240 N 23 '68 1650w

Time 92:78 Jl 12 '68 440w

"It would be uncandid not to notice that the challenge may not, probably will not, be accepted, at any rate on M. Servan-Schreiber's terms. . . . [He] put great hopes in the union of the Left (including the Communists) in an unideological reconstruction of French society. That may come but the omens are not good for the next few years. . . . The election results and the renewed domination of the French political scene by General de Gaulle reveal that it will take more than this highly intelligent and in many ways judicious book to awaken the French out of their dogmatic slumbers. But, of course this book is a sermon addressed to all of Europe to take thought for today; tomorrow will be too late. It is ■ highly topical sermon for Britain, where it may find a more attentive congregation than it has found in France."

TLS p846 Ag 8 '68 380w

Reviewed by Melvin Kranzberg
Va Q R 44:659 autumn '68 2050w

SETON, JULIA M. By a thousand fires; nature notes and extracts from the life and unpublished journals of Ernest Thompson Seton; ill. by Ernest Thompson Seton. 271p $6.95 Doubleday

B or 92 Seton, Ernest Thompson. Nature study—U.S. 67-19073

"Sometimes quoting excerpts from Seton's notes, sometimes writing her own thoughts and observations about her husband, and often reproducing entire essays from his work, Mrs. Seton [writes of his childhood, youth and career]. . . . [Included] are Seton's own accounts of life with the Indians, his observations of the animals and birds of the plains and mountains, his friendship with Teddy Roosevelt and other conservationists, and his early days in Scouting." (Publisher's note) Index.

"While the style is somewhat stilted and sentimental, that of another age, the book does help to an understanding of Seton's life and accomplishments. . . . Each of the 12 narrative parts describes a stage or phase in the development of Seton's ideas and career. The illustrations, numerous and of various types, harmonize with this arrangement and add much to the book. The index is an asset. Recommended to the general reader and to anyone interested in the history of natural history, animal stories, the Boy Scouts, etc."

Choice 5:1162 N '68 220w

"[This is] an informal biography that in its scattershot way, deftly reveals the many sides to Seton's personality and the depth of feeling behind his work. . . . [The writings] reflect the quality of Seton's worship of nature. . . . And that is perhaps the major reason why his engaging, informative stories continue to live."

S. K. Oberbeck
Newsweek 70:108 D 18 '67 600w

SETON, MARIE. Panditji: a portrait of Jawaharlal Nehru. 515p pl $13.95 Taplinger

B or 92 Nehru, Jawaharlal 67-11036

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by J. P. Harris
Am Pol Sci R 62:651 Je '68 650w

Reviewed by M. W. Fisher
Ann Am Acad 337:183 My '68 400w
Choice 4:1431 F '68 130w

Reviewed by B. D. Graham
Pacific Affairs 41:458 fall '68 550w

SETON-WATSON, CHRISTOPHER. Italy from liberalism to fascism, 1870-1925. 772p $21.50 Barnes & Noble

945.09 Italy—History—1815-1915. Italy—History—1914-1946 [67-114393]

This volume is a survey "of Italian political history. . . . [In an introductory chapter, the author,] professor of Russian history at the University of London, covers the period of unification and summarizes in an epilogue the years after 1925. He considers economic and social developments to provide a background for political events." (Library J)

Reviewed by Norman Kogan
Ann Am Acad 378:154 Jl '68 550w

"This is standard, even old-fashioned political history, a tale of cabinets, ministers, and personalities, with some obligatory examination of the economy and society, and analysis of the key role of the Catholic Church. Based almost entirely upon secondary sources, there is little that is new save a more spirited defense of the liberal politicians than they ordinarily receive. May be useful for reference, but libraries and students will find D. Mack Smith, Italy; a Modern History [BRD 1959] more perceptive and comprehensive."

Choice 5:254 Ap '68 170w

"A very full, detached and scrupulous, but also a personal, reconstruction of events. . . . [This] is the story of Italian liberalism, its achievements, its shortcomings and its fall. . . . At times the filter of objectivity is almost too severe, for among the multifarious causes of the liberal collapse which Mr Seton-Watson re-tails the reader is left to put the accent where he will. . . . One would have liked to find a more vigorous underlining of the fundamental cause of liberal weakness—the prolonged hostility of the Church. . . . Of the intellectual arrogance of the Italian liberals [the author] tells us rather too little."

Economist 225:1293 D 30 '67 700w

"[Seton-Watson] has succeeded in writing ■ masterful synthesis, based largely on the work of Italian scholars, most of which is virtually unknown outside of Italy. He presents detail and interpretation in a lucid, well-balanced harmony. This admirable book fills a major need in the literature in English on European history since 1870 and is essential for academic collections and larger public libraries."

B. S. Viault

Library J 93:1476 Ap 1 '68 100w

Reviewed by G. N. Smith

New Statesman 75:82 Ja 19 '68 2000w

Reviewed by D. M. Smith

N Y Rev of Books 11:34 O 24 '68 1850w

"The lay reader may be daunted by the [work] but the professional historian will be enthralled; for this book provides a mine of information and important threads of continuity leading up to the present. . . . [It] is a model of lucidity and poise, fortunately, for it is packed very tight. One understands, while regretting it, that Salvemini, D'Annunzio, Croce and the rest 'do not appear as scholars, poets or philosophers' in this political history. But they do appear. . . . As for Mr. Seton-Watson's accomplished epilogue, which draws the lines of continuity into a single pattern, no reader would wish to miss it. A final tribute must be paid to [the author's] footnotes. Where they are not mere references to sources they are full of fascinating bits of information."

TLS p1055 N 9 '67 2000w

SETON-WATSON, HUGH. The Russian empire, 1801-1917. 813p maps $10; text ed $8 Oxford 947 Russia—History [67-93682]

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by D. W. Treadgold

Am Hist R 73:1201 Ap '68 400w

Choice 5:398 My '68 200w

Reviewed by Max Beloff

Encounter 30:72 Je '68 2200w

Reviewed by A. Nove

Engl Hist R 83:802 O '68 700w

Reviewed by Leonard Schapiro

N Y Rev Books 11:25 D 5 '68 350w

SEVERIN, TIMOTHY. Explorers of the Mississippi. 294p il $6.95 Knopf

917.7 Mississippi River—Discovery and exploration. Explorers 67-80766

A "history of the men who, by chance and design, discovered, explored, and exploited the Mississippi River. From conquistadors to nineteenth-century gentlemen-explorers, it describes [their] adventures and disasters." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by B. A. Weisberger

Book World p4 My 5 '68 800w

Choice 5:1216 N '68 90w

"An amusing, informative and scholarly work."

Economist 223:ix Ap 15 '67 420w

"[The author], a young English student of travel and exploration, discovered 'that no one had attempted ■ survey of the exploration of the "Father of Waters" from the point of view of the explorers themselves.' His attempt at rectification is magic itself. . . . The reader is constantly aware of the lively 'larger cast': the fickle politicians on both sides of the Atlantic, the heroism of the clerics, and above all the Indians, more friendly than malevolent—and always men. . . . Mr. Severin is never 'romantic' and seldom emotional in his account of 300 years of discovery. And he has wit. . . . This clear and precise account will be equally appreciated by young people; its pervading vitality is bound to attract, its drama to hold attention. As for the nuances, let them fall where they may. They don't distract. Highly recommended." Karl Brown

Library J 93:989 Mr 1 '68 330w

N Y Times Bk R p39 Ap 28 '68 230w

New Yorker 44:126 Je 1 '68 160w

"This is a lively and moderately useful account of one of the great exploring stories of modern history. . . . It has its heroes—De Soto and La Salle; its liars, like Carver and Lahontan (whose anti-clerical importance Mr. Severin ignores); its 'constructive' scholars like Schoolcraft, whom Mr. Severin rather underestimates. . . . The great river has its great artist in Mark Twain, whom Mr. Severin quotes only in his facetious mood. A lively and obviously genuinely interested student of the 'Father of Waters' . . . would have to lack all literary talent to spoil the story. And Mr. Severin has a good deal of literary talent. . . . [His] bibliography reveals his limitations as a scholar. . . . Mr. Severin is careless in his use (or non-use) of French accents. He uses terms like 'Belgium' and 'New York State' too soon and imitates the bad American habit of writing British when English is the only accurate word. He is offhand in his political judgments."

TLS p335 Ap 20 '67 360w

SEVERN, BILL. Mr Chief Justice: Earl Warren. 186p $3.95 McKay

B or 92 Warren, Earl—Juvenile literature

68-14123

The author provides a "chronology of the life of Earl Warren from his youth through his early political feats in California [to his] involvement with the investigation of John F. Kennedy's assassination, and describes some of the decisions of the Supreme Court under his leadership. [Bibliography. Index.] Grades seven to ten" (Library J)

"While this is the only biography of Warren currently available especially for younger readers, and its information may satisfy the requirements of junior high school assignments, it is not adequate to the capacities or needs of competent or older readers who would be well advised to consult the adult biographies on this subject." E. J. Bander

Library J 93:[3327] S 15 '68 100w

"A fair and full biography. . . . The book's shortcoming is in not having enough on the Supreme Court and his decisions." Herbert Mitgang

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p22 My 5 '68 180w

SEWELL, WILLIAM G. I stayed in China. 221p il $5 Barnes, A.S.

915 China (People's Republic of China)—Intellectual life 66-28460

The author "is a British Quaker who served as professor of chemistry in the West China Union University at Chengtu, 1924-41 and 1947-52. Facets of the earlier years were presented in China Through a College Window [BRD 1938. Sewell describes] . . . the transition from the old regime to the new, as experienced by his Chinese students and colleagues in interaction with himself." (Pacific Affairs)

Reviewed by E. S. Turner

New Statesman 71:265 F 25 '66 120w

"[The author] fashions an intimate but carefully measured account. . . . The construction of composite individuals with plausible personalities is skillfully done. Sewell was a significant participant in the life of the university over a period long enough to inform him, and his interpretation is worth reading. He is one of the best representatives of those missionaries who threw in their lot with their Chinese associates. . . . [However] it would hardly be possible for a man with Sewell's virtues to do other than to heighten by selection of fact and of interpretation the darkness of the night and the bright promise of the day. He intends to be honest, and he frequently shows his doubts or problems—usually to be overcome at once by the slogans, facile explanations, or youthful confidence of his revolutionary friends. . . . [This book] should be read as one preface, a benevolent foreword, to China since 1949." M. S. Bates

Pacific Affairs 41:95 spring '68 250w

SEYD, MARY. Designing with string. 96p il col il $5.95 Watson-Guptill

745.59 Arts and crafts

68-10049

This book "explores the potential of many methods of tying and working with fibres, with emphasis on those which are readily available. . . . Individual sections include: . . . Playing with the material; Adhesives and Grounds; Children Experiment with String; Abstract and Imaginative; Stimuli from Nature and Environment." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index of materials.

SEYD, MARY—Continued

J Home Econ 60:679 O '68 20w

"This is an outstanding [book, reasonably priced]. . . . The author describes practical aspects of the specific technique, presents work of good quality, and indicates the American and British suppliers. . . . The photographs of strings, ropes, and so on are exceptionally good. . . . Recommended for art teachers, students, crafts leaders, and the libraries which serve them." Delores McCollm

Library J 93:2474 Je 15 '68 20w

SEYMOUR, WILLIAM KEAN, comp. Happy Christmas; comp. by William Kean Seymour and John Smith; il. by Beryl Sanders. 256p il $5.95 Westminster press

820.8 Christmas stories. Christmas poetry 68-26877

This "book is divided into four sections: 'Before the Feast,' 'Christmas Eve,' 'Christmas Day,' and 'After the Feast.' . . . The contents have been drawn from English prose and poetry, from Elizabethan times to the present day." (Publisher's note) Index of authors.

Best Sell 28:298 O 15 '68 90w

Reviewed by K. T. Willis

Library J 93:4300 N 15 '68 100w

"[This] is an anthology that will come down from the family shelf year after year—a hardy perennial. The selection of carols, stories, excerpts from novels and diaries, poems and plays is daring (Pasternak, Perelman, Pepsy—'Paddington') and not too solemn. . . . This original and stimulating selection is given unity, splendour, dignity and warmth by Beryl Sanders' decoration."

TLS p1108 O 3 '68 300w

SEYMOUR, WILLIAM KEAN, comp. The pattern of poetry. See Poetry society of London

SHACKLE, G. L. S. The years of high theory; invention and tradition in economic thought, 1926-1939. 328p $7.50 Cambridge

330.1 Economics—History [67-12320]

A history and critical account of the development of economic theory during the period in which "the 'great theory' of neo-classical economics was shattered by developments in both micro- and macroeconomics which led to today's theories of uncertainty, expectations, feedback mechanisms and continuous adjustment, and indetermined solutions. [Six] paths of invention are analyzed in detail: the revision of value theory into the theory of the firm by dropping the perfect knowledge-perfect competition assumption; the use of the indifference map and the concept of ordinal utility; Keynesian macroeconomics and the multiplier; mathematical models of economic fluctuations à la Kalecki and Samuelson; Harrod's beginning in the theory of growth; and the new general equilibrium of input-output analysis introduced by Leontief." (Choice) Index.

Reviewed by W. J. Baumol

Am Econ R 58:565 Je '68 700w

"This book is more than an analysis in chronological form. It is an inquiry into the sociology of knowledge of major importance, seeking answers to the question of why a 'landslide' of theoretical inventions occurred during those years. As such, it is one of the most important books in economics of our time."

Choice 5:236 Ap '68 180w

"[This] is written with Professor Shackle's customary precise elegance. No other history of economic thought deals with the theorising of this period in such depth."

Economist 225:1062 D 9 '67 40w

SHAKABPA, TSEPON W. D. Tibet: a political history. 369p il $10 Yale univ. press

951.5 Tibet—History 67-13448

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by H. V. Guenther

Am Hist R 73:886 F '68 450w

Reviewed by L. E. Rose

Ann Am Acad 375:226 Ja '68 400w

Reviewed by D. L. Snellgrove

Pacific Affairs 41:432 fall '68 850w

SHANNON, WILLIAM V. The heir apparent; Robert Kennedy and the struggle for power. 309p $5.95 Macmillan (N Y)

B or 92 Kennedy, Robert Francis. New York (State)—Politics and government 67-26057

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by S. G. Brown

Ann Am Acad 376:181 Mr '68 750w

Choice 5:1224 N '68 140w

Reviewed by Frank Getlein

Commonweal 87:543 F 2 '68 1000w

Economist 228:49 Jl 20 '68 310w

Reviewed by H. J. Morgenthau

N Y Rev of Books 11:5 Ag 1 '68 3250w

TLS p611 Je 13 '68 500w

SHAPIRO, KARL. Selected poems. 333p $7.95 Random house

811 68-14498

This volume contains over two hundred poems selected from the author's seven previously published books as well as twenty-five new and uncollected poems.

Reviewed by Chad Walsh

Book World p4 Jl 28 '68 300w

"The publication of the Selected Poems of Karl Shapiro is a literary event of some magnitude. This volume supersedes the last collection, Poems 1940-1953 [BRD 1953], and includes the best of the poet's output from 1940 to the present. . . . [The] previously unpublished poems . . . are among the best in the book. Shapiro's poems . . . [are] a cumulation of minute but valuable insights and ironies dressed in singing robes of gray flannel. . . . A movement is evident from these structured, intricate early poems through a revulsion against form expressed in the loose, at times dilatory prose poems of the middle period, to the richer, more concentrated poems of the current phase." J. V. Brain

Library J 93:1638 Ap 15 '68 300w

"[This] is a splendidly edited model of what any selected edition should be. Shapiro has chosen generously from his past work, and equally from each phase of it; he has declined to revise old poems. Consequently this book, unlike most such books, is a genuinely useful compendium. . . . Recently [Shapiro] has begun working toward renewed esthetic concentration, sometimes through rhyme and meter, more often in free forms of greater density than the 'bourgeois' poems." The last poem in his book, 'Aubade,' a free poem levying on the medieval erotic tradition, is one of his best." Hayden Carruth

N Y Times Bk R p10 Jl 14 '68 750w

Va Q R 44:clii autumn '68 110w

SHAPIRO, KARL. To abolish children; and other essays. 288p $6.50 Quadrangle bks.

818 68-13463

A collection of essays, some of which previously appeared in The Wilson Library Bulletin, The Earlham Journal, Liberation and other periodicals.

"These nine, sometimes rambling, essays are at times clever or thought-provoking or infuriating, and at times, alas, none of these. Also included is a chapter from a novel in progress. While any chapter out of context may be unimpressive, this account of an obscene party seems particularly pointless. . . . Shapiro tends to come across, especially in the lead essay, 'To Abolish Children,' as merely as misogynist. He makes some valid points. . . . It would be a mistake to dismiss him as merely a brick-throwing show-off. As Jarrell said, he tells the naked truth as he sees it; it may not be everybody's truth, but in this conformist age (that Shapiro deplores) such writers should be valued." Janet Overmyer

Christian Science Monitor p9 Ag 6 '68

950w

Reviewed by J. P. Sisk

Commonweal 89:32 O 4 '68 900w

"As poet, editor, essayist, anthologist, and teacher, Karl Shapiro has been involved in American poetry most of his life. Eight of the essays making up this book are a consequence of his involvement, but they lack a common theme. . . . His essays scintillate but all their sparks throw little new light on our literature. Mr. Shapiro restates his now familiar theses, and once more airs some of his pet peeves. . . . The best of this book is its final section, 'A Malebolge of Fourteen Hundred Books' . . . [which refers to the books] in his own library. Nearly all of them are poetry books or books having to do with poetry. He dissects each one with gusto. The result: a composite picture of his tastes, opinions, and sensibilities." G. A. Cevasco

Library J 93:1633 Ap 15 '68 320w

"Shapiro stated in his other collection, 'In Defense of Ignorance' [BRD 1961], that 'the present essays are intended to be the last criticism I shall ever write.' Inconsistency can have its virtues, but he is back again [with this book], which in spite of a few fine things ('The Death of Randall Jarrell,' 'To Revive Anarchism'), shows him to be more adept at shock tactics than at rational critical discourse." A. C.

N Y Times Bk R p31 Ag 18 '68 250w

Time 92:66 Ag 2 '68 430w

SHAPIRO WILLIAM E., ed. Lenin and Trotsky. See Columbia broadcasting system, incorporated, CBS news

SHAPIRO, WILLIAM E., ed. Trial at Nuremberg. See Columbia broadcasting system, incorporated, CBS news

SHARMA, B. L. The Kashmir story. 271p $4.75 Asia pub.

327.54 Kashmir—Politics and government. India—Foreign relations—Pakistan. Pakistan—Foreign relations—India. 67-6802

A history and documentation of the controversy between India and Pakistan over Kashmir. Index.

"Sharma, the Officer on Special Duty for Kashmir Affairs in the Indian Foreign Office, has written an impassioned polemic against Pakistan. It cannot be recommended for any college library (unless a similar polemic from Pakistan is found that can be bound with it). If it serves any purpose, it is to indicate something of the depths of the bitterness and bigotry in which this lovely and unfortunate land has been immersed."

Choice 5:543 Je '68 70w

"Sharma keeps his cool but blandly castigates the UN commissions and certain American and English representatives for their pro-Pakistan biases. His book should be added to the Kashmir shelf of major libraries, assuming they also have Sisir Gupta's Kashmir, H. S. G. Rao's Legal Aspects of the Kashmir Problem and Alastair Lamb's The Kashmir Problem [BRD 1967]." B. W. Fuson

Library J 93:2011 My 15 '68 140w

SHARP, ALAN. The wind shifts. 335p $4.95 Walker & co.

68-14002

This second volume in the author's trilogy, begun with A Green Tree in Gedde (BRD 1965), follows "the continuing odysseys of four major characters: John Moseby . . . in flight from his wife and beloved daughter, deliberately lost in London; Harry Gibbon and Ruth [Cuffee] living together and becoming strangers; and Peter, Ruth's brother and former lover, malevolent and self-destructive." (Publisher's note)

"Sharp banishes clichés, most often without strain, his facility being most easily observed in the earlier and final pages of the novel. Under a veil of sexuality . . . is the familiar search for identity. . . . Sharp is a fine writer. This novel shows better narrative than his first. . . . He does not need the sensational or half-baked; he does seem to need moral purpose. His work could well achieve permanence and should be in college libraries."

Choice 5:960 O '68 170w

Reviewed by T. L. Vince

Library J 93:1022 Mr 1 '68 200w

"[This] would be incomprehensible to someone who had not read the first volume, and that is already a fault. . . . What is most disappointing about Mr. Sharp's over-decorated style is that he seems unable to select. However, the 'general reader' is uninterested in nice points of style. Nowadays, he is thought to be lickerish, and there was much in Mr. Sharp's first volume to stimulate a lickerish imagination. There is less in this second. . . . The sexual relationships are placid. And as the sexual relationships have become less frenzied, the pace of the narrative has slowed. Very little happens. . . . The pity of it is that Alan Sharp is clearly a born writer. I do not say 'interesting'. The born writer can also be a boring writer." John Bowen

N Y Times Bk R p4 Mr 24 '68 600w

"There can be no doubt that Sharp has tapped a vast supply of compassion, insight, and poetry. He is a superb craftsman: he has built his trilogy on the solid foundation of a compelling quest, and he has mastered a complex structure with the greatest of ease. His language is occasionally lyrical, . . . and frequently it sparkles with irony. . . . [Sharp] also has a feeling for the power of story. . . . In short, [he] has the makings of a major novelist." H. S. Resnik

Sat R 51:79 My 11 '68 1000w

SHARP, EVELYN. A parent's guide to more new math; slide rules and peanut butter. 164p il $4.95 Dutton

510 Mathematics

66-12256

"The author discusses seven new topics being introduced in programs at the elementary school level and expanded upon in later years. Topics included are: relations and functions, graphs, logic, number theory, statistics, game theory, and vectors." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"Parents and teachers of elementary and junior high school children will enjoy this down-to-earth presentation of the newest math concepts being introduced throughout the nation. . . . Readers will enjoy solving problems which are placed throughout the book. The first chapter 'Slide Rules and Peanut Butter,' serves to place this second math revolution in its proper context and perspective. The reader will be amazed at the sweeping changes indicated by the majority of the topics discussed. Yet, any analysis of the newest elementary series presently in use—and incidentally being widely accepted throughout our nation—will reveal how current and appropriate are Sharp's selection of topics."

Choice 4:1148 D '67 140w

"The presentation is simple enough so that parents with a high school education should be able to profit from it. Simple, illustrative problems are given and the solutions should be helpful. Elementary school teachers should also benefit. The market for this book will be large as more and more elementary schools add some elements of the new math to their curriculum. Recommended for all libraries." A. J. Berman

Library J 91:2075 Ap 15 '66 170w

SHARP, IAN G., ed. Aborigines in the economy; employment, wages and training; ed. by Ian G. Sharp and Colin M. Tatz [publ in assn. with Centre for res. into aboriginal affairs. Monash university. 382p $7.45 Tri-ocean bks.

331.6 Ethnology—Australia. Australia—Social conditions. Australia—Economic conditions 67-76739

"This symposium volume of 24 papers plus discussion stems from a seminar conducted in 1966 at Monash University. Sixty persons from various disciplines, including some of the subjects themselves, participated in an evaluation of the acculturation of the Australian aborigines. Though reporting on the present status of this minority group (less than one percent of the total population), most of the participants made specific recommendations for improvement of their condition." (Choice)

"The main verdict was that the aborigines are clearly educable, but suffer more from outright poverty, especially in urban areas, than from any other factor. Evidently unique in its reference to Australia, this volume finds parallels in some of the African studies. . . . Virtually none of these attempts coverage of a whole country-continent. However, some of them do cover all of one ethnic group, but still probably a more homogenous whole than all of native Australia. If the volume has a major anthropological flaw it is the lumping of all aborigines as though they shared but one culture."

SHARP, I. G.—Continued

Choice 5:414 My '68 230w

"[These are] excellent papers . . . [and the] discussions are invaluable in reflecting the flavor, atmosphere, and quality of the work. The relatively unique subject and the research methods add interest. Recommended for all academic libraries and larger public libraries."

Clarence Gorchels

Library J 92:2426 Je 15 '67 150w

SHAW, ARNOLD. Sinatra; twentieth-century romantic. 371p pl $5.95 Holt

B or 92 Sinatra, Frank 69-10234

The author of Belafonte (BRD 1960) covers the singer's "career from his start with Major Bowes in 1935 through the wartime years as the idol of the swooning bobby-soxers, to his films, records, and current TV and concert work." (Library J) Appendix lists Sinatra's recordings and films.

Reviewed by Anne Keehan

Best Sell 28:388 D 15 '68 650w

Christian Century 85:1374 O 30 '68 30w

"[Shaw] covers fully Mr. Sinatra's own flourishing recording firm, real estate and Nevada gambling enterprises, his associates and his personal conduct. [He] places much emphasis on Sinatra's several marriages. He does discuss Mr. Sinatra's contributions and good points—charity concerts and work for inter-ethnic harmony—but the picture as a whole is not a favorable one. Most of the material here has appeared in the tabloids, and Mr. Shaw follows the tabloid style." W. H. Mathews

Library J 93:3116 S 15 '68 180w

"What Shaw seems most concerned to show is the degree and depth of Sinatra's musical taste and singing ability. . . . He somewhat scants the Hollywood career, merely gives us the outline of the show-business empire. . . . He does include the various 'scandals,' but puts them into perspective. On the other hand, he doesn't get 'inside' Sinatra, or try very hard to do so, other than attempting to understand the man's actions and to account for them. This I find refreshing. I was able to derive for myself from Mr. Shaw's evidence a picture of the man. . . . Certainly this is one of the better showbiz biographies, its readability a tribute not only to Mr. Shaw's voluminous research, but to the fascination of the subject." Hollis Alpert

N Y Times Bk R p55 N 3 '68 800w

SHAW, BYNUM. The Nazi hunter. 220p $4.95 Norton

68-20823

The hero of this novel "is Paul Streik, who distributes vengeance, expertly and without pleasure, to Nazis ferreted out by the International Tracing Service in Vienna. Streik is enslaved by the memory of his wife and infant child [who were] savaged by Gestapo Captain Friedrich Boehm. He follows a carefully-laid trail to Cologne, where he comes alive again with Lisa Wagner while he engineers the destruction of the Nazi front, the 'Veterans of All Wars.'" (N Y Times Bk R)

"The intricacies and suspense of seeking out Nazi war-criminals and their subsequent punishment are forcefully presented in [this] . . . tense and interesting novel."

Best Sell 28:242 S 15 '68 100w

"Themes touched on in this book are important and timely, and the plot is sufficient to sustain an hour-long TV film. Unfortunately the dialogue, the device used to advance most of the plot, is awkward and often painfully trite. The book is not a necessary purchase."

R. H. Donahugh

Library J 93:3158 S 15 '68 230w

"Streik's story is a stunning character portrayal, not altogether heartening but certainly vividly valid." A. J. Hubin

N Y Times Bk R p60 S 29 '68 90w

Reviewed by Sergeant Cuff

Sat R 51:45 O 26 '68 20w

SHAW, OTTO L. Youth in crisis; a radical approach to delinquency [Eng title: Maladjusted boys]. 135p $4.95; pa $1.45 Hart

364.7 Red Hill School, East Sutton, England. Juvenile delinquency 66-31928

The author, founder and headmaster of the Red Hill School in England for delinquent boys, discusses the school's "environment of maximum freedom in which pupils can learn to establish normal human relationships, while undergoing psychoanalysis." (Library J) Index.

"Written in a clear style, the chapters are short and to the point. Little is said about the academic program, but the clinical evaluations of behavior problems are interesting and realistic." Vladimir De Lissovoy

J Home Econ 59:809 D '67 170w

"Whether or not the school's remarkable rate of success is primarily attributable to the special talents of the current staff remains to be seen, but this is a book which deserves to be read by all concerned with the problem of delinquency." A. A. Chmela

Library J 91:2076 Ap 15 '66 150w

SHAWCROSS, JOHN T., jt. ed. Language and style in Milton. See Emma, R. D.

SHEAFFER, LOUIS. O'Neill: son and playwright. 543p il $10 Little

B or 92 O'Neill, Eugene Gladstone 68-17278

This "is the first volume of what is planned as a two-part biography. (The second is announced for 1971.) The present study covers O'Neill up to his emergence as a new force in American dramaturgy, with the 1920 production of 'Beyond the Horizon.'" (N Y Times Bk R) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by Maurice Adelman

America 119:572 N 30 '68 70w

"Mr. Sheaffer's book is a biography of James O'Neill . . . as much as it is of his son. . . . Was [the father] really as penurious as he is depicted in Long Day's Journey into Night? [BRD 1956]. Sheaffer doubts it, indicating that O'Neill exaggerated that side of his father's nature, just as he exaggerated his own adventures on the rare occasions he spoke of them. . . . [The author's] narrative carries O'Neill through the first half of his life, the bitter years with a father who misunderstood and mistrusted him, a brother whom he alternately and simultaneously loved and disliked, and a mother for whose drug addiction he felt a guilt because she first had been administered morphine at his birth. . . . [This is a fruitful] study of the roots of O'Neill's plays in his own troubled life." William Leonard

Book World p16 N 17 '68 500w

Reviewed by R. E. Long

Christian Science Monitor pB13 N 7 '68 650w

"Supplements the Arthur-Barbara Gelb biography [O'Neill, BRD 1962] with 'new pages if not chapters.' Sheaffer emphasizes the importance of O'Neill's ties with his family and his Roman Catholic background; he includes a generous bibliography, as well as notes from O'Neill's works. If the second volume is as detailed, readable and perceptive a biographical-critical study as the first has proven, most large libraries, and academic libraries should find it a very useful addition to their shelves for students of drama." Elizabeth Nelson

Library J 93:3563 O 1 '68 90w

"Sheaffer tells the O'Neill story in plain prose—and in scrupulous detail. He appears to have unearthed every document (several of them never hitherto published), interviewed every relative, friend, acquaintance, read every letter, interview, commentary by or concerning his subject. Sheaffer's attitude is objective, his judgment sound. . . . Some may deem the minutiae fulsome beyond the call of artistic measure. . . . The book is not (as yet) a critical study. Though it identifies and describes the people who served as models for the leading figures in O'Neill's plays, it does not tell us much about the use O'Neill made of them: their significance in the context of the plays. . . . [It is, however, a book for] those seriously interested in American theater, literature and consciousness." Harold Clurman

N Y Times Bk R p62 O 20 '68 900w

Reviewed by Thomas Bishop

Sat R 51:61 N 23 '68 650w

SHEAHAN, JOHN. The wage-price guideposts. 219p $6.75 Brookings

332.4 Inflation (Finance). Prices. Wages 67-30603

"An economics professor at Williams College provides a . . . review and analysis of the informal price and wage constraints of the Kennedy and Johnson Administrations. He discusses the evolution, use, and impact of the guideposts, and concludes that the technique successfully dampened inflation between 1962 and 1966, but at the cost of occasional economic inefficiency and somewhat excessive restraint on wages. Mr. Sheahan believes the guideposts cannot continue in their present form, but that they 'represent an intelligent gamble in an important direction.' (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"Sheahan's well organized, clear, authoritative book should be available whenever economics courses beyond introductory ones are taught. . . . It is superior to [G.] Shultz and [R.] Aliber's Guidelines, Informal Controls, and the Market Place [Policy Choices in a Full Employment Economy, BRD 1967]. . . . Useful bibliography; well indexed."

Choice 5:1186 N '68 120w

"[This] book is clearly written, balanced, and objective, unlike much of the literature on this subject. Although attaining high professional standards, [it] can be understood by the non-economist, and Mr. Sheahan should be congratulated for a very useful contribution." C. T. Goodsell

Library J 93:1624 Ap 15 '68 150w

SHEAVYN, PHOEBE. The literary profession in the Elizabethan age; 2d ed. rev. throughout by J. W. Saunders. 248p $6.50 Barnes & Noble

820 English literature—History and criticism. Authors, English [67-106227]

"Mr. Saunders supplies among other things an appendix in which he analyses . . . the social status of 200 Renaissance poets. . . . The book investigates the conditions of the time, the rewards and encouragements offered to the writer, and the influences which tended to [confine] his budding talent." (TLS) The first edition was published in England in 1909.

"This book was not designed for sociologists; certainly using our terminology there was no literary profession in the Elizabethan age. The historical evidence leaves much to be desired; the generalizations based on this evidence appear to be too broad and sometimes seem contradictory. However, despite its shortcomings, here is an interesting social history of the writer in a turbulent period, and Phoebe Sheavyn has given us a quaint valuable book. I like it." E. O. Smigel

Am J Soc 74:210 S '68 700w

"This much consulted work . . . [is] tactfully revised. . . . Saunders points out how much relevant material Miss Sheavyn omitted when she confined her study to what she calls belles lettres, and decided not to touch learned and controversial books. . . . Within the limits which she sets herself she has been admirably thorough, and as factual as it is possible to be. . . . A final chapter handles such large and still imperfectly mapped territory as the puritan influence on literature, the critical defence of poetry, and the standards of taste. . . . When a book has been in constant use for nearly sixty years, and has not yet been superseded, it is discourteous to demand the impossible in addition to what has already been so generously supplied."

TLS p43 Ja 11 '68 950w

SHECTER, BEN. Partouche plants a seed. 32p il $2.50 Harper

Pigs—Stories. Mice—Stories 66-18659

Partouche, a "French pig, is constantly scolded by Madame Gounard for nibbling the corn in her garden. At last he plants a seed of his own, and with the advice and help of his friend Raymond the fieldmouse, he secretly nurtures a . . . cornstalk. Three times they must save the precious plant from disaster before Partouche, harvesting his crop, wins the approbation of Madame." (Horn Bk) "Pre-school to kindergarten." (Library J)

Horn Bk 42:560 O '66 100w

"Partouche is an engaging character in a very slight tale." Barbara Bader

Library J 91:3530 Jl '66 100w

Reviewed by B. N. O'Doherty

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p71 N 8 '66 100w

"The story is told with humour and economy of words, and accompanied by the author's own delicate line drawings which subtly evoke the flat countryside of northern France. Children will love the well-meaning Partouche."

TLS p260 Mr 14 '68 300w

SHEDD, CHARLIE W. Letters to Philip: on how to treat a woman. 131p $3.95 Doubleday

301.42 Marriage 68-11400

"The secret ingredient of marital happiness, according to Dr. Shedd, a minister who has had long experience as a husband and a marriage counselor, is continuing appreciation of the partner. In this series of letters written to his son about to be married, Dr. Shedd spells out with anecdotes and admonition the effective methods for keeping the little woman secure and happy. . . . The husband as head of the household should take the lead in using tact, tenderness, and flattery with his spouse, but wives can also do their part to strengthen the relationship by using the same techniques." (Library J)

"These letters constitute a well intended attempt to bridge the generation gap with some rather square-sounding counsel, on the part of a father to a just-marrying son."

Christian Century 85:268 F 28 '68 30w

"[Dr. Shedd] is unabashedly sentimental and his recommendations are firmly grounded in religion, but his book is refreshing reading in these days of family disintegration. . . . This small manual can be read with profit by both sexes, preferably during the engagement period before bad domestic manners have developed." E. T. Smith

Library J 93:760 F 15 '68 170w

SHEED, WILFRID. The blacking factory & Pennsylvania gothic; a short novel and a long story. 246p $5.50 Farrar, Straus

68-13009

The novel, The Blacking Factory, concerns the boyhood experiences of an American radio commentator when a student at Sopworth, a boarding-school in England. The story, Pennsylvania Gothic, describes Charlie Trimble's boyhood in a suburb of Philadelphia, his father's suicide, the visits he makes to Miss Skinner, an elderly neighbor, at age twelve and his last visit when he is thirty-two years old.

Reviewed by P. K. Cuneo

America 119:263 S 28 '68 550w

"The prose is clear as a cat's eye and direct as a rifle shot, a great pleasure in these days of fun-house baroque. Mr. Sheed's tales of the lingering effects of adolescent psychic disturbance lack the basic storyteller's magic, but have every merit that can be supplied by intelligence, knowledge and civilized taste." Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 222:134 S '68 50w

"Of the two, I much prefer the short novel, but both are pure Sheed of the finest quality. In both, a young teen-ager stands at a crossroad in his life, one that will be indelibly impressed upon the matured adult and the direction he takes. . . . The Gothic tale is unadulterated and unrelieved gothic—sombre, even macabre. . . . Mr. Sheed is such a master of English prose that the reader is glued to the story despite the inevitability of the conclusion. The Blacking Factory is a much finer piece of work, but just as sombre. . . . Every horror that fiction has ever fastened on the 'public' school in modern Britain takes skillful form on paper in this novel. The reader keeps hoping it isn't so, but the author subtly makes it all seem possible, and then probable, unutterably so. . . . This volume is an important literary work, one that librarians may well mark for first purchase." Charles Dollen

Best Sell 28:238 S 15 '68 503w

Reviewed by R. V. Cassill

Book World p6 S 22 '68 360w

Reviewed by A. P. Klausler

Christian Century 85:1212 S 25 '68 800w

Reviewed by Pamela Marsh

Christian Science Monitor p11 O 10 '68 180w

Critic 27:101 O '68 180w

"The Blacking Factory is an overly abrupt novella. . . . Pennsylvania Gothic is a psychological horror story. . . . In both works Mr. Sheed presents young boys well—perhaps too well. At times, although the narration seems to come from within the character, the perceptions are more acute than we can believe the character capable of. Generally, these are competent modern stories, entertaining if you like some spookiness in your psychological studies." Elaine Bender

Library J 93:3158 S 15 '68 240w

SHEED, WILFRID—Continued

- Reviewed by Sara Blackburn
Nation 207:346 O 7 '68 130w
- Reviewed by Bernard Bergonzi
N Y Rev of Books 11:40 Ja 2 '69 1100w
- Reviewed by E. S. Connell
N Y Times Bk R p4 S 8 '68 700w
- Reviewed by Susan Lardner
New Yorker 44:234 N 30 '68 950w
- Reviewed by Howard Junker
Newsweek 72:92 S 9 '68 500w
- Reviewed by H. S. Resnik
Sat R 51:111 S 14 '68 800w
Time 92:108 S 20 '68 1300w

SHELDON, ESTHER K. Thomas Sheridan of Smock-Alley; recording his life as actor and theater manager in both Dublin and London; and including a Smock-Alley calendar for the years of his management. 530p il $12.50 Princeton univ. press

792 Sheridan, Thomas. Smock-Alley Theater. Theater—Great Britain—History 66-17709

This biography, by a professor of English at Queens College in New York City, concerns the professional career of an eighteenth century Irish actor. Based on "stage histories written by his contemporaries and . . . eighteenth-century newspapers and pamphlets, as well as letters written to, by, and about Sheridan [it describes] the problems and routine of Dublin theaters, the tastes and attitudes of Dubliners, and the changing position of the eighteenth-century actor." (Publisher's note) Appendixes—Smock-Alley Calendar; Part I, A chronological listing of performances; Part II, An alphabetical list of plays and casts. List of Sheridan's works. Bibliography. Index.

"Sheldon restricts herself, with great discipline, to Sheridan the actor-manager, and eschews all but passing references to Sheridan the lexicographer and educational reformer. However, in spite of a meticulously detailed account of his theatrical activities, no clear picture of the man or even the actor emerges. . . . [Nevertheless the book] is the scholarly product of industrious research. . . . Indispensable to students of the British theater in the eighteenth century . . . [it is] a scholarly work of more than specialized interest." Philip Burton
Sat R 50:29 Je 17 '67 600w

"No player ever fought more valiantly to make the stage and auditorium places fit for gentlemen to work or take pleasure in than Thomas Sheridan. His battlefield was Dublin. . . . Professor E. K. Sheldon puts this theatrical microculture under the lenses of her exhaustive research and scholarly exposition and focuses our attention on an aspect of our theatrical history that has not hitherto been studied in terms of cause and effect."
TLS p1037 S 19 '68 2650w

"Sheridan reflected many facets of the theatrical and educational life of the mid-eighteenth century. And yet a humdrum quality remains—an aura of density, a lack of humor. Professor Sheldon has been somewhat infected by this very quality; much of her book is humdrum, a bit ponderous. On the other hand, her diligence is awe-inspiring. She has read everything: all the books and pamphlets, all the newspapers, all the documents, all the letters. Nothing has been overlooked and nothing omitted. Footnotes abound. . . . The two appendixes are of great value. . . . The index is admirable. Thanks to her vast array of facts, Professor Sheldon has created an accurate microcosm of the theatrical world as it existed in [the eighteenth] century. . . . As a reference book her work will long be consulted and long respected." C. B. Hogan
Yale 57:309 D '67 1400w

SHELDON, WALT. Hell or high water; MacArthur's landing at Inchon. 340p maps $7.95 Macmillan (N Y)

951.9 Korean War, 1950-1953. Inchon, Korea 68-13208

A history of the Inchon amphibious landing during the Korean War. Chronology. Bibliography. Index.

"[This] is good history, but it is highly personalized. It has its bibliography, adequate indeed and obviously well used. It does, however, show in its footnotes a high proportion of information based on personal interviews of the author with the participants, in the manner of Ryan and Toland. It is almost a Truman Capote method or adaptation of writing 'new fiction' on human events—except that I fear I do the excellent author here an injustice if I press the point—for his narrative appears in general and in detail entirely soundly based. I do not think he has used his imagination a bit, although his dramatic presentation, personalized as it is, makes his book most readable. Even veterans of that operation should not only read but have it." Elbridge Colby

Best Sell 28:79 My 15 '68 650w

"Sheldon, [an] Air Force correspondent during World War II and the Korea conflict, makes real people emerge with all the chance occurrences which surround their actions. The tremendous detail here is sometimes verisimilitude rather than observation (a stone building described as brick), but is more often based on Mr. Sheldon's accurate recollections gained through personal interviews. Despite the usual military writer's ignorance of the country where the action and the agony take place, Mr. Sheldon does bring out some of the nobility of Korea and Koreans which results in a book of more general interest than many purely military histories." J. M. Elrod
Library J 93:2236 Je 1 '68 150w

SHELLEY, SIDNEY. Bowmanville break. 242p $4.95 Delacorte press 68-25136

"Bowmanville, Ontario is the site of an internment camp for German officers during World War II. The novel's momentum is generated by the efforts of the camp's inmates to liberate a number of their fellows so that they may return to Germany and, as U-boat captains, make a telling contribution to the war effort. . . . The camp is in direct communication with Berlin and Admiral Doenitz; its facilities for intrigue . . . [include] a print shop which forges documents, a library, a carpentry shop, tailor, and shoemaker; the inmates at Bowmanville play tennis and ice hockey, and the theatrical program is so ambitious that costumes are rented in Montreal." (Library J)

"There are roughly 200 pages of light summer reading in the story of two newspaper men, turned intelligence agents, in Canada, in World War II. It is brisk and unbelievable except to viewers of 'Hogan's Heroes' on T.V. . . . The flight and chase across Canada are exciting enough to hold the reader until the expected ending. . . . There is no historical value in the novel, but it would well be enjoyed in place of a western or 'who-dunit.' It is light and quick in action and reading." J. B. Cullen
Best Sell 28:318 N 1 '68 300w

Reviewed by A. L. Rosenzweig
Book World p12 D 29 '68 180w

"The book is a one-dimensional work; it must stand or fall on the basis of its plot alone. Unfortunately, Mr. Shelley's plot is not satisfactory. Too many of the preconditions for whatever success the inmates' venture attains lack credibility. . . . Besides the lack of credibility in the plot, Mr. Shelley's flaccid prose fails to involve the reader to the extent necessary to succeed in the genre of suspense literature. So we have here little craftsmanship and less art. This novel can be recommended only for the most exhaustive fiction collections." N. E. Omelusik
Library J 93:3158 S 15 '68 230w

"A crackling tale; and I'm not sure but that (in this case, at any rate) the impersonal sterility of the author's documentary style is more a strength than a weakness." A. J. Hubin
N Y Times Bk R p65 N 10 '68 130w

Reviewed by Sergeant Cuff
Sat R 51:58 N 30 '68 30w

SHELTON, WILLIAM. American space exploration; the first decade. 367p il $5.95 Little

629.4 Astronautics. Astronauts 67-21179

Containing revised and rewritten material from the author's previous books, Countdown (BRD 1961) and Flight of the Astronauts (BRD 1963), an observer at Cape Canaveral during the period covered by this book describes flights of unmanned and manned satellites and probes, and gives information about America's astronauts. Glossary. Index.

"Written in nontechnical language. . . . Shelton has been space affairs correspondent for Time and Life, which explains why his writing style is strictly journalistic. Recommended."

Choice 5:365 My '68 100w

"In plain, economical phrases, [Shelton] fills in personal details about the astronauts and the thousands of men on the ground who put the astronauts into space and get them back again. The book is highly readable, but excited or over-dramatic. Many junior high school students will like it and will understand most of the words. Oddly, I suspect, many adults will enjoy it, too. The author has given his book the 'personal touch' and the reader has the feeling of being on the inside. Not a great book, but one that will rarely be on the shelves." R. S. Potts

Library J 92:2935 S 1 '67 130w

SHELTON, WILLIAM. Soviet space exploration; the first decade; introd. by Gherman Titov. 339p il $6.95 Washington sq. press

629.4 Astronautics—Russia. Astronauts. Outer space—Exploration 68-20581

An account of Soviet "efforts from early research experiments to manned launchings and planetary probes. This book also . . . [describes] the men behind the program—cosmonauts such as Yuri Gagarin and Gherman Titov; the romance between Cosmonauts Tereshkova and Nikolayev; the early contributions of Konstantin Tsiolkovsky, the 'father of Soviet rocketry'; and the influence of Sergei Korolev, 'chief designer' of Soviet spacecraft." (Publisher's note) Chronology of Soviet space flights, 1957-1967. Bibliography. Index.

"This account . . . fills a lack in the current series of space histories. Mr. Shelton, who wrote American Space Exploration [BRD 1968], finds much to praise and points out areas where he feels the United States has not interpreted Soviet intentions or accomplishments correctly. He seems to have had access to numerous Soviet sources, including talks with some of the cosmonauts, and part of the text reads like direct quotes. High school students will find the book interesting if they are technically minded. Colleges ought to round out their space section with it; small public libraries will do better with the accounts of Arthur C. Clarke or Willy Ley." R. S. Potts

Library J 93:3015 S 1 '68 120w

"[This account is] short on space science and space applications, long on names and direct quotes. But by comparison [with R. Lewis' Appointment on the Moon, BRD 1968] the Shelton book is somewhat less precise and a good bit thinner. To a considerable degree the thinness is not Shelton's fault. . . . We still know only a very few details about the Soviet rockets, launch systems, spacecraft and space suits. . . . Hence in many interesting areas Shelton is forced either to remain silent or be admittedly speculative. The imprecision of [his] prose is not serious, but occasionally it is obtusive perhaps even annoying. Thus ablation is called 'surface boiling' whereas surface vaporization would be much more apt. [Still] his book is a good supplement to that of Lewis." F. A. Long

N Y Times Bk R p3 N 3 '68 470w

Reviewed by J. H. Plumb
Sat R 51:36 O 26 '68 750w

SHEPARD, SAM. Five plays. 170p $5 Bobbs

812 67-22478

Contents: Chicago; Icarus's mother; Red Cross; Fourteen hundred thousand; Melo-drama play.

"Probably the best of a 1966-67 Off-Broadway excellence award winner (but for La Turista, unfortunately not in this collection). Authentic director's notes are hard to come by, but this book also provides the notes for the original production, cast, technical information, plus comment by Shepard himself.

Because of the notes, useful for libraries with courses in directing and producing in the curriculum; indispensable for library which wants strong sampling of the playwright, who, according to Edward Albee on the dust jacket, 'is one of the most gifted . . . working off-Broadway these days.'

Choice 5:214 Ap '68 160w

"Shepard is indulging some inner vision about which testimony indicates he isn't very sure himself. He plays verbal acrobatics, feels uncommitted to conventional plotting or characterization, relies on shock (rarely of the four-letter sort) and seems to trust that a happening will happen. It doesn't—despite the fact that some of the plays have won golden opinions. The collection is particularly interesting for the original director's notes on the conundrum of producing these explosive ambiguities with Mr. Shepard in corrective attendance. . . . Mr. Shepard seems to be locked in place and time; a bright undergraduate." James Sandoe

Library J 93:2520 Je 15 '68 120w

SHERBO, ARTHUR. Christopher Smart, scholar of the university. 303p $8.50 Mich. state univ. press

B or 92 Smart, Christopher 67-12575

A biography of "one of the mad poets of the 18th century. . . . He left a scholarly career at Cambridge and tried to eke out an existence in literary London. Drinking too much and succumbing to a religious mania, he spent his later years in and out of asylums. He died in 1771 in a debtor's prison." (N Y Times Bk R) Bibliography. Index.

"[This biography must] be considered the best available. . . . Sherbo's desire to include all facts leads to dreary sequences of names. Footnote references are difficult and some not clear because they are too abbreviated. Three interesting appendices and an adequate index, but no bibliography (a serious lack) or list of short titles. Essential to the increasing number of serious students of this fascinating and moving poet, this book is required for all research libraries."

Choice 5:487 Je '68 190w

"The glare of a fully researched 20th-century biography is wearying and almost indecent in the way it resurrects the details of Smart's wretchedness. The historical asides—details of London literary life and comments on contemporary treatment of the insane—are interesting, but the cataloguing of poor Kit Smart's whereabouts and doings for 40-odd years pall." N Y Times Bk R p53 S 10 '67 160w

"The biographer has discovered letters from Smart's daughter Elizabeth. . . . recounting family traditions and memories. . . . The biography offers few other clues to the poet's special quality as a man. Avoiding the sentimental, Professor Sherbo has often missed the human. . . . He has clarified the chronology of Smart's madness, evaluating and organizing the conflicting evidence with consummate skill. . . . Using the data provided by Jubilate Agno as well as less ambiguous information, Sherbo traces the poet's psychological and literary development during his insanity; and he finds sources for many of the perplexing allusions in the poem not only in Smart's past experience but in reading material ranging from registers of births, marriages, and deaths in contemporary periodicals to abstruse scientific works. He places A Song to David in a significant new context." P. M. Spacks

Yale 57:285 D '67 2000w

SHERGOLD, NORMAN DAVID. A history of the Spanish stage; from medieval times until the end of the seventeenth century. 624p pl $16.80 Oxford

862 Spanish drama—History and criticism [67-77654]

"Several chapters each are devoted to the religious drama, to the popular theater and comedia, to court plays and pageantry, and, in a final chapter, to the actors and their audiences." (Choice) Glossary.

"Mr. Shergold's book makes fascinating reading despite the high proportion of technical detail. He is thorough in his discussion both of the scripts and of the hitherto unused archival materials on staging. He has no fixed theories distorting his use of the evidence, and he generously acknowledges the work of earlier scholars. The glossary and the thirty-two illustrations enable even a lay reader like myself to follow the intricate discussions of stage sets and machinery. Historians will find especially valuable the evidence concerning the development of the vernacular in both Catalonia and Castile and the levels of audience interest and sophistication in the main towns of the peninsula from the thirteenth through the seventeenth century." Gabriel Jackson

Am Hist R 73:501 D '67 340w

"Shergold has judiciously drawn on previously published works and articles on the subject, but, more importantly, he presents impressive evidence of extensive research in libraries and archives in Spain, England, and France, where he uncovered considerable original documentary material, much still unpublished. . . . End-of-chapter summaries unravel a frequently disconcerting wealth of detail. The strong emphasis of the book on staging and the theaters themselves is perhaps regrettable, for although the non-Hispanist may well find much of interest in this volume, he will still have to await in English a comparable study of the Spanish drama of the period per se."

SHERGOLD, N. D.—Continued

Choice 4:1131 D '67 160w

"[This] book makes obsolete many earlier investigations. The work is thorough. The author does not confine himself to public theatres. . . . Once we know the date and nature of a given play, he enables us to guess more accurately how it must have been acted. This kind of help is obviously relevant to the task of the literary critic. . . . From time to time Dr. Shergold judges some aspect of a play that provides him with evidence, but criticism is not his prime concern. For his book shows us the relevance of spectacle to works of drama, the limitations of stage and auditorium, the social functions of the theatre itself."

TLS p986 O 19 '67 800w

SHERLOCK, PHILIP. The land and people of the West Indies. 172p il $3.25; lib bdg $2.93 Lippincott

917.29 West Indies—Description and travel —Juvenile literature 66-10891

"A survey of the Caribbean Archipelago, stressing the political and cultural differences as well as the geographical similarities of the islands. [Index.] Grades six to eight." (Horn Bk)

Horn Bk 44:80 F '68 30w

"This addition to the [Portraits of the Nations] series, with its well-organized, detailed coverage of the Caribbean Islands . . . gives information on the history, geography, government, industries, plant and animal life. Mr. Sherlock presents his material in a clear, informative, impersonal manner." Agnes Gregory
Library J 92:3867 O 15 '67 80w

SHERRILL, ROBERT. The drugstore liberal [by] Robert Sherrill and Harry W. Ernst. 200p $4.95 Grossman pubs.

B or 92 Humphrey, Hubert Horatio 68-31584

The Washington correspondent for The Nation, author of Gothic Politics in the Deep South (BRD 1968) has written a biography of Vice President Hubert Humphrey which seeks to show that Humphrey's "liberalism" has always been at the service of his eagerness to get ahead in [the] political world." (Publisher's note) Index.

Reviewed by J. G. Harrison

Christian Science Monitor p5 Ag 15 '68 200w

"[The authors] have uncovered countless bloopers, silly remarks (what politician has not made his quota?), and contradictions in Humphrey's political career which make him appear two-faced or stupid. Humphrey can do nothing to prove to the authors his sincere liberalism. . . . Although much of their writing is brilliant, there is another side to the Humphrey story than the one they present. . . . In an election year this book makes highly entertaining reading, but it is completely biased: Humphrey is always wrong." Keith Eubank

Library J 93:3115 S 15 '68 200w

"[The author is] out to prove that Hubert Humphrey is the devil incarnate. [He] fails at that. [He] succeeds in documenting that Humphrey is a shrewd, glib, compromising, fancy-stepping pragmatist—in short, the sort of fellow we usually choose to be our President. . . . Sherrill has a knack for the barbed phrase . . . and he can coat his indigestible theories in irresistible prose. . . . Time after time, Humphrey is judged not against the standards of the Senate but against Sherrill's notion of what the ideal Senator should be. It's a game Humphrey can hardly win. . . . [This] is a better book than 'The Accidental President' [BRD 1967, Sherrill's] assault on L.B.J. . . . The best parts . . . aren't about Humphrey at all, but are Sherrill's angry digressions on what's wrong with America—the anti-Communist mania, the corporate greed, the inadequacy of the Roosevelt-Kennedy-Johnson domestic programs, and all the rest." Patrick Anderson

N Y Times Bk ■ p1 Jl 21 '68 800w

"[Sherrill's book] is a lively, incisive and even enlightening piece of political journalism. Frankly partisan and polemical, the book is so open in its point of view and style that almost any intelligent reader can use it as a valuable aid to making up his mind about the character of the prospective Democratic candidate. Sherrill's thesis is that Hubert Humphrey's liberal credentials have always been somewhat shaky, that there is not a 'new' compromising Vice President Humphrey against an 'old' forthright and principled Senator Humphrey. Humphrey, insists Sherrill, has always been as many things to as many men as he could manage. . . . In a way, Sherrill's Humphrey is not fully grown up—Sherrill likes him, but cannot take him seriously as a force in liberal politics. . . . Sherrill's account [of Humphrey's political career] can almost be read as double-entry bookkeeping." Jack Kroll

Newsweek 72:69 Ag 5 '68 1000w

Reviewed by Donald Young
Sat R 51:42 S 7 '68 1000w

SHERRILL, ROBERT. Gothic politics in the deep South; stars of the new confederacy. 335p $6.95 Grossman pubs.

320.975 Southern States—Politics and government. Southern States—Biography 67-21236

This "is a look into the careers of some [Southern] politicians. . . . [The author attempts to show] the relationship of Governor Orval Faubus to the riots in Little Rock and of Governor Allan Shivers to the school riots in Mansfield, Texas; of Governor John Patterson to the brutalities committed against the Freedom Riders in Alabama; of Governor George Wallace to the neo-Nazi movement of Alabama; of Governors Ross Barnett and Paul Johnson to the frenzy of Ole Miss and to the triple murder in Philadelphia, Mississippi; of Governor Farris Bryant to the uncontrolled Klansmanship in St. Augustine, Florida." (Publisher's note) Some parts of this book appeared previously in The Nation and The New York Times Magazine. Index.

"Sherrill makes clear that there is little uniformity among the Gothic politicians. In the kingdom of the rascal the mere sinner is very nearly a saint as A. J. Liebling learned when he viewed Governor Earl Long up close. Leander Perez, czar of Louisiana's Plaquemines Parish and the first of Sherrill's rogues gallery, makes Senator Smathers look blandly democratic and Eastland a model of graciousness by comparison. . . . Even the current bête noire George Wallace is not without ingratiating traits that seem quite lacking in Faubus. . . . Sherrill is skeptical of schemes to depose the Gothic political type. He finds no rage for political decency sweeping the Deep South. He thinks that if black people of this generation are to get a break, 'It must be imposed.'" E. M. Yoder

Book World p9 Je 16 '68 900w

"A valuable addition to the best works on state politics in the South. . . . Chapters on money and on religion complete a catalog which paints a gloomy prospect for social justice soon in the South. . . . Highly recommended for public, college, and high school libraries."

Choice 5:1043 O '68 160w

"[Sherrill] has gathered here all the defamation available on the South's leading demagogues. It would be a valuable book if he had documented his facts. But he hasn't, so one must take his account with a grain of salt. . . . 'In a sense,' says Mr. Sherrill, 'it is a tribute to this region, the noblest slice of America, in that it not only survived but materially prospered despite the men it elected. . . . These are rare fellows, but the mold has not been broken.' Not recommended for racists with high blood pressure." J. M. Carter

Library J 93:2665 Jl '68 220w

"Sherrill, who also is the author of 'The Accidental President' [BRD 1967], a study of President Johnson . . . writes so well his opinions glitter, but they are quite rigid and firm. . . . His book is immensely entertaining and informative. And if some of his chrome conclusions and opinions are inaccurate, there are not too many of those and they are, one may be sure, made in good faith on the basis of talks with sources considered sound. . . . [He] seems to have done much of his research on the politicians and the late fundamentalist college president, Bob Jones, in the late 1940's and 1950's. . . . [Sherrill concludes] that the South is largely unchanged and that the region will alter its gothic ways slowly and reluctantly." Ralph McGill

N Y Times Bk R p3 Ap 14 '68 1800w

"[The author's] ghoul's gallery of Southern potentates is something more than a dozen profiles in cowardice. It is one man's passionate attack on what he is convinced is a perverted political system. In great detail Sherrill paints a Gothic landscape peopled by political Snopeses, those flinty, pragmatic ministers of mercantilism who, as William Faulkner prophesied, have seized the reins of power from the Old South. . . . Sometimes Sherrill paints his plenipotentiaries in postures so ridiculous that it would be funny if these men didn't control the destinies of the deprived. . . . But the comedy is clouded by calculated bigotry." P. D. Zimmerman

Newsweek 71:90 Ap 29 '68 800w

SHERWIN-WHITE, A. N. Racial prejudice in Imperial Rome. (Cambridge, England. Univ. The J. H. Gray lectures, 1966) 106p $4.50 Cambridge

323.1 Discrimination. Rome—Civilization

[67-14287]

"Sherwin-White has taken as his theme . . . the literary evidence for racial tension during the Roman Imperial period. He begins by considering the criticisms by Tacitus, Strabo and Caesar of the Celts and Germans encountered during the annexation of Northern Gaul and Britain. . . . [which offer a] contrast to the subsequent analysis of the antipathy between Romans and Greeks in the artificial atmosphere of Rome, and the anti-semitism characteristic of certain cities of the Eastern provinces." (Publisher's note) Index. Index of Greek words.

"The author has drawn his evidence from what he believed offered the 'most coherence in time and space.' Still, his choice of evidence has been very selective. These lectures are offered simply as an introduction to this important subject. . . . The evidence for the Roman attitude toward the northern barbarians as presented in the works of [Strabo, Caesar and Tacitus] is carefully analyzed, compared, and contrasted. . . . The author concludes that only the 'raw material' for racial and cultural prejudice existed in the Roman Empire. 'The distinction is political, social and religious, national rather than genetic.' The term 'racial' is used by the author to describe the antagonisms discussed only for the sake of convenience. This product of able scholarship should interest a wide audience since the subject is of great contemporary concern." R. H. Chown

Am Hist R 73:1489 Je '68 550w

"The best insights are where Caesar's portrayal of Ariovistus is newly analyzed, as are the reasons why the northern Gauls and Germans were never fully integrated into the Roman government. . . . [But] to use the term 'racial prejudice' is misleading. Change the title to 'Cultural Prejudice,' and everything falls into line. Strongly recommended for college libraries."

Choice 5:1196 N '68 200w

"Strabo (who, of course, was not a Roman), Julius Caesar (who might not have accepted Mr. Sherwin-White's interpretation of some of the things he wrote), Juvenal (always a dangerous author to use), Lucian: Mr. Sherwin-White juggles cleverly with the things that they wrote. But how universal were these prejudices, and how deep? . . . There are three points of major interest in [the] book: the suggestion that Tacitus did not write the Germania; . . . the suggestion that, on the basis of surviving inscriptions, always slightly dangerous evidence, northern Gauls . . . failed to take their proper part in Roman administration; . . . and thirdly, the suggestion that Greeks . . . did make good second-class administrators."

TLS p1103 N 23 '67 650w

SHERWOOD, MORGAN B., comp. Alaska and its history. 475p 11 maps $12.50 Univ. of Wash. press

979.8 Alaska—History

67-13108

These twenty-five essays have been "chosen to give an overall historical picture of [the] region . . . and, with the exception of three taken from books, have been reprinted from scholarly periodicals. Among the authors are . . . Alfred Hulse Brooks, Clarence Andrews, Hector Chevigny, Lawrence J. Burpee, E. L. Keithahn, and Ernest Gruening." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"Russian penetration and subsequent history through the 19th century receive much attention; the 20th century, especially the past 20 years—in which there has been much fear of a second Russian penetration—receives scant coverage. Although the book is big and expensive, it has few photographs and maps. The volume serves at least two purposes: it collects articles, most of which are useful, in one convenient place and demonstrates the need for fresh writing in the field, which the editor urges."

Choice 4:1174 D '67 110w

"Many books are written about Alaska, but unfortunately not all of them are worth reading. [These essays] are a happy exception. . . . [The book] will appeal to general readers, specialists, and young adults." N. T. Corley

Library J 92:2406 Je 15 '67 190w [YA]

Reviewed by J. Lawrence

Pacific Affairs 40:440 fall-winter '67- '68 270w

SHERWOOD, WILLIAM R. Circumference and circumstance; stages in the mind and art of Emily Dickinson. 302p $7.50 Columbia Univ. press

811 Dickinson, Emily

67-13969

"Following the chronology established by Thomas Johnson for the poetry of Emily Dickinson, [the] professor of English at Hunter College . . . examines the development of the artist from her earliest years through her most productive period in the 1860's and into the latter years of her creativity." (Library J) Bibliography. Index of first lines. Subject index.

"Whatever quarrels there will be with hypothetical constructs or with readings of individual poems in this study, it is coherent and well argued. . . . Sherwood's working out of central principles to which the 'controlled explosions' of Emily Dickinson's poetry give evidence has been much needed in spite of the impressive studies that precede this literary biography. It is regrettable, however, that Sherwood has not used The Lyman Letters [BRD 1966] edited by [R. B.] Sewell, since the information there could have been put to such good use in a concern with both the circumstances and acute consciousness of the poet. Recommended."

Choice 5:960 O '68 120w

"As Mr. Sherwood points out early in his study, other recent critics have attempted 'to define and describe her major themes,' whereas his intent 'is less to classify than to reconcile and to synthesize.' Although, with this approach, Mr. Sherwood's study lacks some of the depth and spontaneity of the better recent Dickinson studies, his examination of the poet's major themes shows careful consideration of both her poetry and letters. His 'synthesis,' moreover, is often accompanied by perceptive observations. . . . For larger literature collections." L. E. Bone

Library J 93:81 Ja 1 '68 200w

Reviewed by David Porter

New Eng Q 41:459 S '68 1050w

TLS p768 Jl 25 '68 250w

"The author is so intent on proving that the poet was an orthodox Calvinist Puritan that he fails to do justice to the sheer beauty and wit of many poems. He seems unable to accept a nature poem as having value in itself, but must establish it as a carrier of religious or philosophical meaning which supports his thesis. He depends for chronology on the conjectural dates of the composition of the poems proposed by Thomas Johnson in his comprehensive edition of the poems. If this dating should prove faulty, his whole structure is weakened in proportion. Yet there is much in this book that is sound and sensible, and it may prove to be, for the reader who can make allowance for the author's thesis, one of the three or four most useful critical works so far published on Emily Dickinson's poetry."

Va Q R 44:cix summer '68 300w

"Sherwood brings great sympathy to his subject, viewing Emily Dickinson as less neurotic than she has previously been considered and creating the image of a poet who knew exactly what she had to do to survive in a nineteenth-century New England town like Amherst. [This] is a valuable study, for it establishes a convincing pattern to Emily Dickinson's poetry."

SHERWOOD, W. R.—Continued

son's poetry; it is marred, however, by an opaque style and by the kind of parochial scholarship—Sherwood is excessively self-conscious of other established critics—that often attends the doctoral dissertation dressed up as a critical study." T. L. Gross
Yale R 57:619 summer '68 370w

SHETLER, STANWYN G. The Komarov botanical institute: 250 years of Russian research. 240p pl $5.95 Smithsonian inst. press 581.947 Botany—Russia 67-27012

In this historical account, "the author describes the physical setting and intellectual climate of the Institute along with its vast resources. . . . [He discusses] the completion of the . . . 30-volume Flora of the USSR. . . . [and] closes with an outline of the Institute's . . . plans for the future." (Publisher's note) Chronology. Bibliography. Index.

"Shetler has familiarity with Russian botanical literature and has visited the Komarov Institute. . . . This is the only extensive work in English about the Komarov Botanical Institute . . . [and] should be of particular interest to practicing plant taxonomists and historians of science. For others who want to know about the Soviet Union, it would have only marginal interest."

Choice 5:812 S '68 140w

"Shetler, an associate curator at the Smithsonian's Natural History Museum, . . . has written [an attractive] account of the institute and its activities. . . . The rather complicated history . . . is described concisely, accurately, and with sympathy. . . . The contributions of the institute and its predecessors in descriptive botany, which are indeed outstanding, are discussed clearly and with profound understanding. And since in this area of botany the institute has . . . always maintained the leading position in Russia, Shetler's book mirrors the history of much of Russian botany. . . . If read carefully it mirrors a good deal more, namely, certain features that seem quite typical of Soviet Russian biological sciences in general." Anton Lang

Science 160:979 My 31 '68 800w

SHETZLINE, DAVID. DeFord. 217p $4.95 Random house

67-22650

"DeFord is a carpenter whose life has been spent working on the ranches and in the lumberyards of the West. He travels to New York City to attend the burial of his last relative, suffers a heart attack, and is forced through lack of money to take a room in the Bowery. . . . [There he is surrounded by men like] Dee Bee Smith, a wino of indeterminate age and origin, who speaks only in business memorandums, and who has found freedom and joy in a life of drunkenness and squalor. There is Joe Raven, a misshapen man of utter evil who robs DeFord of his pension check, and provides a threat of violent death throughout the story. There's a young artist named Johnnie Leggatt, whom DeFord rescues from hopelessness, cynicism, and sterility." (Sat R)

Reviewed by W. B. Hill

America 118:623 My 4 '68 60w

Reviewed by R. B. Nordberg

Best Sell 28:60 My 1 '68 170w

"The author writes with verve, humor, wild imagination, and erudition. However, Leggatt, his young painter-hero . . . speaks so fancily, so prosily, that the reader rebels, and too many of the other characters sound stagey and stilted. Too bad, since the book promises so well at the start. But DeFord himself emerges as real in a bizarre world, one that is fascinating to read about. A first novel, it makes one look forward to Shetzline's next."

Choice 5:960 O '68 150w

"The story is not so much about life in the Bowery as it is the strong characterizations of a variety of individuals. . . . Flashbacks to DeFord's life in America's West are well handled. . . . Perhaps the book's greatest fault is revealed in its own text: 'Your painting is full of greatness. It simply hasn't collected itself.' Recommended for comprehensive fiction collections." J. N. Whitten

Library J 93:772 F 15 '68 300w

Reviewed by R. A. Sokolov

Newsweek 72:80 J1 22 '68 180w

"[Shetzline] reveals an ability to create ■ truth totally personal, foreign to and yet illuminating objective reality which is the usual province of poetry. . . . The creation of highly styled, semipoetic fiction carries its own rewards and danger. If the author is no longer hampered by the unities of time and place, if he can at will smudge reality or collapse it like an accordion, he can discover a short cut to pace and tension in his writing. But unless he possesses much maturity, he may find himself unable to create character. This, in my opinion, is where Shetzline falls short. Burdened with so much symbolism, his characters become subservient to the author's moral indignations and poetic intuitions. In Shetzline's world there is good and evil, but little in between." Edwin Fadiman

Sat R 51:60 My 13 '68 500w

Time 91:98B Ap 12 '68 250w

Va Q R 44:xvii summer '68 100w

SHIBUTANI, TAMOTSU. Improvised news; a sociological study of rumor. 262p $6.50; pa $2.95 Bobbs

301.15 Rumor

66-29399

A professor of sociology at the "University of California at Santa Barbara reports his own . . . studies and reviews those of numerous others as they bear upon the nature and function of rumor as a social process. He begins with the question, 'How do people make up their minds in ambiguous situations?' . . . In the seven chapters he develops a theory of rumor and a set of derivative hypotheses, assembles a . . . number of illustrative instances, analyzes some . . . rumor producing situations, and assesses the related literature from pre-World War I to the present." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"A sensible contribution to this field by a careful and thoughtful sociologist. . . . In it, [Shibutani] sums up work over a period of almost two decades that included four years of special field observation, impressive scholarly investigations, and careful consideration. . . . He takes rumor to be a type of communicative social activity to be studied situationally in society rather than in a laboratory. . . . Shibutani discusses the rumor process as a reaction to the failure of formal news channels. . . . He relates it to propaganda, to social change and thus to culture formation and modification, to social and institutional controls, and to public policy. . . . A key aspect of this theory of rumor is that 'men are responsive only to suggestions that are consistent with their beliefs and inclinations.'" A. M. Lee

Ann Am Acad 374:213 N '67 380w

"In the first general treatise on rumor in the nearly two decades since [G.] Allport and [L.] Postman's The Psychology of Rumor [BRD 1947, Shibutani] . . . sees rumor as a form of news which is generated when relevant 'official' information is lacking, but he does not consider rumors to be necessarily distorted or false; on the contrary, he finds them to be subject to a process of natural selection, based upon the factor of plausibility, which weeds out the least reliable and pertinent information. . . . Students of sociology, psychology, political science, and communication will find the book to be readable and interesting, and an excellent introduction to an important field of theory and research on human behavior. Extensive bibliography."

Choice 4:1187 D '67 180w

Christian Century 84:311 Mr 8 '67 70w

"The treatise adds to our understanding of the phenomenon known as rumor. Such knowledge is significant if one accepts Professor Shibutani's theory that 'since it is very unlikely that every new event will be defined satisfactorily through authoritative channels, it seems that rumors will always play some part in the efforts of men to come to terms with their ever-changing world.' . . . This study has an excellent bibliography (referred to throughout the text); it will have its greatest potential value in academic libraries." Edward Mapp
Library J 92:1947 My 15 '67 160w

SHIH, VINCENT Y. C. The Taiping ideology: its sources, interpretations, and influences. (Washington [state] Univ. Publication on Asia) 553p $10 Univ. of Wash. press

951 China—History—Taiping rebellion. 1850-1864

66-19571

"In addition to an exposition of Taiping doctrine and an analysis of its sources, this study includes . . . chapters assessing the wide range of 19th- and 20th-century interpretations of the Taiping movement, from missionary to Communist—and gives a 'transcendent interpretation' by the author himself. . . . Bibliography of works in Chinese and other languages." (Choice) Index.

"Earlier discussions of Taiping ideology have tended to emphasize Taiping borrowing from Christianity. Shih also pays great attention to the less dramatic but vastly important traditionalist elements in Taiping beliefs. . . . The work is full of quotations from Taiping documents and other sources. . . . This is the most thoroughly developed interpretation of Taiping ideology which has yet appeared. Together with the first volume of a projected three-volume set, The Taiping Rebellion: History and Documents [BRD 1966] by F. Michael and Chung-li Chang, it deserves a prominent place in the library of any college, university, or other institution which gives serious attention to modern Chinese history."

Choice 5:543 Je '68 180w

"For better or for worse, an understanding of modern Chinese history rests largely upon interpretations of the titanic Taiping Rebellion. . . . Unfortunately too much of the literature on the subject is descriptive rather than analytical, and is, moreover, based upon inadequate examination of the voluminous sources. Professor Shih's philosophically oriented study, a product of the long-range modern Chinese history project of the University of Washington, brilliantly transcends the many limitations of prior inquiries. . . . He confirms some long-standing views; he also compels either modification or rejection of many others. . . . Indispensable for large libraries." Hyman Kublin

Library J 93:1626 Ap 15 '68 150w

"The value of Professor Shih's study lies more in the material it makes available in English than in his analysis. First he outlines Taiping views of religion, morals, society, politics and other subjects in what will probably be the most useful part of the book for the general student of Chinese history. His discussion of the development of the ideology is, unfortunately, mainly limited to comparing at considerable length the different editions of some Taiping ideological statements. . . . Professor Shih prefers amassing facts to tying them together into shape. . . . It is also a pity that although written in English the book does not make sufficient allowance for the non-specialist reader to be an ideal introduction for him to this most interesting subject. It will, however, be appreciated by the western sinologue too busy to find all the original material for himself."

TLS p890 Ag 22 '68 550w

SHIMER, JOHN A. This changing earth; an introduction to geology; drawings by Genevieve Shimer. 233p maps $5.95 Harper

551 Geology

67-28815

"A professor of geology at Brooklyn College attempts to give some idea of what geology is about and what some of the problems are. . . . [The book] emphasizes the ever-changing physical aspects of the earth in its four and a half billion years of existence and the changes in our ideas about the earth resulting from new information." (Publisher's note) Bibliography: Index.

Choice 5:1166 N '68 90w

"Dr. Shimer published a pleasant volume called This Sculptured Earth: The Landscape of America [BRD 1960], an informal layman's discussion of surface geology. . . . His new book is on a larger scale; he concentrates on the why and how and when . . . in terms of broader phenomena such as glaciers, earthquakes, and underground water, and their effect on the earth as we know it. This book would seem to be aimed at the intelligent, interested layman rather than at the formal student. Useful in public libraries, it will be less so in academic libraries except perhaps for very general courses." W. C. Allen

Library J 93:198 Ja 15 '68 130w

SHINAGEL, MICHAEL. Daniel Defoe and middle-class gentility. 279p $6 Harvard univ. press

823 Defoe, Daniel

68-14273

"The aim of this work is to examine the significance of the theme of middle-class gentility in Defoe's life, works, and age." (Pref) Index.

Choice 5:960 O '68 220w

"Going well beyond literary criticism, and into the areas of social history and biography, . . . this very thorough study attempts to explain the generating force behind Defoe's varied and memorable achievements. That generating force [Shinagel] finds in Defoe's passionate ambition to achieve the status of gentility. . . . Although the book is at times repetitious, and not much illuminated by new insights or by a sparkling prose style, it is certain to become a standard work on Defoe." J. A. Rycenga

Library J 93:1144 Mr 15 '68 120w

"If [Shinagel] is writing for informed readers, then too much of the time he is belaboring the obvious, going back over ground already taken for granted by other scholars. . . . If this book is aimed at a more general public, then surely some explanation should be given of how Defoe happened to start writing fiction at all. . . . what gives his narratives their special quality, and how they relate to his other works. . . . But so total is the concentration on middle-class gentility that no literary evaluation is attempted, and works of Defoe that do not reflect this theme . . . are not even mentioned. . . . [Shinagel isolates] one well-known aspect of Defoe and [re-examines] relevant works in the light of that." R. B. Dooley

Sat R 51:29 Jl 6 '68 280w

TLS p1179 O 17 '68 1050w

SHINNIE, P. L. Meroe; a civilization of the Sudan. 229p pl maps $7.50 Praeger

913.32 Meroe

66-25118

"This volume relates what is known of the 'ancient civilization of Meroe, which flourished from the 6th Century B.C. to about the 14th Century A.D.'" (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"As a summary of what is presently known about Meroitic civilization on the upper Nile, Shinnie's book shows how much remains to be learned in this area at dynastic Egypt's doorstep. The style of presentation is anything but exciting, although the illustrations and documentation are excellent. The book should be of some interest to all historians and to African historians, in particular."

Choice 5:1196 N '68 100w

"This book is particularly valuable in restoring Meroe's independent identity and in providing needed information on the early historical map of Africa. . . . Professor Shinnie has culled numerous references to Meroe from classical literature and has made full use of archaeological materials on various sites and in museums. For the general reader there could be no better introduction to Meroe." Joseph Bram

Library J 92:3418 O 1 '67 190w

SHNEIDMAN, EDWIN S., ed. Essays in self-destruction. 554p $12.50 Science house

394 Suicide

67-27406

This "collection of writings on suicide and related phenomena has [an] . . . interdisciplinary scope. The essays are classified as: (1) literary and philosophic; (2) sociological and ethnographic; (3) psychological and psychiatric; (4) toxicologic and forensic. Most of the contributors have had some connection with the Center for the Scientific Study of Suicide." (Choice) Some of the essays previously appeared in periodicals. Index.

"A small number of contributions are actual studies producing data. The question can be raised as to whether these are the best contributions extant on suicide and self-destructive behavior, and whether one may at this date not get more valid understanding of suicide elsewhere than in this volume. Makes a contribution mainly to specialists in the field."

Choice 5:412 My '68 160w

"[The] editor, one of the leading authorities on suicide has assembled a worthy group of contributors, including not only psychologists, psychiatrists, and other clinicians but also philosophers, sociologists, and students of literature. . . . The book does not pretend to offer a comprehensive or detailed sweep of the subject, but the essays are wide-ranging and encompass not only suicidal behavior per se but the broad realm of the self-destructing and self-negating facets of human conduct. . . . It is clear from these diverse contributions that we need to advance beyond the usual three-part taxonomy of threatened, attempted, and accomplished suicide. A major strength of the book is that . . . suicide is perceived as part of the general realm of personality." Herman Feifel

SHNEIDMAN, E. S.—Continued

Science 161:1336 S 27 '68 950w

SHÖNAGON, SEI. See Sei Shōnagon

SHORES, LOUIS, ed. The library-college; contributions for American higher education at the Jamestown college workshop, 1965; ed. by Louis Shores, Robert Jordan [and] John Harvey. 287p $7 Drexel press; for sale by Drexel bookstore

027.7 Libraries, College and university 66-28583

"For several years before the Jamestown College Workshop was convened in December 1965, the participants had circulated papers and corresponded on the library-college idea. They were already advocates of the idea when President Sillers invited them to think with him and members of the Jamestown faculty about the establishment of a library-college for the liberal arts on that campus. Their papers, the Library-College Newsletters, and the Jamestown Workshop Committee Reports—Charter, Curriculum, Personnel, Supporting Media and Architecture—are gathered in this volume." (Col & Res Lib) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"[This] should be of vital interest to any librarian who is concerned as an educator. The earliest paper was written in 1934 by Louis Shores and is entitled 'The Library Arts College, a Possibility in 1954.' . . . New ground was broken by Patricia Knapp in 1956 in her paper 'A Suggested Program of College Instruction in the Use of the Library.' In the 1960's Robert Jordan has gathered together many librarians who feel that there is a teaching function to librarianship. . . . If there was a neglected topic of discussion at Jamestown, it was, perhaps, the 'Training and Orientation' of librarians." Charlotte Fletcher
Col & Res Lib 29:157 Mr '68 550w

"Thirty-six librarians, college administrators, professors, and students have joined in this massive attack on the conventional wisdom about how to run a liberal arts college. . . . The most interesting and potentially controversial part of this volume is probably the basic assumption in which the whole library-college idea rests. . . . 'that the library is the central resource from which knowledge can be obtained.' . . . The future of the library-college idea is certainly indeterminate at this time. The volume at hand may well serve as a bible for this cause." E. M. Oboler
Library J 92:1909 My 15 '67 650w

SHORT, WAYNE. This raw land. 202p $4.95 Random house

917.98 Alaska, Frontier and pioneer life—Alaska 68-14509

"In a previous book 'The Cheechakoes' [BRD 1964], Short told how with his father and mother and two brothers he went to the Alaskan Panhandle shortly after World War II to make a home on an Alaskan island. In this sequel he relates how he took his bride Barbara to Baranof island and established a new home to raise his family in, on the eastward coast of that island almost directly opposite Sitka." (Best Sell)

"An exciting account of adventures in hunting, fishing, trapping, of fighting the elements and enduring treacherous sea. A book for those who relish adventure, it might also be recommended as a tribute to the courage of Mrs. Short." Best Sell 28:124 Je 15 '68 140w

"Short has interspersed the descriptions of the family's adventures with observations on the local wildlife. Regrettably, though clearly written, the book is dull. I would not have bothered finishing it if I had not felt honor bound to do so. . . . Public libraries which might need material on frontier life might consider the inclusion of this book." N. T. Corley

Library J 93:1999 My 15 '68 150w

SHOUP, PAUL. Communism and the Yugoslav national question. (Columbia univ. East Central European study) 308p $9.50 Columbia univ. press

320.9497 Communism—Yugoslavia. Yugoslavia—Politics and government 68-19759

"This book analyzes the efforts of the Yugoslav Communist Party, since its inception in 1919, to deal with rivalries between national groups, and between national groups and minorities, in the Yugoslav state." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Most of the book deals with the attitude of the Yugoslav Communist party to the national question during the period of Marshal Tito's leadership. . . . [The Czech crisis] came after Dr Shoup had finished his book. It is well written, based on a multitude of sources and meticulously annotated. It will appeal to those who have a general interest in this problem and it has a great deal of most valuable material for the specialist. It is essential reading for everybody interested in present-day Yugoslavia and in the wider field of the problems of nationalities and of east European communism. Some of Dr Shoup's conclusions may be debated, but the book is a basic contribution to the subject."

Economist 229:72 N 23 '68 700w

Reviewed by A. H. Pogany

Library J 93:2486 Je 15 '68 180w

SHOWERS, KAY SPERRY, jt. auth. Before you were a baby. See Showers, P.

SHOWERS, PAUL. Before you were a baby, by Paul Showers and Kay Sperry Showers; il. by Ingrid Fetz. 33p $3.50 Crowell

612.6 Reproduction—Juvenile literature. Embryology—Juvenile literature 68-13588

Using diagrams and pictures human reproduction is explained from conception through gestation to birth. "Ages seven to eight." (Sat R)

"This book will be basic to any collection of sex education titles for preschool and primary grade children . . . as well as for teachers, librarians and parents." L. L. Clark

Library J 93:4717 D 15 '68 80w

Reviewed by J. K. Gardner

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p64 N 3 '68 90w

"Without fanfare, mystery, coyness, or superfluous information, this gives the facts . . . in a format that is attractive and in language that is clear and simple. The illustrations of children are beguiling; the diagrams helpful, and the print large; the writing is lucid and matter-of-fact, happily combining exact terminology and a sense of respectful wonder at the marvelous process of human reproduction. Simple enough to be read aloud to younger children, but primarily for independent reading." Zena Sutherland

Sat R 51:46 N 9 '68 90w

SHOWERS, PAUL. Hear your heart; il. by Joseph Low. 35p $3.25 Crowell

612 Heart—Juvenile literature 68-11067

The author "describes the structure of your heart and tells how it does its vital work." (Publisher's note) "Kindergarten to grade two." (Library J)

"A good presentation of the structure and working of the heart, with the suggestion that youngsters listen to their friends' hearts using a cardboard-tube stethoscope. The writing is clear and simple enough for primary-grade children to read. The attractive illustrations expand the text." Isadora Kunitz

Library J 93:1792 Ap 15 '68 60w

"Appropriate terms enhance the description, for example, 'pumpum'—child's heart beat; . . . 'tuppa tuppa tuppa' baby's (faster). Mr. Showers then settles into a discussion of the mechanical workings of the heart, the different functions of the veins and the arteries and the circulatory system in its entirety. Text and illustrations vividly tell how these processes take place, but fail to touch on why. This latter point is the only criticism of an otherwise worthwhile book."

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p52 My 5 '68 100w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland

Sat R 51:42 Ag 24 '68 70w

Reviewed by Philip Morrison

Sci Am 219:128 D '68 90w

SHRAKE, EDWIN. Blessed McGill. 234p $4.50 Doubleday

McGill, Peter Hermano—Fiction 68-11761
 "Peter Hermano McGill's picaresque adventures across the American Southwest of the 1800's begin with a mutilation and lynching and end with his crucifixion by an outlaw Indian. . . . [Before his death] McGill survives several captures and merciless beatings, goes on a . . . wild buffalo hunt, rescues a maiden, and enjoys an early version of a hippie pot party (peyote is used). McGill meets his inevitable death—and his state of blessedness—when he gives up his life to save a Franciscan mission from destruction." (Library J)

"Novelist and sportswriter E. Shrake . . . [has written] a chronicle of a man's search for peace, reason, and self, depicted against a gigantic panorama of the unsettled West. . . . While it is rich in lore of the better-known Indian tribes of the area, including the Mexican tribes of the Occidental Range, a strong stomach is needed to digest the ensanguined proceedings. Historic personages and places bring their own credibility to the tale. . . . The battles, captures, tortures, treatments, and escapes [are] vivid, graphic, and repulsive. . . . The historical aspects of the story should make this a good reference for adult consideration." J. A. LaHaye Best Sell 27:426 F 1 '68 500w [YA]

"This story gives a tremendous picture of the violence, bloodshed, and lawlessness of the 1880's. . . . Blessed McGill atoned for his wild life by giving up his own life for God and his neighbors. Mr. Shrake's story about this Catholic figure is recommended for college, university and public libraries needing material on the violent life of the frontier West." G. F. Dole
 Library J 92:4526 D 15 '67 210w

Reviewed by Glenda Todd

Library J 93:1821 Ap 15 '68 120w [YA]

"The high adventure in [this] book is interwoven with a lot of fascinating material about the lives and customs of the Indians, some of it slightly angled to the modern reader, as in the account of Peyote trips. Mr. Shrake's attitude to the Indian combines the traditional concept of the Noble Redskin with sophisticated anthropology; there is a pervading sense of cultural relativism, and the book suggests that if the white settlers were bastards, the Indians they exploited and slaughtered were not, when it came to the point, all that noble either. . . . An interesting book." Bernard Bergonzi
 N Y Rev of Books 11:38 Jl 11 '68 150w

SHRYOCK, RICHARD HARRISON, Medical licensing in America, 1650-1965. 124p $5 Johns Hopkins press

609.73 Physicians, Medicine—Laws and regulations. Medicine, State 67-16045

"Dr. Shryock traces the development of standards for the practice of medicine which accompanied the evolution of medicine as a scientific discipline, and [relates it to] . . . trends in medical education. . . . [The] story is presented against the European background from which it evolved, and . . . attention is paid to parallel developments in the British, French, and German histories of licensing. . . . Such comparisons between different countries and different professions place the medical theme within its historical, geographical, and interdisciplinary contexts." (Publisher's note) Index.

"Dr. Shryock, social historian and medical historian, makes the story clear and interesting. . . . There have been studies of medical licensure in particular jurisdictions, but this is the first published synthesis of the whole. It is a masterful work that displays a catholicity of interest, wide knowledge, thorough scholarship, and sound judgment. Except that it might be noted that Shryock's chronology does not stay firm, there is little room for criticism. One caveat might be entered, however. The juxtaposition of the American Medical Association's interest in quackery and the passage of the 1961 drug act should not leave the impression that the AMA consistently favored that legislation." D. L. Cowen
 Am Hist R 73:1233 Ap '68 550w

Reviewed by V. D. Bornet

Ann Am Acad 337:198 My '68 700w

"This is a succinct but meaty book on an important subject. Medical licensing involves the size of the profession and its nature, with regard to specialties; and it prescribes a minimum standard of professional knowledge. The author leads the reader through the maze of three centuries of regulation and perceptively indicates the social and economic forces which influenced the changes he describes." G. W. Adams

J Am Hist 54:872 Mr '68 350w

SHULMAN, IRVING. Valentino. (Trident press bk) 499p il $6.95 Simon & Schuster

B or 92 Valentino, Rudolph 66-12335

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Choice 4:1404 F '68 50w

Reviewed by G. D. McDonald

Library J 93:543 F 1 '68 200w

Reviewed by Jack Leavitt

Nation 206:314 Mr 4 '68 500w

SHULMAN, MILTON. Kill 3. 217p $4.50 Random house

67-22679

In this novel by a British theatre critic, "three children of a working-class widow are [kidnapped]; a large sum of money is demanded for their safe return from a respected firm of lawyers which has no connection whatsoever with the family. Should the lawyers pay? The firm, split into two factions, finally agrees to a compromise. So does the newspaper which scoops the story and starts a fund to raise the ransom; so do the police investigating the case. Everyone compromises except for the two kidnapers, who seem to be modeled at least in part on Evans and Hindley, the Moors murderers." (Book World) This book appeared in serial form in the Saturday Evening Post.

"[The author] has done an excellent job of honing an old saw—kidnapping—into an instrument which cuts just about everything it touches. . . . What Shulman's book shows so well is how feeble the forces of reason can appear when they have to deal with hate and madness." Dick Adler

Book World p10 Ja 14 '68 290w

Reviewed by C. A. Hough

Library J 92:3057 S 15 '67 90w

"Shulman might claim that [this book] rises far above any mere puzzle-solving entertainment. So it does—but at the cost of incurring judgment by the highest standards. . . . The Galsworthian dramas within the office [of the firm of solicitors] are enjoyable, provided you close your mind to a fact: . . . that the lives of three children may be involved. [The author does present a] strident satirisation of the way that Press and television exploit such things. . . . [However], like the society he condemns, [Shulman] is a good deal surer-footed about bitchery in the communications industry than about the madness of child-murderers. Like its own characters, this novel can't do much more than slyly goggle at the problems it conjures up." Francis Hope
 New Statesman 73:191 F 10 '67 450w

"A vivid moral dilemma. . . . What is one's responsibility for the lives of one's unknown brothers (or at least nephews)? The press, the broadcasters and even the police manipulate the situation to their own advantage. A cynical and possibly shallow story, but theatrically highly effective." Anthony Boucher

N Y Times Bk R p75 N 26 '67 80w

SHUMAKER, WAYNE. Unpremeditated verse: feeling and perception in Paradise lost. 230p $6 Princeton univ. press

821 Milton, John—Paradise lost 67-21029

By "examining various Books of Paradise Lost, Professor Shumaker demonstrates how Milton plays on the subconscious responses [of his readers] through his choice of visual and auditory images. . . . According to the author, Milton's descriptions do not describe objects but rather make the reader form attitudes which help determine the reactions to incidents in the poem. . . . [Shumaker believes] . . . that during the act of composition . . . [the poet registers] what is happening on all levels of his psyche, conscious and unconscious." (Publisher's note) Index.

"Believing that poetry has a capacity 'to make accessible to contemplation, and hence to cognition, those parts of our total psychic activity which are not rationally articulated,' [Shumaker] here tests in a particular poem some of the theories developed in his earlier Literature and the Irrational. . . . The chapters are somewhat uneven in value, being most helpful when least psychological. There are many clear and very penetrating analyses of individual passages. The intention of the work is to supplement, not supplant, other types of criticism. For those interested in the relation between psychology and literature, it is an important book; for others, its perusal is rewarding and stimulating."

SHUMAKER, WAYNE—Continued

Choice 5:346 My '68 180w

"We set out hoping to be dazzled by new insight or at least pleasurably outraged. We are soon bored. The suspicion overtakes us as we meander through a genial, digressive style manifestly at odds with a quest demanding a ruthless and hardheaded approach. And it is confirmed by the atmosphere of specious, filing card scientism. . . . What emerges for the most part is a flat-footed variety of explication. . . . [However,] Mr. Shumaker is nowhere as naive as I may have indicated. In a sense, it is his informed awareness, his will to play honestly, which have tripped him up. . . . That he is erudite, that he has pored over Paradise Lost with absolute devotion, that he is capable of sensitive and intelligent reading (his chapter on animism is informative and sound if finally irrelevant to his major thesis),—all of these things are unquestionable."

Kenneth Connelly

Yale R 57:589 summer '68 1000w

SHUSTER, ALVIN, ed. Washington: the New York Times guide to the Nation's Capital. See The New York Times

SHUSTER, GEORGE N. Catholic education in a changing world. 241p $5.95 Holt

377 Catholic Church in the U.S. Church and education 67-19044

"Formally, this book is a companion commentary to last year's Notre Dame study of Catholic elementary and secondary schools Catholic Schools in Action [BRD 1966]. . . . [The author] now assistant to the president at Notre Dame and formerly president of Hunter College for more than 20 years . . . also draws upon other surveys and treatises, such as the [A.] Greeley-[P.] Rossi report, The Education of Catholic Americans [BRD 1967]. . . . [He] examines the historical roots of American Catholic schools, their future prospects, their intellectual and spiritual aims, the quality of instruction, the status of religious vs. lay faculty, problems in higher education, federal aid to church schools [and] the impact of Vatican Council II in such areas as the role of education in the Church's social mission, and freedom of intellectual inquiry and dialogue." (Library J) Bibliography.

"An avowed humanist, Dr. Shuster is a bit uncomfortable as an interpreter of sociological research. . . . [However] his broad-gauged analysis of the motivations of Catholic education and his balanced account of the movements in the Catholic Church . . . amply reward the Carnegie Foundation for whatever funds they devoted to this project. . . . [He] presents a sobering but not bleak analysis of the [financing of Catholic schools]. . . . [He] is ambivalent [about Catholic Universities]. He marshals an impressive list of reasons against the desirability or feasibility of having many institutions of university stature under Catholic sponsorship. On the other hand he makes a strong case for a few outstanding Catholic universities. . . . At a time when graciousness and tolerance seem on the wane among Catholic writers, it is refreshing to read [his] mellow observations, temperate criticisms and non-dogmatic suggestions. He has given us a wise and rich interpretation of issues confronting the postconciliar American Catholic Church." C. F. Donovan

America 118:86 Ja 20 '68 850w

Choice 5:658 Jl '68 170w

"I find myself in deep sympathy with Dr. Shuster's main concern, his ultimate motive, and his fear. And his book makes me uneasy. Here we have a reflective and experienced author, a subject of immense importance, and impressive empirical data. Yet Dr. Shuster does not know exactly what paths Catholic education should take in our changing world. He reflects on a broad range of problems and possibilities, but without any single, sharp focus. His book forces us instead to see the enormously complex difficulties which must be faced by educators in the private and religious systems and to which he offers no ad hoc solutions." R. J. McNamara

Commonweal 87:725 Mr 15 '68 900w

Reviewed by W. E. McManus
Critic 27:64 Ag '68 1000w

"Because there is little that has not been published elsewhere at greater length, this book is recommended primarily for education collections in Catholic institutions and other large academic and public libraries." C. E. Zakrzewski

Library J 92:4500 D 15 '67 190w

"It is [Shuster's] conviction 'that American Catholic schools have been considerably better than their reputations and are doubtless here to stay.' These are the main threads of a lucid, balanced and timely argument for the preservation of the Catholic school. . . . The future of Catholic education, the author correctly perceives, will largely be determined by laymen. . . . Unfortunately, his polemic runs thin precisely where strong argument is needed. He fails to suggest a new rationale for Catholic schools more pertinent than the education of a social and religious élite. Instead, much of the book rehearses familiar themes on how to improve the schools, most of which boils down to more Government aid. To his credit, Mr. Shuster pleads for Federal aid not only for Catholic schools but for all schools; his arguments for more money are framed in terms of national needs. . . . [His book] deserves to be read by those concerned about education in America." M. R. Berube

N Y Times Bk R p3 F 18 '68 1250w

Reviewed by Robert Hassenger
Record 70:175 N '68 1600w

Reviewed by John Calam
Sat R 51:88 My 18 '68 30w

SIBLEY, CELESTINE. A place called Sweet Apple; il. by Ray Cruz. 240p $4.95 Doubleday
630.1 Country life—Georgia. Cookery—Georgia 67-22465

The author, who bought and restored a log cabin known as "Sweet Apple" in a section of rural Georgia, describes her experiences and devotes more than ninety pages to favorite recipes. Some of the material in this book has appeared in the Atlanta Constitution. Index.

"[The recipes range] from beans to butter rolls, hominy to pound cakes. Each recipe has a little anecdote to introduce it. The whole thing is charmingly pleasant reading." Best Sell 27:387 Ja 1 '68 140w

"[Mrs. Sibley] describes a rural section of Georgia [with affection]. Of particular delight is her account of the seasons as they unfold. . . . For the general reader." J. P. Boegel
Library J 92:3993 N 1 '67 160w

SIBLEY, MARILYN MCADAMS. Travelers in Texas, 1761-1860. 236p il maps $5 Univ. of Tex. press

917.64 Texas—Description and travel. Texas—History 66-23974

"Using several hundred original sources written during the 100 years preceding the Civil War, [the author], who teaches history at Houston Baptist College, analyzes the varied reactions of travelers to the land and people of Texas. Their impressions are organized around such topics as the character of the people, ideas of law and justice, and the condition and treatment of Indians and slaves." (Library J) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"Sibley examines such topics as Indians, slavery, immigration, law enforcement, and the picturesque language of the frontier. Professor William R. Hogan covered all of these subjects in more depth a generation ago in The Texas Republic: A Social and Economic History [BRD 1947], but for a much briefer period. There is, indeed, little in the present volume that has not been told already. . . . This book will appeal to readers and scholars outside the region as well as within." W. E. Hollon
Am Hist R 73:398 F '68 380w

"No publication on this subject has included so collective or so well digested an account of outsiders in Texas. Sibley's knowledge of the motives for their journeys gives the reader a perspective not found in other sources. The evaluation of travel accounts as to authenticity and objectivity in 'Critical Essays on Sources' represents a unique contribution attempted by few writers on Texas, none of whom have succeeded so well. At the same time, the volume does not take on the format of an annotated bibliography. . . . Many who came were most perceptive, and those who were prejudiced do not detract unduly from this most readable account which examines Texans—Indians, whites, and Negroes—and their peculiar characteristics. . . . For high school, public, and college libraries." Choice 4:1174 D '67 130w [YA]

Reviewed by T. M. Bogle
Library J 92:2570 J1 '67 80w

SICES, DAVID. Music and the musician in Jean Christophe; the harmony of contrasts. (Yale Univ. Yale Romanic studies: 2d ser, 17). 189p $6.50 Yale Univ. press

843 Rolland, Romain—Jean-Christophe
68-13928

"Showing the importance of Spinoza, Renan, and Goethe on the intellectual formation of Rolland, the [author] traces the role of certain key images of these writers in the musical and literary development of the author. The . . . role of Tolstoy in Rolland's artistic life is studied . . . as are Rolland's relations with contemporary composers. Sices follows the moral-aesthetic tension in the artistic and intellectual growth of Rolland . . . in Jean-Christophe, and he attempts to clarify, in his conclusion, just how [this ten-volume work] can be seen as a 'musical novel.'" (Choice) Bibliography.

"Sices has written a serious and competent study of a subject often suggested but never thoroughly examined. He has drawn on his careful reading of Rolland works and correspondence, other works of the period, and some important inédits of the Fonds Rolland. . . . A good appraisal of a moment in European aesthetic consciousness, a valuable elucidation of Jean-Christophe and, incidentally, of Rolland's other works, this study—despite its occasional over-schematic organization—is a necessary addition to all serious libraries."

Choice 5:966 O '68 180w

"Mr. Sices [is] associate professor of French and Italian at Dartmouth College. . . . The one regret a reader might have is, since this is part of a Romance language series, all quotations from the novel are in the original French with no translations supplied. This will considerably limit the appeal of this work for the general reader. It should be considered for larger collections." Joseph Boonin

Library J 93:4561 D 1 '68 80w

"The development of music, [Rolland] maintained, derived from the action of one civilization upon another. Hence the marriage of the French, German and Italian ideals in Jean-Christophe, and their unification in a 'Musical United States'. . . . Mr. Sices illuminates Rolland's view of the Paris musical scene in the decade before the First World War from many fresh angles. . . . [He also] traces the evidence of many of Rolland's opinions in Jean-Christophe."

TLS p900 Ag 22 '68 600w

SIDEY, HUGH. A very personal presidency: Lyndon Johnson in the White House. 305p $5.95 Atheneum pub.

973.923 Johnson, Lyndon Baines. U.S.—Politics and government—1961— 68-12545

A journalist who has been a Washington correspondent "attempts to explain the . . . Johnson years in relation to the man himself. [He] traces not so much the physical details of our involvement in Vietnam as Johnson's mental processes and the prejudices and the conditioning that led him to make the decisions he did. The book [also] examines the growth of the idea of the Great Society and . . . [concludes with a chapter analyzing the President's decision not to seek re-election]." (Publisher's note) Index.

"[This book] is far from being a song of praise. Sidey feels that Johnson's reliance on the 'open option,' that is, the element of surprise—be it in making an appointment, a sudden visit to Vietnam, or in announcing a retirement—is a serious fault. . . . [The volume] is, among other things, a useful collection of anecdotes. It is also a strong assessment of the personal weaknesses of Lyndon Johnson. It is obvious that Sidey harbors a bitterness against Johnson, possibly a result of Johnson's poor relations with the press." R. J. Meister

America 119:106 Ag 17 '68 490w

Reviewed by W. H. Stringer
Christian Science Monitor p9 Ag 9 '68 330w

Economist 228:53 S 14 '68 250w

"A convincing description of the President's behavior and some tentative probes of his psyche; that is what we have in this readable book, which is not a formal biography. . . . Sidey, author of John F. Kennedy, President [BRD 1963], writes a column called 'The Presidency' for Life. . . . This is certainly not the final word on LBJ, it may not even be the best book about him published this year, but it will increase our understanding of President Johnson and of our present situation. The book is recommended as one that will appeal to the general reader." David Cooley

Library J 93:2647 J1 '68 190w

Reviewed by Sumika Yamashita
Library J 93:3340 S 15 '68 130w [YA]

Reviewed by L. L. King
New Repub 159:30 Ag 11 '68 1100w
New Statesman 76:320 S 13 '68 350w

"This is not warmed-over matter. From two million words of 'raw material' that [Sidey] has jotted down in 10 years he has come forth with a distillation—an impressionistic 'book of glimpses,' as he calls it. The hard scrabble Texas hill country, the awful hour of assassination, the secretive and contradictory new Administration—the scenes flow into each other. Superficial, uniformly interesting, it is written in the slick, lucid Time-Life style and is crammed with quotable paragraphs that you want to read aloud to your wife. Its direct and indirect quotations could only come from protracted and favorable intimacy. It isn't a hostile book; rather it is a nonplussed book."

Richard Strout

N Y Times Bk R p2 J1 28 '68 1000w
New Yorker 44:95 Ag 10 '68 190w

Reviewed by Saul Maloff
Newsweek 72:80 J1 15 '68 380w

Reviewed by Carroll Kilpatrick
Sat R 51:32 S 21 '68 600w
Time 92:79 J1 12 '68 400w
TLS p962 S 12 '68 800w

SIFAKIS, G. M. Studies in the history of Hellenistic drama. (London. Univ. Classical studies) 200p $8.80 Oxford

792.938 Theater—Greece [67-94251]

This work examines various aspects of the theatre in Delos and Delphi: "festivals, buildings, scenery, mechanical equipment, 'dramatic monuments,' costumiers, musicians, entertainers, actors, guilds, financial arrangements, poets, and plays." (Class World) Bibliography.

Choice 4:1378 F '68 170w

"[The author's] aim is 'to answer the questions: When did dramatic performances take place in the two cities, what plays were performed, by whom and how were they produced? Positive answers are given about times, performers, and methods, but the plays are missing. . . . What is at fault is the title, which should have been Studies in the History of the Hellenistic Theatre." Katherine Lever

Class World 61:113 N '67 280w

"The core of Dr. Sifakis's work is a careful re-examination of the inscriptions in Delos and Delphi dealing with the theatre and theatre practice. . . . [His] unrivalled knowledge of the inscriptional and monumental material from the whole Greek world has enabled him to set them in and make them in turn illuminate the history of Hellenistic drama as a whole. . . . The discussion of the building inscriptions of the Delos theatre and the reconstruction of its stage building are worthy of particular note, so too is the evidence for the continued use of the chorus right through the period. . . . This is a very mature and valuable piece of scholarship."

TLS p766 Ag 24 '67 260w

Va Q R 44:cxxviii summer '68 90w

ŠIK, OTA. Plan and market under socialism. 382p il $12 Int. arts & sciences press

335.4 Czechoslovak Republic—Economic conditions 66-23396

This volume, by a Czechoslovakian economist, "condemns direct central planning in a developed socialist country, and advocates . . . replacement of central economic command by material incentives and allocational functions of markets. In Part I Šik takes to task Stalin's . . . methodology, . . . and his refusal to recognize the importance of market relations. . . . [In Part II] the author argues in favor of decentralized economic decision-making by socialist managers. . . . Problems of socialist price formation are . . . discussed in Part III. . . . Part IV deals with 'money under socialism'. . . . [Several chapters] also discuss a general reform of a socialist society." (Am Econ R) This is a translation of K Problématique socialistických Zbožních Vztahů, published in Czechoslovakia in 1964.

ŠIK, OTA—Continued

"Readers versed in quantitative economic analysis will feel somewhat frustrated by Professor Šik's vague non-interrelated theorems his failure to define clearly the parameters and the variables of his model, and his apparent lack of profound knowledge of modern Western theory. Even those readers who are interested in socio-economic systems . . . may find several arguments either inconsistent or arranged in a very unusual sequence, many terms and many statistics underdefined, and the translation shaggy. Yet, despite all of its imperfections, this is an important study in political economy. Anyone who is interested in the changing economic systems in Eastern Europe and in the changing Marxist economics should . . . leaf through it." J. M. Michal

Am Econ R 58:599 Je '68 1000w

"Good translation . . . but a good knowledge of Marxian terminology is necessary to tackle the jargon. (A two-page glossary helps somewhat). . . . A very important book for graduate students and advanced undergraduates concerned with Soviet-type economies, comparative economic systems, and economic thought (current developments)." Choice 5:840 S '68 170w

SILBER, IRWIN, ed. Songs of the great American West; comp. and ed. by Irwin Silber; music annot. ed. and arr. by Earl Robinson. 334p il $12.50 Macmillan (N Y)

784.4 Ballads, American. Folk songs—U.S. 66-18205

The editor's aim has been "to provide, through song, a representative picture of the main historical experiences which contributed to the winning of the West. . . . A brief historical essay providing background to the period and its social and political framework opens each section. Each song is then discussed in terms of its subject matter and its specific historical and cultural relevance. In some cases, Earl Robinson has added a special musical note of his own in the introduction to a song. . . . Finally, headnotes provide data on the origin and immediate source for the particular version that appears." (Intro) Bibliography. Discography. Subject index. Index of titles and first lines.

"This volume adds little to the field, but it is by itself a handsome and interesting book. The songs range from the familiar to the almost unknown. . . . Silber's introductions help to provide a running history of the times, and the usually adequate notes and an admirable biography provide sources and suggestions for further reading. Although Robinson's nontraditional arrangements will shock a great many purists, the melodies and verbal texts have generally been left unchanged. [This book] should be popular with undergraduates; not primarily a scholarly volume, it is at the same time several cuts above most popular books on the subject."

Choice 4:1124 D '67 140w

"Mr. Silber has compiled an important addition to the folksong literature. . . . These are not only songs. This is firsthand history; no sentimental history of the West, but one of people expressing the hardships and struggles of the life. . . . The book is beautifully designed, with many fine illustrations taken from Remington, Russell, and others. . . . Highly recommended." Allen Cohen

Library J 92:2577 J1 '67 140w

SILBERG, RICHARD. The devolution of the people. 241p $4.95 Harcourt

301.2 Culture. Social psychology 67-10771

In this study of twentieth-century culture "Mr. Silberberg tells us that contemporary men have lost or are losing the 'psychic nutrients' of the past. They are overwhelmed by technology, science, and material pursuits, and live in a 'diluted culture.' Their existence is marked by emptiness and anxiety. Existentialist philosophy and modern art are an expression of their mental predicament." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"An attempt to construct a social theory mostly on the basis of the 34 items in the bibliography (all but two published 10 or more years ago). Thesis is that recent social changes have caused alienation and anomie, the antidote for which is 'positive affect.' Theory becomes vague in sections specifically on the function of 'positive affect.' The first half is classical romanticism, glorifying religion, art, and emotion. The book ends incongruously with naturalistic explanations for such phenomena. It contains some historical misinformation, unwarranted generalizations, non sequiturs; inappropriate metaphors, and faulty logic in general. Sources limit rather than inspire. . . . Recommended only for libraries collecting samples of varieties of contemporary romanticism, confusion, and discontent."

Choice 5:1004 O '68 190w

Christian Century 84:1164 S 13 '67 50w

"Mr. Silberberg—a recent graduate of Harvard, where he majored in social relations—has been influenced by the entire galaxy of cultural critics—Erich Fromm, David Riesman, Paul Goodman, Lewis Mumford, Oswald Spengler, Sigmund Freud, Kenneth Keniston, and many others—whose insights and judgments he has synthesized in this eclectic essay. He has also been affected by the disciplines of anthropology, sociology, and psychology. Thus not much is new in this book. . . . One puts the book down wondering what claim it could have to the enlightened reader's attention. This is not to say that Mr. Silberberg is not a highly literate and versatile writer." Joseph Bram

Library J 92:2597 J1 '67 240w

SILBERSTON, AUBREY, jt. auth. The British patent system, v 1. See Boehm, K.

SILLITOE, ALAN. A tree on fire. 451p $5.95 Doubleday

68-22699

A sequel to The Death of William Posters (BRD 1965), this "is a novel about revolutionary passion. Frank Dawley goes off to run guns to the Algerian F.L.N. Converted to their cause, he stays to fight awhile. He crosses the desert, is liberated and sanctified by suffering, his own and the Algerian people's. . . . He comes home to England to participate in promised home rebellions. . . . At home in England, Albert Handley, an artist with a family of eight, has meanwhile been painting the revolution of the soul into his canvas. . . . [Dawley and Handley join their families] in a house owned by one of Frank Dawley's old girls, Myra, [where] a commune is set up, dedicated to making the revolution in England. . . . The commune is financed by Myra's inheritance and the income from Handley's paintings. . . . and there are to be preparatory war games." (N Y Times Bk R)

Reviewed by P. A. Doyle

Best Sell 28:209 Ag 15 '68 800w

"[The theme] is implicit in the image of a burning tree. The human spirit, we are to believe, thrives on purgation. . . . Sillitoe's early books, Saturday Night and Sunday Morning and The Loneliness of the Long-Distance Runner (both BRD 1960), showed him to possess a keen eye, an abrasive lyric style and an angry awareness of social injustice. Of these gifts, the second is now slipping out of control. Carried away by his own eloquence, Mr. Sillitoe breathes through these pages not so much fire as wind. . . . Not that the lyricism always fails. . . . Indeed, all the Algerian sections spring to life—probably because Mr. Sillitoe's imagination was fired by the exotic tribulations of the desert, whereas it has merely been anaesthetized by the wish to preach anarchic socialism at home. . . . To compare Mr. Sillitoe's combinations with a genuine explosion of rage is to make them sound flatulent indeed." Alan Pryce-Jones

Book World p8 Ag 25 '68 500w

"The fatuity of the flesh is clearly demonstrated by both the artist Handley (and his assorted women) and the heroic Frank Dawley. . . . The artist is less heroic and more memorable, drawn larger than life and smaller than morality, honest only in his art. . . . Some of the author's several tongues are snugly in his cheek: his message requires it. He writes on various levels: allegory and realism, parable and paradox. Most of the book is well worth reading once; some is worth reading and re-reading; the skimmed-over surface tells little but conceals treasure. From time to time the hurrying reader stumbles on what seems like a hummock of nothing: closer inspection may reveal that the mound is alive. Mr. Sillitoe writes a poet's prose; he feels as a poet: injustices (except, perhaps to women) sting him. 'A Tree on Fire' is a work of great talent, although perhaps not a work of great art." Neil Millar

Christian Science Monitor p9 S 6 '68 700w

Reviewed by K. G. Jackson
Harper 237:101 S '68 200w

Reviewed by Earl Tannenbaum
Library J 93:2899 Ag '68 180w

Reviewed by Miles Burrows
New Statesman 74:644 N 10 '67 230w

"The writing is superb. What's wrong? This is a novel of believable conversions when, possibly, revolutionary conversions in real life are unbelievable. . . . We are promised a humane holocaust made by people. But in the revolution people's lives are nasty, short and brutish, and Sillitoe's very writing vitiates his thesis. . . . [His] revolutionary commune smacks ultimately of English Dissent; . . . the strategy is vague; the tactics are naive New Left, disruptive instead of truly destructive. . . . In spite of all the propaganda, novelists are rarely prophets but, at best, real historians who catch the spirit of interim ages. Alan Sillitoe, despite these faults, is one of the better ones. And so, for the feel of what's happening all over the world, [this book] should be read." Sol Yurick

N Y Times Bk R p34 S 22 '68 700w

"Good things happen in the novel; . . . [however] they do not cohere. . . . So concerned is [Sillitoe] with breaking new artistic ground that he does not bother to sort and arrange his data. Particularly contrived are the chapters set in Algeria. As he did in The General [BRD 1961], Sillitoe uses war as a bridge to moral polemic. . . . His lack of commitment to the materials of his book is brought out stylistically. In place of creative energy he substitutes overstatement. The final part of the novel, an attempt to work religion, politics, and art into a vision of the future, is full of empty bleatings. . . . [Perhaps] in the last installment of the trilogy . . . Sillitoe will give his satire, which comes close to romantic fascism, a dramatic focus." Peter Wolfe

Sat R 51:25 Ag 17 '68 800w

TLS p1053 N 9 '67 850w

SILLS, DAVID L., ed. International encyclopedia of the social sciences, 17v. See International encyclopedia of the social sciences, 17v

SILONE, IGNAZIO. Emergency exit. 207p $6.95 Harper

335.4 Communism—Italy 65-14658

The author of Bread and Wine (BRD 1936) presents a "collection of autobiographical fragments and political reflections. . . . [He was] a proponent of Marxism until he became disenchanted with its results. In The God That Failed [ed. by R. H. Crossman, BRD 1950], Silone analyzed his break with the Communist Party; here he expands on the reasons for that . . . decision and projects his hopes for a future free of social corruption and bureaucratization. . . . [In his] closing essay, 'Rethinking Progress,' he speaks . . . of the basic demands of any humane social order: the individual and collective freedom to act and interact with one's fellows." (Library J) Originally published in Italy in 1965 under the title Uscita Di Sicurezza.

Reviewed by Edward Weeks
Atlantic 222:137 D '68 600w

"[Silone's] political wanderings are described in [this book]. It is, to be sure, a book of memoirs, a chronicle of the author's life starting with his destitute childhood and his first confrontations with a primitive society and its victims. But the book is more than that. It is a spiritual self-portrait of one of the most significant men of our times; in a way it is a portrait of the generation between the two world wars. Why did so many turn to Communism? Why did the best leave it through an emergency exit? . . . His recollections of Moscow and his impressions of the years when he and Togliatti represented the Italian Communist party at the Comintern meetings are sometimes candid and revealing. . . . His indestructible optimism, ethics and faith, recapitulated in [a section of] the last essay, 'What are the Prospects?', are difficult to resist." Ludina Barzini

Book World p5 D 15 '68 800w

"One of the great, truly 'involved' writers of our time has made a notable contribution to social understanding with this [book]. . . . [He] offers no easy solutions for the political and social dilemmas of the day. . . . What emerges is an immediate and moving study in political autobiography which belongs in all collections." Rosemary Neiswender

Library J 93:4152 N 1 '68 140w

Reviewed by Irving Howe
N Y Times Bk R p5 D 29 '68 1200w

"A new book of Ignazio Silone is both a literary and a political event. A novelist and essayist, he was one of the outstanding figures in Italy's early Communist movement. . . . The incident that led to his eventual 'renegacy'—as his disenchantment and withdrawal was termed by his erstwhile comrades—is vividly described in the main chapter of [this book] and supplies the title of the volume. . . . Hatred of Fascist and Communist tyranny and duplicity did not blind Silone to the shortcomings of the masses, all his compassion for their plight notwithstanding. . . . [He] is just as disappointed in the bulk of the radical intelligentsia. . . . [and] he has bitter words for Jean-Paul Sartre, who in the name of 'progress' justified the Soviet massacres in Hungary in 1956." Max Nomad

Sat R 51:40 N 9 '68 950w

Time 92:99 N 22 '68 850w

SILVA, ANIL DE. See De Silva, A.

SILVER, H. T., jt. auth. William Crawford Gorgas: warrior in white. See Dolan, E. F.

SILVER, ROLLO G. The American printer. 1787-1825; pub. for the Bibl. soc. of the Univ. of Virginia. 189p il $7.50 Univ. press of Va. 655.1 Printing 67-22310

The book opens with an account of "the conditions of apprenticeship in the printing trade. There are essays . . . on such subjects as: early labor organizations for journeymen printers; the handling of government printing contracts on the federal, state, and territorial levels; the business minutiae of operating a printing office; . . . early American typography and illustration; . . . [and] the technical details of press construction and operation." (Col & Res Lib) Index.

Am Lit 40:439 N '68 70w

"[This] is one of the few attempts thus far made to generalize a comprehensive printing history out of documented scholarly studies and sources, instead of from the reminiscences and members of old printers. . . . The narrative moves smoothly through a well integrated . . . series of meaningful and fascinating, carefully researched, documented, interconnected essays in the history of American printing. . . . In addition to its six chapters, the book also includes as an appendix a selection of examples of the sizes of some forty editions (250 to 5,000 copies) issued by Mathew Carey between 1792 and 1813. . . . It is highly recommended to all libraries and readers having an interest in this subject." D. K.

Col & Res Lib 29:240 My '68 400w

Reviewed by W. C. Kiessel
J Am Hist 55:386 S '68 270w

"Author, subject matter, publisher, and printers have all combined to make [this] a well-nigh perfect book. . . . Both beginner and old-timer will welcome the author's refreshing candor. Neither the American printer nor his craft was particularly advanced compared with the art and its practitioners in Britain in the same period, a fact the reader is made well aware of. . . . [This book] more than once demonstrates its own point of view: a refreshing kind of common sense. [It] has been beautifully produced. . . . Decoration, composed of contemporary printers' marks, is restricted to cover stamping and to chapter headpieces and is perfectly appropriate to the subject matter. . . . In only one area is the harmony flawed: . . . a bibliography is absent." Malcolm Freiberg

SILVER, R. G.—Continued

New Eng Q 41:466 S '68 400w

Va Q R 44:cxxvii summer '68 50w

SILVERBERG, ROBERT. The dawn of medicine; il. by Frank Aloise. 191p lib bdg $3.49 Putnam

610.9 Medicine—History—Juvenile literature 67-14797

This survey of "medical practices before Asklepios and Hippocrates . . . in ancient Egypt, Mesopotamia, China, and India, . . . includes [descriptions of] ingredients of remedies, operation procedures, quoted theories of anatomy and disease, and quoted chants and rituals. The author . . . indicates what is known from writings and archaeology and what is conjecture. [Bibliography. Index.] Grades seven to twelve." (Library J)

"[Recommended] not only to nonscientists as guides toward the Light but to scientists and science teachers as reminders that what we know was long, slow, and hard in coming. . . . Much of the material is necessarily based on legend, and much on educated guesswork. Historical figures such as Hippocrates and Galen accompany nameless magicians and medicine men across backgrounds of prehistoric and early historic Europe, Africa, and Asia. . . . [There] emerges the historical point of view that magic slowly—very slowly—yields to an appreciation of material evidence. Even the scientist comes to feel some sympathy for magic-rooted 'logic.'" H. C. Stubbs
Horn Bk 44:81 F '68 180w

"A very interesting [book]. . . . There is a great deal of historical and cultural background preceding the extensive descriptions of medicine. . . . There are occasional derogatory remarks about the relationship between magic and supernatural beliefs and medicine. The medicine man, ancient and present-day, is otherwise well presented." Isadora Kunitz
Library J 92:1753 Ap 15 '67 100w

SILVERBERG, ROBERT. Ghost towns of the American West; il. by Lorence Bjorklund. 309p $4.50 Crowell

978 The West—Juvenile literature. Cities and towns, Ruined, extinct, etc.—Juvenile literature 68-17081

"The major portion of the book covers the period from 1848 to 1910, beginning with the discovery of gold at Sutter's fort, then progressing from California inland to the north and southwest. The last chapter brings history up to date, reporting some of the abandoned towns on the way to living again. [Bibliography. Index.] Grades five to eight." (Library J)

Christian Century 85:1602 D 18 '68 50w

"Skillful and frequent incorporation of quotations and anecdotes adds to the you-are-there recreation of life in early mining towns. . . . The California gold rush has been dealt with frequently in other books, but Mr. Silverberg's approach relates it to booms that followed in other areas and with other minerals, covering all in more detail than has been done before for this age group. Pencil sketches typical of the artist enrich the entertaining and informative text." M. A. Wentroth
Library J 93:4408 N 15 '68 130w

"This book is really a history of the prospector's West rather than another tome on the ghost towns. . . . [The author] has skipped most of the gunfighters, gamblers, vigilantes and lurid gals who have overpopulated such books since Bret Harte. He lapses when he reaches Virginia City and Bannack, Mont., where he finds Henry Plummer, Slade and company too much to resist. We'll forgive this, in view of his otherwise good record. We'll also overlook a couple of geological expositions that would make J. E. Spurr, the late master of mining geology, roll right over in his grave. All in all, a very good book." Dan Cushman

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p28 N 3 '68 180w [YA]

SILVERBERG, ROBERT. Light for the world; Edison and the power industry. 281p pl $5.95 Van Nostrand

621.3 Edison, Thomas Alva. Electric power distribution. Electric industries 67-27989

A biography emphasizing Edison the inventor and his involvement in the industry which he started. Bibliography. Index.

"Silverberg has provided a much needed history of Edison's relation to the power industry. Without the creation of this entirely new industry, Edison's light would have been merely a novelty with little chance of replacing the then popular gaslight. As a biography of Edison this book contains nothing that is new, but as an account of the development of the electric power industry it is a real contribution. Mr. Silverberg writes well, with touches of humor, and he has used extracts from contemporary accounts. Recommended for public and academic libraries." Robert Greene

Library J 92:3994 N 1 '67 140w

Library J 92:4278 N 15 '67 40w [YA]

"All in all [this] is a craftsmanlike job which will be of considerable interest to that mythic figure the 'average reader.' It is not, however, a particularly original or analytical book. . . . There is a paucity of clear, precise technological explanation. . . . When [Silverberg] does seek to explain large events he is sometimes on uncertain ground. Suggestions that Edison's innovative barrenness after 1884 was the result of the shattering effects of his first wife's death, for example, are largely unprovable speculations. This volume can be recommended as a sound, interesting narrative account of Edison's role in the development of the electrical industry. But serious students of the history of that industry must still turn to Harold Passer's The Electrical Manufacturers [BRD 1953], and individuals interested in a comprehensive, authoritative biography should read Matthew Josephson's Edison [BRD 1960, 1961]." Kendall Birr

Science 159:1225 Mr 15 '68 480w

SILVERBERG, ROBERT. Mound builders of ancient America; the archaeology of a myth. 369p il maps $8.95 N.Y. graphic

970.4 U.S.—Antiquities. Mounds and mound builders 68-12370

"Our forebears, finding large, incomprehensible earthworks scattered down the Mississippi Valley, refused to believe they were built by the aborigines who still cluttered the place and impeded settlement. Mr. Silverberg describes . . . the nineteenth-century literature of speculation which attributed these monuments to Phoenicians, stray Vikings, the lost tribes of Israel, refugees from Atlantis, an extinct race of giants, and Welshmen. The book . . . ends with a history of the archaeological work which gave the mounds back to the Indians." (Atlantic)

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 222:106 Jl '68 90w

"The professional archaeologist will undoubtedly take exception to some of the [book's] content, particularly that concerning the contemporary view of eastern prehistory. There is actual misinformation; there is also a seeming tendency to overlay some highly tenuous hypotheses which the uninitiated reader, despite the qualifications of the author, may find persuasive. . . . However, given the author's intent of writing for the interested lay reader, these lapses are not too objectionable. Scholars will add the book to their recommended bibliographies for those desiring some background in American prehistory and archaeology." J. H. Kellar

J Am Hist 55:626 D '68 410w

Reviewed by H. E. Smith

Library J 93:1481 Ap 1 '68 200w

Reviewed by R. A. Gould

Natur Hist 77:[75] D '68 700w

"The present book goes far toward meeting our need for a history of American archeology. In a clear, interesting, understandable manner, the author recounts the historical development of the belief that the innumerable earth mounds that are scattered over much of the eastern United States were the remains of a mysterious, gifted extinct race. . . . Silverberg shows that, from the time of De Soto, in the 16th century, there was an awareness that even the great truncated pyramidal mounds were the work of Indians. . . . The polemics engendered by the discoveries in various Ohio burial mounds are rather adroitly narrated. . . . The last third of the book shows a marked shift in emphasis, from personal documentation to the empiricism of modern archeology. . . . This is a good book, one to be enjoyed by professionals and laymen as well." W. G. Haag

Science 161:997 S 6 '68 700w

"This fascinating book is a history of a special branch of archaeology, the gradual growth of understanding about the mounds that spread still over the wild valleys from the Ohio River to Wisconsin and Illinois and to Alabama and Florida. . . . This is a good time for a revival of our old interest in the mounds; Silverberg's book will break the path for many readers."
Sci Am 219:138 J1 '68 600w

Va Q R 44:clxxx autumn '68 90w

SILVERBERG, ROBERT. The world of the ocean depths. 156p il $4.95 Meredith

551.4 Oceanography—Juvenile literature.
Marine biology—Juvenile literature 68-11909

Concerns "the nature of life in the ocean depths and the story of the research that has been conducted and is currently being conducted there." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index. "Grades eight to twelve." (Library J)

"A welcome addition to the high school collection. The author traces some of man's efforts to conquer the depths and the results of discoveries in the past. While he answers questions he also points out possible directions for the future."
Best Sell 28:66 My 1 '68 60w

"An interesting description of the physical features of the ocean bottom, the various layers and currents of water, and a number of the plants and animals found in the deeps. There is also a great deal of information on the exploration of these regions. In a timely well-written text, the author concentrates on the deeper layers of the ocean and does not attempt to cover all aspects of the sea, but he manages to include a surprising amount of information about the makeup of the ocean, its weight and chemistry, all explained in non-technical terms." J. F. Waters
Library J 93:1815 Ap 15 '68 120w

Reviewed by E. B. Garside
N Y Times Bk R p16 J1 7 '68 260w

SILVERBERG, ROBERT. For other books by this author, see Chapman, W.

SILVERMAN, AL. My life is baseball. See Robinson, F.

SILVERMAN, DAVID. Pitcairn Island. 258p pl $7.95 World pub.

919.96 Pitcairn Island 66-24998

The author covers "not only the island's history . . . but such diverse topics as eugenics and social stratification." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"Because of his wide spectrum, Silverman's book is far more detailed but neither as well written as J. C. Furnas' Anatomy of Paradise [BRD 1948] nor as authoritative as H. L. Shapiro's The Heritage of the Bounty. [He] has fragmented his study to the point that the last third reads like a Baedeker guidebook. Nevertheless, . . . the book has interesting illustrations . . . and is strongly recommended for college browsing collections."
Choice 5:110 Mr '68 140w

"This latest product of the Bounty industry is a more useful piece of work than much that has preceded it, for one reason because it gets away from the too-much trodden deck of the ship to the island. It has enough about the mutineers and their fate, but the author's chief interest is in the society that emerged from their descent on Pitcairn with their Tahitian women. . . . The book being arranged under a long series of subject headings is too repetitive and tends to be a little superficial, so that it is at once too long and too short. . . . But the author handles with discrimination the evidence he has used, on matters ranging from land-holding to dental caries, and the island-fancier who has not specialized on Pitcairn will certainly find his volume interesting." J. C. Beaglehole
Pacific Affairs 40:439 fall-winter '67-'68 210w

SILVERT, KALMAN H., ed. Churches and states: the religious institution and modernization. See American universities field staff

SIMENON, GEORGES. Maigret and the headless corpse; tr. from the French by Eileen Ellenbogen. 183p $3.95 Harcourt 68-12598

"An overloaded barge is caught in a lock in a Paris canal because its propeller has dragged to the surface the hairy arm of a man. The problem of identification must be solved before there can be a search for reason or suspect, and [Inspector] Maigret begins to feel he is only capable of plodding through the maze until . . . Maître Canonge, the lawyer from Boissancourt . . . helps him to put the pieces together." (Library J) Originally published in 1955 as Maigret et le Corps sans Tête.

Best Sell 27:457 Mr 1 '68 200w

Reviewed by M. K. Grant

Library J 93:1506 Ap 1 '68 100w

"[This novel] starts in the most Simenonish of locations . . . and quite as characteristically, it continues in a small bistro. Maigret's technique is as quiet and subtle as ever, and results in an extraordinary revelation of character. A beautiful book—though the appearance of a 'marc brandy' makes me faintly dubious of the translation." Anthony Boucher
N Y Times Bk R p18 Mr 10 '68 100w

"French Sûreté ace almost meets his match when the proprietress of a Paris bistro won't talk. Among the master's best." Sergeant Cuff
Sat R 51:43 Mr 30 '68 20w

SIMENON, GEORGES. Maigret's pickpocket; tr. from the French by Nigel Ryan. 151p $3.95 Harcourt 68-20073

While riding "on the open platform of a bus, [Chief Inspector Maigret's] wallet is stolen. The theft brings him in contact with François [Ricain], a young man living on the fringes of the movie world. [whose wife has just been murdered]." (Publisher's note) This is a translation of Le Voleur de Maigret published in France in 1967.

Best Sell 28:185 Ag 1 '68 150w

"It's very reassuring to find [Maigret] as quick and compassionate as ever in this complex murder mystery. . . . Good food, good wine, nice scenery, and an elaborate plot which M. Simenon's sure characterizations make credible. It's only later that one wonders if the Inspector's Paris will ever be the same again." K. G. Jackson
Harper 237:102 S '68 90w

Reviewed by M. K. Grant

Library J 93:2900 Ag '68 40w

Reviewed by Michael Innes

New Statesman 76:82 J1 19 '68 350w

"[This is] good, quietly entertaining Simenon." A. J. Hubin
N Y Times Bk R p20 Ag 18 '68 120w

Reviewed by Sergeant Cuff

Sat R 51:116 S 14 '68 30w

SIMENON, GEORGES. The move; tr. from the French by Christopher Sinclair-Stevenson. 148p $4.50 Harcourt 68-20074

Emile Jovis, an "average office employee on the way up decides to make a dramatic change; from a dingy apartment in the heart of Paris he moves with his wife and teen-age son to one of the latest housing developments on the outskirts of the city. . . . A particularly thin partition between his and the next-door bedroom makes Emile first an inadvertent and later an avid eavesdropper on the strange nocturnal doings and conversations of his neighbors. . . . [His curiosity] stirred, he is carried away headlong from his humdrum . . . existence into very troubled waters." (Publisher's note) This is a translation of Le Déménagement.

"The psychological study of a quiet, good, hard-working man letting himself gradually be led into what moralists have always called 'temptation' is well done, but seems abnormally spun-out. That the story ends tragically is almost inevitable from the beginning."
Best Sell 28:263 O 1 '68 200w

Reviewed by A. L. Rosenzweig

Book World p18 S 22 '68 700w

SIMENON, GEORGES—Continued

Reviewed by M. K. Grant
Library J 93:2899 Ag '68 180w

"The nightmare is compelling and ultimately irresistible, but because it is nightmare, because it goes too fast, none of it, Emile or his problems, is quite real." A. J. Hubin
N Y Times Bk R p54 O 27 '68 110w

SIMIRENKO, ALEX, ed. Soviet sociology: historical antecedents and current appraisals; ed. with an introd. by Alex Simirenko. 384p $7.95 Quadrangle bks.

301.09 Sociology 66-24161

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by Joseph Zelan
Am J Soc 73:363 N '67 220w

Reviewed by Paul Hollander
Am Pol Sci R 62:252 Mr '68 1100w

Reviewed by M. G. Field
Am Soc R 33:158 F '68 900w
TLS p339 Ap 4 '68 1200w

SIMMONS, ERNEST J. Introduction to Tolstoy's writings. 219p $5.50 Univ. of Chicago press

891.7 Tolstoy, Leo 67-30427

This book "attempts to describe and discuss all those writings of Tolstoy which appear to have enduring significance. With few exceptions, they are works that have been translated into English. His fiction and plays have been considered with some regard for chronological order in an effort to trace Tolstoy's development as a creative artist. But I have also included treatments of major non-literary works in order to show his concurrent development as a thinker and reformer in such diverse fields as education, religious thought, aesthetics and social, political, and moral problems." (Pref) Bibliography. Index.

Choice 5:968 O '68 200w

"A guide to introduce students and the interested general reader to Tolstoy's writings, not a study in formal literary criticism for the specialist. . . . [this is] an excellent short assessment of Tolstoy as literary artist and philosopher. For public and academic libraries." L. W. Griffin

Library J 93:996 Mr 1 '68 200w

"This study—an attempt to gather all of his literary knowledge of Tolstoy into a connected whole—is a welcome complement to [Simmons'] biography, Leo Tolstoy, BRD 1946]. Scholars will not be impressed by the depth of this work, but it is a handy guide for undergraduates and should provide good support for a survey course."

Va Q R 44:cxvi summer '68 200w

SIMMS, WILLIAM GILMORE. Cavalier of old South Carolina; William Gilmore Simms's Captain Porgy; ed. with an introd. by Hugh W. Hetherington. 373p $7.50 Univ. of N.C. press

813 66-25360

"Simms, a contemporary of Emerson, wrote a number of novels which form a . . . saga of the Revolutionary War in the South. . . . In six of his novels there appears the character of Lieutenant Porgy, a Falstaffian individual who serves in General Greene's command and who is at once a military tactician, an epicure of the first order, and the symbol of the gallantry of all Southern gentlemen. . . . [The] professor of English at the University of Wyoming has . . . collected passages concerning Porgy from [the] novels." (Library J) Annotated bibliography.

"Porgy is a minor figure in all but [one of the novels—Woodcraft]. . . . Hence the book seems scrappy, the character flat and superficial. The 76-page introduction, though factually sound, is laboriously enthusiastic in appraising the merits of the characterization. Both introduction and summaries are carelessly written—full of eccentricities of punctuation, structure, idiom, and logic. Whether this book was worth doing is a question; certainly it might have been done better."

Choice 4:1119 D '67 160w

"The various passages of text are linked by intelligent transitions, provided by the editor, which well summarize intervening action pertinent to an understanding of the text. In an excellent introduction, Hetherington discusses Porgy as a Falstaffian character, a comparison which, by the way, may for some readers place the Shakespearean creation in a new light. He also considers Porgy as a military strategist and as a self-portrait, a reflection of Simms's own character. This book will serve as a fine addition to the scholarship of Simms and to the available literature of the Old South. As a work of fiction, it will provide many hours of delight for those readers who appreciate reading about a man with a gusto for living." R. F. Cayton

Library J 92:116 Ja 1 '67 230w

SIMON, CLAUDE. Histoire: tr. from the French by Richard Howard. 341p $5.95 Braziller

68-16109

"The episodes of the novel center around the dissolution of a bourgeois family of southern wine-growing France and the family's interrelations with Spain and the Orient. . . . The basic technique [is] a simultaneous juxtaposition of distant events and subconscious, metaphorical linkages." (Library J)

"There is not overly much story . . . but rather a superbly forceful, poetic evocation of the past. . . . The translation reads smoothly. All in all, an interesting but, on the whole, unsatisfactory effort to grasp reality, and which does not improve on the efforts of such different writers as Rimbaud, Proust, Claude, Mauriac, or Bernard Pinet. Therefore, not recommended for acquisition by undergraduate college libraries."

Choice 5:783 S '68 130w

"This important novel, winner of the Prix Médicis, is by . . . the French 'new novelist,' who joins a Faulknerian baroque surface to Nathalie Sarraute's instants of time and tropisms. Histoire contains autobiographical elements which connect it with Simon's earlier novels: The Grass (BRD 1960), The Flanders Road (BRD 1962), and Palace (BRD 1963). . . . The style is subtle, complex and difficult. . . . The translation is excellent. Necessary for college and public libraries." Dorothy Curley

Library J 93:1164 Mr 15 '68 150w

"Personality and anecdote are fragmentary in Histoire not simply because of Simon's notion of what consciousness 'is really like,' but perhaps primarily because he is also tempted by just that linguistic virtuosity which he nonetheless accuses of distorting reality. Simon has the richest, most eloquent, most luxuriantly sensuous style of the New Novelists. . . . But he is also the victim of a literary evolution which makes the very impulse to write novels a risky and problematic adventure. And so needlessly complicated technique—apparently the sign of his 'modernity'—destroys the consistency of personality without creating a text able to survive the absence of personality. Histoire teases us with the promise of a certain form of literary activity while it also anxiously reminds us of the death of that form." Leo Bersani

New Repub 158:32 Je 8 '68 2600w

Reviewed by Hugh Kenner
N Y Times Bk R p5 J1 14 '68 750w

"Claude Simon's fifth novel to appear in English is a remarkable work—his richest and most striking book . . . and reinforces the growing feeling that [he] is among the really brilliant French prose writers of the twentieth century. . . . Histoire creates a dense universe sui generis through the force of a prose style that calls to mind Proust, Joyce, and Faulkner. . . . There is no denying the strain on the reader caused by the syntactic complexity of the work and its immensely rich, baroque language, but the difficulties involved are an intricate and necessary part of the very concept of this extraordinary novel. The American reader is fortunate to have access to Richard Howard's outstanding English version. This always admirable translator succeeds in capturing all the many subtle nuances of Simon's French and renders them into a fully gratifying English equivalent." Thomas Bishop

Sat R 51:28 Mr 30 '68 1000w

Time 91:102 Mr 29 '68 500w

Va Q R 44:cxlviii autumn '68 160w

SIMON, EDITH. Luther alive; Martin Luther and the making of the Reformation. (The Crossroads of world history ser) 371p $6.95 Doubleday

B or 92 Luther, Martin. Reformation

68-14194

This biography describes Luther as a private citizen, in the role of husband and father, and as the public figure whose part in the religious and social revolution of the Sixteenth Century was a central one. Bibliography. Index.

"[This] book is laborious and somewhat diffuse, full of painstaking, if not always accurate, detail about the background to Luther's career and the ramifications of German politics on the eve of the Reformation. Unfortunately, in spite of its title, it never succeeds in making Luther come alive. . . . The real weakness of the book . . . is bound up with Mrs. Simon's attitude to the past. She approaches the 16th century with condescension. She never quite takes Luther's problems seriously, for she is convinced that there is something naive and faintly absurd about the controversies which divided the learned world of Luther's time. . . . Yet in order to understand the Reformation we must realize that Luther's problems were real problems, that scholasticism was not just a comic absurdity. . . . That this is not such an insuperable task Roland H. Bainton demonstrated . . . in his classic biography of Luther, Here I Stand [BRD 1950]." J. C. Thompson

Book World p6 My 26 '68 600w

Choice 5:1150 N '68 140w

Reviewed by F. A. Norwood

Christian Century 85:1176 S 18 '68 170w

"[The author] has written a study of Martin Luther and the origins of the Protestant Reformation that can only be praised. True to her title, Miss Simon's Luther lives, breathes (or more likely snorts!), and is himself, often in his own rich, earthy words. She catches the mere humanity of his greatness and the universal centrality of his work as few biographers have done. . . . Only a specialist will fail to find some new knowledge of Luther in these pages, for Miss Simon has thoroughly mined the scholarly literature. If her remarkably personal style sometimes rubs a bit, it is yet marvellously persuasive and beautifully literate. A grand book!" R. R. Rea

Library J 93:1890 My 1 '68 130w

Reviewed by P. A. Duhamel

N Y Times Bk R p53 N 17 '68 650w

SIMON, GEORGE T. The big bands; with a foreword by Frank Sinatra. 537p il $9.95 Macmillan (N Y)

785.06 Bands (Music). Musicians, American. Jazz music 67-26643

Part One "highlights the people and influences that shaped the bands—leaders, musicians, vocalists, arrangers, managers, bookers, recordings, radio, movies, the press, and the public. Part Two . . . [profiles] the greats and near greats. . . . [Part Three] continues the portraits in far shorter form. Part Four briefly sets the scene today." (Christian Science Monitor) Index.

"George Simon could justifiably claim to have invented the big bands. He was their reviewer, reporter, booster, adviser, confidant, critic, and No. 1 fan. . . . [In this book] there is more emphasis on the music—how it was conceived, played, arranged, styled, packaged—than on 'fan' elements. . . . But there are enough helpings of humor and anecdotes . . . to flesh out the heroes. . . . And photographs, used graphically and artistically throughout, are excellent and often captioned in [a humorous] style. . . . The Simon gallery holds many affectionate and discerning portraits. I especially liked his sensitive portrayals of Lionel Hampton, Benny Goodman, the Dorseys, and Shep Fields." Amy Lee

Christian Science Monitor p11 Ja 4 '68 480w

"Though by any ordinary standard Mr. Simon's style is execrable in the breezy-bright manner that show-biz trade publications seem compelled to affect, his book does succeed in . . . 'wafting' one back to a lost time. Moreover, like many books by and for 'buffs,' . . . it has passion. . . . As a result, [it] gave me, at least, something I always wanted and never got—the real inside story of the band business, a sort of super fan magazine between hard covers. . . . Ultimately, however, [this] is a book for buffs, written for the already convinced, and addressing itself not at all to any question involving the value or quality of swing."

Commentary 45:64 Ag '68 1650w

"Mr. Simon, former editor of Metronome, outlines [the lineages and lifetimes of some 400 bands] with breezy, opinionated enthusiasm." N Y Times Bk R p14 D 31 '67 210w

SIMON, HILDA. Insect masquerades; il. by the author. 95p $4.75; lib bdr $4.31 Viking

595.7 Insects—Juvenile literature 68-16070

"The author cites examples of insect disguise, camouflage, and mimicry . . . and then suggests theories for the evolution of these peculiar adaptations. [Bibliography. Index.] Grade nine and up." (Library J)

Reviewed by Julian May

Book World p34 (children's issue) N 3 '68 50w

"This book is descriptive rather than explanatory. We are shown very effectively how the insects solve their problems, but there is no discussion of the physical and neurological aspects of vision which make the solutions possible. Miss Simon, however, gives her readers a wonderful chance to consider these aspects for themselves. Her art work supplements and supports the text admirably. Anyone who wants to begin the study of the camouflage problem by considering questions of color and texture, together and separately, could hardly do better than to start from the pictures." H. C. Stubbs

Horn Bk 44:574 O '68 280w

"Miss Simon shows concern for scientific accuracy, and she avoids the errors of oversimplification and anthropomorphism. The illustrations are informative, exquisite four-color drawings which fit well with the text. For the young teen with a fair degree of familiarity with the natural history of insects, this book presents thought-provoking material." B. S. Waters

Library J 93:1815 Ap 15 '68 70w [YA]

SIMON, JOHN, it. ed. Film 67/68. See Schickel, J.

SIMON, JOHN. Private screenings. 316p $6.95 Macmillan (N Y)

791.43 Moving picture plays—History and criticism 67-23486

For descriptive note, review excerpts and review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by Harris Green

Commonweal 88:114 Ap 10 '68 1000w

Reviewed by F. A. Macklin

Nation 206:387 Mr 18 '68 1500w

Reviewed by A. Croce

Nat R 20:151 F 13 '68 400w

Reviewed by John Coleman

New Statesman 75:46 Ja 12 '68 400w

SIMON, JOHN Y., ed. The papers of Ulysses S. Grant, v 1. See Grant, U. S.

SIMON, KATE. Kate Simon's London: places & pleasures; an uncommon guidebook. 348p $7.50 Putnam

914.21 London—Description—Guide books 68-15522

The author of Mexico, Places and Pleasures (BRD 1963) offers a personal "commentary on shopping, entertainment, museums, . . . alleys and byways, monuments, cathedrals, buses, and underground tubes. The reader is taken to Westminster Abbey, Hampstead Heath, Chelsea, London's Record Office, Whitehall Palace, Carnaby Street, the discotheques, Fleet Street, Covent Garden, open markets, the bookshops, the docks, and a host of other places of interest." (Publisher's note) Glossary. Index.

"Miss Simon manages to get a very great deal into 348 pages. . . . She sniffs at swinging London (we're all fed up with that), gives the King's Road and the Flower Children rather short shrift and seems happy only taking long walks and bus rides. She's absolutely delightful on those. . . . The book is positively gritty with information . . . some of which sounds almost like a parody of every other travel book. But you get the distinct impression Miss Simon did all this research on her own two feet and not in a library. She's got a keen eye not only for London past but for London present and its human and endearing frailties. . . . I think she's a bit easygoing on London's hotels, which are too few and overpriced. . . . On the other hand, I think she's a bit unkind on London's food which is very good in the right places." John Crosby

Book World p3 S 1 '68 850w

SIMON, KATE—Continued

Reviewed L. W. Turpin
Library J 93:2495 Je 15 '68 140w

"Kate Simon now brings to her cities a perfect technique. She cuts down on the obvious . . . and deals more extensively with what might be missed. . . . She is at her superlative best on museums, and my only criticism is her omission of the Wallace Collection. . . . Versatile as ever, she . . . delineates the raw boisterous music-hall life of the East End or the fantastic exhibitionism of Chelsea. . . . With eating and drinking and shopping Kate Simon misses precious little . . . [although] she omits Prunier's in St. James's Street [which] at its best . . . still provides the finest food in London. This is certainly one of her best books—better than 'Paris' [BRD 1967] nearly as good as 'New York' [BRD 1959]. Unlike most guidebooks it can be read from cover to cover as easily as a novel. . . . Everyone, American or English, who intends to visit, or has visited, London should possess this. . . . The core of the book will last for generations—the changeless London of History, beautifully described." J. H. Plumb

N Y Times Bk ■ p18 S 8 '68 800w

SIMONIN, LOUIS L. The Rocky Mountain West in 1867; tr. and annot. by Wilson O. Clough, from Le grand-ouest des Etats-Unis. 170p il $5.50 Univ. of Neb. press

917 The West—Description and travel. Indians of North America—The West 66-16514

Simonin, "a French mining engineer and professor of geology, visited the American West at the invitation of J. P. Whitney, a commissioner from Colorado Territory to the Paris Exposition of 1867. . . . In letters to a friend in Paris, Simonin put down his impressions of the Plains and the Rockies, and these were published in Paris in 1869 under the title Le grand-ouest des Etats-Unis. It is these letters, minus an account of the author's trip to California in 1868, that Wilson Clough has translated and edited here. Clough published parts of the book earlier as articles in Frontier (1930, 1931) and in Colorado Magazine (1937)." (J Am Hist) Selected bibliography of Simonin's writings. Index.

Choice 4:581 J1 '67 200w

"Despite Simonin's scientific training and interests, there is little technical discourse in his letters even when he is describing Rocky Mountain mining. . . . More than one third of the book concerns Indians and includes the only extant account by a civilian of the abortive Crow Council at Laramie. More generally, Simonin treats legend, language, and tradition among the Plains Indians. These letters gracefully record a thoughtful Frenchman's experience in the Far West, and through them runs an unfeigned enthusiasm for the American achievement that Simonin is convinced derives largely from two fundamental principles: freedom and work. In addition to the translation, Clough provides a brief, competent foreword, appropriate annotations, and a digest of American newspaper accounts of Simonin's visit." E. R. Bingham

J Am Hist 54:899 Mr '68 500w

SIMPSON, THOMAS. Fantasy furniture; design and decoration. 95p il $7.95 Reinhold

749 Furniture 68-16023

This book contains "examples of furniture shown at a recent Museum of Contemporary Crafts exhibition in New York, where craftsmen displayed 'protest' furniture, unique fantasies meant to be used as furniture, or occasionally as sculpture. These bizarre forms are shown in . . . photographs. The book has a brief text. . . . Captions accompany how-to-do-it illustrations in one chapter on 'Materials, Tools, and Techniques.'" (Library J)

"According to Thomas Simpson, whose work has been exhibited at various furniture design shows, today's impersonal society is reflected in furniture with 'identical aero-dynamically inspired shapes.' . . . For specialized collections with ample budgets." Delores McColm

Library J 93:2644 J1 '68 130w

"The author of this little (8-inches-square) picture book, an artist and craftsman himself, contends that the current crop of fantasy furniture stems from such diverse sources as sophisticated, 15-century, European wood carvings and trompe l'oeil work, folk art of New Guinea and the Congo. . . . The wooden chairs shaped like cupped hands, the 'Hello-Hello' (that's an umbrella stand) . . . may or may not be art. They certainly won't replace the Saarinen table or the Barcelona chair, but they are fun." Barbara Wyden

N Y Times Bk R p22 J1 28 '68 100w

SIMS, EDWARD H. The greatest aces. 294p pl maps $5.95 Harper

940.54 World War, 1939-1945—Aerial operations. Air pilots 67-22507

The author has selected "four pilots from the Royal Air Force, three from the Luftwaffe and one from the United States Army Air Force. He has written about them, and about the aircraft they flew and the campaigns in which they took part, and has included a . . . study of one combat sortie flown by each." (Foreword) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by C. L. Hohl

America 118:615 My 4 '68 70w

"[Mr. Sims] examines certain facets of fighter operations in World War II, and describes in vivid detail a number of the most memorable air battles that took place. Along the way, he manages to produce a fair amount of new biographical information on such Allied aces as Bader, Lacey, Tuck, and Robert S. Johnson, and on such Luftwaffe Experten as Galland, Marseille, and the incomparable Hartmann. . . . What is perhaps of greater note is that the book reevaluates, from various standpoints, the contribution made by fighter pilots to the progress of the war. . . . Highly recommended for history and military collections." Peter Gellatly

Library J 92:4413 D 1 '67 240w

Reviewed by Regina Minudri

Library J 93:897 F 15 '68 100w [YA]

SIMS, GEORGE. The last best friend. 190p $4.95 Stein & Day

68-16042

This novel "begins with a man falling to his death from a narrow ledge high above a cul-de-sac in the Paddington area of London. The man was Sammy Weiss, refugee from . . . Dachau, now in 1966 a successful dealer in art and best friend of Ned Balfour, an equally successful dealer in manuscripts. Balfour was on holiday in Corsica when Sammy died, but he cut the stay short and was in London the second day after Weiss' death, determined to find out why—was it really suicide, an accident, or murder?" (Best Sell)

Best Sell 27:476 Mr 15 '68 100w

Reviewed by M. K. Grant

Library J 93:1506 Ap 1 '68 110w

"A London dealer in rare books and manuscripts, George Sims . . . is a careful, intelligent, stimulating writer who deserves to be better known. He is equally strong on subtleties of character and niceties of plotting; he has made substantial contributions to the thriller-as-straight-novel in 'The Terrible Door' [BRD 1964]; in 'Sleep No More' [BRD 1967] and now in [this book. Sims gives the] . . . impression of knowing equally well his own profession and that of the novelist." Anthony Boucher

N Y Times Bk R p42 Mr 24 '68 200w

New Yorker 44:176 My 11 '68 140w

"Sims has a good mystery story here; more, he has his own good atmosphere of the dealers' world arising naturally out of the story. What a pity that he mars it with all the trite old tricks of Bondland—the details of snazzy food and drinks, gents' costuming and superogatory sex."

TLS p954 O 12 '67 70w

SINCLAIR, ANDREW. tr. Selections from the Greek anthology. See Greek anthology

SINGER, ISAAC BASHEVIS. Mazel and Shl-mazel; or, The milk of a lioness; pictures by Margot Zemach; tr. from the Yiddish by the author and Elizabeth Shub. 42p $4.50 Farrar, Straus

398.2 Folklore, Jewish—Juvenile literature 67-19887

The happiness of Tam, a poor peasant lad, and the lovely Crown Princess Nesika depends upon the outcome of a battle of wits between Mazel, the spirit of good luck, and Shlimazel, the spirit of bad luck. "Ages seven to ten." (Sat R)

Reviewed by Polly Goodwin
Book World p21 Mr 3 '68 250w

Reviewed by M. L. Birmingham
Commonweal 88:301 My 24 '68 50w

"The author of Zlateh the Goat and Other Stories [BRD 1966] and The Fearsome Inn [BRD 1968] has skillfully retold an old tale remembered from childhood, one that readers of fairy tales should greatly enjoy. Although the large oblong format suggests a picture book for young children, for whom the narrative would have little appeal, the strong, humorous illustrations in deep, warm colors are in tune with the story." R. H. V.

Horn Bk 44:62 F '68 250w

Reviewed by S. A. Roth
Library J 92:4606 D 15 '67 220w

"In Yiddish, 'mazel' means luck, or good luck, and 'shlimazel' means misfortune. In Isaac Singer's latest parable, these are two invisible spirits, the one jauntily dressed, well intentioned and a trifle foolish, the other bent over, evil, prone to drink. . . . It is an exceptionally winning tale, gentle, light-hearted, wholesome, and with just the right edge of moral mystery below the surface to hold one's interest and perk one's wonder. Margot Zemach's color illustrations are vivid and busily spirited; if a trifle harsh in line (and Chagall-esque in composition), they do convey both the comedy of the characters and a lively sense of time and place." Elliot Fremont-Smith

N Y Times Bk R p30 Ja 7 '68 550w

"[This] is a wonderful book. It is based on a Jewish folk tale, but, like the stories by Tolstoy based on folk tales, it has a literary character that folk tales told by folks (or translators) don't have. It also has a scenic quality that gives the story a movie-like immediacy and quickness. . . . The way Shlimazel contrives to win the wager is a witty surprise, and how, moreover, the storyteller arranges to have the story end happily after all is also ingenious and satisfying. The colored illustrations . . . have the flavor of folk art but, like the text, are anything but artless." Janet Malcolm

New Yorker 43:181 D 16 '67 450w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland
Sat R 50:35 D 16 '67 160w

SINGER, ISAAC BASHEVIS. The séance, and other stories. 276p $5.95 Farrar, Straus

68-23742

This collection "contains sixteen tales set in [the] terrain of the imagination which sinners and saints, the quick and the dead, dybbuks and devils call home. Although most of the pieces reflect the East European ethos, folkways, and historical condition, three stories take place in the New World." (Sat R) These stories were first published in such magazines as The New Yorker, Harper's, Commentary, and American Judaism.

Reviewed by W. H. Schweder
Best Sell 28:370 D 1 '68 500w

Reviewed by J. C. Oates
Book World p5 D 22 '68 850w

Reviewed by M. I. Prochilo
Library J 93:3580 O 1 '68 240w

Reviewed by Daniel Stern
Nation 207:632 D 9 '68 1200w

Reviewed by Edmund White
New Repub 159:22 N 16 '68 800w

Reviewed by Stanley Elkin
N Y Times Bk R p4 O 20 '68 1200w

"[This collection] varies widely in quality—as widely as the magazines of origin. The best of these stories, while they don't always attain the level of his finest previous work, are very fine indeed; the less successful ones are sometimes curiously fragmentary and cursory, glit-tering pages of a major writer which have not been woven into seamless wholes. Singer's themes and obsessions remain constant: love and death, God and the Devil, flesh and spirit—the human and cosmic mystery." S. M.

Newsweek 72:112 O 14 '68 390w

"Some of the stories have a familiar locale, even a faint aura of déjà vu. In a few mechanics of storytelling are forced, as though the writer felt obliged to show that his invention has not been exhausted. We willingly accept the grotesque in Singer; . . . however, our disbelief must be suspended. . . . Despite the translations by several hands the tone of the entire collection is amazingly even. . . . [This] adds to its author's well-deserved reputation as one of our major creative artists. When a man writes as well and as prolifically as Isaac Bashevis Singer, we need not expect supremacy in every single piece. Discovery of even one gem is cause for rejoicing." Curt Leviant

Sat R 51:36 O 12 '68 1100w

SINGER, MILTON, ed. Krishna: myths, rites, and attitudes; with a foreword by Daniel H. H. Ingalls. 277p $6.50 East West center press

294.5 Hinduism

65-20585

Six American and three Indian scholars have cooperated to examine the Krishna legends, "especially those depicting him as the divine herdsman of Gokula . . . which appear in the Bhāgavata Purāna and literature derived from this 9th- or 10th-century Tamil text. Thomas Hopkins, historian of religions, and J. A. B. van Buitenen, Sanskritist, provide analyses of the text itself. S. M. Pandey and Norman Zide, linguists, concern themselves with the 16th-century bhakti-devotional poetry of Sūrdās. The impact of Caitanya's 16th-century Vaiṣṇava revival in Bengal is traced by Edward Dimock, historian of Bengali literature and culture. Three social anthropologists and a Sanskritist contribute studies of contemporary Vaiṣṇava life and practice which reveal strong influences of the Kṛṣṇa legends." (Choice) Chapter bibliographies. Index.

"Hardly ever before have Indologists and anthropologists joined forces to produce a truly exquisite book that contains both diachronic philological depth and synchronic analysis. . . . Here the twain have met. . . . Three of the authors are anthropologists; the other six present the theme in a literary fashion, but almost all of them provide some fine anthropological insights. By far the most extensive essay, and no doubt the focal piece in the book, is the editor's study of the Rādhā-Krishna *bhajan*s (litany-and-commemorative assemblage for the worship of the god) in the city of Madras. This article is particularly fascinating to Indianist anthropologists." Agehananda Bharati

Am Anthropol 69:762 D '67 600w

"There are extensive notes for each paper and a complete index. . . . [For three of the eight chapters there are] good bibliographies. A highly valuable collection of essays for students of sociology, anthropology, religion, philosophy, comparative literature, and Indian cultural history."

Choice 4:280 My '67 300w

SINGH, D. BRIGHT. Economics of development; with special reference to India. 611p $9.75 Asia pub.

330.9 Economic development. India—Economic conditions. India—Economic policy

SA67-1777

"The eighteen chapters fall broadly into four divisions. The earlier chapters review the distinguishing economic and social characteristics of developed and underdeveloped countries; the second section deals with the problems of population, savings, etc.; the third with taxation, deficit financing, foreign policy and foreign capital; and the fourth with the role of the government, the need for planning in economic development and an assessment of planned economic progress in India." (Publisher's note) Index.

"[The first chapter concerning] the nature of underdevelopment provides insights that make it one of the best in the book and the literature. . . . This textbook is impressive in the sense that it comes from a person who has lived in less developed countries, has a good feel of the problems facing them, has carefully read and incorporated the literature, avoids generalizations, [and] is more interested in substance (key issues) than form. . . . [However, the book] has some fundamental limitations. It does not incorporate the literature since 1963 . . . it presents a view that is based on the writings about developed and developing nations by economists residing mainly in the United States and India; . . . is not sufficiently theoretical for a graduate economic development course; and incorporates practically no 'foreign-language' literature." M. J. Mama-lakis

Am Econ R 57:1342 D '67 950w

SINGH, D. B.—Continued

"Singh has written an authoritative and well documented survey of the field of economic development. His 'special reference to India' should by no means restrict this work to the attention only of scholars of India. The book is much more general and is astonishingly broad in scope and detailed in its coverage. Its great length owes to the fact that hardly anything has been left out. Fortunately, the style is clear. . . . This book is, in fact, so exhaustive and each topic garnished with so much detail that its usefulness as an undergraduate text will possibly be deemed less than that of something on a more basically introductory level. As a reference source for anyone with a serious interest in problems of economic development, it is a valuable addition to the literature on the subject."

Choice 4:1023 N '67 170w

Reviewed by R. P. Mendels

Pacific Affairs 41:128 spring '68 310w

SINGHA, RINA. Indian dances; their history and growth [by] Rina Singha and Reginald Massey. 264p il $12.50 Braziller

793.3 Dancing—India

68-64897

This book describes "the origins and development of the major schools of Indian classical dancing. . . . [It] examines the Bharata Natyam, Kathakali, Kathak, and Manipuri forms and the less familiar Odissi [and] includes a chapter each on Rabindranath Tagore and Uday Shankar." (Choice) Glossary. Bibliography. Index.

"[A book] which compares very favorably with F. Bower's Dance in India [BRD 1954]. If anything, [it] contains a great deal more technical information, and certainly gives a deeper account of the socio-religious and socio-political influences in the growth of these dances. . . . It can serve the connoisseur with specifics on costume, manner, custom, and mores. Other features include an extensive introduction, a fascinating appendix entitled 'Gurus and Dances,' [and] an ample bibliography. . . . The over three dozen illustrations are adequate but hardly too drawer."

Choice 5:802 S '68 190w

"The classical dances of South India, the dance drama of Kerala, the courtly dances of northern India, the distinctive style of Manipur, and the recently discovered dances of Orissa are clearly set out and related to their geographical and historical background. . . . The rich folk-dance tradition of India's villages and tribal people, however, is ignored and although the structure of each kind of 'classical' dance is analysed with considerable clarity, the hand gestures (mudras)—essential elements in Indian dancing—are left, to a great extent, unexplained and inadequately illustrated. In other portions of the book, also, lucid diagrams would have been particularly helpful, as indeed would have been evocative photographs of the dancers in action."

TLS p572 Je ■ '68 290w

SINGLETON, CHARLES S., ed. Art, science, and history in the renaissance. 446p il $12.50 Johns Hopkins press

940.2 Renaissance

67-16675

These lectures were delivered in 1967 at "a seminar sponsored by the Humanities Center of Johns Hopkins. This collection includes . . . articles on art and music by Gombrich, J. White, Lowinsky, and Rubsamen, on science and technology by Waters, G. Boas, Yates, Clagett, Drake, and McMullin, and on history by Gilbert, Hexter, and Clemen." (Choice) Index.

"A rewarding account for the advanced college student interested in an approach to a period focused from many directions. Full and unifying index."

Choice 5:940 O '68 180w

"Each man has chosen an interesting topic from his field of scholarship presenting it in such a way as to make a general picture of this great age emerge from the discussion of his particular subject. There are some fine discussions on the arts and literature, including art criticism, the competition and interrelation of sculpture and painting, the music of Lorenzo de' Medici's Carnival Songs, and the poetry of John Donne, and on history and political science. . . . The major emphasis is . . . on philosophy and the mathematical and applied sciences. Dealing with the roots of modern thought, the comprehensive view represented by these papers covers four centuries from Nicholas Oresme and the Florentine Platonists to Copernicus, Galilei, and Newton." F. M. Wassermann

Library J 93:1137 Mr 15 '68 330w

SIPE, DOROTHY L. Shakespeare's metrics. (Yale univ. Yale study in English). 266p $8.50 Yale univ. press

821 Shakespeare, William—Poetry. Shakespeare, William—Technique 68-13929

This study is based on a "survey of 12,814 lines containing examples of Shakespeare's choice 'between or among etymologically related words differing from one another in number of syllables but not in meaning (e.g. abide and bide)'. It concludes that at least 99.5 percent of the time Shakespeare 'wrote carefully constructed iambic verse into which he introduced only those few minor variations considered permissible in his time': initial truncation, inversion, a feminine ending, caesural irregularity, and . . . occasional short lines and hexameters instead of the usual pentameters." (Choice)

"Employing and supplementing the findings of the late Helge Kökeritz (Shakespeare's Pronunciation), this important study also stands firmly on an original survey. . . . [It] will be indispensable to every serious student of Shakespeare's metrics; the detailed discussions of dozens of forms and particular words will prove especially useful."

Choice 5:960 O '68 160w

"All future work on the subject must begin with this book. . . . [The author] demonstrates clearly that much of the stylistic flavor of Shakespeare's dense and startling diction arises in his effort to preserve the iambic pattern."

Va Q R 44:cxv summer '68 120w

SISSMAN, L. E. Dying: an introduction; poems. 133p $4.50; pa $1.95 Little 811

67-23837

Poems in this collection have appeared in The New Yorker, Atlantic, and other periodicals.

"The best book of poetry I have encountered in several years. . . . The poet artistically controls the rhythm, creates original and appropriate metaphors, and employs superb details. . . . Some of the best lines ring in one's ear like emphatic pronouncements finely expressed, in a rhythm that is natural and effective. . . . A few weak poems might have been excised." Duane Schneider

Library J 93:193 Ja 15 '68 230w

"Sissman writes the sort of poem that helps sell thousand-dollar jade talc dispensers in The New Yorker. 'Dying: An Introduction' simply goes on and on with the most flatulent urban humoresque, an assumption that we all must share some fey attitude toward the 'godawfulness' of life." Jim Harrison

N Y Times Bk R p6 Ap 28 '68 200w

SITWELL, SACHEVERELL. Baroque and rococo. 306p il col il $12.95 Putnam

709.03 Art, Baroque. Art, Rococco 67-24868

The author discusses examples of the Baroque and Rococo styles in Southern Europe and Latin America, with emphasis on Sicily, Spain and Mexico. He also considers the music and theater of the period. Index.

"[Mr. Sitwell selects] the triumphs of 16th-Century and 17th-Century architecture, and concentrates on the facades of buildings which he feels are the keystones of style. His descriptions and comparisons of buildings are abetted by stunning illustrations; reproductions of the several paintings included are models of clarity and fine color. . . . Recommended very highly for public and academic libraries." R. L. Enequist

Library J 93:178 Ja 15 '68 130w

"[This] vivacious, well-informed, splendidly illustrated [book] comes as a stimulating addition to our concept of this provocative, controversial period in the history of art. The author's familiarity with his subject is beyond dispute. . . . [The] book is not so much a history of this esthetic phenomenon . . . as a collection of essays on the author's reactions to the examples of Baroque and Rococo that particularly struck him in the course of his peregrinations. . . . [Mr Sitwell] brings his account of this glittering period to a close with a lifelike portrait of Scarlatti, a native of the land where Baroque and Rococo had their genesis. The biographical sketch is followed by an erudite and perceptive 'Notes on three hundred and more' of the Maestro's sonatas." Carlo Beuf

N Y Times Bk R p58 N 26 '67 1300w

SIZER, THEODORE. The works of Colonel John Trumbull; artist of the American Revolution, by Theodore Sizer with the assistance of Caroline Rollins. rev ed 181p 276il $12.50 Yale univ. press

759.13 Trumbull, John 67-20337

An enlarged version of "Sizer's 1950 checklist of the paintings and drawings of the . . . late 18th-, early 19th-century 'Patriot-Artist.' The checklist has been corrected, with locations of works brought up to date and new discoveries added, and the appendix . . . [now includes] articles by Sizer that have appeared since the original publication." (Choice) Bibliography. For original edition see BRD 1951.

"The size and quality [of the illustrations] are not all that one might want. Still, the greatly increased representation of Trumbull's work—ranging from portraits and historical paintings to landscapes, religious paintings, figure studies, architectural drawings, and details of the history paintings—is very valuable. Recommended, even when the 1950 edition is already owned."

Choice 4:1112 D '67 130w

"This new edition includes 276 illustrations, the largest corpus of reproductions of Trumbull's works yet published; the original edition included only 46. . . . The work is essential to all collections in American art, special, academic, and public." M. E. Landgren

Library J 92:4495 D 15 '67 80w

"[This revised edition] marks a significant milestone in the documentation of American painting, particularly portraiture. The scope is broad and the revision substantial. . . . [The essays in the appendix] on different aspects of the artist's work, his painting procedure, prices, and other considerations of interest to the art historian, all written in Sizer's characteristically perceptive and vigorous style [are] at once humorous, scholarly, and direct. . . . No student of the Revolution should be without this work." Andrew Oliver

New Eng Q 41:123 Mr '68 700w

SJEKLOCHA, PAUL. Unofficial art in the Soviet Union, by Paul Sjeklocha and Igor Mead. 213p il col il $15 Univ. of Calif. press

709.47 Art, Russian, Artists, Russian 67-28461

This book is based on the authors' "travels and interviews. . . . [The introduction describes the history of art in Russia] up to the present. . . . In the second half of the book the authors present illustrations of the work of the artists—painters, graphic artists, and one sculptor—who, in defiance of the official program, have produced works in an Expressionist, Surrealist or Abstract vein. They describe the work of such artists as Kaplan, Rabin, Yakovlev, Kharitonov, Sitnikov, and some who remain anonymous." (Library J) Bibliography.

"[The authors'] discussion of several present-day Russian artists, hardly known at all to the West and known only to a very select circle in Russia, is preceded by an introduction to the Russian art tradition, the ideology and development of official art including literature since Lenin, the official program of Socialist Realism under Lenin and Stalin, the repeated thaws and freezes under Khrushchev. . . . [This introduction] with its detailed chronology, is not easy reading. . . . The authors' presentation is a scholarly and journalistic mixture. The book will interest sociologists, political scientists, and students of the arts." J. L. Dewton

Library J 93:980 Mr 1 '68 230w

Nation 206:124 Ja 22 '68 20w

"The weakest section of the book lies in its hurried summary of Russian art from Byzantine times until our own day; . . . it contains many errors of fact. . . . There are also a few mistakes . . . in the [authors'] discussion of the present situation. . . . But despite these defects it needs to be said that this book provides a uniquely rich source of information about the artistic situation in Russia today, and that the authors genuinely convey the excitement they felt at discovering an unknown land. The warmth of their approach and the sympathy that they obviously feel for the artists whom they met make this an attractive as well as an important book."

N Y Rev of Books 10:4 My 9 '68 2800w

"The [authors] collected the material for an interesting report on their personal experience of non-socialist-realist painting. It is only a pity that it should have been expanded into a full-scale book. . . . Where they are at their best is in describing the conditions and life: the cramping lack of space to work in, the pressures exerted by family and neighbours, . . . the state ownership of all printing media, including the etcher's press, the varying roles played by individual collectors and different official organizations. . . . There are useful accounts of the Manège affair of December, 1962 . . . and of the less well-known incident at the Hermitage on April 1, 1964. . . . With everything that lies farther back than that, however, the authors seem too unfamiliar for their interpretation to command attention. . . . They take the top surface of ideological debate too much at its face value. . . . The danger of this slightly naive approach . . . is that it may lead foreigners to look for (and applaud) the wrong symptoms in unorthodox Communist art."

TLS p888 Ag 22 '68 1200w

SJÖWALL, MAJ. Roseanna [by] Maj Sjöwall and Per Wahlöö; tr. from the Swedish by Lois Roth. 212p $4.50 Pantheon bks.

67-23963

This novel introduces "Martin Beck, First Detective Inspector of the Stockholm National Police, . . . [as he investigates the murder] of a naked woman, [Rosanna,] dredged from the lock at Motala on Lake Vättern." (Library J)

Best Sell 27:406 Ja 15 '68 50w

"[This] is a wonderfully tough and pleasantly chilling tale though told without a wasted word."

Harper 236:79 Ja '68 200w

"The slow buildup is almost as tense as the slashing climax." M. K. Grant

Library J 92:4436 D 1 '67 100w

Reviewed by Sergeant Cuff

Sat N 50:33 D 23 '67 40w

SKARD, SIGMUND, ed. Americana norvegica, v 1. See Americana norvegica

SKENDI, STAVRO. The Albanian national awakening, 1878-1912. 498p $13.75 Princeton univ. press

949.6 Albania, Nationalism 66-17710

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by Traian Stoianovich
Am Hist R 73:537 D '67 420w

Reviewed by M. G. Pursinger
Ann Am Acad 375:212 Ja '68 330w
TLS p622 Je 13 '68 600w

SKIDMORE, THOMAS E. Politics in Brazil 1930-1964; an experiment in democracy. 446p $8.75 Oxford

981 Brazil—Politics and government 67-20406

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by Mario Rodríguez
Am Hist R 73:948 F '68 400w

Reviewed by J. M. Young
Am Pol Sci R 62:281 Mr '68 600w

Reviewed by M. M. Hall
Commonweal 87:545 F 2 '68 400w
TLS p1293 N 14 '68 300w

SKINNER, ANDREW S., ed. An inquiry into the principles of political economy, 2v. See Steuart, J.

SKLARE, MARSHALL. Jewish identity on the suburban frontier: a study of group survival in the open society [by] Marshall Sklare and Joseph Greenblum. 362p $11.50 Basic bks.

301.45 Jews in the U.S. Suburban life

67-17394

This "study of the Jewish population of an affluent suburb of a major Midwestern city

SKLARE, MARSHALL—Continued

deals with sociological characteristics, self definitions, religious practices, attitudes toward Israel, intergroup behaviors and expectations, and internal institutional and group structure of a Jewish community." (Choice) Index.

Reviewed by Andrew Effrat
Am J Soc 74:104 J1 '68 500w

"[The] style is direct, simple, straightforward, and clear, making almost no use of the jargon of professional or Jewish agency intergroups. . . . Clearly superior to J. R. Kramer's Children of the Gilded Ghetto [BRD 1962], it will be of great value to students of culture and ethnic assimilation, intergroup relations, and the sociology of religion. . . . The use of a comprehensive historical frame of reference which compares first through fourth generation respondents and their ancestors makes the study rare and extremely valuable."

Choice 5:130 Mr '68 200w

Reviewed by Nathan Glazer
Commentary 45:67 Ag '68 2200w

"Interviews with 432 Jewish inhabitants of an anonymous middle-western suburb form the basis of this study. The elite group provide persuasive projections of behavior patterns and attitudes. . . . Sklare, a professor of sociology at Yeshiva University, and Greenblum, of the American Jewish Committee, have combined good reporting with good scholarship. Uncomfortable assessments of feelings toward Israel, for example, are presented with much clarity. Homogeneity of friendships, support of Negro rights, synagogue ties, and transmission of ideals all are explored. The 1957-58 data may insufficiently take into account electronic extensions of man, but this is an important study, nevertheless. Essential for most libraries!" H. M. Kapenstein

Library J 92:1846 My 1 '67 120w

SKOLIMOWSKI, HENRYK. Polish analytical philosophy: a survey and comparison with British analytical philosophy. 275p $7.50 Humanities press

160 Analysis (Philosophy). Philosophy, Polish [67-82250]

This volume studies "analysis in Poland between 1895 and 1960, concentrating on Twardowski, . . . Lukasiewicz, Kotarbinski, Ajdukiewicz, and secondarily on Tarski and Tarskiewicz. . . . [The author] emphasizes developments in the theory of meaning and truth, epistemology, and ontology." (Choice)

"[This is] the first detailed study in English (or Polish) of analysis in Poland. . . . [Skolimowski] unfortunately does not examine or assess [developments] in logic. . . . The comparative material on the British is of limited value as meta-analysis, where not misleading to the nonspecialist. There is an interesting chapter on 'Analytical-Linguistic Marxism.'" Choice 5:788 S '68 170w

"The movement of thought that Twardowski originally inspired penetrated far beyond formal logic and analytic philosophy. It . . . led to the development of a common language for rational communication among thinkers of very different ultimate loyalties. . . . [This is a] full and clear account of the whole movement . . . which does not confine itself too narrowly to the area marked out by its title." Anthony Quinton

N Y Rev of Books 10:22 Ap 25 '68 800w

SKOURA, SOPHIA. The Greek cook book; tr. and adapted by Helen Georges. 230p $4.95 Crown

641.5 Cookery, Greek 67-27043

This cookbook, "translated from the Greek, contains a large selection of recipes reflecting many regional specialties. Each recipe bears its Greek name, transliterated. Recipes with seafood, lamb, . . . rice, vegetables cooked and served with a rich oil sauce, many uses of phyllo, and 'spoon sweets' are included. . . . In addition to recipes, the book contains a phonetic Greek and English index, a glossary, and explanatory notes." (Library J)

"[This] is an unassuming introduction to this relatively little-known cuisine. . . . Even balky American children will happily eat cauliflower, or any of the numerous stuffed tomatoes, squash, peppers or vine leaves Dolmari cooked as Miss Skoura suggests." Gloria Levitas

Book World p6 D 17 '67 130w

"Greek cuisine is delicious and distinctive, and the available books in English on its preparation are limited. . . . Authentic and easy to follow, these recipes will whet the appetites of all lovers of good cooking. . . . For cooks and those interested in Greek life." Sally Poundstone

Library J 92:4503 D 15 '67 100w

SLADKOVSKII, M. I. History of economic relations between Russia and China; tr. by M. Roublev; sinological editor: G. Grause. 299p $12.75 Davey; Israel program for scientific trs.

327.47 Russia—Foreign relations—China. China—Foreign relations—Russia. International economic relations

This study of a commercial relationship during the last three centuries is based on "official treaties and agreements, letters and other diplomatic documents, statistical data on foreign trade and banking, as well as historical and economic studies which throw light on the development of economic ties between the two neighboring states." (Foreword) "The actual texts of treaties between Russia and China, which appeared in a special appendix in the original, are not reproduced in this translation." (Publisher's note) Chronology. Bibliography. Originally published in Russian.

"This book, the work of a Soviet scholar, was originally published in the Soviet Union in 1957. . . . The first third of the book, taking the reader to the end of the 19th century, contains an interesting compilation of trade statistics. . . . When the 20th century is reached, the volume takes on the character of a polemic and forfeits all claims to scholarly objectivity. . . . The United States emerges as the real villain of the piece. . . . The Soviet Union, by contrast, is pictured as always correct and self-abnegating in dealing with China. . . . Sladkovskii throws no new light on Sino-Soviet economic relations from 1950 to 1957; what he has to say is mainly a summary of the various agreements, without attempt at analysis" Walter Galenson

Am Econ R 58:226 Mr '68 800w

"Sladkovskii's book contains important and otherwise unpublished information. . . . Even though conditions have changed radically, the material about relations in the more recent period, especially from 1945-56, is particularly valuable. . . . [The translation] is a worthwhile effort, making this semi-primary source available to those who do not know Russian. Some Western authors have based their own studies on Sladkovskii's book; now students can read the original. The study is highly biased from the Soviet point of view as it existed in 1957. . . . On the whole, the translation is good but there are many typographical errors. . . . A valuable source for the advanced student who wants to study any phase of Russian-Chinese relations."

Choice 5:238 Ap '68 240w

SLATER, JEROME. The OAS and United States foreign policy. 315p $6 Ohio state univ. press

341.18 Organization of American States. U.S.—Foreign relations—Latin America. Latin America—Foreign relations—U.S. 67-10162

"Slater organizes his work around the changing roles 'assigned' to the O.A.S. by policy makers in Washington: the O.A.S. as a collective security system; as an anti-Communist alliance; as an anti-dictatorial alliance; and, again, as an anti-Communist alliance. Each of these North American attitudes and O.A.S. roles is illustrated by case studies of U.S. and O.A.S. behavior in critical hemispheric events." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"The present book is in the unilateral, ethnocentric approach, limited almost exclusively to the United States. Despite these drawbacks and the conscious ignoring of economic factors, Slater's book makes some fresh contributions. Its explanation of how the OAS has been alternately a collective security system, an anti-Communist alliance, and an antidictatorial alliance is often quite penetrating. And the discussion of the ambivalent approach both of the United States and various Latin American countries to the principle of nonintervention, as they alternately honor and ignore this alleged keystone of the Good Neighbor policy, is developed in thoughtful manner. The author's conviction that the United States should intervene more consistently in Latin American affairs in order to promote democracy may strike some readers as manifesting . . . arrogance and naïveté." F. B. Pike

Am Hist R 73:944 F '68 500w

Reviewed by Y. H. Ferguson

Am Pol Sci R 62:308 Mr '68 1750w

"In the author's opinion, the OAS has functioned with some success in supporting a collective security system, but in serving as an alliance it is relatively impotent. This study is repetitious, but there are pertinent omissions. It is analytical, but not always objective. Many public documents are cited, but opinions of the author and others are often given factual status and are premature in consequence. Yet Dr. Slater has given a good indication of the direction that our Latin-American policy is now taking." A. C. Wilgus

Ann Am Acad 376:174 Mr '68 330w

"It is [the author's] approach that most readers are likely to find interesting. Slater's conclusions are refreshing: (1) Johnsonian policies pose a grave threat to the O.A.S. and discourage genuine development in Latin America; and (2) an activist O.A.S. might well work against U.S. political and material interests by strengthening leftists, nationalists, and anti-Americanism—but it would 'almost surely be good for the long-repressed people of Latin America.' That Slater diverges the paths of 'morality' and 'realism' divergent in this case may not be comforting, but it certainly is candid. Recommended."

Choice 5:124 Mr '68 240w

SLATER, PHILIP E., jt. auth. The temporary society. See Bennis, W. G.

SLATTERY, T. P. The assassination of D'Arcy McGee; with il. by the author. 527p il maps $7.95 Doubleday

971.04 McGee, Thomas D'Arcy 68-13134

A biography of the Canadian editor, statesman and poet. Bibliography. Index.

"McGee was one of the great fathers of Canadian Confederation, and his murder in his prime was a tragedy with historical implications that are still all too little realized. . . . The author has taken great pains . . . improved upon the previous writings on McGee, and uncovered new documentary evidence. This book is far more than a mere account of the assassination: it is the life of McGee. . . . The author's style is pedestrian, but the facts are here well rounded and well organized." William Ready

America 119:48 Jl 20 '68 370w

"Not fully familiar with the contours and complexities of Canadian history, [Slattery's] use of secondary works is rather weak. At times he is overly dependent on them, at others apparently unaware of relevant recent studies. The major frustration is that, having had the opportunity of seeing more manuscript collections and benefiting from a greater body of distinguished historical writing than previous biographers . . . he does not give us the lucid and balanced assessment of McGee . . . which is badly needed. In this long narrative there are too many imagined remarks, purported reactions, and unsupported statements. The reader is left questioning some details and judgments in a work which, as a whole, is disappointing. Recommended only for libraries with a strong interest in Canadiana or the Irish in North America."

Choice 5:1362 D '68 140w

"[This book] will be of limited interest to American readers. Much of the ground [covered] is a restatement of the story of pre-Confederation Canada told so magisterially by Donald Creighton in his study, John A. Macdonald: Vol. 1, The Young Politician; Vol. 2, The Old Chieftain. On the other hand, the number of biographies of Canadian public figures are so few that almost anything is a welcome addition. This book is recommended for research collections." L. S. Fallis

Library J 93:2233 Je 1 '68 120w

SLAVITT, DAVID. Rochelle; or Virtue rewarded. 191p $4.50 Delacorte press

67-20251

This first novel is about Rochelle Katz, "a 28-year-old buyer at Bloomingdale's, whose greatest misfortune is that she is dull and virtuous. Morton [Aaronson, the narrator,] with the help of his wife and brother-in-law, decides to change Rochelle into an alluring and irresistible creature. His scheme: a magnificently proper rape, conceived on a grand scale and executed with total aplomb." (Publisher's note)

Reviewed by H. L. Rosofsky

Library J 92:4435 D 1 '67 190w

"David Slavitt ingeniously applies as light a manner as possible . . . to torrid subject-matter. . . . The advantage of [this] seems to be that it makes the author morally immune to his subject and the characters morally immune to each other. . . . Slavitt is an American Amis, and although his stylistic touch is shaky by comparison . . . there is a similar determination to find everything fake and hateful, especially one's job, milieu, and closest relatives and acquaintances." David Craig

New Statesman 72:101 Jl 15 '66 310w

"[This book] has a worthy intention: it sets out to kid sex. . . . Unfortunately . . . [it] is not as funny as [P. Réage's] 'The Story of O' [BRD 1966]. . . . There are heavy ironies here, and a lot of heavier humor involving plays on words that set the teeth to gnashing."

Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p44 S 17 '67 110w

"Rochelle may be enjoyed as a piece of smart nastiness or hated as a piece of nasty smartness. At times this first novel is very funny, and Rochelle . . . is an unusual and well-imagined character. The cynical trio who try to engineer her life into a vicious appearance are more predictable, but still good fun. This modish novel should remain readable for the next five years or so, David Slavitt displays considerable verbal skill."

TLS p721 Ag 11 '66 120w

SLIMMING, JOHN. The pepper garden; ■ novel. 234p $4.95 Lippincott

68-11376

"Peter Rodway is the manager of a rubber estate in Sarawak, having fled there from Malaya after his Eurasian mistress [Juliah] was murdered by terrorists during the Emergency. A second, less satisfactory mistress has been installed, along with a Chinese boy, Ah Huang, whom Rodway thinks of as a son. When Chinese dissidents begin guerrilla activities in Sarawak, Ah Huang is . . . ■ sympathizer." (TLS)

Reviewed by S. L. Hopkinson

Library J 92:4435 D 1 '67 200w

"[With this novel] Slimming achieves the full, authentic voice of the mature creative writer. You need read only ■ little way into the book to hear it: flat, experienced, edged with frustration and anger, realistic, humane. Once begun, it never falters. . . . [This is] the work of someone who has been in the Far East and knows every detail of his story. . . . Here, too, are the hundred poisonous flowers of Communist terrorism; the difference between black and white pepper, black and white values, yellow and white prerogatives. The book's distinction is that it makes all this plausible. . . . Peter Rodway becomes more than a burnt-out case. . . . [He] is an Ugly Englishman, but he puts the anti-heroes of recent fiction to shame. John Slimming's achievement is that he has made a good man believable." Richard Rhodes

N Y Times Bk R p38 F 11 '68 750w

Reviewed by J. M. Allison

Sat R 51:29 Ap 6 '68 600w

"History may well repeat itself, but the manner in which it does so in [this] novel is ■ little too neat. . . . From his bungalow window, Rodway gazes out at the pepper garden and broods on the particularly nasty death of mistress number one. When Ah Huang wants to hold classes in weapon training, it is to the pepper garden they go. And finally it is in the pepper garden that Ah Huang is shot by government troops, thus enabling Rodway to suffer his second loss in an eminently fair manner. For those who are unfamiliar with the political pros and cons involved, there are several clumsily staged, informative duologues. These, together with Mr. Slimming's flat, rather repetitive style, prevent the genuine concern and perceptible sadness in the book from fully breaking through."

TLS p69 Ja 18 '68 300w

SLOAN, HAROLD S., jt. auth. Classrooms on Main Street. See Clark, H. F.

SLOCUM, WALTER L. Occupational careers; a sociological perspective. 272p $6 Aldine pub.

331 U.S.—Occupations 66-23168

"After introducing the notion of an occupational career as a sequence of increasingly responsible roles within an occupation, the first nine chapters deal in broad terms with the main organizational and demographic facts about work and the labor force. . . . The book tends to focus its discussion of occupations upon white collar, and particularly managerial, technical, and professional careers. The last three chapters take the perspective of the individual and focus on the processes by which one is involved in jobs, occupations, and occupational careers." (Am Soc R) Annotated bibliographies.

Reviewed by P. M. Siegel
Am Soc R 33:136 F '68 700w
Choice 5:565 Je '68 160w

"This book is addressed to vocational counselors, personnel workers, sociologists, and young people seeking information for personal use in career planning. The frame of reference is sociological, but the product is frankly eclectic. Though a wide range of information on occupational careers is thus integrated, the book remains, on the whole, a rather elementary introduction to the sociology of work. . . . There is a review of occupational aspirations and of the time-table of occupational decision making. Finally, Slocum takes the reader through the career patterns of several groups, tracing military officers, business executives, Wall Street lawyers, federal executives, scientists, professors, and public school teachers through the stages of entrance, tenure, and mobility. He ends by suggesting some career strategies." W. C. Neely Social Studies 59:138 Mr '68 270w

SLOTE, BERNICE, ed. The kingdom of art: Willa Cather's first principles and critical statements, 1893-1896. See Cather, W.

SLOYAN, GERARD S., ed. Secular priest in the new church. 252p $5.95 Herder & Herder 253 Clergy. Catholic Church 67-25885

"This volume is a collection of 12 articles, by as many authors, on the theology and ministry of the priest in the post-Vatican II era. The contributors are a bishop, nine diocesan priests, a Jesuit professor of theology and a woman professor of humanities at Howard University." (America)

"There is much in this volume with which I would both agree and disagree. . . . There is the wholly admirable essay by Bishop John King Mussio on the bishop-priest relationship. There is realism and much food for thought in Fr. Gerard Sloyan's treatment of the spirituality of the secular priesthood—though I regret the bitter, pessimistic note on which he concludes. . . . It is somewhat difficult to follow the thought of Rosemary Rueher through the maze of her 'Ministry in the Church of the Future,' and one wonders if her notions of ordination and charismatic ministry are historically accurate or quite orthodox. . . . [However] I recommend [this volume] to all for whom the ministry of the secular priest in the new Church is a matter of concern." J. W. Baker
America 118:92 Ja 20 '68 450w
Commonweal 87:390 D 22 '67 30w

SMARIDGE, NORAH. Master mariner; the adventurous life of Joseph Conrad; il. by Charles Waterhouse. 174p $3.25 Hawthorn bks.

B or 92 Conrad, Joseph—Juvenile literature 66-15256

A biography of the Polish-born author of Lord Jim and of other novels with the sea as their background. Bibliography. Index. "Grades six to nine." (Best Sell)

"Most of Conrad's stories would be too difficult for the young people who read this biography. However, the background of his life will prepare them to understand his tales when they come to read them. His lonely boyhood and days in exile with his parents are brought forward, as well as the great desire, he had to go to sea."

Best Sell 27:18 Ap 1 '67 100w

"[The author] would have been wiser to write only of the youth of Conrad, for the early years of his life in Russia and Poland are packed with wonderful material, here desperately compressed to make way for subjects such as his relationship with Cervoni and the connections between his life and his books, neither of which seems at home in a volume copiously supplied with boys' adventure-type illustrations. A book which will satisfy neither young nor old."

TLS p1160 N 30 '67 80w

SMART, CHARLES ALLEN. The long watch. 237p $5.95 World pub.

940.54 World War, 1939-1945—Personal narratives 68-13712

"After the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor, the author enlisted as an Apprentice Seaman in the United States Navy. In this book he relives his experiences in training schools and camps and on three different LSTs . . . in the New Guinea campaign in the Pacific, in the English Channel (including D-Day), and finally in the Pacific again." (Publisher's note)

"[This] story of one man's life from 1942 to 1945—from island hopping in the Pacific—to D-Day in Europe—to the Pacific again, adds nothing to literature and less to history. . . . Any old Navy man will have a taste of nostalgia when reading of Smart's experiences, but all readers will cringe at his choice of words." J. B. Cullen

Best Sell 28:110 Je 1 '68 500w

"These memoirs fall somewhere between J. J. Fahey's informal Pacific War Diary [BRD 1963] and S. E. Morison's formal Two-Ocean War [BRD 1963]. . . . [Smart's] account of the training of crews for LST service and life aboard these awkward vessels is particularly interesting. His emotional and intellectual responses to the war will refresh memories of naval men in a way that more formal histories cannot. This is the type of document that supplements conventional studies because the author has approached historic events in human terms. Recommended for general readers and also of peripheral interest to naval historians." Robert Van Benthuyzen
Library J 93:1624 Ap 15 '68 200w

SMILEY, DONALD V. The Canadian political nationality. 142p $6 Barnes & Noble 971 Canada—Politics and government [67-25014]

This "treatise on Canadian constitutional history, which was prepared at the request of the Canadian Centennial Commission, deals in large part with the 'two-Canadas' problem. Mr. Smiley, a political scientist at the University of British Columbia, examines . . . the content of the British North America Act of 1867, and shows how this act made confederation possible, but at the same time prevented Quebec from attaining equal partnership with the other provinces. From here he goes on to consider various aspects of the constitutional debate that has been taking place between Quebec and Ottawa since 1939." (Library J)

"This small book is packed with ideas that pertain to all federal systems, and the author's concepts relative to current political trends are as relevant to the U. S. as they are to Canada."

Choice 5:410 My '68 180w

"Professor Smiley's book packs much wisdom for its modest size. . . . For all who are perplexed about Canada's diverse voices and worried about its future, Professor Smiley offers the hope of a new national policy under central leadership. It sounds a little like the triumph of hope over experience and he expects much of the Conservatives; but the argument is temperate, consistent and always readable."

Economist 226:45 F 10 '68 170w

"The importance of Mr. Smiley's book lies principally in the fact that in it he supplies convincing argument in favor of revision of the BNA Act as the only feasible way of meeting Quebec's legitimate demands for equality. But it is important also for the first-hand account it gives of developments in Quebec under the Lesage and Johnson administrations. If the price seems a little steep for a small book, anyone at all interested in Canadian binationalism will be willing—almost ungrudgingly—to pay it. Recommended for university and large public collections." Peter Gellatly

Library J 92:4513 D 15 '67 170w

SMITH, A. J. M., comp. Modern Canadian verse in English and French. 426p $6.50 Oxford

811.08 Canadian poetry—Collections

This anthology was originally intended as an updating of The Oxford Book of Canadian Verse (BRD 1962). Instead, Mr. Smith has compiled a selection of contemporary poetry, in English or French, that includes the work of the younger generation of Canadian poets.

"Here, for the first time, is displayed the whole astonishing range and variety of the contemporary output in Canada. Most of the poets represented . . . are well known in Canada. Some, in fact, as, for instance, Earle Birney, Alain Grandbois, and Irving Layton, enjoy a reputation that is little short of legendary. One notes with satisfaction that Malcolm Lowry whose poetry was practically unknown until some years after his death, and Roy Daniells, a seldom-publishing but extraordinary poet, are both given attention. As for omissions, there are few of consequence. . . . Essential for most collections." Peter Gellatly

Library J 93:757 F 15 '68 260w

"[This] handsomely produced [anthology] represents our established poets intelligently and introduces a number of lively young voices. It is a collection for which it would be foolish to make extravagant claims, but it can be offered without apology." Mordecai Richler

New Statesman 75:111 Ja 26 '68 320w

"[This] new anthology is no mere codicil to the earlier collection. . . . The younger generation of English-Canadian poets in Modern Canadian Verse—many of them scarcely represented or not represented at all in the earlier book—no longer need the protection and excuse of the national adjective. They are poets and they are cosmopolitan. P. K. Page, Patrick Anderson, Raymond Souster, Daryl Hine, and David Wevill each has a bright and individual talent. . . . Since the beginning of the Second World War . . . the record of French Canada is less cheerful. . . . Some at least among the French have reduced their poetry with xenophobia."

TLS p155 F 15 '68 1050w

SMITH, ADAM. The money game. 302p il $6.95 Random house

332.6 Wall Street. Investments. Speculation 68-14526

The author argues "that all the books on money speak only of economics and statistics—and they're only half the Game. The other half of the Money Game is people, individually and together, emotional investor and irrational crowd. This book is about Wall Street and how the Money Game is played and how the players really behave." (Publisher's note) Portions of this book originally appeared in the Herald Tribune's New York magazine and various other periodicals.

"[Adam Smith's] style combines the bland audacity of Evelyn Waugh with a neo-Runyonesque idiom of his own which manages to be hip, funny and literate. . . . [This] is not a how-to-get-rich-quick book, nor a systematic guide to investing, nor a treatise on security analysis . . . [but an] endeavor to give a picture of things as they really are today in the investment world. . . . Smith draws on some of the techniques of the novelist. . . . For all its fun and frolics, [this] is a serious and searching book, full of good sense. . . . There are large and significant areas of the investment world which Adam Smith leaves unvisited, and it could be argued that his particular perspective gives excessive emphasis to the Street's jazzy phenomena. Conventionally minded investors—who cleave to the cult of Blue Chips . . . will no doubt view the world of Adam Smith with pious disapproval. But anyone whose orientation is toward where the action is, where the happenings happen, should buy a copy of The Money Game and read it with due diligence." C. J. Rolo

Book World p1 Je 2 '68 900w

Reviewed by Ed Engberg

Commonweal 89:320 N 29 '68 850w

"'Adam Smith' [George J. W. Goodman] is a veteran observer and commentator on the events and people of Wall Street. . . . His thorough knowledge of financial affairs gives his observations a great degree of authenticity. But the joy of reading this book comes from Mr. Smith's delightful sense of humor. He is a lively and ingeniously witty writer who never stoops to acerbity. None of the solemn sacred cows of Wall Street escape debunking. I particularly enjoyed his reflections on the chartists. This book is for sophisticated, urbane investors or students of Wall Street." R. M. Brooks

Library J 93:1625 Ap 15 '68 100w

Reviewed by Eric Berne

N Y Times Bk R p6 My 26 '68 1500w

"A jocular survey of contemporary approach to Wall Street speculation. The pseudonymous author, who writes from his own professional experience, emphasizes the irrational aspects of stock-market dealings and dealers, and appears ambivalent about the morality, utility, or attractiveness of this way of making money. The effect of his humor is uneven; sometimes he sounds like a wise man, sometimes like just a wise guy."

New Yorker 44:88 Je 29 '68 70w

Reviewed by Walter Guzzardi

Sat R 52:76 Ja 11 '69 470w

Time 91:88 Je 21 '68 600w

TLS p1206 O 24 '68 800w

SMITH, ALFRED G., ed. Communication and culture; readings in the codes of human interaction. 626p $7.95 Holt

001.5 Communication

66-16958

The editor "examines the relations of communication and culture by selecting readings within a 3 x 3 matrix, with the columns being mathematics, linguistics, and social psychology and the rows being syntactics, semantics, and pragmatics. One criterion for selection of the 55 articles was that they must have been published since the 1949 Shannon-Weaver development of information theory." (Choice) Among the contributors are Chomsky, Osgood, Casagrande and Rapoport. Bibliography. Index.

"The connective tissue provided by the editor is slim. The organization of the contents into syntactics, semantics, and pragmatics indicates an idiosyncratic use of these (at best vague) labels. . . . 'Editing scientific reports serves to sharpen their focus,' we are told. . . . [However] in this volume one never knows where the cuts are. . . . The references pose similar problems. The bibliography is 'selective' and for 'further reading.' Presumably it was designed to give students a map to direct their interest in communication. However, the book may manage to squelch the interests of better students by eliminating all references mentioned in the articles. . . . This is not a bad book, but it is not a good book either. The editor, probably with the help of the publishers, has made some serious mistakes of judgment. Most of the original articles speak well for themselves." Oswald Werner

Am Anthropol 69:546 O '67 800w

"Smith's book goes beyond communication treatment in the standard social psychology texts . . . by inclusion of substantial material on linguistics and the mathematical theory of communication while its attention to the latter subject and to pragmatics takes it beyond standard works in semantics. . . . The editor assumes a sophisticated audience (perhaps upper division undergraduates)."

Choice 4:438 Je '67 200w

SMITH, ANTHONY. The body. 524p $9.95 Walker & co.

612 Physiology. Reproduction

68-13972

The organization of this book centers around reproduction. "Chapters on the male and the female are followed by accounts of pregnancy, childbirth and heredity. The growth of the child is traced through puberty to maturity, to old age and death. Then the other organs and systems of the body are described: the brain, digestion, excretion, circulation, the skeleton and muscles." (N Y Times Bk R)

"[Mr. Smith] is a good naturalist and a good journalist. . . . [The book] is quite well written though seldom brilliant. . . . There are no references in which to follow up the details of the facts thrown at us. . . . Smith has left out the mental life of man—in his view it needs another volume. . . . Where the book is good, however, is on matters like comparative public health, the future impact of medicine on developing countries, various pieces of recent and not overfamiliar research, even though it is all extremely superficial. . . . I still cannot decide who is supposed to read this book. School children in the middle classes would be its most receptive audience. But they won't be kindled by it to become biologists and wrestle with the problems of the further insightful comprehension of man." Alex Comfort

SMITH, ANTHONY—Continued

Book World p4 Je 16 '68 800w

Economist 227:50 Ap 13 '68 800w

"We can still heartily congratulate ourselves on being human. This is the message of Anthony Smith's new book, conveyed with accuracy, wit and obvious enjoyment. . . . This is a catalogue of the results of science applied to man. . . . After all, the theories can be found easily enough in the standard works of physiology and anatomy. . . . [The section on reproduction] is very good indeed as well as being compulsively readable. . . . It would make an excellent present for anyone who is pregnant and wants to know what did, and is about to, happen to her, or for parents who refuse to grow old gracefully. The principal omission is disease. . . . Nothing like this book has been written before, and I . . . believe that it will rightly prove immensely popular." Ayron Mitchison

New Statesman 75:516 Ap 19 '68 500w

"Many of the bits of miscellaneous information [in this book] will probably be familiar to regular readers of a good daily newspaper. There is no denying that some are entertaining, if not always relevant. . . . There are long pages describing the development of an embryo, the circulation of the blood, etc.] . . . but there is not a single illustration in the book. . . . But these are minor matters. It is more significant that Smith is able to write one of the best descriptions of ovulation and the menstrual cycle that I have read, that his account of the code by which DNA controls protein synthesis is a fine example of concise exposition. . . . This is not a book for readers who really want to understand the interrelations of the structures and systems of the body. It is for people who want the feeling of understanding." Joseph Mindel

N Y Times Bk R p53 O 20 '68 850w

TLS p525 My 23 '68 750w

SMITH, C. T. An historical geography of Western Europe before 1800. 604p il maps $13.50 Praeger

911.4 Europe—Historical geography 67-21757

"Among topics Mr. Smith considers are the origin of languages, the sites of modern cities whose beginnings can often be traced to Medieval and even Roman times, and the patterns of emigration of different races, especially in early history. He discusses . . . the contributions of the Romans and Arabs to European development and goes into the internal economy and trading patterns of the various countries of Western Europe at length. [He gives] attention to the economic reasons which account for the rise of the Netherlands as an important trading and commercial power in the 17th Century." (Library J) Chapter bibliographies.

"In this work, emphasis is placed not only upon the provision of a series of cross-sections, 'the orthodox task of historical geography,' but also upon 'the processes involved in bringing about new spatial distributions,' . . . producing a meaningful pattern of European development from prehistoric times to the 19th century. . . . Maps, diagrams, photographs, etc. are all well executed, relevant, and integrated, while the bibliographies at the end of each chapter are comprehensive. Smith's contribution is in a field long dominated by W. G. East's valuable work, An Historical Geography of Europe [BRD 1936]. . . . Smith has produced a superior text and has made a superlative contribution to geography in general, and to historical geography in particular."

Choice 5:326 My '68 200w

"A detailed and valuable study that ranges from the earliest times to the beginning of the 19th Century. . . . Based on wide reading and study, Mr. Smith's book is for the advanced student and is recommended for large libraries and libraries with large geography collections." George Schoyer

Library J 92:2924 S 1 '67 200w

TLS p703 Jl 4 '68 500w

SMITH, D. HOWARD. Chinese religions. 221p pl $7.95 Holt

200.951 China—Religion 68-12215

"This book provides a general introduction to the development of religious ideas in China from 1000 B.C. to the present day. It discusses the three main religions in detail, but shows also how, for the past 700 years, a syncretistic popular religion has grown up, deriving its concepts from many sources. . . . [There are chapters] on the development of Confucianism, [Buddhism], and Taoism. . . . The book also deals with foreign religions introduced into China from the West: Manichaeism, Islam, and Nestorian, Roman Catholic and Protestant Christianity. The author devotes his concluding chapter to the religious situation in modern China: the popular religion of the masses and the influence of religion on the intelligentsia." (Publisher's note) Glossary. Chapter bibliographies. Index.

"This British study demonstrates that China has been a land of many more religions than most people realize, even as the Chinese have pressed toward synthesis and syncretism for hundreds of years. This worldly religion, Chinese style—under way long before Western secular theology—receives fair treatment from Smith."

Christian Century 85:1176 S 18 '68 60w

"Mr. Smith was for 24 years a missionary in China, and more recently lecturer in comparative religion at the University of Manchester. . . . He illustrates in detail three traditional denominations—Confucianism, Taoism, and Buddhism. . . . Chinese people believe that all religions are but different ways to the same end—Confucianism promotes the moral aspect of religion, Taoism promotes folk religious beliefs, and Buddhism takes care of after life. . . . For college and large public libraries." W. S. Wong

Library J 93:3565 O 1 '68 190w

SMITH, DALE O. America is in danger. See See LeMay, C. E.

SMITH, DATUS C. The land and people of Indonesia. [by] Datus C. Smith, Jr. rev ed (Portraits of the nations ser) 158p il $3.25; lib bdg $2.93 Lippincott

991 Indonesia—Juvenile literature 68-10768

A revised edition of an introduction to the history and cultural tradition of the Indonesians. Index. For the first edition see BRD 1962. "Grades six to eight." (Library J)

"This volume is standard fare in a series that is popular with young readers. There is history. But there is also the people and how they live. The work is enhanced with photographs and should, along with other volumes of the series, find a place in the high school library. Early conversions to Christianity are easily dismissed as political, but ignoring this the volume will serve as an excellent introduction to the area."

Best Sell 23:66 My 1 '68 100w

"Considerable revision makes this the most up-to-date juvenile book on Indonesia. The political history now covers the Communist uprising of 1965 and the emergence of Suharto. Sukarno is given a neutral treatment, as the text mentions a 'major change in his standing both at home and abroad.' The chapters on the arts, language, history, and people remain the same, except for the updating of statistics." Charlotte Gallant

Library J 93:1819 Ap 15 '68 100w

SMITH, DAVID T., ed. Abortion and the law: essays by B. James George, Jr. [and others] 237p $7 Western Reserve univ. press

340 Abortion 67-11485

"This book sets forth different religious, medical and legal views which reflect not only suggestions for revision and liberalization of present state abortion laws, but a defense of them as well. The experience of other countries in attempting to solve the abortion problem, especially attempts in Denmark, Germany, Austria and Switzerland, are also brought out." (Library J) All the papers except the Commentary were originally published in substantially the same form in Volume 17 of the Western Reserve Law Review. Index.

"Specialists in social problems, medicolegal research, public health policy, and sociology of law will find this a beneficial symposium. Similar in content to the Planned Parenthood conference (Abortion in the United States [BRD 1959]), it is less medically oriented and less bluntly reformist. As a casebook it is superb, statistics being sparse but meaningful. Coherence and organization are uniformly evident.

Psychiatric problems, hospital policy, and comparative law are updated. There is good articulation of social, moral, and legal issues. J. George's detailed annotation of state law, the spirited exchange of Fr. R. F. Drinan and Rabbi I. Jacobovitz, and Dr. R. E. Hall's summation are distinctive features. Bibliography is thorough."

Choice 4:1140 D '67 100w

"The reader is given a wide-ranging picture of research and attitudes. The book offers much information and deserves the attention of both informed laymen and specialists in the field." J. J. Marke

Library J 92:1948 My 15 '67 170w

SMITH, DUANE A. Rocky Mountain mining camps; the urban frontier. 304p il $6.95 Ind. univ. press

978 The West—History. Frontier and pioneer life—The West 67-24522

"From 1859 and the first gold rush into the Rockies until the 1890s, when most gold fields had been played out, this previously unsettled wilderness became the setting of a unique phenomenon—the Western mining camp. . . . To make his venture profitable, the miner needed to open lines of transport—and transportation soon brought many of the refinements and problems of urban civilization. Because he could not raise crops or make his own equipment, the miner attracted farmers and merchants to his camp; hence trade, industry, and other signs of permanent settlement developed rapidly, often within a decade after the opening of the mining fields. . . . The problems of the mining camps were intensified by their unstable population and lack of planning. . . . [This history] traces the cycle of growth from birth to boom and either extinction or transformation into a permanent agricultural-mining community." (Publisher's note) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"How successful was the process of urbanization in modifying frontier social behavior? No really definite answers are provided. Instead of focusing on the development of specific camps, Smith presents a 'composite picture' of urbanization, which turns out to be a highly generalized overview of the entire subject. A more disciplined treatment of the urban frontier, centered on a single Nevada mining district, can be found in W. Turrentine Jackson's Treasure Hill [BRD 1964]. Bibliographical essay and notes. Recommended more for its insights than its technical value."

Choice 5:552 Je '68 150w

Reviewed by F. W. Kohlmeier

J Am Hist 55:157 Je '68 300w

"[This] is not a book about mining; Mr. Smith . . . discusses rather the unique urban nature of mining camps: the living conditions, economy, business, religion and culture, discriminations, recreations, transportation and communication—all aspects that make up an American community, telescoped into a decade or two. He presents the merchants, vigilantes, prostitutes, government officials, miners—and others who helped shape Rocky Mountain history in interest-catching, nontechnical language. His account, based largely on newspapers, is well-documented and contains a lengthy bibliography. Recommended for all libraries collecting Western Americana." Dennis Ribbens

Library J 92:2924 S 1 '67 200w

SMITH, ED. Where to, black man? 221p $4.95 Quadrangle bks.

309.2 U.S. Peace Corps. Ghana 67-21640

Written mainly in diary form, this is an account of the author's "experiences as a Negro Peace Corps worker in Ghana in the early 1960's." (Library J)

Reviewed by Albert Murray

Book World p10 My 19 '68 370w

"[This] is interesting chiefly on two counts. First, it reveals the ambivalent feelings of the young American about America and the land of his ancestry. Second, Mr. Smith, who managed to get about quite a bit as a schoolteacher, highlights some of the intrigues, corruption, and immense economic, psychological and social problems of the new country, as well as its aspirations and achievements. The book is intelligently and sensitively written." Edward Margolis

Library J 93:69 Ja 1 '68 90w

"Smith writes with humor, anger, joy; he makes Ghana, and indeed the entire West African scene, come alive with its smells, its eager-to-learn children, its furiously evasive politicians. His disappointment with the Africa he came to know is sharp, and perhaps one of the most thorough records of black disillusionment in print." J. A. Williams

Sat R 51:30 Ja 27 '68 650w

SMITH, EDGAR. Brief against death; with an introd. by William F. Buckley, Jr. 364p $5.95 Knopf

364.1 Trials. Zielinski, Victoria 68-30940

"On June 6, 1957, the author of this book was convicted of the brutal murder of a fifteen-year-old girl. . . . [This is his] account of his arrest, interrogation, trial, imprisonment, and 4,000-day battle, through fourteen appeals and thirteen stays of execution, to set aside the verdict and establish his innocence." (Publisher's note)

Reviewed by W. L. Lucey

America 119:562 N 30 '68 90w

Reviewed by J. S. Phillipson

Best Sell 28:271 O 1 '68 850w

Reviewed by F. C. Shapiro

Book World p16 S 29 '68 1250w

"Whether or not Mr. Smith is innocent each reader must decide for himself. However, the framework of criminal procedure stands convicted in the light of what Mr. Smith has written and in the established fact that 11 years have elapsed since he was declared guilty and sentenced to die in the electric chair. Current interest in the problem of criminal procedure and in capital punishment as well as interest in Edgar Smith's own story will create a demand for this book." H. M. Burns

Library J 93:3116 S 15 '68 180w

Reviewed by John Chamberlain

Nat R 20:1017 O 8 '68 1100w

"[The author] has personal experience of the workings of American justice, and seems rather well equipped to discuss its impingement on the individual. He has intellectual and literary flair, and a radical wit not unlike that of . . . William F. Buckley Jr., [editor of National Review, who befriended him and] who has written as introduction to his book. . . . In view of the circumstances in which he produced it, Mr. Smith's book is rather a triumph, somewhat as if [T.] Dreiser's Clyde Griffiths had found in the death cell the courage to master his difficult life, and the difficult art of prose, and write in the first person his own 'An American Tragedy' [BRD 1925]." Ross MacDonald

N Y Times Bk R p8 S 22 '68 1150w

"The book is a protestation of innocence, sometimes convincing, sometimes nit-picking. . . . More than that, however, Mr. Smith's book provides a matter-of-fact indictment of the workings of justice as practiced in modern American police stations, courtrooms, and jails." Lawrence Snow

Sat R 51:44 S 7 '68 750w

Time 92:100 S 27 '68 1400w

SMITH, EDWARD ELLIS. The young Stalin; the early years of an elusive revolutionary. 470p pl $8.50 Farrar, Straus

B or 92 Stalin, Iosif 67-26488

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by N. D. Roodkowsky

America 118:91 Ja 20 '68 450w

Choice 5:399 My '68 220w

Nation 206:124 Ja 22 '68 50w

SMITH, FREDERICK E. A killing for the hawks. 251p $4.50 McKay

67-21218

A novel "of the air war over France during World War I as seen by an American pilot in the Royal Flying Corps. McConnell, the American volunteer, is in a squadron led by the daring ace and handsome English aristocrat, John Seymour, who is apparently something of a sadist. The plot thickens when McConnell, on leave in London, meets and falls in love with Seymour's wife, not realizing who she is." (Library J)

"The author fought with the R.A.F. from 1939 to 1946, so he brings a wealth of experience to his vivid, yet nostalgic, tale of dog-fights between the old wooden struts held together with bailing wire. It is another story of man's cruel and inhuman treatment of his fellow, yet a story of man's heroism and courage. The book is recommended for oldsters who remember World War I." J. B. Cullen

SMITH, F. E.—Continued

Best Sell 27:252 O 1 '67 550w

"In the end, Seymour redeems himself somewhat in McConnell's eyes by an astonishing act of bravery, but all McConnell is capable of by then is the momentous statement that courage and morality do not necessarily go together. Fine derring-do for general fiction collections." Peter Gellatly

Library J 92:4028 N 1 '67 280w

Reviewed by Ruth Stillwell

Library J 93:314 Ja 15 '68 110w [YA]

Reviewed by Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p62 O 8 '67 180w

SMITH, FREDRIKA SHUMWAY. Stanley, African explorer; il. by Charles Moser. 240p $4.50 Rand McNally

B or 92 Stanley, Sir Henry Morton—Juvenile literature 68-14560

The author of Frémont (BRD 1966) and Old Put (BRD 1967) has written an "account of the life and travels of Henry Stanley, leaning almost entirely on his own writings as source material. [Index.] Grades nine to twelve." (Library J)

"This is a well-written absorbing biography."

H. B.

Christian Science Monitor pB6 My 2 '68 240w

"A competent but pedestrian account. . . . It covers the subject at a grade level not covered since Laura Benet's Stanley, Invincible Explorer [BRD 1956], but libraries with the latter probably will not need the new one. Young people are far more apt to be attracted by Alan Moorehead's books about the exploration of the Nile [Story of the Blue Nile, BRD 1966; Story of the White Nile, BRD 1967] which cover much of the same ground far more vividly. Endpaper maps show the routes of the three voyages, and line drawings serve to break up the text but add little to the authenticity of the background." Betty Henderson

Library J 93:1816 Ap 15 '68 140w

SMITH, GEOFFREY NOWELL-. See Nowell-Smith, G.

SMITH, GEORGE A., jt. auth. Hatch and grow. See Green, I.

SMITH, HOWARD E. From under the earth: America's metals, fuels, and minerals [by] Howard E. Smith, Jr; il. by the author. 161p maps $3.50 Harcourt

553 Mines and mineral resources—U.S.—Juvenile literature 67-18546

After a general introduction the book "treats each of 28 minerals, [metals and fuels found in the United States] separately as to physical and chemical characteristics, uses, and important historical background. [Index.] Grades six to eight." (Library J)

Reviewed by M. L. Birmingham

Commonweal 87:185 N 10 '67 30w

"Mr. Smith has covered America's natural mineral wealth in an interesting, easy-to-read manner. . . . The technique of describing the usage of various materials in terms of their physical and chemical properties should prove especially interesting to young readers. A good purchase as a reference and reading text for beginning science students." C. G. Wood

Library J 93:889 F 15 '68 130w

SMITH, JAMES STEEL. A critical approach to children's literature. 442p $7.50 McGraw 809.8 Children's literature—History and criticism. Children's literature—Bibliography 67-12962

Intended as a guide to the field. Some chapter headings are: A very short history of children's literature; Children's classics; Sense and sensibility in children's literature; A ready-made audience for poetry. Annotated bibliographies. Index of authors, artists and titles. General index.

"Smith (San Fernando Valley State College) has drawn on his background as teacher (of English and of children's and adult literature) and as poet in writing this useful text. . . . The widely respected [May H.] Arbutnot text [Children and Literature, BRD 1948] . . . is superior in wealth of detail and illustration. Smith's volume, however, contributes a fresh, masculine, literate directness which many readers will welcome. The sans serif typography is cleanly readable. . . . A 15-chapter organization lends itself to use either in a basic children's literature course or—selectively—in an advanced group concerned with critical criteria and the nature of the literary experience. Do not confuse this book with one carrying precisely the same title, edited by [S. I.] Fenwick [BRD 1967]."

Choice 4:1237 Ja '68 180w

"Smith declares his intent to discuss 'children's literature as literature' and promises that a series of critical questions to apply in evaluating children's books will emerge by induction from a reading of this book. Only seven chapters discuss children's books, however, and the critical questions, never adequately summarized, turn out to be not very critical at all. They can be fairly reduced to a portmanteau question for any given title: who and what is this book intended for, at which reading level, and is its author's performance acceptable for the purchaser's purpose? This ought to have a familiar clang to librarians. . . . [The book] is not recommended as a main text to anyone preparing future librarians, nor does it come close to providing the librarians' idea of what new teachers need—wide-ranging, thoughtful reading in books written for children—before attempting the always attractive hazards of the critical approach." L. N. Gerhardt

Library J 93:271 Ja 15 '68 1550w

SMITH, JOHN, jt. comp. Happy Christmas. See Seymour, W. K.

SMITH, JOHN, comp. My kind of verse; decorations by Uri Shulevitz. 235p $5.95 Macmillan (N Y)

821 Poetry—Collections—Juvenile literature 68-20609

Among the poets represented in this collection are "Brecht, Cavafy, Coffin, Herrick, Keats, Lindsay, Lorca, Sylvia Plath, Prévert, Rilke, Shakespeare, Stevens, Yeats. . . . The types of poems [include] limericks, cautionary tales, comic poems, short narratives, nature poems, prayers, and . . . character sketches." (Publisher's note) Index to authors. Index to first lines. "Grades six to nine." (Library J)

Reviewed by Virginia Haviland

Book World p24 (children's issue) N 3 '68 40w

"Poems are nicely organized into such appropriately ambiguous niches as 'Odd Bods' and 'Places, Weathers, Creatures, Things.' They are not all masterpieces, but each has its own special quality of thought or expression. . . . It's a nicely rounded group of poems that will appeal to children. Some are simple and some will require intellectual stretching, but there are no pompous generalities here." L. P. Scanlon

Commonweal 89:292 N 22 '68 90w

"A sampler of personal favorites chosen by a contemporary English poet who, judging by these choices, responds to the humorous, offbeat, enigmatic and romantic. . . . Arranged generally by subject, the collection includes a few greats but is given over mainly to lesser known poets, from those of the Renaissance to the present, for Mr. Smith considers his book a prelude to the appreciation of more profound literature. The greatest asset of this collection is its diversity, which demonstrates the broad sweep of poetic expression. Illustrations . . . decorate a few pages in a whimsical, offhand style." Priscilla Moxom

Library J 93:4424 N 15 '68 100w

Reviewed by Muriel Rukeyser

N Y Times Bk R p38 N 10 '68 360w

SMITH, MARGARET RUTH. See Seranne, A.

SMITH, MARIE. Entertaining in the White House. 320p il col il $8.95 Acropolis bks.

642 Entertaining. Cookery. American. Washington, D.C. White House 67-23364

This book describes how each host and hostess since John and Abigail Adams have entertained in the White House. It includes "anecdotes about the famous visitors to Presidents and of the Presidents and their families [and] menus for state dinners and simpler luncheons, with recipes scattered throughout." (Best Sell) Bibliography. Index. Index to recipes.

"[This] should be popular with the thousands on thousands who have taken a 'White House tour' and will appeal to women throughout the United States who may be tempted to give a 'White House Dinner' in their own homes, using the menus (or adapting, such as those with 29 courses) here presented."

Best Sell 27:329 N 15 '67 130w

"This social history of White House entertainment, told with intimate familiarity, cordial affection, and humor, is highlighted with more than 100 recipes and menus. Numerous illustrations, of varying types and quality, supplement the well-researched text. A staff writer for the Washington Post, Marie Smith covered White House activities during the Eisenhower, Kennedy, and Johnson administrations. She is remembered for her recent biography of Mrs. Lyndon Johnson, Presidents' Lady: An Intimate Biography of Mrs. Lyndon B. Johnson [BRD 1964]. For public libraries where demand and budget permit." S. G. Heppell

Library J 93:994 Mr 1 '68 150w

SMITH, MICHAEL, jt. ed. Eight plays from off-off Broadway. See Orzel, N.

SMITH, MOYNE RICE. 7 plays & how to produce them; il. by Don Bolognese. 148p $4.50 Walck, H.Z.

812 Children's plays 68-11232

"This book begins with some general advice on production and construction of simple sets. It then gives the scripts for a number of plays, adapted from fairy tales and other fanciful stories. Preceding each script is a . . . sketch and brief background information, and following each play the author gives advice on costume, sets, and props. [Bibliography.] Grades seven to ten." (Library J)

"A most useful addition to the literature on play production. . . . [Mrs.] Smith points out how these plays could be changed to suit varying requirements of setting, cast, or time, and shows how the basic concepts presented can be used in order to adapt other stories. . . . Because of its clarity of presentation, the spirit of fun imparted, and the useful information included, this book should be in most drama collections." Bernice Levine

Library J 93:1816 Ap 15 '68 160w

"The adaptations are fresh, imaginative, and humorous; the production notes give some clues as to mood and tempo as well as to technicalities; moreover, the plays can be further adapted for larger or smaller casts." Zena Sutherland

Sat R 51:37 O 18 '68 60w

SMITH, NORMAN KEMP. The credibility of divine existence; the collected papers of Norman Kemp Smith; ed. by A. J. D. Porteous, R. D. MacLennan & G. E. Davie. 446p $11 St Martins

192 Philosophy 67-11284

"This volume includes those articles and lectures, written over a period of fifty years, which [the late author] himself thought worthy of preservation. . . . The field of thought . . . ranges from his early articles on Avenarius, Hume, the Middle Ages and his lectures and papers on Locke, Bergson and Whitehead to his logical work on Universals and his views of God, Immortality, and Fear." (Publisher's note) Index.

"Three of [Kemp Smith's] distinguished students . . . have each added a chapter here giving biographical data and commenting on major themes in the papers he left behind. . . . Kemp Smith's standing as an authoritative interpreter of Kant, Descartes, and Hume is well known. Hence, his papers in this volume on Avenarius, Locke, Bergson, and Whitehead deserve careful reflection. They indicate mastery of the works he studied, and telling commentary from a scholar who was working out his own answers to philosophical questions as he listened thoughtfully to the great." L. W. Norris

Ann Am Acad 375:238 Ja '68 430w

"Every library should have a copy of this important volume of essays by the distinguished professor of logic and metaphysics at Edinburgh. . . . The volume provides both an invaluable aid to the understanding of the British (and especially Scottish) philosophical scene in the first half of this century and a remarkably lucid set of analyses of still crucial philosophical questions. The title essay and 'The Fruitfulness of the Abstract' are especially important contributions. . . . Porteous has provided a memoir of Kemp Smith, and G. E. Davie's essay, 'The Significance of the Philosophical Papers,' is the best available estimate of the importance of Kemp Smith's work. The only fault is the absence of the complete Kemp Smith bibliography."

Choice 5:1144 N '68 150w

SMITH, RICHARD BRETT. See Brett-Smith, R.

SMITH, T. LYNN. Colombia; social structure and the process of development; with a foreword by Alberto Lleras. 389p il $12.50 Univ. of Fla. press

309.1861 Land tenure. Agriculture—Economic aspects. Colombia—Social conditions

67-26603

Using "the Census of Agriculture of 1959 and 1960, [the author] examines . . . factors influencing the transformation of Colombian society. . . . [He] begins with an examination of the ownership of the land and the size of the land holdings. . . . The following chapters investigate [among other things] . . . the outdated and ineffective system used in land surveys and recording the titles to the land; antiquated and unproductive systems of agriculture; the various agrarian reform programs; . . . the structure and development of the Colombian communities; and the class structure and social stratification which until recently has precluded the growth of a substantial middle class. . . . This is the first volume of a projected three-volume series. The demography of the nation, including urbanization, will be the subject of the second volume, and the basic social institutions of the family, the school, the church, and the government will be that of the third." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Author index. Subject index.

"This book deals with the rural social structure of Colombia in a comprehensive way. . . . [and] provides data on the uncertainty of tenure in relation to la violencia and to land reform, on agricultural technology, on settlement patterns, on rural community institutions, and on social stratification. The data are interspersed with interpretations that I do not always agree with. But it is a fine feeling to have data on Colombia to argue about, at long last." A. L. Stinchcombe

Am J Soc 73:782 My '68 650w

Reviewed by Lowry Nelson

Ann Am Acad 378:177 Jl '68 480w

"A magnificent piece of scholarship. . . . Smith has rigidly applied sociological principles and methodology to the facts of existence in Colombia today. . . . The central purpose of his study is to examine the relationship between class structure and the process of development. Actually, it reveals the extent to which Colombia's social structure has retarded that process, and will continue to do so unless sweeping changes are effected. . . . The book includes a foreword by the former and famously literate president of Colombia, Alberto Lleras, . . . and an excellent bibliography." J. B. More

Library J 93:1647 Ap 15 '68 200w

SMITH, VIAN. Come down the mountain. 212p $3.50; lib bdg $4.25 Doubleday

Horses—Stories

68-10598

"Sixteen-year-old Brenda accepts her fellow fifth-formers' estimate of her as 'Fatso' and 'a right mug.' Her unscrupulous friend Eve, interested only in clothes and boys, exploits and uses her. Brenda's involvement with a neglected horse, which she persuades her up-right working-class parents to shelter, becomes the catalyst in shifting her attitudes and relationships to those around her and vice-versa. . . . Grades seven to nine." (Library J)

Book World p12 Jl 7 '68 210w

SMITH, VIAN—Continued

"Drawing on his knowledge of the Dartmoor country, the author has told a story revealing for the insight into the social structure of rural England. . . . Brenda's parents exhibit a resigned and submissive approach to life, as do most of the villagers. For generations the village has been ruled over by one family, the Bassetts, who still own half the village. Oppressed, humiliated by their dependency, the laboring people have lost their will to fight. Brenda's courageous act in rescuing the Bassett horse and later in challenging the new heir's claim to it represents a victory not only for Brenda but for the whole village. For American children the book presents a familiar problem in a refreshingly different setting." Marion Marx

Horn Bk 44:432 Ag '68 150w

Reviewed by J. C. Dick

Library J 93:2738 J1 '68 100w

"To compare the novel with National Velvet [by E. Bagnold, BRD 1935] is to measure the gulf between generations, the change in social assumptions. In the older book only the horse is treated on a roundly realistic level; the theme is high farce, the lower-class characters lovable, exuberant comics. Mr. Vian Smith's horse is real enough, from its first painful stumbling in the darkness to its nervous, alarming convalescent strength. But no more so than the school bus-load, Evie the come-and-get-it teenager, Brian the school hero, Harold the Drip; no more so than Brenda's relationship with her parents, or with her grandfather, the old huntsman." Jean MacGibbon

New Statesman 74:606 N 3 '67 240w
 TLS p1157 N 30 '67 330w

SMITH, WARREN HUNTING, ed. Horace Walpole; writer, politician, and connoisseur; essays on the 250th anniversary of Walpole's birth. 358p il $15 Yale univ. press

828 Walpole, Horace, 4th Earl of Orford
 67-24514

"This volume of essays discusses various sectors of Walpole's life and accomplishments as they appear now. . . . [The essays are] arranged by subject into three general groups: Walpole as politician and political commentator, Walpole as connoisseur and antiquarian, and Walpole as a literary figure. . . . The contributors [are concerned with] . . . different aspects of Walpole's career, and give various interpretations of his character and achievement." (Intro) Index.

Reviewed by C. F. Mullett

Am Hist R 73:1526 Je '68 600w

"[The authors'] enjoyment is infectious, their scholarship impressive. Still, the result is little more than assemblage of esoteric trivia. The book is for lovers of Horace Walpole, those who will derive pleasure and excitement from any mention of any activity or aspect of the object of their emotions. Those who are not already committed will be less deeply stirred. . . . [The first section comes] out best. . . . The second and third sections contain samples of the typical marginalia of artistic and literary history. Purchases and possessions of Walpole are analysed and docketed; [his connections] . . . with peripheral acquaintances are documented and squeezed dry."

Economist 226:55 F 24 '68 200w

"In the manner of a Festschrift for Wilmarth Lewis, the distinguished Walpole scholar, editor and author, this volume brings together contributions by eminent Walpolians on both sides of the Atlantic. The subject matter of its 19 essays is almost equally divided between the areas indicated in the title: the level of scholarship represented is uniformly high, and the volume as a whole will reinforce the steadily enlarging status of Walpole as a major figure for his time. However, the book will appeal mainly to scholars, the editor making no claim that [it] is an introduction to Walpole's work. Nevertheless, because of the amount of first-published material it contains, the book belongs in most college libraries." J. A. Rycenga

Library J 92:3042 S 15 '67 130w

TLS p821 Ag 1 '68 600w

"The charm of the volume . . . consists of its ability to glimpse the many sides of its subject from many angles, and also at times to glance in other directions. . . . Two fairy tales are here published for the first time, and there are short considerations of Walpole as dramatist and novelist. From the essays emerges a lively, full, and diverse characterization of Walpole and his age. Obviously a range of attitudes is represented, but the tone of the volume as a whole is modified by the unique state of contemporary Walpole scholarship. . . . [This] maturity in general outlook . . . has as its main dividend a more subtle and complex understanding of Walpole . . . than either Victorian or Edwardian prejudices could have [given him]. . . . Two essays deserve special notice: Ketton-Cremer's fascinating look at the Elizabethan Walpoles . . . and Pott's meticulous reassessment of the Rousseau controversy." W. N. Free

 Va Q R 44:345 spring '68 950w

SMITH, WARREN SYLVESTER. The London heretics, 1870-1914. 319p pl $6.95 Dodd

274.21 Philosophy, British. Religion—Philosophy. Great Britain—Religion [67-98832]

An account "of Christian and non-Christian seekers after truth on the London scene . . . [describing] the secularists, the positivists, the new Christians, the Quakers, the Catholic modernists, the Unitarians and Liberal Christians, the Theosophists and Spiritualists." (Publisher's note) Portions of this book appeared as a series of articles in The Christian Century. Bibliography. Index.

Choice 5:1209 N '68 30w

"The author has made 'people' out of names and philosophies out of 'causes.' The excellent bibliography has been used to the reader's advantage and illuminated by Mr. Smith's style. Highly recommended for public and academic libraries which have needed this fine book for many years." E. F. Waterman

Library J 93:998 Mr 1 '68 130w

"Worth reading, though a long way from [a] masterpiece, Professor Smith's [book] provides excellent source material, though its premises seem muddled. Few of the people he presents were in fact heretics, and some seem arbitrarily chosen. In the general context of socialism William Morris deserves more than passing references, and in the general context of socio-religious reform we should have had something on Canon Barnett and more on Ebenezer Howard and the Garden City movement." Marghanita Laski

New Statesman 74:358 S 22 '67 280w

"After admirably sketching what he calls 'The London Climate of Doubt, Poverty and Hope', Mr. Smith turns to the study of two separate groups, the non-Christians and the 'new Christians'. . . . Of the two halves of this book the first is the better. Mr. Smith is more at home with the Holyoakes, Bradlaugh, Frederic Harrison, Thomas Davidson and Moncreuf D. Conway than he is with 'The New Christians'. The interrelations of course are so complex that it is impossible to study them in detail. His method is to pick out certain key figures, to examine them and their circle, and, by juxtaposition with the others, to give an impression of the total scene."

TLS p995 O 19 '67 2800w

SMITH, WILLIAM. The new Smith's Bible dictionary; completely rev. by Reuel G. Lemmons [and others]. 441p $4.95; thumb-indexed $5.95 Doubleday

220.3 Bible—Dictionaries 66-20927

This work "appeared first in the latter part of the nineteenth century, in a four-volume set, which was later abridged by the author into a single volume. Numerous adaptations and revisions have appeared since 1900 [the last] of which . . . is more than twenty-five years old. . . . In this work the Dictionary has been completely rewritten. . . . Practically every article has been updated in some manner. . . . Pronunciation of proper names, . . . is added. . . . [The] dictionary limits itself to known facts." (Pref)

"This newest revision has been 'completely rewritten' by a panel of American scholars; the editors are Southern Baptists, Presbyterians, and members of the Church of Christ. . . . The influence of the original work is seen in the full inclusion of Biblical proper names—often with mere one- or two-line identifications—in the numerous topographical entries, and in the exclusion of those terms in Biblical studies (demythologization, New Quest, incarnation, etc.) which do not appear in the Bible. Major entries from the Apocrypha are included. [It] is traditional in viewpoint and, under pressure of space limitations, tends to cite arguments favorable to conservative interpretations without enumerating opposing arguments. . . . While [it] has ready-reference value in its fullness of entry words, it has not made such significant scholarly advances that it supersedes either the New Bible Dictionary [ed. J. D. Douglas, BRD 1963] or the revised Hastings [Dictionary of the Bible, BRD 1963], both of them more expensive but more comprehensive." G. R. Kelly

Library J 92:102 Ja 1 '67 230w

"[The team of revisers has] taken advantage of the many recent archeological discoveries and of the advances in textual criticism, but the writing is undistinguished and the text indifferently printed." D. M. Glixon

Sat R 50:59 My 20 '67 70w

SMITH, WILLIAM JAY. Mr Smith & other nonsense; pictures by Don Bolognese. 61p $3.95 Delacorte press

811 Nonsense verses 67-19774

A "collection of light verse, nonsense, lime-ricks, a 'birds' sequence and the autobiographical finale, Mr. Smith." (Publisher's note) "Age nine and up." (N Y Times Bk R)

Reviewed by Eve Merriam

Book World p3 (children's issue) N 3 '68 110w

"Poems to puzzle over and poems to be enjoyed as much for sound as for sense or nonsense. . . . Mr. Smith's special gift is his unorthodox way of looking at the world. He sets forth what he sees with strong rhyme and startling image." D. F.

Horn Bk 44:568 O '68 60w

Reviewed by C. H. Simonds

Nat R 20:281 D 17 '68 10w

"There are splendid jewels [in this collection] like 'The Floor and the Ceiling' and 'The Antimacassar and the Ottoman.' . . . But it is a hodgepodge that varies in quality. The distinction between mere off-the-cuff rhyming and true spontaneous combustion into nonsense is not always made. As a book, all this does not quite jell. But since Mr. Smith . . . remains one of the best of nonsense poets, as well as one of the best of serious poets, the drawerful is worth picking over." May Sarton

N Y Times Bk R p38 S 29 '68 260w [YA]

SMITHIES, RICHARD H. R. The shoplifter. 254p $4.95 Horizon press

68-23528

This novel concerning "the disappearance of a valuable antique from the shop of Anne Hamilton, who with numerous other dealers serves the local society's pillars in suburban Connecticut, arouses one of the more sturdy of these pillars to a holy crusade to expose the evildoer." (N Y Times Bk R)

Reviewed by M. K. Grant

Library J 93:2695 J1 '68 60w

"A few cases of genteel pilfering snowball into a few cases of murder in [this novel]. . . . I found this a rather tranquil book, somewhat enlivened by nice satirical touches and a well-concealed killer." A. J. Habin

N Y Times Bk R p24 J1 7 '68 50w

"Smithies' clever tale of threats and theft and murder in a well-to-do Connecticut community is too long for its own good, but the atmosphere of elegant suburbia is very well done, and the shoptalk among the various antiques dealers whose problems dominate the action is funny and sounds authentic. . . . [The story] ends in a series of noisy murders that leave the survivors agog but not too seriously disturbed."

New Yorker 44:92 J1 13 '68 90w

Reviewed by Sergeant Cuff

Sat R 51:34 J1 27 '68 20w

SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION CONFERENCE ON MUSEUMS AND EDUCATION, UNIVERSITY OF VERMONT, 1966. Museums and education. See Larrabee, E., ed.

SMOLLETT, TOBIAS. The expedition of Humphry Clinker; ed. with an introd. by Lewis M. Knapp. 375p $7 Oxford

66-66694

The author of the biography Tobias Smollett, Doctor of Men and Letters (BRD 1949) has edited this edition based upon the 1771 "A Text." The novel relates in a series of letters "the adventures of a family party as they travel through England and Scotland, visiting such places as Bath, London, Edinburgh, and the Highlands." (Publisher's note) Chronology of Tobias George Smollett. Bibliography.

"Undoubtedly the best available modern edition of Smollett's best novel. For the scholar, it provides a text based on the most nearly authoritative early edition. For the student, Knapp, author of the standard biography of Smollett, provides a brief historical and critical introduction . . . and an appendix of explanatory notes."

Choice 4:1119 D '67 50w

"This is a labor of love, achieved with infinite care and impeccable scholarship, that will be welcome both by the specialist and the common reader. . . . Professor Knapp's notes are numerous and precise, bearing witness to their author's intimate knowledge of the literary, historical, and sociological aspects of eighteenth-century life in Great Britain. In spite of the highly satisfactory level of accuracy displayed in these notes, a few flaws may be detected, but these must be considered as minor cavils." P. G. Boucé

Mod Philol 65:401 My '68 900w

"Professor Knapp has done a fine job. . . . This edition will appeal by its lack of pedantry and by its handsome design to the general reader as well as to the scholar."

TLS p576 Je 29 '67 380w

SNELGROVE, DUDLEY, ed. Water-colour painting in Britain, v2. See Hardie, M.

SNELGROVE, DAVID L., ed. & tr. Four lamas of Dolpo; Tibetan biographies, ed. & tr. by David L. Snellgrove; v 1, Introduction & translations. 302p pl maps $14.50 Harvard univ. press

294.3 Lamaism 67-7913

The Reader in Tibetan at the University of London visited Dolpo, in what was formerly Western Tibet, in 1960-61, and discovered "the handwritten autobiographies, three from the fifteenth and one from the seventeenth centuries, of four Tibetan lamas. These autobiographies were dictated to their pupils by the lamas themselves and, after the lamas had died, made into authoritative accounts of their lives." (Publisher's note) Tibetan indices of divinities, texts and rituals, personal names, and place names. General index.

"These biographies, which clearly reveal the different character traits of the lamas, . . . are valuable sources for the daily life of the people in Dolpo since religion provided all their cultural and educational needs. In the introduction to his translation Snellgrove traces the growing isolation and cultural as well as economic decline of the Dolpo region. He also gives a rather succinct outline of the prevailing philosophy and religion without which many passages in the biographies would not be easily understandable. The account of his personal experiences in Dolpo not only reveals his enthusiasm for the Tibetan people, but also substantiates the statements in the biographies. This is a well-written and thoroughly engaging study of a rapidly declining and disappearing culture." H. V. Guenther

Am Hist R 73:886 F '68 220w

Choice 5:361 My '68 90w

Reviewed by T. V. Wylie

Pacific Affairs 41:281 summer '68 320w

"This is one of the first chances Western readers have had to obtain a look at Tibetan Buddhism from the 'inside,' that is, through the eyes of some of its practitioners. . . . It is unfortunate that besides a rather bewildering variety of spellings of the same place- and personal-names, there are also a number of errors in English spelling which an alert proof-reader would have caught."

Va Q R 44:xlii winter '68 110w

SNELGROVE, LAURENCE ERNEST. Franco and the Spanish Civil War. 118p il maps $4.50 McGraw

946.081 Spain—History—Civil War, 1936-1939. Franco Bahamonde, Francisco

68-15477

The author uses the Spanish Civil War as the central focus in this book which is designed to explain "why Franco was to some the man who saved Spain from Communism—and to others the dictator who enslaved his own people." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

SNELGROVE, L. E.—Continued

"Without over-simplifying and with very little editorializing, Mr. Snellgrove focuses his discussion on historical fact in a compact, lucid account of Spain and her people during the turbulent Civil War years. [He] makes it clear that while for Spaniards, many causes of this conflict were set in past history, to the watching world it seemed a clear-cut battle between the adherents of communism and fascism. Snellgrove treats clearly the interaction of the domestic Spanish politics of church, labor, and peasantry; his straightforward text, amplified by numerous photographs and maps, will give junior high readers an excellent introduction to the events of the period." Frances Fleming

Library J 93:[3327] S 15 '68 130w

Reviewed by C. H. Simonds
Nat R 20:1281 D 17 '68 10w

"Probably the best of the dictator books."
David Cort

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p26 My 5 '68 90w

SNODGRASS, A. M. Arms and armour of the Greeks. 151p pl $6.50 Cornell univ. press 399 Arms and armor. Greece—Antiquities
67-20632

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by Richard Brilliant
Am Hist R 73:1113 Ap '68 450w
Choice 5:848 S '68 120w

Reviewed by C. W. J. Elliot
Class World 61:358 Ap '68 300w

SNODGRASS, W. D. After experience; poems and translations. 92p $4.95 Harper

811 67-22508

A second book of poems by the author of Heart's Needle (BRD 1959) which won the 1960 Pulitzer Prize.

"Like the first book, After Experience has a number of from-the-heart or 'confessional' poems. But this type of verse has become almost a school, even a cliché. . . . But from the beginning there has been another Snodgrass, one not imprisoned in the skin of his own emotions. This more public poet is still more in evidence now. He includes a remarkably sensitive and successful group of translations (Hugo, Mörike, Rilke, etc.) in which he shows the ability to enter into the spirit of other poetic sensibilities and recreate them in English. His poems inspired by paintings also have sustained power. Most of all, in a few poems he makes as powerful a commentary on the times and their public problems as I have seen anywhere. . . . It is this more public Snodgrass that has the exciting future." Chad Walsh

Book World p6 Ap 14 '68 800w

"[Snodgrass emerges] as a writer of disquieting, uncomfortable poems. He questions our right to comfort, probes our complacency. . . . There are poems about the loss of love, poems of nostalgia, of parting, of forgetting, of dying. Many of the poems tend toward the confessional, without being as personal as Lowell or Anne Sexton. Many tend to be metaphors for our collective guilt, for the forces of evil, for our need to survive. . . . Mr. Snodgrass writes rich, resonant poems, heavy with irony and a sense of the tragic. One of his best new poems, 'The Examination,' had an explosive effect on a writing class with whom I read and discussed it. Perhaps there are a few too many personal poems in this collection. The griefs of the early poems in the book tend to remain private griefs. But this is, on the whole, an important book, the book of a writer who is not afraid to take risks, to experiment, to reach out, to grow." Victor Howes

Christian Science Monitor p11 My 29 '68 330w

Reviewed by Josephine Jacobsen
Commonweal 88:417 Je 21 '68 480w

Reviewed by Louis Simpson
Harper 237:74 Ag '68 220w

"The varied rhythms, both free and traditional, employed by Mr. Snodgrass in these poems derive their force from the marked paradox in the poet's voice, at once cool, polite, and objective, and ardent, intimate, and subjective. The rich personal observations that characterized the poems in his first collection . . . are also found in the 40 poems and 14 translations . . . that make up this second collection. . . . These poems bear every sign of a poet whose experiences have given him deep maturity of thought and a firm control of form. . . . This book assures Mr. Snodgrass a position as one of the better genuine contemporary American poets. Highly recommended." R. F. Cayton

Library J 93:193 Ja 15 '68 300w

Reviewed by Jerome Mazzaro
Nation 207:252 S 16 '68 1550w

Reviewed by Stanley Moss
New Repub 158:35 Je 15 '68 1550w

Reviewed by Denis Donoghue
N Y Rev of Books 10:17 Ap 25 '68 1800w

Reviewed by Jim Harrison
N Y Times Bk R p6 Ap 28 '68 500w

Reviewed by Louise Bogan
New Yorker 44:63 D 28 '68 50w

Reviewed by Daryl Hine
Poetry 113:52 O '68 400w

Reviewed by Judson Jerome
Sat R 51:32 Je 1 '68 950w
Va Q R 44:ciii summer '68 250w

Reviewed by Laurence Lieberman
Yale R 58:141 O '68 650w

SNOW, C. P. A mathematician's apology. See Hardy, G. H.

SNOW, EDGAR. Red star over China. rev & enl ed 543p il $10 Grove

951 China—History—Republic, 1912-1949.
Communism—China. Mao, Tse-tung 68-17724

New material in this revised edition of Snow's report on the rise of communism in China includes "biographical notes on Chinese Communists and others who have figured prominently in China's history over the last generation. . . . extracts from the author's interviews with Mao in 1936, which have not previously been published in full outside China. . . . [and] footnotes appended to the original text, incorporating later information." (Sat R) Chronology. Annotated bibliography. Index. For first edition see BRD 1938.

"[The earlier edition] has been considerably improved in appearance as well as utility by various additions. . . . Most revisions are minor and involve corrected spelling or altered verb tenses. Other deletions, justified to 'make room' for . . . [new items] actually exhibit a curious disrespect for scholarly standards. These principally involve deletion of Snow's earlier references to the Chinese Communists as 'reformers' who would predictably collaborate with the bourgeoisie, and his more critical remarks regarding the KMT and Nationalist leadership, as well as the role of Western imperialism in the East. It is interesting that the revised edition still conveys Snow's adulation of Mao Tse-tung, even to removing an earlier reference to the latter's 'trial' marriage. . . . [This] remains a 'must' for library acquisition."

Choice 5:1204 N '68 220w

"[This is] one of the most perceptive and, as time has demonstrated, one of the most durable . . . [accounts] of the Chinese Communist movement." Hyman Kublin

Library J 93:2652 Jl '68 100w

"The updating adds little to this remarkable book. . . . It hardly matters that Mao's words were uttered thirty-two years ago. They retain an extraordinary vigor and relevance to China's problems. Mr. Snow has wisely resisted the temptation to doctor his original narrative to conform with what is now known about the people and events he chronicles. There are of course a few incongruities and a number of factual errors, but the author's main conclusions have stood the test of time surprisingly well. . . . In many cases the [new] biographies are already outdated by the cultural revolution, and many of them seem to be based on second-hand newspaper accounts. . . . The author is to be congratulated on the restraint with which he has revised his famous work." Welles Hagen

Sat R 51:28 Jl 27 '68 370w

SNYDER, GARY. The back country. 128p $4; pa $1.25 New directions

811

67-23491

This collection of poetry by an American includes "poems done on his return to this country in 1964 which look again at our West with the eyes of India and Japan. The book concludes with a group of translations of the Japanese poet Miyazawa Kenji (1896-1933), with whose work Snyder feels a close affinity. The title has three major associations: wilderness, the 'backward' countries, and the 'back country' of the mind with its levels of being in the unconscious." (Publisher's note) Some of these poems were previously published in such periodicals as Poetry, Harpers and The Yale Literary Magazine.

"Snyder's book is plain, spare, approaching the condition of pure verbal notation. Photography, not music, is his ideal medium, or perhaps he is seeking the English equivalent of the Chinese ideogram. . . . It is no wonder that a poet so strongly visual should turn to Japan and China for his inspiration. . . . This is a strange volume, filled with mountains, woods, pine needles, smoke, and snow. Mr. Snyder's best poems are hieroglyphic in the true sense, summoning glimpses of dark gods, of Artemis, of Hell. His weakest poems are merely echoes of the outworn imagist tradition of Williams and Pound. . . . Along with Allen Ginsberg and Jack Kerouac, [Snyder] was one of the original San Francisco 'beat' poets. He figures as the hero of Kerouac's 'The Dharma Bums' [BRD 1958]." Victor Howes

Christian Science Monitor p11 My 29 '68 330w

"Snyder's new book, most of it, just moseys along. There is a fallacy in his idea of poetry—I think going back to W. C. Williams—that the poet is a holy man who has only to point to an object; the initiate will perceive its significance. What actually results, however, is a lack of tension, an absence of drama. This may be the peace of the Orient, but I doubt it. I think it is just monotony." Louis Simpson

Harper 237:76 Ag '68 210w

"Snyder is a retrospective poet. He records minutiae of experience which burgeon under seemingly unlikely stimuli. In 'A Spring Night in Shokoku-ji' he remembers a night in Oregon eight years previous. . . . In his poems about Japan and India there is a constant reworking of his experience as a young man in the wilds of our own far West. He has never really left home. American pantheism and Eastern religion meet in this San Francisco poet who hangs his feelings out for all to see with a directness of image and tightness of form that keeps him one of America's 'should-be-read' younger poets. These poems are recommended for college, university, and public libraries." Jerome Cushman

Library J 93:1488 Ap 1 '68 200w

Va Q R 44:cxlix autumn '68 160w

SNYDER, ZILPHA KEATLEY. Eyes in the fishbowl; drawings by Alton Raible. 168p $3.95 Atheneum pubs.

68-12229

Dion, the fourteen-year-old son of a music teacher, spends his spare time in the basement of a big department store. "Familiar with every corner of Alcott-Simpson's, Dion becomes aware that something odd is happening, something that is frightening store personnel. . . . Madame Stregovitch (cosmetics) has summoned the Others, [the spirits of] needy children who can live happily in Alcott-Simpson's land of plenty." (Sat R) "Ages ten to fourteen." (N Y Times Bk R)

Reviewed by John Allen

Christian Science Monitor pB9 My 2 '68 150w

Horn Bk 44:182 Ap '68 380w

"An intriguing story of an engaging hero. Throughout the book, Dion's life with father and friends has been juxtaposed with the Alcott-Simpson dream world, and it is the real world which eventually claims Dion. Mrs. Snyder's talent for making everyday events vital is as evident here as in her previous books, while the ghostly proceedings provide an adequate mystery-cum adventure." J. C. Thomson

Library J 93:1804 Ap 15 '68 230w

"Madame Stregovitch shows Dion the store's newspaper ad for a seventy-five dollar mink-lined fishbowl. Peering from the depths are a pair of haunting eyes that belong, it turns out, to a young girl whose picture is on the back of the page. She and hundreds of other youngsters are the victims of a famine in an unnamed foreign country. . . . Dion makes friends with [the spirit of] the dark haired teen-ager from the newspaper photo. . . . The story is told from Dion's point of view and suffers from the limits of a 14-year-old's vocabulary and descriptive powers. Moreover, Madame Stregovitch's mischievous ghosts are only slightly amusing. It is especially hard to smile when they finally cause so much confusion at Alcott-Simpson's that the store is forced to go out of business." Alice Fleming

N Y Times Bk R p30 My 26 '68 290w

"The fantasy is weakened by being drawn out, but it is in essence effective. The department store setting is superbly realistic, and the relationship between Dion and his easygoing father, a theme that runs concurrently with the fantasy, stands out in shining bas-relief." Zena Sutherland

Sat R 51:41 My 11 '68 120w

SOCIAL SCIENCE RESEARCH COUNCIL. Committee on the economy of China. Chinese economic statistics. See Chen, N.-R.

SOCIETY OF MOTION PICTURE AND TELEVISION ENGINEERS. A technological history of motion pictures and television; an anthology from the pages of the Journal of the society of motion pictures and television engineers; ed. with an introd. by Raymond Fielding. 255p il $14 Univ. of Calif. press

681 Moving pictures. Television 67-10464

These articles consist "of firsthand reminiscences of the early days of the cinema and its mechanical development or of original research into the subject. The autobiographical pieces include reminiscences by Louis Lumière, H. T. Kalmus . . . and Leon Gaumont. . . . Historical articles cover such topics as Edison's early experiments, the beginnings of the animated film, the first attempts at making sound films, and the career of Norman O. Dawn, pioneer in special effects. The final section consists of essays on the early history of television." (TLS) Bibliography.

"In his excellent introduction Raymond Fielding suggests several large areas of needed research in the history of the motion picture. This book is a good beginning in one of the enumerated areas: gathering and reissuing already existing material. . . . [These] articles first appeared . . . between 1920 and 1963. . . . A valuable compilation, but of select appeal." R. A. Hamm

Library J 93:1159 Mr 15 '68 110w

"The book includes many valuable illustrations, and is likely to remain an indispensable source book."

TLS p1080 S 26 '68 160w

SOLA, RALPH DE. See De Sola, R.

SOLARI, ALDO, jt. ed. Elites in Latin America. See Lipset, S. M.

SOLBERT, RONNI, jt. auth. The elephant who liked to smash small cars. See Merrill, J.

SOLMI, ANGELO. Fellini; tr. by Elizabeth Greenwood. 183p pl $7.50 Humanities press

B or 92 Fellini, Federico

[67-89255]

The author's "first chapters are devoted to the ideas and themes . . . in the Italian director's work. In the second part of the book he examines . . . his films, how they were made, what they had to say, and how they were received—all woven into a biographical framework." (Library J) This is a translation of Storia di Federico Fellini, published in Italy in 1962.

"[The author] is careful to point out that the borderline between fact and fantasy is often confused by both Fellini and past associates when they speak of what he actually did in earlier years. . . . Many studies of Fellini have already been published, but Mr. Solmi's study is a superb introduction to the films and to their creator." G. D. McDonald

Library J 93:3575 O 1 '68 140w

SOLMI, ANGELO—Continued

"The original Italian version... is a good straightforward, bio-critical study of Fellini and his work.... For this English version... the text has been brought somewhat up to date, to include a brief account of 8½.... This is a useful book to have available in English. The more pity, then, that it has been so badly done.... The accumulation of sheer errors in transcription and translation is really too much. Almost every foreign name to crop up is misspelt at least once.... And nobody seems to have bothered to check the correct English for the simplest film technical terms.... If a job is worth doing, as this was, it is worth doing with care and attention!"

TLS p557 Je 22 '67 350w

SOLO, ROBERT A. Economic organizations and social systems. 505p 1l $8.75 Bobbs

338 Economics. Economic conditions. Sociology 66-29714

In this "study of the means by which economic problems are resolved and technological progress is achieved in different kinds of social systems, Solo has examined their sociological, institutional, and political determinants." (Choice) Index.

"The strength of this work is that it considers interesting and important topics in a systematic way. It is written in reasonably good style. Much of what the author puts forward makes good sense.... The best sections are those that relate the political economy to the growth of the Research and Development establishment. These sections adduce empirical evidence for the assertions made. But the sociologist must judge this book not on its economics, but on the author's ability to employ sociological insights in understanding the relationship between economic form and social systems. And this is not done.... An important weakness of the book lies in its deductive approach and the tendency to treat broad and complex topics inadequately.... The informing spirit is that of W. H. Whyte, and Packard.... In sum, the student of sociology may find this book interesting reading, but he will not find much contribution to his discipline." R. R. Ritti

Am Soc R 33:314 Ap '68 700w

"Both Solo's previous publications on related subjects and his experience in working with various governmental agencies give evidence of his familiarity with the subjects covered here. His emphasis on noneconomic externalities that influence the economic organization and decisions within a society stem in part, at least, from personal observations of such forces.... Provides useful supplementary reading for college and university students in economics, sociology, or government and for secondary school seniors."

Choice 4:1421 F '68 180w [YA]

"This is an important work, a milestone on the long and difficult road toward the development of an adequate theory of the dynamics of the world social system, or sociosphere, as I have sometimes called it. Its importance and its originality are all too likely to be overlooked because, no doubt in order to get it published at all, it has been disguised in the format of a textbook.... Furthermore, it is very uneven in style.... dull though usually accurate and insightful analysis of social systems [is] interspersed with passages that are on fire with intellectual and humane passion.... Also, the best parts of what is rather a long book are toward the end, and the reader may get discouraged by the beginning. For all these reasons the book may not receive the attention it deserves." K. E. Boulding

Science 157:1158 S 8 '67 1500w

SOLZHENITSYN, ALEKSANDR I. The cancer ward; tr. from the Russian by Rebecca Frank. 616p $8.50 Dial press

68-58411

This novel tells "the stories of the dozen or so patients who pass through the men's cancer ward, No. 13, between Pavel Rusanov's admission and discharge, in a hospital in a [Soviet] city in February and March, 1955. The hospital staff and the patients' relatives are as much parts of the novel as the sick men themselves." (Book World)

Reviewed by T. L. Vince

Best Sell 28:406 Ja 1 '69 1000w

"At times the author seems to be a spectator; at times to be inside one of the characters; at times to be far removed. With hair-raising literalism, he focuses on the physical characteristics of the dying bodies, of the hands that cure some, and on the thoughts of patient and doctor.... In our effort to understand his work, we first face the problems of how the book came from 'there' to 'here.' Solzhenitsyn does not control his manuscripts.... [This edition] is said to be complete, but without a verified text, authorial blessing, and Russian publication we cannot know. Solzhenitsyn publicly disavowed any connection with foreign publication of his work.... Some of the difficulties in [the book], including some long, undigested, purplish passages of philosophizing, are infelicities that an author's revision of galleys might well have eliminated." F. D. Reeve

Book World p6 N 24 '68 1600w

"[This novel] labors under a 'Publisher's Foreword' that can be numbered among Mr. Solzhenitsyn's tribulations.... The publisher expresses his confidence that Mr. Solzhenitsyn's book will [endure].... like those of his great predecessor [Dostoevsky]. The imperitence.... of such a foreword is particularly scandalous here, since the author is not in a position to defend himself.... The taste of the presentation is brought more insistently into question.... [since] a British publisher who is producing an edition of his own.... [the Bodley Head edition translated by N. Bethell and D. Burg] is alleging copyright infringement, and has also criticized Miss Rebecca Frank's translation as being so faulty that it does a disservice to the author.... Readers should be warned that.... [this book is] eked out to 616 pages with the help of disproportionate margins.... [that distract] one's attention from the text." Emile Capouya

Nation 20:20 Ja 6 '69 1950w

Reviewed by V. S. Pritchett

N Y Rev of Books 11:3 D 19 '68 1500w

"[Disease is a] great theme, no doubt, but familiar; it does not meet the same terrible, imperative need to know as did Solzhenitsyn's earlier novels.... Disease requires perhaps a more sophisticated and ambiguous writer than Solzhenitsyn.... As a medical novel, [this] offers a fair and quite interesting picture of medicine as practiced in a Central Asian city in 1955.... But some of the faults that began to be apparent in 'The First Circle' [BRD 1968]—a lack of measure, and, sometimes, of control over the material and a penchant for simplistic moralizing—are accentuated [here]. It.... badly needs cutting.... In spite of its weaknesses, [this] towers above the novels that glut our marketplace.... Rebecca Frank's rendering is first-rate, nearly always imaginatively responsive to the author's use of out-of-the-way words, and to his abrupt shifts of tone and diction." Patricia Blake

N Y Times Bk R p2 O 27 '68 1600w

"[The setting of this book serves] an important function. It not only permits Solzhenitsyn to introduce a gallery of Soviet citizens representing antagonistic social groups, men and women who would normally never be found under the same roof; it also allows him to have them discuss ad infinitum all sorts of problems.... [and] enables him to depict many of his doomed characters engaging in embittered ideological polemics without fear of police reprisals.... The fact that the polemics take place in a hospital atmosphere heavy with death imparts to the arguments an aura of heightened relevance, honesty, and permanent validity.... In spite of his outward preoccupation with politics, Solzhenitsyn's basic concerns are really moral and ethical, though in a nonreligious sense.... [This] is his best work to date." Maurice Friedberg

Sat R 51:42 N 9 '68 1500w

SOLZHENITSYN, ALEKSANDR I. The first circle; tr. from the Russian by Thomas P. Whitney. 580p $10 Harper

68-54547

A novel by the author of One Day in the Life of Ivan Denisovich (BRD 1963). "The First Circle of Dante's Hell—where the souls of the pre-Christian philosophers are doomed to exist throughout eternity—stands in this novel as a metaphor for certain penal institutions of Stalin's Russia. These were scientific research centers, operating within special prisons and staffed by political prisoners—physicists, mathematicians, electrical engineers, technicians.... [Much of the action] takes place in one such research center on the outskirts of Moscow, during the four days from December 24 through 27, 1949. . . [The hero] is the prisoner Nerzhin, a brilliant mathematician. . . His story is interwoven with the stories of a dozen fellow prisoners, . . . and the women, wretched or privileged, bound to these men." (Publisher's note) A different translation, by Michael Graydon, was published in England in 1968.

Reviewed by C. J. McNaspy
America 119:295 O 5 '68 750w

Reviewed by Edward Weeks
Atlantic 222:143 O '68 850w

Reviewed by R. F. Grady
Best Sell 28:253 O 1 '68 650w

"A sharp eye, affection and a sense of majesty characterize Solzhenitsyn's style. He is as morally earnest and as linguistically skillful as Tolstoy, carrying on vigorously the finest literary craftsmanship. Only, despite the simplicity of conventional forms, all proportions and relationships are gently distorted by the irony necessary to apprehend our mid-20th-century world. . . . This book is a more nearly exact and more stimulating documentary than any we have yet had of the terms under which men have been and still are imprisoned for political deviation in the Soviet Union. It is a sociological document relevant for us all—for us in the United States, too. . . . This tale is not fantasy; nor is it titillation. . . . It establishes [Solzhenitsyn] as one of the classic writers of contemporary European literature." F. D. Reeve

Book World p6 O 6 '68 1300w

Reviewed by Donald Fanger
Nation 207:341 O 7 '68 2400w

Reviewed by Guy Davenport
Nat R 20:1172 N 19 '68 450w

Reviewed by Jeri Laber
New Repub 159:32 O 19 '68 2100w

"It is typical of Solzhenitsyn that women play only a small part in the book. They are lost, touching, lonely figures and in only two or three chapters do they have any part. Incidentally, one characteristically Victorian aspect of the book is its scant interest in the perverting of sexual life in prison. . . . The density of Solzhenitsyn's texture owes everything to the ingenious interlocking of incidents that are really short stories. This is the form in which he excels. His philosophical and political debates are always in this lively and purposive story form. He never fails to move forward. And the stories build up the central idea. . . . In spite of its range of scenes inside and outside prison [the novel] has a serene command of space and time. It has an architectural unity, and once the uneasy opening chapters are over, it is unshakable. . . . [The] translation seems able, and flows well. It has a sensibility to changes of manner in the expressly literary styles of the re-told stories in the book." V. S. Pritchett

N Y Rev of Books 11:3 D 19 '68 1500w

Reviewed by H. E. Salisbury
N Y Times Bk R pl S 15 '68 1750w

Reviewed by Pritchard Flynn
Newsweek 72:103D S 30 '68 650w

"Like his other works, [this] is at least partly autobiographical, and the novel's embittered narrator, Nerzhin, bears considerable resemblance to Solzhenitsyn himself: a mathematician by training, the author served in the Soviet army and subsequently spent many years, in Soviet labor camps and prison hospitals. . . . This massive novel . . . escapes the danger of monotony and repetitiveness through the use of theoretical digressions, documentary chapters, and the introduction of historical personages, who then coexist with the fictitious heroes. . . . Belonging to the humanitarian tradition of great Russian novels, [this book] has most of their strengths and weaknesses. . . . Its construction is somewhat loose; the principal characters are occasionally verbose, and some of the discussions are mere intellectual gymnastics. Nevertheless, [it] is a splendid book." Maurice Friedberg

Sat R 51:36 S 14 '68 1450w

SOMBART, WERNER. Luxury and capitalism; introd. by Philip Siegelman. 200p $6.50 Univ. of Mich. press

330.1 Leisure class. Wealth. Capitalism

67-11982

The author attempts to show "the importance of luxury in the development of capitalism and advances . . . theories on woman's role in the demand for luxury and the effects of this demand on the growth of cities. Sombart documents his thoughts with . . . original sources. In his view, the secularization of love during the later Middle Ages led to the glorification of woman that marked the courtly age; and the preoccupation with love at the great courts of Europe resulted in staggering expenditures by both sexes to gain favor and position. . . . As courtiers and courtesans spent to outdo one another, cities such as Rome, Venice, Madrid, Paris, and London became rich markets for luxury goods. . . . The luxury markets eventually fostered European colonialism and Negro slavery." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index. Originally published in German.

"A fascinating and unique book by a famous economic historian; it should be on the shelves of all but the smallest college libraries."

Choice 5:385 My '68 200w

"Once again we have to thank an American university press for making available a book that has been known for a long time by specialists, but has not been available before in English to the general reader. . . . Of [Sombart's] many books that deal with the origins and development of capitalism, the present one deserves most to be resuscitated. . . . [He] unequivocally relates luxury to sensual pleasure, and sensual pleasure in the last analysis to the sexual impulse. . . . When sexuality is freely expressed and wealth is accumulated, there luxury will thrive. . . . Much of Sombart's analysis shows the extravagance which characterised all his work. . . . The tone never descends from . . . pontifical heights. Nevertheless, the book is interesting and not without merit as a contribution to the history of the capitalist ethos."

Economist 227:ix Ap 27 '68 500w

SOMERLOTT, ROBERT. The flamingos; ■ novel. 437p $6.95 Little

67-14458

Set in a Mexican coastal town, this novel concerns a small group of American expatriates. Among the characters are "two old-maid school teachers, one hating Mexico and the other loving it; a self-indulgent woman of wealth and her two children; a disillusioned young would-be writer who has lost a hand in combat; an ex-football player who is on the lam and on the make; an aging homosexual; a self-centered professor and his unhappy wife." (Sat R)

Reviewed by C. M. Siggins

Best Sell 27:154 J1 15 '67 700w

"Only gradually does one [come] to follow with interest the entangled paths of the many participants in the story. All are types, but well-presented, and the writing is vivid and vital. The author's view of his characters is wryly jaundiced, with Mexicans and Americans alike coming off badly; yet there is also sympathy, and some of the scoundrels are delightful. . . . For public libraries especially." Lois Huish

Library J 92:2435 Je 15 '67 130w

"Mr. Somerlott's approach to his fugitives falls somewhere between Norman Douglas and Vicki Baum. He savors small-town Mexican life . . . and he communicates his delight dryly. With his troubled gringos, Mr. Somerlott tends to sentimentalize more than he does with his yeasty natives. . . . [His characters'] behavior is not unpredictable. Still, the solidity of their setting gives a measure of authority to these expatriates, which is sustained when the author calls upon the elements for a tropic apocalypse." Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p20 J1 23 '67 140w

"I am impressed by the skill with which Somerlott handles his large cast of characters and the many kinds of action that make up the book. . . . Each scene is carefully focused and makes its contribution to the total effect. My chief criticism is that Somerlott was too anxious to make everything come out right. A hurricane is an asset to any novel, but Somerlott requires his to work wonders. . . . [However] the writing is always competent and often witty." Granville Hicks

Sat R 50:24 Ag 19 '67 430w

TLS p512 My 16 '68 230w

SOMERS, ANNE RAMSAY, jt. auth. Medicare and the hospitals. See Somers, H. M.

SOMERS, HERMAN MILES. Medicare and the hospitals; issues and prospects [by] Herman Miles Somers [and] Anne Ramsay Somers. (Studies in social economics) 303p $6.75 Brookings

610 Medical care. Hospitals—U.S. Insurance. Health

67-27684

The authors assess Medicare, "how it's administered, the problems facing hospitals and the probable issues ahead. The Somerses . . . stress the hospital as a community health center, the heart of an integrated regional complex of health care institutions with a medical school at the core. . . . [They] suggest that the public will in time reject . . . a 'guarantee to any group or profession of payment at any level the group may unilaterally elect.'" (New Repub) Index.

SOMERS, H. M.—Continued

Reviewed by Gerald Rosenthal
Am Econ R 58:1038 S '68 1100w

"The broadness of approach, although providing a coherent survey of the subject, has of necessity been achieved at the expense of in-depth analysis of some of the issues. Not everyone will be pleased with the authors' perspective and prescriptions. There is not an objective analysis, since they are partisans in the cause of a more effective and rational health care system." A. G. Renthal

Am J Pub Health 58:2174 N '68 240w
Choice 5:828 S '68 200w

"A uniquely qualified pair of social scientists have produced a comprehensive study. . . . In this extremely complex field that includes organization, function, costs, controls, planning, and interdisciplinary relationships, they have solidly researched and analyzed in detail every aspect to produce an incomparable source book for students. Their style is so readable and enlivened with their insights and viewpoints that the intelligent general reader will enjoy and profit from the effort to understand the potential and problems of such vital institutions as our hospitals. Essential for all pertinent collections." M. L. Garvey

Library J 93:762 F 15 '68 130w

"A wise, sophisticated, up-to-the-minute review of Medicare . . . [written by] the best of the nation's lay medical economists." E. T. Chase

New Repub 157:25 N 11 '67 250w

SOMKIN, FRED. Unquiet eagle; memory and desire in the idea of American freedom, 1815-1850. 233p $5.95 Cornell univ. press

917.3 U.S.—Civilization. National characteristics, American 67-23763

This study of "the attempts of moralists of the Jacksonian generation to reinforce social and political values they imputed to the founding fathers . . . [contains] five essays devoted to exploring social attitudes that clergymen, Fourth-of-July orators, and literary figures expressed between 1815 and 1860. The first examines . . . views such men took of American prosperity. . . . The second and third chapters . . . suggest that the Americans' sense of 'timelessness' and uniqueness pressed them to establish some sort of national faith, while the geographical and social mobility they experienced pressed them to establish a comparable loyalty to place. . . . [Chapter four describes] American responses to Lafayette's triumphal tour in 1824-1825. [The final chapter discusses the work of Rufus Choate and George Bancroft in the creation of a national spirit]." (J Am Hist) Bibliography. Index.

"Somkin shows a side of early America not usually stressed—that the decade and half preceding the Civil War had a nostalgia and regret for the past. Prosperity turned the nation of God fearing, freedom loving idealists into a groping horde of mercenary egoists. Lafayette was pressed to its heart in a last communion with its youthful self. When he was gone the world of the founders had vanished forever. Somkin pays little attention to the South. . . . This is the old error of confusing New England with the nation. He extensively quotes Jefferson, Clay, Calhoun, and others who certainly represent the South and its 'identity problems.' If any section had a nostalgia and regret for the past of the founding fathers, it was the South. The work will interest primarily graduate students. It is frothy and lacks depth to substantiate its case. At best, a good start."

Choice 5:553 Je '68 160w

"Somkin's book is a provocative and often engaging effort to document American longing for a 'sacred brotherhood' to counteract the anarchy and selfishness of American life during a period of rapid economic and social change. Fortunately, the book's success does not depend upon its ability to substantiate this dubious thesis. . . . [The first three] chapters display a genuine sensitivity to widely different kinds of writings, but . . .

the second and third are so eclectic as to be inconclusive and thus unpersuasive. . . . Obviously the book is ingenious and suggestive. It does not radically alter one's views of the Middle Period so much as extend or confirm the judgments of M. Meyers, R. W. B. Lewis, and S. Elkins. It is, however, well written, attractively put together, and refreshingly relaxed." Rush Welter

J Am Hist 55:395 S '68 550w

SOOTIN, HARRY. The long search; man learns about the nature of air; il. by Frank Aloise. 261p $4.95; lib bdg $4.73 Norton

68-3353

533 Air—Juvenile literature

"This is the story of the early beliefs about air; the definitive work of Scheele, Cavendish, Priestley, Lavoisier, and others who determined its true nature, and the work of modern scientists who study the effects of radioactivity and industrial pollution on our atmosphere." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index. "Grades nine to twelve." (Library J)

"The author of this volume is a teacher of science with an ability to communicate with interest and enthusiasm. Young readers will be able to read and understand this work which mingles science and history, anecdote and research."

Best Sell 27:431 F 1 '68 80w

Reviewed by H. C. Stubbs
Horn Bk 44:81 F '68 180w

"[The] book encompasses a great deal of technical information about air. . . . Clear writing and many diagrams effectively delineate the methods by which scientists have tested their theories." M. E. Wenger

Library J 92:4628 D 15 '67 100w

SOPER, TONY, jt. auth. Penguins. See Sparks, J.

SOPKIN, CHARLES. Seven glorious days, seven fun-filled nights; one man's struggle to survive a week watching commercial television in America. 286p $5.95 Simon & Schuster

791.45 Television broadcasting 68-25754

Fred W. Friendly "suggested that top management of the three networks should sit down and watch their company's complete programming from 7 A.M. until midnight, for just one day. . . . Sopkin, a New York editor . . . took on the task himself." (Book World)

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams
Atlantic 222:144 N '68 40w

Reviewed by Robert Lasson
Book World p4 S 29 '68 500w

"Believe it or not—[this] book must be read to believe it—this brave man sat in his apartment for seven consecutive days in April 1967 and took everything New York City's six commercial television stations could throw at him. And what did Mr. Sopkin conclude from his adventure? 'Maybe all television needs is time."

In two hundred years, give or take a decade, the question of 'Whither television?' may be worth taking up. Certainly not much sooner.' The chronicle of his week with television is eminently entertaining, and should be of special interest to public libraries." R. A. Hamm

Library J 93:2991 S 1 '68 150w

New Yorker 44:64 D 28 '68 190w

"Sopkin has revealed the . . . unlovely landscape of American television. . . . His method is like that of John Cage in one of his Imaginary Landscapes, composed from the noise of twelve radios played simultaneously. The book is cacophonous confusion. Actually, I couldn't endure staying with Sopkin more than two days and nights. Exactly his point, I believe." S. W. Little

Sat R 51:91 N 9 '68 120w

SORELL, WALTER. The dance through the ages. 304p il col il $14.95 Grosset

793.3 Dancing 67-19545

"The first half of the book traces the history of the dance through Greek and Hebrew ritual, the Middle Ages, the Renaissance and Romantic periods to the Naughty Nineties. Folk and oriental dancing are also described." (TLS) "The last half of the book discusses modern dance in the U.S., what has been happening in ballet in other countries, in the movies and on Broadway." (Book World)

"[This] could be a useful book for the new-comer to dance who wants an intelligent and complete illustrated history, with all the highlights from primitive ritual to Merce Cunningham. . . . But it is unfortunate that the critic in Mr. Sorell should have so overtaken the historian that the dance enthusiast cannot profit more. He will wonder that Alexandra Danilova is never mentioned, . . . that the work of Antony Tudor is treated as an after-thought to the current scene, that Antonio does not appear in the gloss on Spanish dance, . . . that Margot Fonteyn is referred to in passing as a dancer who became famous at the same time as Moira Shearer, and that Jean Cocteau gets more space than Jerome Robbins." Francis Mason

Book World p16 N 19 '67 330w

"[The book] succeeds in engendering excitement both through its lively text and many beautiful illustrations. Since the picture is painted with broad sweeps, a number of minor mistakes occur—some extraordinary statements, in particular, are made about primitive dancing. . . . It is a pity that the second half of the book should seem almost obsessively American. The revolutionary achievements of Diaghilev are minimized both in text and plates, the contemporary Russian, Danish and British ballets receive scant attention, and both Ulanova and Margot Fonteyn are reduced to mouse-like proportions."

TLS p572 Je 6 '68 200w

SORELL, WALTER. The story of the human hand. 284p il $9.95 Bobbs

133.6 Hand. Palmistry. Symbolism 67-25178

The author presents an "interpretation of the hand as an instrument of gesture, art, personality, and its relationship to various psychic phenomena. There is . . . [material] on handedness, or sidedness, and . . . information on symbolism and literature about the hand." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"Sorell has written what is primarily a historical account of the various uses and symbolic meanings we give to our hands. He has also gone through the works of all sorts of writers, painters and sculptors to show how concerned, preoccupied and obsessed one or another of them has been with fingers that touch, palms that stretch out. . . . Unfortunately [he] does not rest content with his ability to write first-rate social history. He devotes a major portion of his book to a discussion of subjects like 'The Personality in the Hand' and 'Body and Mind,' and presents the following kind of assertion as being worth serious attention. 'The unconscious zone embraces the Freudian Id. Here is our libido anchored in the lower part of the thumb ball.' . . . About the last thing we need today is a marriage of psychoanalytic theory with Sorell's hand-analysis." Robert Coles

Book World p5 Ja 28 '68 750w

"[There are] frightening pseudomedical sections on 'The Mark of Cancer' and 'The Psychological Implications,' which will indulge many people more given to simple belief than Mr. Sorell probably intended to influence. The strength of the book as a reference work is largely lost to us since the bibliography is brief and general, and the index is weak. . . . Librarians might have hoped for citations to the thousands of allusions . . . [An] unusual approach to a fascinating lore of miscellaneous beliefs." Lee Ash

Library J 93:1151 Mr 15 '68 260w

SORENSEN, THOMAS C. The word war; the story of American propaganda [foreword by Robert F. Kennedy]. 337p $6.95 Harper

327.73 Propaganda, American. U.S.—Relations (general) with foreign countries

67-13692

The author "tells how America . . . entered the propaganda field with the Creel Committee of World War I and returned to it with the Office of War Information in World War II. He describes the continuing battles with Congress, including . . . attacks on the program by the late Senator Joseph McCarthy and the then Senator Lyndon B. Johnson. He tells of the running disputes over the purposes and scope of the Information Agency and especially its Voice of America." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"[This book] deserves to be published inexpensively and quickly in paperback and distributed widely. It will go a long way toward clarifying America's image abroad. . . . Sorensen's book is an honest, factual, unemotional—almost clinical—portrayal of United States propaganda activities, but not propaganda in the sense to deceive but rather in the sense to inform." J. F. Menez

Best Sell 28:153 J1 1 '68 600w

"[We have] come a long way in the craft of international persuasion and public relations, and Sorensen's book is a workmanlike chronicle of that development. . . . [However] there is one factual error in the book which needs correction. Sorensen asserts that when I became head of the Voice of America, I agreed that the policy office should clear all V.O.A. commentaries. Actually, as I recall, it was the other way around. . . . This is a valuable book for students of American propaganda, and it has enough footnotes and references to provide material for a thousand scholarly essays. It reads at times like a Programming-Planning-Budgeting-System paper, written for a session at the Bureau of the Budget. In that respect, it is a fair example of U.S.I.A. memoranda style, which is perhaps one of the more obvious defects of an agency engaged in a war of words." John Chancellor

Book World p4 Je 16 '68 1100w

"Extensive footnoting and the inclusion of a severely limited but useful bibliography make the work useful as a stimulus to further independent student work. . . . A useful addition to the very sparse literature in this area."

Choice 5:1118 N '68 140w

"Written by a veteran of 13 years in the United States Information Agency, this book exemplifies America's confusion over the precise role of propaganda in the execution of foreign policy. Mr. Sorensen appears uncertain as to whether he is writing a personalized account (which he is) or a history (which he is not) of the development of American propaganda techniques. . . . He concentrates on the post-Korean period of the USIA and particularly the stewardship of Edward R. Murrow. Methodically, he summarizes every major news event of this period and explains how the issue was treated by American propaganda agencies abroad. Despite this plodding procedure, the book is redeemed by some insights into the administration and philosophy of American propaganda. For the general reader and large nonacademic libraries." Charles DeBenedetti

Library J 93:1899 My 1 '68 200w

SOUCHON, EDMOND, jt. auth. New Orleans jazz. See Rose, A.

SOULE, GARDNER. Sea rescue. 206p il $4.50 Macrae Smith co.

910.4 Shipwrecks—Juvenile literature. Rescue work—Juvenile literature 67-3176

"This book describes the activities of the various organizations around the world dedicated to the saving of lives endangered by storms and mishaps at sea or by ventures above and beneath the oceans' surface. Chapters are devoted to . . . the United States Coast Guard and the Royal National Life-boat Institution of Great Britain as well as the . . . Aerospace Rescue and Recovery Service of the U.S. Air Force and the U.S. Navy's deep-sea submarines." (Library J) Included is "information about . . . modern techniques and equipment used in carrying out sea rescues—new life rafts, rescue submarines, oceangoing life-boats [and] the U.S. Coast Guard's AMVER computer reporting system." (Publisher's note) Index. "Grades seven to twelve." (Library J)

"This book is not completely devoted to tales of sea rescue. Many mysteries of the sea are recounted, such as the unexplained disappearance of vessels each year on the high seas. . . . Since sea rescue now involves the work of air-ships and other types of equipment, the author explains the background of the various types of rescue ship and usually illustrates the use of the ship. Young readers will find the book interesting and fascinating."

Best Sell 26:371 Ja 1 '67 90w

"One of the most interesting chapters . . . is the story of the recovery of the H-bomb in the Mediterranean off the coast of Spain. . . . Parts of the book seem to be an assemblage of magazine and newspaper material which hasn't been entirely rewritten to eliminate repetition and form a consistent whole. Quite a lot of current and historical information is presented in a way which should make the book useful." E. B. Hayward

SOULE, GARDNER—Continued

Library J 92:899 F 15 '67 200w [YA]

SOURS, JOHN A., jr. auth. The child mental status examination. See Goodman, J. D.

SOUSTELLE, JACQUES. Mexico; tr. from the French by James Hogarth. (Archaeologia mundi ser) 284p pl col pl $10 World pub.

709.72 Mexico—Antiquities. Indians of Mexico—Art 67-19604

This work discusses the development of Mexican archeology, its problems and methods, as well as the panorama of Mexican antiquity. Chronological table. Bibliography. Index.

Best Sell 27:300 N 1 '67 90w

"The background summary of ethnohistoric and historic sources is excellent as is that of the story of early archaeological investigations. Later archaeological developments and methodological trends, however, are less well appreciated. Soustelle seems unaware of the radio carbon dating bearing on the age of the Olmec cultures and . . . [on] Maya calendrical correlation. . . . The work is less up to date and less valuable as an introductory college text than the M. D. Coe books, Mexico [BRD 1963] and The Maya [BRD 1967]."

Choice 5:848 S '68 190w

"M. Soustelle gives a capsule history of Mexican archeology and a panorama of the prehistoric cultures it unearthed, culminating in the high civilizations of the Maya and the Aztec. His French chauvinism, so characteristic of French scholarship, is sometimes comic (one section is called 'From Brasseur to Aubin'), but it is a useful corrective to our American chauvinism, and some of the material from French collections illustrated in the photographs is unfamiliar and striking."

New Yorker 43:248 N 11 '67 90w

SOUTHALL, IVAN. The sword of Esau; Bible stories retold; il. by Joan Kiddell-Monroe. 116p $3.50 St Martins

221.9 Bible. O.T.—Stories—Juvenile literature 68-10847

The three episodes from the Old Testament retold by the author are entitled: The sword of Esau; Gideon, Gideon, what have you done? and Even Job was not swallowed by a fish.

"The author of Ash Road [the winner of the Australian Children's Book of the Year Award, BRD 1966] and To the Wild Sky [BRD 1967] has retold three famous stories of the Old Testament as mementos of human experience. Deliberately disregarding the severely liturgical quality of the King James Version, he has expanded the narratives by means of a colloquial, conversational style and touches of humor. Never exceeding the Biblical implications regarding the ingenuity of Jacob or Gideon, or the ridiculousness of Jonah, he leads the reader to feel the transformation of each character by the uncanny events in his life—such as Jacob's wrestling with the angel and Jonah's encounter with the whale." P. H.

Horn Bk 44:321 Je '68 120w

"[The author] is most successful with the comic story of Jonah, and the rip-roaring battle tale about Gideon. He tells his stories somewhat garrulously like a Greek, not sparsely and dramatically like a Hebrew. His style lacks the depth and grandeur of myth which belongs to the Hebrew. Perhaps for this reason, the great story of Esau and Jacob seems the least satisfying of the three. However, children who are prepared for leisurely reading will find the whole of [the book] readable."

TLS p265 Mr 14 '68 160w

SOUTHAM, B. C., ed. Jane Austen: the critical heritage. 276p $6.75 Barnes & Noble 823 Austen, Jane [68-77814]

This book covers the period from the first reviews of Sense and Sensibility and Pride and Prejudice in 1812, to '1870, when Austen-Leigh's Memoir appeared and changed the attitude of the public towards Austen and when Richard Simpson offered the most important piece of Austen criticism to that date." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"The material in . . . this time span is sparse; but its significance Southam points up brilliantly in a well written 33-page introduction, as valuable in the history of the novel as in Austen criticism—from when novels were regarded as merely entertainment of an 'instructional' nature until when finally the genre was recognized as a genuine art form. . . . This scholarly work should be in all libraries."

Choice 5:626 J1 '68 120w

TLS p110 F 1 '68 1200w

SOUTHWORTH, JOHN VAN DUYN. War at sea; bk 1. The ancient fleets. il $7.50 Twayne 359 Naval history 67-16200

"This book is the first volume to be published in a three-volume series which is intended as a complete narrative of naval warfare for the average reader." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"Southworth is an interested amateur of naval warfare, which may account for the plethora of errors, inaccuracies, and mistakes which abound in this book. The title is a misnomer, for the ancient world, by any standards, ended with the fall of Rome in the 5th century. . . . The book is lucidly written for a popular readership. . . . The bibliography, while covering six pages, is sadly lacking many major works. . . . Not recommended."

Choice 5:1196 N '68 180w

"The next two volumes will cover the age of sail and the age of steam and if they are equal to this book in quality the set will be a valuable addition to most library collections. . . . [Mr. Southworth has] managed to include every major naval action under oars and to maintain the historical continuity of the rise and fall of nations and people. . . . This is essentially a history of Western and Middle Eastern naval warfare although the scarcity of source material undoubtedly accounts for the minor treatment of Far Eastern events. This book should be especially useful in small and medium-sized public libraries and in secondary school libraries. College and university libraries will also find it a necessary purchase since no similar survey exists which covers the whole period of naval warfare under oars in this same comprehensive manner." R. N. Sheridan

Library J 93:3136 S 15 '68 250w [YA]

SPACKMAN, PETER, ed. The Columbia University forum anthology; ed. by Peter Spackman & Lee Ambrose. 365p il $7.50 Atheneum pub.

810 68-17335

Thirty-four articles and fourteen poems selected from material published during the last ten years in "a review of fact and opinion written by graduates and faculty of the university for free distribution to . . . alumni. . . . [Some of the contributions include] Elizabeth Hardwick on women and the novel, Justin O'Brien on Camus, Joseph Lelyveld on the Burmese, Wifred Cartey on black writers. . . . David Schoenbrun's 'Vietnam: The Case for Extradition' and 'The Press and the Bay of Pigs' by Victor Bernstein and Jesse Gordon." (N Y Times Bk R)

"This is a book to be had, to be kept. . . . Almost everything in it is excellent reading—good enough to make up for the considerable amount of academic balderdash that was all but unavoidable, considering the editorial stance of the Forum and the pose of the University. Seven dollars and a half is much less than the book is worth; my copy has carried me through a doctor's waiting room, a hotshot battery charge, the proctoring of a midterm exam, countless television commercials, and a drawbridge. . . . Go buy it." Miller Williams

Am Scholar 37:698 autumn '68 1150w

"[A] remarkably re-readable . . . top-quality collection. . . . Any magazine output featuring such writers as Pasternak, Voznesensky, Joseph Wood Krutch, Moses Hadas, and Margaret Mead deserves perpetuation in book form. Nobel and Pulitzer Prize winners, radicals and conservatives, journalists and researchers comment on such diverse matters as 'The Etruscan Enigma,' 'The Rhetoric of Malcolm X,' . . . 'Death of the Detective Story,' and 'Marrying in Haste in College.' A subject-index would have helped. Otherwise unreservedly recommended for libraries." E. M. Oboler

Library J 93:2659 J1 '68 130w

Reviewed by Alexander Coleman

N Y Times Bk R p30 Je 30 '68 160w

SPACKMAN, W. M. On the decay of humanism [essays]. 187p $7.50 Rutgers univ. press

814 66-18876

These six "essays range in subject from Aristotle's 'Poetics' [to an] examination of Edmund Wilson's fiction. Mr. Spackman's deepest wish is for 'the extirpation of Meaning from the literary course, and a study of style and form implanted in its place.'" (Va Q R) Index.

"Spackman is angry about many things: professorial adulation of Henry James, professorial concern with the how of teaching, . . . lack of administrative common sense, professorial preoccupation with meaning in poetry, the uselessness of Aristotle's Poetics, and intellectual festivities for alumni at Princeton University. On the positive side, there is an appreciation of the fiction of Edmund Wilson. Apparently Spackman does not realize the wide fame of John Ciardi's How Does a Poem Mean? [BRD 1960] in introductory poetry courses. Emphasis on rhetoric has also changed the course of critical appraisal in recent years. . . . All in all, the title seems a misnomer, and some of the difficulties of Henry James not mentioned by Spackman—excess of intelligence and assumption of reading knowledge of several languages—he may suffer from."

Choice 5:479 Je '68 140w

"Spackman refers often to the enemy—he variously calls it the 'professorial mind' or the 'academic establishment.' Although the indignation about this phenomenon is tiring as well as contradictory—Mr. Spackman finds many exceptions himself—the animus it provides is useful, as the essays become especially witty when refuting the academic attitudes he often invents. . . . [There is] a brilliant reading of 'The Gold Bowl' [by Henry James, BRD 1905]."

Va Q R 44:lxii spring '68 130w

SPACKS, BARRY. The sophomore. 207p $4.95 Prentice-Hall

68-11274

This first novel by a teacher at M.I.T. concerns "Harry Zissel, a 23-year-old sophomore who is majoring in meaninglessness at a college in Fear of Reprisals, Conn. Harry is having a confused love affair with Miriam Hipolyto, who rides a unicycle. . . . He faces (he thinks) the prospect of a pregnant Miriam—to be followed by marriage with all its ghastly responsibilities and daily banalities. . . . [Harry runs away to] Cordella, N. J., where he finds his old college roommate Arthur Thompson, who is now married to [Doris].

On impulse, the three of them go back to Fear of Reprisals, Conn., to tackle Miriam and the problem of Harry's life." (N Y Times Bk R)

"[The author] has tried his hand at capturing some insight of the slightly-confused youngsters in his purportedly funny tale. . . . But long before the short tale is ended, the confused antics that sound funny in a brief rundown have lost their zing in a welter of boring confusion. And then it might be funny to a less mature mind that doesn't realize the irritation of directionless and valueless irresponsibilities. It makes one wonder how the twenty-odd student could have reached even this minor plateau of endeavor without some sort of school and/or home training in standards and morals and the need for decisions sticking to his rib! . . . Antic hay, all the way." J. A. LaHave

Best Sell 27:473 Mr 15 '68 400w

Reviewed by H. L. Leet

Library J 93:573 F 1 '68 200w

Nation 206:484 Ap 8 '68 300w

Reviewed by Daniel Stern

N Y Times Bk R p30 Ap 14 '68 700w

"A very funny book about life, death, alienation, suffering, sex, violence, repression, and the inhumanity of America today. . . . No synopsis can do justice to Spacks's technical skill and comic inventiveness. . . . The principal unifying device is the narrator, an amalgam of Homer and Sholom Aleichem . . . who likes puns and symbols and would rather laugh at Harry than weep for him, though he does both. Within this framework Spacks has freedom to run the gamut of style, from put-on to Existentialist drama to pathos, without being inconsistent. This is characteristic of the growing number of writers who attempt to touch the heart of reality by calling attention to their own artifice, but Spacks is more successful than most. . . . [It] has a life of its own." H. S. Resnik

Sat R 51:113 Mr 9 '68 800w

SPAIN, RUFUS B. At ease in Zion; social history of Southern Baptists, 1865-1900. 247p $6.95 Vanderbilt univ. press

261.8 Church and social problems. Baptists 66-10367

The author shows "the relationship of the Southern Baptist Church to various social issues (e.g. politics, segregation, economics, social evils, and temperance). . . . He concludes that Southern Baptists were relatively unconcerned about society during this period but that they did develop a degree of social consciousness in the latter part of the 19th century. On the whole, Southern Baptists, he finds, defended the status quo, their attitudes coinciding with the then prevailing Southern views. (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"The author presents his case convincingly. . . . The principal weaknesses of this study flow directly from a rather narrow base of research. Professor Spain has chosen to devote almost all his attention to the formal records of the southern Baptists and to their numerous denominational papers. A broad historical context for his findings is missing. The interplay of differing attitudes North and South on social issues both within the Baptist denomination and between Baptists and other religious groups is hinted at, but never adequately revealed. Most important, the author fails to view his subject within the framework of evangelical Protestantism, of which southern Baptists were excellent representatives." James Findlay

Am Hist R 73:929 F '68 410w

"Thoroughly documented, this book adds to existing books on the social gospel some details about Southern developments."

Choice 4:1398 F '68 130w

"The social patterns of the modern South are rooted in attitudes which developed following the Civil War; and one of the most important institutions which helped shape these attitudes was the Southern Baptist Convention, the largest white Protestant denomination in the South. Spain has used a great amount of material from Baptist periodicals to show their response to social problems of that day. . . . Over one third of the book is devoted to analyzing the relations between white and Negro Baptists and provides valuable material for a study of race relations in the South. In general, the author gives a balanced view of southern history, but he does adopt a rather negative view of Reconstruction." A. E. Murray

J Am Hist 54:679 D '67 300w

SPALDING, C. SUMNER, ed. See Anglo-American cataloging rules

SPANOS, WILLIAM V. The Christian tradition in modern British verse drama; the poetics of sacramental time; with a foreword by E. Martin Browne. 400p $12.50 Rutgers univ. press

822 English drama—History and criticism. Religion in literature 66-18882

A study of the contemporary relationship between literature and Christianity. This analysis "of the verse drama written for the Canterbury Festivals and of the 'secular' Christian drama inspired by and following the church productions at Canterbury Cathedral . . . [includes] a study of T. S. Eliot, since his plays and theoretical writings were so influential in the movement . . . [and] studies of plays by Charles Williams, Dorothy Sayers, Gordon Bottomley, Ronald Duncan, Christopher Fry, and a few others. . . . Informed by neo-orthodox theology and the theological literary criticism of Nathan Scott and others, Spanos uses the doctrine of the Incarnation to show how Christian verse drama helps to open possibilities for this-worldly historical existence." (Choice)

"The least that can be said about this book is that it constitutes a significant chapter in the history of English literature. As such it is a disciplined and sympathetic study. . . . [It is], however, more than mere literary history; it is also a perceptive contribution to the aesthetics of religious drama, elucidating the problematic relationship between religious vision and the art of verse drama. . . . [The author's] sympathetic exposition contrasts vividly with [K.] Nott's animated polemic against the alleged obscurantism of Eliot and other Christian writers in The Emperor's Clothes [BRD 1954]."

SPANOS, W. V.—Continued

Choice 5:469 Je '68 200w

Christian Century 84:1162 S 13 '67 80w

SPARK, MURIEL. Collected poems: 1. 97p $4
Knopf
821 [67-112897]

A collection of poems by the author of The Prime of Miss Jean Brodie (BRD 1962). Many of these poems were originally published in The New Yorker, The Partisan Review, and other magazines.

Reviewed by Peter Davison

Atlantic 222:139 O '68 280w

"Miss Spark has an interesting affinity with childhood. In 'Litany of Time Past' she uses a jump rope motif, and in 'Conundrum,' an imitation of a Mother Goose rhyme to discuss serious religious points. The sleeping Beauty motif is in the poem 'We Were Expecting the Prince Today,' a comment on artificialities and the passing of time. Her humor is delicate in the rain poem, 'Complaint in a Wash-out Season.' . . . Her poetry is sparse, exact, and intellectually controlled. It resembles a line in the poem, 'The Yellow Book': 'Like a thin umbrella in a black gloved hand.' Her book is for public, college, and university libraries." Jerome Cushman

Library J 93:2246 Je 1 '68 130w

Reviewed by A. S. Byatt

New Statesman 74:848 D 15 '67 700w

"For a time one says of Miss Spark's poems 'Yes, the verse of a novelist'—until one recalls that other novelist-poet, Hardy. Indeed, some of her successes are in the Hardy area, such as the six little sections of a tour of London, in particular 'The House,' which is a brilliant piece of observation. The slyness, the touch of the faux naïf, which are marks of Miss Spark's prose writing, are evident in 'The Rout' and 'The Fall'. But in general these are the marginal and not really very accomplished accumulations of a writing career that has not always been as successful as it is now."

TLS p155 F 15 '68 150w

SPARK, MURIEL. Collected stories: 1. 359p
$6.95 Knopf

68-21519

This collection of twenty-one short stories includes "stories that appeared in The Go-Away Bird [BRD 1961] and Voices at Play [BRD 1962], together with four new stories written in the last few years." (Publisher's note) Some of these stories first appeared in The New Yorker and Mademoiselle.

"Almost a third of [these stories] are set in Africa. (Africa for Miss Spark is the home of violence, and almost all her African stories end in death by shooting.) Many of them—the least successful—rest on the artificial conventions of fantasy; if ballads, nursery rhymes, and the strictly channelled music of the quatrain dominate the poems, so do a number of the stories move in the ghost-story vein." Peter Davison

Atlantic 222:139 O '68 900w

Reviewed by Jerome Cushman

Library J 93:2261 Je 1 '68 190w

Reviewed by A. S. Byatt

New Statesman 74:848 D 15 '67 700w

Reviewed by Christopher Ricks

N Y Rev of Books 11:31 D 19 '68 800w

"In all Muriel Spark's work there is a sense of high spirits and of, to use one of her own similes, 'a mind like a blade.' She does not posture instructively, nor does she shade her work to appease reviewers and gladden the hearts of publishing companies: she writes to entertain, in the highest sense of that word—to allow us the exercise of our intellect and imagination, to extend our self-curiosity and enrich our view. Such are the pleasures to be derived from the first volume of a projected series of Mrs. Spark's collected stories. . . .

No modern writer has given greater attention to our revelatory turns of phrase, or more richly conjured up the inflections of meaning in our language. By the same token, her artistry in these stories is scrupulously disciplined. She does not indulge herself in enumerating sensations or cataloguing objects merely because she is aware of them: everything [bears] on what she has to tell us." Shirley Hazzard

N Y Times Bk R p1 S 29 '68 1150w

"[Like the author's novels, these stories] are too various in approach and tone for any quick, over-all classification. In quality too they range from unsubstantial bagatelles to such well-known masterpieces as 'The Portobello Road' and 'The Go-Away Bird.' However, . . . one is hit repeatedly in reading these tales by the singular air of superiority, of tender but confident condescension, with which she regards her strange collection of eccentrics, self-deceivers, misfits, and purveyors of reprehensible nastiness. . . . Mrs. Spark's awareness encompasses that of all these characters, and more. She undoubtedly knows the extent of her own self-controlled poise, the intellectuality of her pessimism, her crisp sort of kindness, her impatience with moral obliquity. To request that she alter these characteristics in her work would be to ask her to surrender her uniqueness—and, one hastens to add, much of her delight and pleasure. Yet one wonders how vast a reserve of sympathy lies beneath the iceberg of her consciousness, and how far beyond trickery her work would go if she let it show through."

Robert Maurer

Sat R 51:31 O 5 '68 550w

TLS p1125 N 30 '67 460w

SPARK, MURIEL. The public image. 144p $4.50
Knopf

68-23954

"Annabel Christopher, after years of obscurity, has become a famous film actress. Her publicity has built her up as a Tiger Lady—correct and composed in public, but full of fire inside, an ideal mate for [Frederick,] her playwright husband. . . . Hatred leads [Frederick] to a vengeful suicide, carefully planned to wreck Anna's image completely." (Library J) This novel was serialized in Cosmopolitan magazine.

Reviewed by Doris Grumbach

America 119:387 O 26 '68 420w

Reviewed by Peter Davison

Atlantic 222:140 O '68 700w

Reviewed by W. B. Hill

Best Sell 28:319 N 1 '68 650w

"[This book]—which is one of Muriel Spark's comparatively minor novels—contains all the author's immediate individual and recognizable touches. . . . There's pleasant satire here. [The book] amuses. But it is certainly neither a light nor a shadow book; for like all satirical treatments of human behavior it carries a weight of implied corrective notions. . . . It is tightly, brightly written. The prose is a joy to read for its very freshness. It seems to rise, not out of painstaking self-conscious artistry but out of a natural sure feeling for form, structure and phrase; it seems spontaneously right." Richard Sullivan

Book World p3 S 29 '68 800w

Reviewed by Robert Kiely

Christian Science Monitor p15 N 14 '68 950w

Reviewed by K. G. Jackson

Harper 237:159 N '68 220w

Reviewed by J. M. Hoagland

Library J 93:2899 Ag '68 180w

Reviewed by A. S. Byatt

New Statesman 75:807 Je 14 '68 1000w

Reviewed by Christopher Ricks

N Y Rev of Books 11:31 D 19 '68 3150w

Reviewed by Shirley Hazzard

N Y Times Bk R p62 S 29 '68 500w

"'An ethical shocker,' Muriel Spark calls her new, short novel; but the ethical content is both banal and thin-to-vanishing, and the only thing truly shocking about it is that so immensely gifted a writer as she should have produced so shoddy a scenario for an unwritten novel. . . . Precisely the trouble, in fact, is that the story is barely told and hardly at all revealed, unfolded, demonstrated. Naturally, this being Muriel Spark, the novel is not without a modicum of true wit and intelligence—an occasional vividness of detail seen at a steeply pitched angle by one of the finest observers of manners in contemporary fiction. But this is all the more depressing, for it serves to remind us of the riches she has withheld." Saul Maloff

Newsweek 72:108 O 21 '68 430w

Reviewed by Robert Maurer

Sat R 51:31 O 5 '68 1100w

Time 92:102 N 1 '68 450w

"The circumstances of Frederick's suicide may seem symbolic, and so may Annabel's surname. . . . But is unclear what is symbolized here. . . . In important respects The Public Image is unlike [Miss Spark's] other novels. It is a plain story straightforwardly told. . . . It has a way of seeming improvised, blocked-out, rather than composed. A short book by a concise writer, it manages, surprisingly, to ramble; it makes no mysteries, yet it manages to appear rather cryptic. The portrait of Annabel herself is its best feature. . . . An endearing humility is established chiefly through her relationship with Frederick. . . . It is a pity that Muriel Spark passes from this relationship as soon as she does. . . . The story cannot be said to support its conclusion, which reads a little desperately, like a flight into the poetic. The book does not end. . . . It takes off."

TLS p612 Je 13 '68 1400w

SPARKS, JOHN. Penguins [by] John Sparks and Tony Soper; il. by Robert Gillmor. 263p maps $8.95 Taplinger

598 Penguins

67-25577

This book describes the history and life cycle of these birds, as well as their evolution, discovery and exploitation. Bibliography. Index.

"Penguins are almost as hard to believe as giraffes—and twice as charming. . . . [This book] is a deeply serious study of the habits of penguins and the habits of men (largely destructive) confronted with them since early exploring days. But such is Mr. Sparks' and Mr. Soper's delight in their subject that they woo the most indifferent ornithologist . . . and set us to pondering the habits of such charmers as the Little Blue, the Macaroni, the Gentoo, and the Emperor penguin." P. M.

Christian Science Monitor p11 D 21 '67 180w

Reviewed by Walter Harding

Library J 93:764 F 15 '68 100w

"The authors have provided a lively account . . . with an enthusiasm for their subject that will surely be catching. Photographs, line drawings, and diagrams aid. . . . Notes on the seventeen species and a short appendix on penguins in captivity round out the narrative." C. B.

Natur Hist 77:72 Ja '68 60w

Sci Am 218:148 Mr '68 100w

"A long and fascinating chapter headed 'Discovery' traces penguins as seen through the eyes of explorers and savants from the sixteenth to the nineteenth century. This section is rich in quotations from the journals of many of these men, and illustrated with reproductions of the woodcuts which adorned their books. . . . One of the highlights of this book is the standard of the line drawings and their disposition in the text. Robert Gillmor . . . has captured with great charm, clarity and accuracy, and with delightful informality, many of the fleeting moments in the lives of the penguins. . . . One of the more important features of this book, and one which will be much used, is the map showing the overall distribution and breeding areas of all species of penguins. It is therefore unfortunate that there is confusion between the two, as well as several errors of fact."

TLS p272 Mr 14 '68 700w

SPARROW, JOHN. After the assassination; a positive appraisal of the Warren report. 77p $3.95; pa $1.25 Chilmark press

364.1 U.S. President's Commission on the assassination of President Kennedy. Kennedy, John Fitzgerald—Assassination

68-22138

The warden of All Souls College, Oxford University discusses "the flood of books and articles about [President Kennedy's] assassination. . . . The author presents his conclusions concerning each of the 'conspiracy' theories and why he believes them to be wrong." (Publisher's note) This essay first appeared in the Times Literary Supplement. Bibliography.

Reviewed by Josiah Thompson

Commonweal 88:244 My 10 '68 900w

"A brief but clear survey of the Warren Report and its critics. . . . In contrast to so many of the critics, [Sparrow] weighs their efforts, without anger and without partiality, and stresses the fact that they did not succeed in proving their particular point. He does not deny the mistakes and weaknesses of the Warren Report but maintains that its final conclusion has not been disproved. His brief study is a simple but in no way superficial presentation and is recommended for public and school libraries." H. H. Bernt

Library J 93:2254 Je 1 '68 170w

Reviewed by R. Crinkley

Nat R 20:918 S 10 '68 230w

"This little volume is not, as it calls itself, so much a positive appraisal of the Warren Report as a devastatingly negative appraisal of most of its critics. Mr. Sparrow . . . was trained as a lawyer, and the mindlessness of such writers on the Kennedy assassination as Mark Lane, Léo Sauvage, Joachim Joesten, Harold Weisberg, and Richard Popkin has set his teeth on edge. . . . The arguments of the critics whom Mr. Sparrow classifies as demonologists do not withstand analysis, as this lucid and concise essay . . . shows. Others before Mr. Sparrow have demonstrated this though not with as much elegance. . . . Mr. Sparrow, who . . . [is] almost always disinterested, perceptive and fair, naturally treats [E. J.] Epstein's book Inquest [BRD 1966] as a very different article from the works of Mark Lane and the rest. But he gives more weight than is justly due to a prissy critique of Mr. Epstein's book by Professor Arthur L. Goodhart of Oxford, which appeared about a year ago in the English Law Quarterly Review." A. M. Bickel

New Repub 158:41 Mr 23 '68 800w

New Yorker 44:136 My 4 '68 180w

"If Mr. Sparrow intended his seventy-five-page essay to establish public acceptance of the Commission's conclusions, it is difficult to see how he could have expected to succeed. For one thing, his book is too brief to describe fairly, let alone rebut adequately the theories of the several antagonists he has challenged. . . . Moreover, he did not allow himself enough space to present evidence from the Commission's record to support his arguments. As he realizes, judging from his criticism of the 'demonologists,' a partisan summary is a poor substitute for the testimony of a witness or the contents of a report." Irwin Karp

Sat R 51:113 Mr 9 '68 750w

SPARROW, JOHN. Mark Pattison and the idea of a university. (Cambridge, England. Univ. Trinity college. The Clark lectures, 1965) 148p $5.50 Cambridge

B or 92 Pattison, Mark. Education, Higher. Oxford. University [67-12141]

This volume consists of "four lectures delivered in 1965 [by the Warden of All Souls College, Oxford] on the . . . 19th-century Oxford rector and scholar. . . . Two lectures deal with his character, the third with Oxford in his day, and the last with the development of his thought, especially concerning university reform." (Choice)

"Witty, well written, and unexpectedly entertaining, [this] relies heavily on Pattison's personal papers and memoirs. Especially recommended for those interested in Victorian scholarship and university development. . . . No index, footnotes, or bibliography."

Choice 5:659 Jl '68 90w

"The argument of the work is to demonstrate the present validity and relevance of the criticism which Pattison deployed against those who wished to use the university to satisfy demands that, however proper in themselves, were not proper to it. In this the [author] succeeds to admiration, exposing with an elegant economy the fallacies of the proposition that in a technological age all that is needed is more technologists. . . . No less fascinating is the interpretation of Pattison's character. . . . But it may be felt that the intellectual austerity that Pattison claimed and the [author] applauds is sometimes relaxed in his favour."

Economist 223:1128 Je 10 '67 440w

Reviewed by Owen Chadwick

Engl Hist R 83:630 Jl '68 280w

"The book both enchants and forces one to reflect on the condition of man. [Sparrow's] analysis of Pattison's life and dilemmas is convincing precisely because it is not a defence. Yet all the same, he slides at times, over thin ice. . . . Nevertheless such is his skill that the reader's frigidity towards Pattison as a man melts and he becomes mon semblable, mon frère. . . . Unfortunately Mr Sparrow seems to think that the intellect can be disinterested only when it confines itself to those subjects which he classes as liberal studies and must be corrupted if the subject studied can be shown to have a direct bearing on life. So taking Pattison as his text he delivers a sermon on the deplorable developments in higher education today. . . . I think in fact that Mr Sparrow could well have drawn a different moral from Pattison's life." Noel Annan

SPARROW, John—Continued

New Statesman 74:52 J1 14 '67 2000w

"Much of the charm of these lectures is . . . due to the exquisite and unobtrusive skill of the writing . . . but their compulsion lies also in the character of the author's chosen hero, or anti-hero. This book is in essence a human story, odd though it may be to describe a series of academic lectures by that term. . . . The failure to discuss Pattison's Tractarian phase in any great detail is the one serious omission in this book, an omission which is all the more surprising because . . . this connexion with the Oxford Movement is the most interesting and the most baffling episode in Pattison's life. . . . Sparrow devotes his last lecture to a consideration of Pattison's idea of a university . . . [and ends] by confessing himself as dissatisfied as ever Mark Pattison was with the result of the reforms of 1854."

TLS p389 My 11 '67 2450w

SPAULDING, ROBERT M. Imperial Japan's higher civil service examinations [by] Robert M. Spaulding, Jr. 416p $10 Princeton univ. press

354.52 Civil service—Japan. Civil service—Examinations. Japan—Officials and employees 67-14413

"Professor Spaulding describes the steps by which Japan came to accept examinations as the key to office. He discusses the reasons for this acceptance. . . . In Part I [he] summarizes a thousand years of Japanese preference for rule by a privileged hereditary class, then traces the evolution from 1869 to 1899 of the decision to make merit at least a partial basis for holding a government position. Part II describes the controversy in this century between graduates of public and private universities over discrimination in the appointment system. . . . Part III is a topical survey of the examination system . . . [including] selection of examiners, the tactics of candidates, and the . . . question of fraud and favoritism." (Publisher's note) Glossary. Bibliography. Index.

"Japan [has been] able to create a competent bureaucracy [to guide] the nation along new paths. [This study] is a careful and detailed treatment of one important aspect of the building of the bureaucracy. The author traces step by step the decision to employ an examination system in the latter part of the nineteenth century, weighs the influence of the German model, tells us who the examiners were and what the examinations were about, and considers the effects of the system on the recruitment of talent. The book is a product of careful scholarship and is likely to remain the standard work on the subject for a long time to come." Nobutaka Ike

Am Hist R 73:1599 Je '68 600w

"A major merit of this work is that the [author] does not shy away from the complexities of the subject. . . . Professor Spaulding shows how complicated, diverse, and sometimes contradictory the system actually was, as is the case with all complex institutions developed over time in response to specific needs. While this is the greatest merit of this book, it also might be called its greatest weakness, because the less knowledgeable reader can become easily lost in the mass of detail. The author, however, works manfully to avoid this danger by putting his materials whenever possible into excellent tabular form. . . . [He] shows, through very conclusive statistics, how the products of the civil service examination system [took] over the great bulk of high administrative posts from vice-ministers down to bureau and section chiefs. . . . [This is] an excellent book which opens up a whole new subject for serious study." E. O. Reischauer
Am Pol Sci R 62:966 S '68 600w

SPEAIGHT, ROBERT. The life of Teilhard de Chardin [Eng title: Teilhard de Chardin]. 360p pl maps $3.50 Harper

B or 92 Teilhard de Chardin, Pierre 68-11729

In this biography of the late Roman Catholic scientist/philosopher, "the development of his thought will be seen in chronological sequence and in relation to the story of his life." (Publisher's note) Glossary. Bibliography. Index.

"A well-paced, imaginatively and often brilliantly written portrait of Teilhard the living man, who has so long remained hidden behind the image of Teilhard the celebrity. . . . Though less detailed than Claude Cuénot's monumental biography, [Teilhard de Chardin, BRD 1965] and barely two-thirds its length, [this] work is nevertheless able to stand beside that meticulous work as a patient and understanding exegesis of Teilhard's life and thought. It also constitutes an admirable and eloquent introduction for those who require a one-book life of Teilhard. . . . Whether or not the modern world is moving into a Post-Christian or a Neo-Christian era may well rest upon the substance of Teilhard's spirit as well as of his intimations. But like many of his spiritual antecedents, he firmly established his hopes upon a Christianity that surpasses itself. It is to Mr. Speaight's credit that he leaves the reader with an unmistakable sense that others may share this hope." D. A. Drennen

America 118:269 F 24 '68 750w

"Speaight is a conscientious chronicler of Teilhard's life; but he should not have written a hagiography, as if this object were a saint. Granted, Teilhard was a man of many qualities, even virtues; but Speaight surely understands that the interest now aroused focuses on Teilhard's obsession with a biologically provable Super-Mankind and Super-Christ (his own terms). Therefore Speaight ought to have been more critical of so many Teilhardian lucubrations instead of reverentially passing them on as pearls of wisdom. Or do we have now more than a myth, a cult with a prophet whose dicta are copied down, not subjected to rational arguments?" Thomas Molnar

Book World p3 Mr 10 '68 280w

Reviewed by R. T. Francoeur
Commonweal 88:115 Ap 10 '68 600w

Reviewed by Jaroslav Pelikan
Critic 26:67 Je '68 800w

Reviewed by Richard Walz
Library J 93:544 F 1 '68 140w

"Though [this book] . . . does not presume to be definitive, it is faithful to its subject, making Teilhard both accessible and comprehensible to a greatly expanded readership. That is a decided gain. . . . If [Speaight] hesitates to deal with Teilhard's intellectual legacy on its own terms he is surely right in asserting that it can only be appreciated as the expression of a particular man in a specific milieu. This is what the book brings generously to life, with a wealth of detail and a graceful style entirely worthy of its subject. One source of minor but nagging annoyance must be mentioned. . . . Short phrases from Teilhard himself, his associates or correspondents are quoted with a liberality which leads one to believe that the author simply could not trust himself to describe scenes and situations in his own words. [This] gives an unfortunate kind of patchwork effect to many passages and violates the texture of the whole book." Roger Hazelton

New Repub 158:23 Mr 16 '68 1300w

Reviewed by N. K. Burger
N Y Times Bk R p16 Ap 7 '68 140w

Reviewed by J. B. Pritchard
Sat R 51:33 Ap 20 '68 550w

"Speaight is suitably apologetic for giving to the world another biography of Teilhard on the morrow of the publication in an English translation of M. Cuénot's work, but there is really no call for apology. . . . Although Teilhard, M. Cuénot and Mr. Speaight all share a common Catholicism, Mr. Speaight's outlook is sufficiently distinctive to ensure that for many readers his will be the biography of the great French philosopher of evolution. He has had access to some material that has become available only in the past two years; and, if further justification were needed, it may be found in an attractive style that gathers his story into an artistic whole. It is a minor criticism that he should not show himself quite so unaware of scholars outside his own environment."

TLS p1091 N 16 '67 200w

SPEAR, ALLAN H. Black Chicago; the making of a Negro ghetto, 1890-1920. 254p il $7.50
Univ. of Chicago press
301.45 Negroes—Chicago. Chicago—Race relations 67-21381

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by Gilbert Osofsky
Am Hist R 73:1660 Je '68 700w

Reviewed by Elliott Rudwick
Ann Am Acad 376:199 Mr '68 500w
Choice 4:1314 Ja '68 300w

Reviewed by E. L. Thornbrough
J Am Hist 54:912 Mr '68 600w

Reviewed by E. D. Genovese
Nation 207:86 Ag 5 '68 320w

Reviewed by James Cameron
New Statesman 75:145 F 2 '68 200w

Reviewed by T. R. Cripps
Social Studies 59:287 N '68 390w
TLS p329 Ap 4 '68 420w

SPEARS, SIR EDWARD. The picnic basket. 224p $5.95 Norton

355.3 European War, 1914-1918—Personal narratives [67-95780]

The author, a British soldier-diplomat, now more than eighty years old, presents a volume of autobiographical sketches concerning his youth in France and Ireland and his observations on some episodes in World War I.

"General Spears' two-volume report of the fall of France, Assignment to Catastrophe (Prelude to Dunkirk [BRD 1954], and Fall of France [BRD 1955]), remains one of the most fascinating and sadly neglected military memoirs of World War II. Two previous books, Prelude to Victory, and Liaison 1914 [BRD 1933], reporting Spears' experiences in World War I are also classics of memoir literature. . . . [This book], very much slighter than its four great predecessors, is a collection of memories that charmingly fills in the career and personality of an extraordinary man—a professional soldier in his early years who by happy coincidences has from the beginning been able to function as the observer and writer he so clearly was shaped to be. . . . Three short pieces in [this book] add to the earlier memoirs episodes of the war too fragile to have a place in history but secure and charming in the fabric of nostalgia. . . . A delightful book." Gordon Harrison
Book World p14 My 5 '68 650w

"[Spears] gives a most surprising and very good reconstruction of the battle of Poitiers, as he relived it, standing on the battlefield where this encounter had taken place six centuries before. This book is not so important as his other works, . . . but it should be acquired by large and medium-sized public libraries, and by universities and colleges with strong history collections." P. W. Filby
Library J 98:1998 My 15 '68 110w

"It was lighting on a collection of [his grandmother's] correspondence in an old picnic basket that has sparked off this chatty and agreeable compilation, while the knowledge of French and love of France which [Spears acquired in childhood] has run like a golden thread through the pattern of his life. . . . The contents of his picnic basket are variegated rather than sustaining. Half the book deals with his youth in France and Ireland and many readers will find this the best."
TLS p575 Je 29 '67 750w

SPELIOS, THOMAS. Pictorial history of Greece; consultant for the ancient and Byzantine periods; John E. Rexine; text for Ottoman-Turkish and modern periods, by Harry J. Psomiades. 328p il maps $10 Crown

949.5 Greece—History. Greece, Modern—History. Civilization, Greek. Byzantine Empire 66-26182

The authors "trace Greek civilization from its dawn to post-World War II. . . . [The] text discusses Greece's legacy in art, literature, philosophy, and government. Brief accounts of outstanding Greeks at home and abroad, together with contemporary problems of tourism and industrialization, are included." (Library J) Chronology. Bibliography. Index.

"Mr. Spelios is to be commended for the wealth of the illustrative material and the apt-ness and conciseness of the commentary. The text is terse, lively and comparatively accurate but some aspects of the subject do not seem to have been adequately treated. The appended bibliography is fairly comprehensive, although, unfortunately, it leaves out some very important titles, and it is regrettable that such an important and useful work should be marred by an unusually large number of misprints, typographical inadvertencies and downright errors. . . . Despite its limitations, however this is an absorbing work which, I am sure, will be read with interest and appreciation by many a friend of Greece." P. S. Costas

Class World 61:180 Ja '68 350w

"This book belongs to the genre of non-scholarly, pictorial, sketchy works so popular these days and with which librarians will be all too familiar. . . . Professor Psomiades, who teaches government at Queens College, has contributed the section on the Ottoman period. The 1000 pictures are taken from a variety of sources and illustrate mainly the political and artistic achievements of the Greeks. The quality varies from good to extremely poor. . . . In this reviewer's opinion this is a poor addition to any library." F. M. Lauritsen
Library J 92:2406 Je 15 '67 150w

"Accompanying the black-and-white illustrations is a good explanatory text."
Library J 92:2665 Jl '67 50w [YA]

SPELLMAN, JOHN W., ed. The beautiful blue jay, and other tales of India; collected and ed. by John W. Spellman; il. by Jerry Pinkney. 101p $3.50 Little

398.2 Folklore—India—Juvenile literature 67-17294

This book consists of "twenty-five tales that mothers in India tell their children today. They have been collected by the author in person; most of them have never appeared in print before. The stories are about people and happenings that concern children everywhere. . . . The theme of hunger recurs in these stories, but it is not the only one that relates the book to India." (Publisher's note) Glossary. "Ages eight to twelve." (N Y Times Bk R)

"In their clear reflection of a distinctive way of life . . . [these] are indeed tales of the folk and related to traditional lore. Some are how-and-why animal tales. . . . Others have classic motifs of magic, the triumph of the kind and the weak, the downfall of the rich and the selfish. This fresh collection will have a strong appeal for children, strengthened by . . . many humorously detailed drawings." Virginia Haviland

Book World pt 2, p28 (children's issue)
N 5 '67 120w

Reviewed by M. L. Birmingham
Commonweal 87:182 N 10 '67 30w
Horn Bk 43:752 D '67 140w

Reviewed by M. M. Murray
Library J 93:873 F 15 '68 110w

"Imagery, magic and irony are interwoven in this collection. Like folklore in the truest sense, the tales seem to spring from the dreams and fantasies of the people. . . . Sometimes virtue is rewarded; cleverness always is; the meek and lowly outwit the powerful and pompous. . . . A vein of earthy humor runs through a good proportion of these stories. One—about a rich and childless woman who finds gold will not buy a child from a poor woman with a dozen of them—brings tears. If young readers don't learn much about India from these stories, they will learn a lot about human nature." Robin McKown

N Y Times Bk R p24 Ag 20 '67 180w

"[In these stories] we see the intermingling of religious and national cultures of the Indian environment and also the kind of characters encountered in children's stories in other cultures. The quality of the printing, binding, and illustration is first rate and the price is extremely reasonable." Peter Harnetty
Pacific Affairs 41:156 spring '68 150w

SPENCE, ELEANOR. The Switherby pilgrims; il. by Corinna Gray. 170p $4.75 Roy pubs.

67-25636

In 1825, Arabella Braithwaite, a middle-aged spinster, and ten young orphans decide to emigrate to Australia in order to escape their typhus-stricken English village. "The challenges of a four-month ocean trip, living off the land, coping with convicts, and learning to depend on one another gradually turn their primitive hut into a home and the orphans into a real family. . . . Grades five to seven." (Library J)

SPENCE, ELEANOR—Continued

"Young American readers will be interested in both the similarities and differences between being pioneers in the Australian bush and in the wilderness of the West in the United States. . . . There is a plot and it will hold the interest of readers who feel the need of one, but it is not an intrinsic part of the story, which is strong enough to stand on its own." M. L'E.

Book World pt 2, p32 (children's issue)
N 5 '67 200w

Horn Bk 44:183 Ap '68 100w

